

THE UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

A collection of United Nations documents associated with the drafting of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, these volumes facilitate research into the scope of, meaning of and intent behind the instrument's provisions. It permits an examination of the various drafts of what became the thirty articles of the Declaration, including one of the earliest documents – a compilation of human rights provisions from national constitutions, organized thematically. The documents are presented chronologically, and thorough thematic indexing facilitates research into the origins of specific rights and norms. They are also annotated in order to provide information relating to names, places, events and concepts that might have been familiar in the late 1940s but are today more obscure.

WILLIAM A. SCHABAS is Professor of International Law at Middlesex University, London. He also holds appointments at Leiden University and the National University of Ireland Galway, where he is Honorary Chairman of the Irish Centre for Human Rights, and an honorary professorship at the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences in Beijing.

THE UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

The travaux préparatoires

VOLUME I
October 1946 to November 1947

WILLIAM A. SCHABAS OC MRIA

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS
Cambridge, New York, Melbourne, Madrid, Cape Town,
Singapore, São Paulo, Delhi, Mexico City

Cambridge University Press
The Edinburgh Building, Cambridge CB2 8RU, UK

Published in the United States of America by Cambridge University Press, New York

www.cambridge.org

Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9781107015500

© William A. Schabas 2013

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2013

Printed and bound in the United Kingdom by the MPG Books Group

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

ISBN 978-1-107-01550-0 Three-volume set

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication, and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

Contents

Preface	page xxxvii
Foreword by Navanetham Pillay	xliii
Table of documents	xlvii
List of abbreviations and acronyms	lxix
Introductory essay: the drafting and significance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights	lxxi

THE DOCUMENTS 1

Volume I

Report by the Executive Committee to the Preparatory Commission of the United Nations	1
Report of the Preparatory Commission of the United Nations	2
Supplementary List of Items for Inclusion in the Agenda of the First Part of the First Session of the General Assembly	3
Report to the General Assembly on the Supplementary List of Items to be Included on the Agenda of the First Part of the First Session	4
Seventh Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly, 14 January 1946	5
Committee on the Organization of the Economic and Social Council, First Meeting, 30 January 1946	13
Proposals Concerning Terms of Reference of Commissions to be Established by the Economic and Social Council for Consideration by the Drafting Sub-Committee	14
Communications of Interest to the Economic and Social Council Received from Non-Governmental Organizations	15
Draft Declaration on Human Rights and Letter of Transmittal from Cuba	15
Draft Report of the Committee on the Organization of the Economic and Social Council	18
Report of the Committee on the Organization of the Economic and Social Council	18
Resolution 5(I) of the Economic and Social Council on the Establishment of a Commission on Human Rights and a Sub-Commission on the Status of Women	20

Statement of Essential Human Rights Presented by the Delegation of Panama	21
Provisional Agenda of the Nuclear Commission on Human Rights	34
First Meeting of the Nuclear Commission, 29 April 1946	35
Second Meeting of the Nuclear Commission, 30 April 1946	37
Third Meeting of the Nuclear Commission, 30 April 1946	39
Sixth Meeting of the Nuclear Commission, 6 May 1946	40
First Drafting Session of the Nuclear Commission, 6 May 1946	41
Seventh Meeting of the Nuclear Commission, 8 May 1946	43
Eighth Meeting of the Nuclear Commission, 8 May 1946	47
Draft Report of the Commission on Human Rights to the Second Session of the Economic and Social Council	49
Report of the Commission on Human Rights to the Second Session of the Economic and Social Council	53
Fourth Meeting, Second Session, of the Economic and Social Council, 28 May 1946	58
Fifth Meeting, Second Session, of the Economic and Social Council, 31 May 1946	59
Sixth Meeting, Second Session, of the Economic and Social Council, 31 May 1946	65
Draft Resolution of the Economic and Social Council, Commission on Human Rights	66
Draft Resolution Concerning the Report of the Commission on Human Rights	68
Twenty-Ninth Meeting, Second Session, of the Economic and Social Council, 21 June 1946	69
Resolution 9(II) of the Economic and Social Council, Commission on Human Rights	70
Report of the Secretary-General on the Work of the Organization	71
Letter from Mr Matthew Woll and Mr David Dubinsky, Consultants Representing the American Federation of Labor to Mr Trygve Lie	71
Draft Declarations on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms and on Rights and Duties of States (Panama)	77
Provisional Agenda for the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly	78
Report by the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly	78
Statement of Essential Human Rights Presented by the Delegation of Panama	79

Data Paper Prepared by the Secretariat on Draft Declarations Submitted by the Government of Panama on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms and on the Rights and Duties of States	80
Draft Agenda for the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly	81
Forty-Fifth Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly, 31 October 1946	82
Report on Consultation between the Secretary-General and the Chairman of the First and Third Committees Concerning Item 6 on the Supplementary List	82
Letter from the Representative of Chile to the Secretary-General Dated 3 November 1946	83
Thirty-Third Meeting of the Third Committee of the General Assembly, 26 November 1946	84
Draft Report Concerning a Draft Declaration on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedom	86
Forty-Second Meeting of the Third Committee of the General Assembly, 5 December 1946	87
Consolidated Terms of Reference of the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commissions	88
Forty-First Meeting of the First Committee of the General Assembly, 6 December 1946	88
Addendum to Report on Draft Declaration on Human Rights and Freedoms	93
Forty-Fifth Meeting of the Third Committee of the General Assembly, 9 December 1946	94
Report of the First and Third Committees	94
Fifty-Fifth Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly, 11 December 1946	96
Draft Declaration on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms, General Assembly Resolution 43(I)	97
Draft Declaration of the International Rights and Duties of Man Formulated by the Inter-American Juridical Committee	98
Working Paper on an International Bill of Rights	106
Addendum to Working Paper on an International Bill of Rights	118
Textual Comparison of the Proposed Drafts of an International Bill of Rights	118
Analysis of Various Draft International Bills of Rights	147
First Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 27 January 1947	155
Second Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 27 January 1947	160
United States Proposals Regarding an International Bill of Rights	164
List of Types of Rights Contained in Drafts of Proposed International Bills of Rights	166
Seventh Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 31 January 1947	168

Eighth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 31 January 1947	171
Draft of a Resolution for the General Assembly Submitted by the Representative of India	175
Draft Resolution Regarding Composition of a Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights Submitted by the Representative of India	176
Draft Proposal Regarding the Composition of a Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights Submitted by the Representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics	176
Ninth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 1 February 1947	177
Tenth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 1 February 1947	180
Eleventh Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 3 February 1947	185
Twelfth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 3 February 1947	189
Thirteenth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 4 February 1947	192
Fourteenth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 4 February 1947	198
Draft Resolution for an International Court of Human Rights Submitted by the Representative from Australia	203
Fifteenth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 5 February 1947	204
Sixteenth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 5 February 1947	208
United States Proposals Regarding an International Bill of Rights	212
Draft Report of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council	214
Seventeenth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 6 February 1947	217
Eighteenth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 6 February 1947	223
Twentieth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 7 February 1947	225
Report of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council	226
Twelfth Meeting of the Commission on the Status of Women, 18 February 1947	229
Report of the Commission on the Status of Women to the Economic and Social Council	232
Letter dated 26 February 1947 from Mr Louis Saillant, Secretary-General of the World Federation of Trade Unions, to the Secretary-General of the United Nations	232
Letter dated 12 March 1947 sent by the American Federation of Labor to the Secretary-General of the United Nations	237
Sixty-Eighth Meeting of the Economic and Social Council, 14 March 1947	239
Sixty-Ninth Meeting of the Economic and Social Council, 14 March 1947	242
Observations submitted by the delegation of the United Kingdom on the Report of the Commission on the Status of Women	250

Sixth Meeting of the Committee on Social Affairs of the Economic and Social Council, 20 March 1947	250
Eighth Meeting of the Committee on Social Affairs of the Economic and Social Council, 21 March 1947	252
Ninth Meeting of the Committee on Social Affairs of the Economic and Social Council, 22 March 1947	255
Draft Resolutions on Human Rights and on International Conference on the Freedom of the Press	258
Tenth Meeting of the Committee on Social Affairs of the Economic and Social Council, 23 March 1947	259
Resolution 52(IV) of the Economic and Social Council, Guarantees for the Exercise and Development of Trade Union Rights	264
Seventy-Ninth Meeting of the Economic and Social Council, 24 March 1947	265
Report of the Commission on Human Rights	266
Letter from Eleanor Roosevelt to the President of the Economic and Social Council, 24 March 1947	266
Resolutions on the Report of the Commission on Human Rights, on the Conference on Freedom of Information and on the Crime of Genocide	268
Letter from Toni Sender to the President of the Economic and Social Council, 26 March 1947	269
Draft Resolution of the Economic and Social Council on the Report of the Commission on the Status of Women	270
Draft Resolution of the Economic and Social Council on the International Bill of Rights	270
Amendment to Draft Resolution on the Report of the Commission on Human Rights Proposed by the Delegation of Canada	271
Eighty-Fourth Meeting of the Economic and Social Council, 29 March 1947	272
Resolution 46(IV) of the Economic and Social Council on the Draft Declaration on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms	275
Resolution 48(IV) of the Economic and Social Council on the Status of Women	276
Memorandum on the Historical Background of the Drafting Committee	277
Draft Outline of International Bill of Rights (Prepared by the Division of Human Rights)	281
Text of Letter from Lord Dukeston, the United Kingdom Representative on the Human Rights Commission, to the Secretary-General of the United Nations	288

Communications Received Requesting the Inclusion of Certain Specific Provisions in the International Bill of Rights	299
Plan of the Draft Outline of an International Bill of Rights	305
Proposal Submitted by the French Delegation to the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights	308
General Observations Made by Various Members of the Commission on Human Rights Concerning the Form and Content of the International Bill of Rights	308
First Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 9 June 1947	313
Textual Comparison of the Draft International Bill of Human Rights Submitted by the Delegation of the United Kingdom to the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights, and the Draft Outline of an International Bill of Rights.	318
Additional Communications Received Requesting the Inclusion of Certain Specific Provisions in the International Bill of Rights	330
International Bill of Rights Documented Outline	332
United States Suggestions for Redrafts of Certain Articles in the Draft Outline E/CN.4/AC.1/3	712
Resolution Adopted by the Economic and Social Council on 24 March 1947	717
Second Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 11 June 1947	718
Third Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 11 June 1947	727
Fourth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 12 June 1947	737
Suggestions for Additional Articles to be Added to the International Bill of Rights, Submitted by the American Federation of Labor	746
Textual Comparison of the Draft Outline of an International Bill of Rights (Prepared by the Secretariat), the United Kingdom Draft Bill of Rights and the United States Proposals	746
Fifth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 12 June 1947	775
Sixth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 13 June 1947	782
Draft International Declaration of Rights Submitted by Working Group of Drafting Committee (Preamble and Articles 1–6)	788
Suggestions Submitted by the Representative of France for Articles 7–32 of the International Declaration of Rights	790
Seventh Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 17 June 1947	795
Eighth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 17 June 1947	800
Proposals Submitted by the United Kingdom Representative on the Drafting Committee	811
Suggestions Submitted by the Representative of France for Articles 7–32 of the International Declaration of Rights	811
Ninth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 18 June 1947	818

Tenth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 18 June 1947	827
United States Revised Suggestions for Redrafts of Certain Articles in the Draft Outline (E/CN.4/AC.1/3)	828
United States Suggestions in Connection with a Draft Declaration of Human Rights	830
Memorandum on Implementation Prepared by the Secretariat at the Request of the Committee	831
Revised Suggestions Submitted by the Representative of France for Articles of the International Declaration of Rights	837
Twelfth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 20 June 1947	844
Thirteenth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 20 June 1947	850
Draft Report of the Drafting Committee to the Commission on Human Rights	864
Fourteenth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 23 June 1947	868
Fifteenth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 23 June 1947	877
Sixteenth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 24 June 1947	882
Seventeenth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 24 June 1947	890
Eighteenth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, 25 June 1947	900
Report of the Drafting Committee to the Commission on Human Rights	908
Disposition of Agenda Items and Check List of Documents, First Session of the Drafting Committee	945
Trade Union Rights (Freedom of Association), Draft Resolution of the Economic and Social Council Proposed by the Delegations of the United Kingdom, The Netherlands, and the United States	951
Hundred and Eighth Meeting of the Economic and Social Council, 8 August 1947	952
Hundred and Ninth Meeting of the Economic and Social Council, 8 August 1947	953
Resolution 84(V) of the Economic and Social Council, Trade Union Rights (Freedom of Association)	955
Draft Resolution Submitted by the Delegation of the Dominican Republic	956
Draft Resolution Submitted by the Delegation of France	957
Argentine Amendment to the Draft Resolution Proposed by the Dominican Republic	957
Chile: Amendment to the Draft Resolution of the Dominican Republic (A/C.3/166) and to the Draft Resolution of France (A/C.3/167)	958
India: Amendment to the Draft Resolution Proposed by France	959
France: Draft Resolution (Revised Text)	959
Dominican Republic: Amendment to Revised Draft Resolution Presented by France	960

United Kingdom Amendments to Revised Resolution Submitted by the Delegation of France (A/C.3/175)	960
Argentina: Amendment to Revised Resolution Presented by France	961
Activities of Other Organs of the United Nations Relating to the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities	961
Compromise Proposal Presented by the French Delegation	963
Sub-Committee 1 of the Third Committee, Trade Union Rights, Report to the Third Committee	965
Czechoslovakia: Amendments to the Draft Resolution Presented by Sub-Committee One	967
Yugoslavia: Amendments to the Draft Resolution Submitted by Sub-Committee One	967
Argentina: Amendment to Text Presented by the Sub-Committee	968
Argentina: Amendment to Text Presented by the Sub-Committee (Revised)	969
Trade Union Rights (Freedom of Association), Memorandum by the Division of Human Rights	969
Draft Charter of International Human Rights and Duties, Note by the Secretary-General	999
Trade Union Rights (Freedom of Association), Resolution adopted by the Economic and Social Council and transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General	1003
General Assembly Resolution 128(II), Trade Union Rights (Freedom of Association)	1004
Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, Statement from the American Federation of Labor	1006
First Meeting of the First Session of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 24 November 1947	1009
Memorandum from the Inter-Parliamentary Union	1013
Statement Regarding the Possible Ways in Which the Recommendations of the Human Rights Commission Might Be Presented to the General Assembly, Submitted by the Representative of the United Kingdom on the Commission on Human Rights	1017
Opinion of Mr. Borisov (USSR) on Article 6	1022
Proposal for a Declaration of Human Rights Submitted by the Representative of the United States on the Commission on Human Rights	1022
Proposed Amendments to the Draft Articles on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms Contained in Annex G of the Report of the Drafting Committee, Submitted by the Representative of the United Kingdom on the Commission on Human Rights	1024

Third Meeting of the First Session of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 26 November 1947	1025
Fourth Meeting of the First Session of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 26 November 1947	1027
Explanatory Note on Derivation of Declaration on Human Rights Proposed by Representative of the United States on the Commission on Human Rights	1035
Fifth Meeting of the First Session of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 27 November 1947	1037
Sixth Meeting of the First Session of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 27 November 1947	1043
Proposal for Addendum to Article 13 Submitted by Mr. S.R. Shafaq (Iran)	1054
Seventh Meeting of the First Session of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 28 November 1947	1054
Eighth Meeting of the First Session of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 28 November 1947	1058
Ninth Meeting of the First Session of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 30 November 1947	1070

Volume II

Proposal by Miss Elizabeth Monroe (UK), Regarding Additional Material for Inclusion in the International Declaration on Human Rights	1077
The Fundamental Rights of Man as the Basis for a Restoration of International Law, by Charles de Visscher	1077
Statement from the Preparatory Commission for the International Refugee Organization	1078
Tenth Meeting of the First Session of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 1 December 1947	1081
Eleventh Meeting of the First Session of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 1 December 1947	1085
Twenty-Third Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 2 December 1947	1098
Proposal for a New Article (to Be the First Article in the Proposed Declaration of Rights). Submitted by Mr. McNamara (Australia)	1107
Twenty-Fifth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 2 December 1947	1107
Revised Proposal Submitted by the United Kingdom Delegation	1113
Consolidated Terms of Reference, Commission on Human Rights	1114

Belgian Proposal	1114
Twenty-Sixth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 3 December 1947	1115
Twenty-Seventh Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 3 December 1947	1119
Information on Activities Concerning Human Rights of Organs of the United Nations	1123
Proposal by the Soviet Delegation Concerning Item 5 of the Agenda	1124
Proposal Submitted by the French Delegation	1125
Proposal Submitted by the United Kingdom Delegation	1125
Twenty-Eighth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 4 December 1947	1126
Twenty-Ninth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 4 December 1947	1133
Resolutions Adopted	1141
List of Communications Received from Non-Governmental Organizations in Categories (b) or (c) Eligible for Consultation	1142
Parallel Passages in Human Rights Drafting Committee Text and United States Proposal	1144
Report Submitted to the Commission on Human Rights by the Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities	1151
Thirtieth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 5 December 1947	1157
First Meeting of the Working Group on the Declaration of Human Rights, 5 December 1947	1160
Second Meeting of the Working Group on the Declaration of Human Rights, 5 December 1947	1163
Seventeenth Meeting of the First Session of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 6 December 1947	1169
Third Meeting of the Working Group on the Declaration of Human Rights, 6 December 1947	1173
Eighteenth Meeting of the First Session of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 6 December 1947	1181
Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities, Report Submitted to the Commission on Human Rights by the Rapporteur	1182
Fourth Meeting of the Working Group on the Declaration of Human Rights, 8 December 1947	1189

Fifth Meeting of the Working Group on the Declaration of Human Rights, 8 December 1947	1194
Sixth Meeting of the Working Group on the Declaration of Human Rights, 9 December 1947	1202
Seventh Meeting of the Working Group on the Declaration of Human Rights, 9 December 1947	1209
Eighth Meeting of the Working Group on the Declaration of Human Rights, 10 December 1947	1219
Ninth Meeting of the Working Group on the Declaration of Human Rights, 10 December 1947	1227
Report of the Working Group on the Declaration on Human Rights	1241
Thirty-Fourth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 12 December 1947	1253
Thirty-Fifth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 12 December 1947	1259
Belgian Amendment to Article 10 of the Declaration (E/CN.4/57)	1268
Thirty-Sixth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 13 December 1947	1268
Thirty-Seventh Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 13 December 1947	1276
Belgian Amendment to Article 18 of the Draft Declaration of Human Rights	1287
Proposal by Lebanese Delegation on the Declaration	1288
United Kingdom Amendments to Articles 31 and 33 of the Draft Declaration of Human Rights	1288
Amendment to Article 38 of the Draft Declaration of Human Rights Submitted by the Representative of India	1288
Amendment to Article 29 of the Draft Declaration of Human Rights, Submitted by the Representative of the Byelorussian SSR	1289
Proposals Submitted by the Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities.	1289
Proposal for an Additional Article (39) to be Added to the Declaration of Human Rights, Submitted by the Representative of France	1289
Thirty-Ninth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 15 December 1947	1290
Proposed Resolution by the Commission on Human Rights Submitted by the United States Delegation	1292
Proposals Submitted by the Representative of Lebanon	1292
Amendment to Article 31A of the Declaration of Human Rights Submitted by the Representative of Lebanon	1293

Fortieth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 16 December 1947	1293
Forty-First Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 16 December 1947	1304
Forty-Second Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 16 December 1947	1314
Draft Report of the Commission on Human Rights Submitted to the Economic and Social Council	1320
Draft International Declaration of Human Rights	1325
Communication Addressed by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights	1334
Report to the Economic and Social Council on the Second Session of the Commission on Human Rights	1336
Ninth Meeting of the Commission on the Status of Women, 9 January 1948	1354
Tenth Meeting of the Commission on the Status of Women, 9 January 1948	1360
Draft Resolution on Marriage Submitted by the Representatives of India and the United Kingdom	1362
Draft Report of the Commission on the Status of Women to the Economic and Social Council	1362
Draft Articles for a Covenant and Declaration of Human Rights	1364
Corrigendum to the Summary Record of the Seventeenth Meeting of the Commission on the Status of Women	1365
Suggested Text for the Draft Declaration of Human Rights Submitted by Mr. A.R.K. Mackenzie (United Kingdom)	1366
First Meeting of the Second Session of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press, 19 January 1948	1366
Second Meeting of the Second Session of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press, 19 January 1948	1368
Report of the Drafting Committee on an Article for the Declaration of Human Rights	1373
Report of the Committee Appointed to Draft a Proposed Article for the Declaration of Human Rights	1373
Fourth Meeting of the Second Session of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press, 20 January 1948	1374
Fifth Meeting of the Second Session of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press, 21 January 1948	1378
Draft Article for the Declaration of Human Rights Presented by Mr. J. Lomakin (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics)	1380
Suggested Text of Article on Freedom of Information in International Declaration of Human Rights	1380

Twenty-Second Meeting of the Second Session of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press, 2 February 1948	1380
One Hundred and Twenty-Eighth Meeting of the Economic and Social Council, 5 February 1948	1381
Thirty-Third Meeting of the Social Committee of the Economic and Social Council, 19 February 1948	1384
Report of the Social Committee	1385
Thirty-Ninth Meeting of the Social Committee of the Economic and Social Council, 27 February 1948	1386
One Hundred and Fifty-Seventh Meeting of the Economic and Social Council, 1 March 1948	1388
Resolution of 1 March 1948	1389
Resolution of 3 March 1948	1389
Suggestions Made by the Commission on the Status of Women	1390
Agenda of the Fourth Committee of the Conference on Freedom of Information and of the Press	1391
Report of the Second Session of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press	1392
United Kingdom Proposals on Items B and C of the Agenda	1393
Agenda of the Fourth Committee of the Conference on Freedom of Information and of the Press	1393
Draft of Article 17 of the Declaration of Human Rights and Article 17 of the International Covenant Submitted by the Delegation of the USSR	1394
French Delegation, Amendment to the Draft Text of Article 17 of the Declaration of Human Rights	1394
Amendment to Article 17 of the Covenant and the Declaration of Human Rights, Submitted by the Hungarian Delegation	1394
Fourth Meeting of Committee IV (Law and Continuing Machinery) of the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information and of the Press, 2 April 1948	1395
Amendment Proposed by the Greek Delegation to the Draft Articles Prepared by the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press for Inclusion in the Declaration and Covenant on Human Rights (Points E and B)	1398
Fifth Meeting of Committee IV (Law and Continuing Machinery) of the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information and of the Press, 3 April 1948	1398
Sixth Meeting of Committee IV (Law and Continuing Machinery) of the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information, 5 April 1948	1399

Tenth Meeting of Committee IV (Law and Continuing Machinery) of the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information and of the Press, 7 April 1948	1400
Draft Resolution	1402
Twenty-Fourth Meeting of Committee IV (Law and Continuing Machinery) of the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information and of the Press, 14 April 1948	1402
Comments of Governments on the Draft International Declaration of Human Rights, Draft International Covenant on Human Rights and the Question of Implementation	1403
Comments from Governments of the Draft International Declaration of Human Rights, Draft International Covenant on Human Rights and the Question of Implementation (Add.1)	1414
USSR: Amendment to Draft Article 17 of the Draft Declaration and Draft Covenant on Human Rights Elaborated by Committee IV	1418
Final Act of the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information	1419
Poland: Amendment to Annex B	1420
Tenth Meeting of the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information, 20 April 1948	1420
Draft Provisional Agenda	1423
Communication Received from Brazil	1424
Comments from Governments on the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights, Draft International Covenant on Human Rights and the Question of Implementation (Add.4)	1432
Copy of a Resolution on Religious Freedom Adopted by the Foreign Mission Committee of the Church of Scotland on 17 February 1948	1437
Opinion of the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information on Articles 17 and 18 of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights and Article 17 of the Draft International Covenant on Human Rights	1438
Communication Received from Norway	1440
Communication Received from Egypt	1441
Collation of the Comments of Governments on the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights, Draft International Covenant on Human Rights and the Question of Implementation	1442
List of Comments on the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights, on the Draft International Covenant on Human Rights and the Question of Implementation Received by the Secretariat up to 3 May 1948	1475

Draft International Declaration on Human Rights (Submitted by the Chinese Delegation)	1475
Twentieth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, Second Session, 3 May 1948	1477
Communication Received from India	1483
Twenty-First Meeting of the Drafting Committee, Second Session, 4 May 1948	1485
Draft International Declaration of Human Rights with United States' Recommendations	1492
Communication Received from the French Government	1502
Communication Received from the United Kingdom	1509
Speech by Mr. A.N. Pavlov, Representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights	1517
Human Rights, the Charter of the United Nations and the International Bill of the Rights of Man Preliminary Report by Professor H. Lauterpacht	1528
Thirty-Third Meeting of the Drafting Committee, Second Session, 14 May 1948	1528
Thirty-Fourth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, Second Session, 14 May 1948	1530
Australia: Drafting Amendments to Draft International Declaration on Human Rights (Document E/600)	1531
Thirty-Fifth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, Second Session, 17 May 1948	1533
Thirty-Sixth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, Second Session, 17 May 1948	1539
Report of the Drafting Sub-Committee, Consisting of the Representatives of China, France and the United Kingdom, on Article 11 of the Draft International Declaration of Human Rights	1548
Thirty-Seventh Meeting of the Drafting Committee, Second Session, 18 May 1948	1548
Thirty-Eighth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, Second Session, 18 May 1948	1556
Report of the Drafting Sub-Committee Consisting of the Representatives of Chile, China, United States of America, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, on Articles 5, 6, 7 of the International Declaration on Human Rights	1565
Communication Received from Sweden	1565
Thirty-Ninth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, Second Session, 19 May 1948	1567

Fortieth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, Second Session, 19 May 1948	1572
United States: Amendment to Article 19 of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1586
Forty-First Meeting of the Drafting Committee, Second Session, 20 May 1948	1586
Forty-Second Meeting of the Drafting Committee, Second Session, 20 May 1948	1598
Forty-Fourth Meeting of the Drafting Committee, Second Session, 21 May 1948	1599
Report of the Drafting Committee to the Commission on Human Rights India and the United Kingdom: Proposed Amendments to the Draft Declaration of Human Rights	1603
French Amendment to the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1618
Draft Resolution Submitted by the Representative of the United Kingdom	1624
Forty-Sixth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 24 May 1948	1625
Forty-Seventh Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 24 May 1948	1625
Forty-Eighth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 26 May 1948	1633
Trade Union Rights (Freedom of Association), Memorandum by the Secretary-General	1638
China: Amendments to the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1648
Belgium: Amendment to Article 13 of the Draft Declaration of Human Rights	1649
Synopsis of the Texts of the Draft Declaration of Human Rights and the Draft International Covenant on Human Rights as Contained in the Report of the Second Session of the Drafting Committee	1656
Forty-Ninth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 27 May 1948	1657
Fiftieth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 27 May 1948	1664
Fifty-First Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 28 May 1948	1675
Fifty-Second Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 28 May 1948	1675
Fifty-Third Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 1 June 1948	1682
Fifty-Fourth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 1 June 1948	1693
Lebanon: Amendment to Article 13 of the International Declaration on Human Rights	1700
First Report of the Sub-Committee Consisting of the Representatives of China, France, India, United Kingdom and Yugoslavia on Article 8 of the Draft Declaration on Human Rights	1709
Fifty-Fifth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 2 June 1948	1710
Fifty-Sixth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 2 June 1948	1710
Communication Received from New Zealand	1727

Lebanon: Suggested Amendment to Article 16 of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1733
Second Report of the Sub-Committee Consisting of the Representatives of China, France, India, United Kingdom and Yugoslavia on Article 8 of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1733
Fifty-Seventh Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 3 June 1948	1733
Fifty-Eighth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 3 June 1948	1741
Order of Voting on Proposals and Amendments Concerning Article 13 of the Declaration	1751
Report of the Sub-Committee Consisting of France, United States of America, United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics	1754
Fifty-Ninth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 4 June 1948	1754
Sixtieth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 4 June 1948	1761
Report of the Sub-Committee Consisting of the Representatives of Australia, China, France, Lebanon, India and the United Kingdom on Article 2 of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1769
Report of the Sub-Committee Consisting of the Representatives of China, France and the United Kingdom on the Second Paragraph of Article 3 of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1769
Report of the Sub-Committee Consisting of the Representatives of France, Lebanon, the United Kingdom and Uruguay, on the Consideration of Article 16 of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights and its Relation to Articles 17 and 18	1770
Sixty-First Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 7 June 1948	1770
Sixty-Second Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 7 June 1948	1781
Sixty-Third Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 8 June 1948	1790
Sixty-Fourth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 8 June 1948	1798
Report of the Sub-Committee Consisting of the Representatives of Australia, France, India, Philippines, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom and the United States on Article 23 of the Declaration on Human Rights	1809
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Amendment to the Text of Articles 17–18 of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights as Suggested by the Conference on Freedom of Information	1810
Sixty-Fifth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 9 June 1948	1810
Sixty-Sixth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 9 June 1948	1817
United States of America: Proposed Alternative for the Preamble of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1826
Report of the Sub-Committee Consisting of the Representatives of France, Lebanon, United Kingdom, United States of America and Uruguay, on

Additional Articles for the Draft International Declaration of Human Rights	1826
Panama: Proposal Text for Articles 27–28 of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1827
American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man	1827
United Kingdom: Draft Preamble to the International Declaration on Human Rights	1834
Sixty-Seventh Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 10 June 1948	1835
Sixty-Eighth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 10 June 1948	1846
France: Amendment to Article 30 of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1853
France: Amendment on Scientific Research	1854
Report of the Sub-Committee Consisting of the Representatives of France, India and the United Kingdom on Articles 25–26 of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1854
Suggestions for a Preamble to the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights, Submitted by the American Federation of Labor	1854
Sixty-Ninth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 11 June 1948	1855
Seventieth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 11 June 1948	1862
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Proposal for Articles 25 and 26 of the Draft International Declaration of Human Rights	1869
Lebanon: Suggested Preamble for the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1870
United States of America: Suggestion for New Article of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1870
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Substitute for New Article of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1871
Seventy-First Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 14 June 1948	1871
Seventy-Second Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 14 June 1948	1881
United States of America: Proposal for Clause to be added to Article 19 of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1887
Preamble	1887
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Draft Preamble to the International Declaration on Human Rights	1888
Lebanon: Proposal for Addition to Article 30	1889
Report of the Sub-Committee Consisting of the Representatives of Egypt, France, United Kingdom, and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on Re-Examination of Article 2, Paragraph 2 of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1889

Seventy-Third Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 15 June 1948	1889
Seventy-Fourth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 15 June 1948	1896
Philippine Amendment to Operative Clause of Preamble	1906
China and the United States: Proposal Concerning Education for the Declaration on Human Rights	1906
Report of the Sub-Committee Consisting of the Representatives of Australia, China, Philippines, United Kingdom and United States of America on Paragraphs 4 and 5 of the Preamble on the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1907
Statement by Mr. René Cassin, Representative of France, on the Implementation of Human Rights	1908
Report of the Drafting Sub-Committee on the 6 th Paragraph of the Preamble of the Draft International Declaration on Human Rights	1908
Seventy-Fifth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 16 June 1948	1909
Seventy-Sixth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 16 June 1948	1918
Draft Report of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council	1920
Second Report of the Drafting Sub-Committee on the Preamble to the Draft International Declaration of Human Rights	1922
France-United States of America: Proposal on the Next Session of the Commission on Human Rights	1923
Seventy-Seventh Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 17 June 1948	1923
Seventy-Eighth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 17 June 1948	1931
Draft International Declaration of Human Rights	1940
Eightieth Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 18 June 1948	1946
Eighty-First Meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, 18 June 1948	1955
Report of the Third Session of the Commission on Human Rights	1964
One Hundred and Eightieth Meeting of the Economic and Social Council, 21 July 1948	1982
Note by the Representative of Canada	1984
Two Hundred and First Meeting of the Economic and Social Council, 17 August 1948	1985
Two Hundred and Second Meeting of the Economic and Social Council, 17 August 1948	1989
Brazil: France: Draft Resolution	1990
Two Hundred and Fifteenth Meeting of the Economic and Social Council, 25 August 1948	1991

Two-Hundred and Eighteenth Meeting of the Economic and Social Council, 26 August 1948	2009
Economic and Social Council Resolution of 26 August 1948	2017
Volume III
Report of the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly	2018
Report of the Economic and Social Council	2022
One Hundred and Thirty-Ninth Meeting of the General Assembly, 23 September 1948	2024
One Hundred and Forty-Fourth Meeting of the General Assembly, 27 September 1948	2026
One Hundred and Forty-Fifth Meeting of the General Assembly, 27 September 1948	2027
One Hundred and Forty-Seventh Meeting of the General Assembly, 28 September 1948	2030
One Hundred and Forty-Eighth Meeting of the General Assembly, 29 September 1948	2030
Eighty-Eighth Meeting of the Third Committee, 30 September 1948	2031
Eighty-Ninth Meeting of the Third Committee, 30 September 1948	2037
Table of Correlation of Articles of the Draft International Declaration of Human Rights and the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man	2042
Ninetieth Meeting of the Third Committee, 1 October 1948	2044
Brazil: Amendment to Second Part of Article 1	2053
Cuba: Amendment to the Draft Declaration	2053
Ninety-First Meeting of the Third Committee, 2 October 1948	2053
Ninety-Second Meeting of the Third Committee, 2 October 1948	2061
Dominican Republic: Amendments to the Draft Declaration of Human Rights	2073
Cuba: Amendments to the First Nine Articles of the Draft Declaration	2074
Cuba: Draft Plan of Work	2076
Netherlands: Amendment to the First Paragraph of the Preamble	2082
Panama: Amendments to the First Nine Articles of the Draft Declaration	2082
Ninety-Third Meeting of the Third Committee, 4 October 1948	2084
Principles of International Morality Adopted at the XXXVII th Inter-Parliamentary Conference	2095
Egypt: Proposal	2099
United States of America: Amendments to the Draft Declaration of Human Rights	2099

Ninety-Fourth Meeting of the Third Committee, 5 October 1948	2100
Peru: Amendment to the Draft Declaration	2109
Union of South Africa: Amendments to the Draft Declaration	2110
Bolivia: Amendment to the Draft Declaration	2110
Guatemala: Amendment to the Draft Declaration	2110
Mexico: Amendment to Article 7 of the Draft Declaration	2111
Compilation of Amendments to the Draft Declaration of Human Rights	2111
Ninety-Fifth Meeting of the Third Committee, 6 October 1948	2128
Uruguay: Amendment to Article 1 of the Draft Declaration	2138
Cuba: Amendments to Articles 10–22 of the Draft Declaration	2139
Yugoslavia: Amendments to the Draft Declaration	2142
Belgium: Amendment to Article 1 of the Draft Declaration	2143
Lebanon: Amendment to Article 1 of the Draft Declaration	2143
China: Amendment to Article 1 of the Draft Declaration	2143
Iraq: Amendment to Article 1 of the Draft Declaration	2144
Greece: Amendment to Article 1 of the Draft Declaration	2144
Philippines: Amendment to Article 24 of the Draft Declaration	2144
Saudi Arabia: Amendment to Article 14 of the Draft Declaration	2145
Saudi Arabia: Amendment to Article 12 of the Draft Declaration	2145
Ecuador: Amendment to Article 1	2145
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 1 of the Draft Declaration	2146
Ninety-Sixth Meeting of the Third Committee, 7 October 1948	2148
France: Amendments to the Draft Declaration	2156
Ninety-Seventh Meeting of the Third Committee, 8 October 1948	2157
Dominican Republic: Amendment to Article 22 of the Draft Declaration	2163
New Zealand: Amendment to Article 1 of the Draft Declaration	2163
Venezuela: Amendment to Article 1 of the Draft Declaration	2164
Saudi Arabia: Amendment to Article 16 of the Draft Declaration	2164
Colombia and Costa Rica: Amendment to Article 19 of the Draft Declaration	2164
Chile: Amendment to Article 15 of the Draft Declaration	2165
Denmark: Amendment to Article 23 of the Draft Declaration	2165
Argentina: Amendments to Articles 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24 of the Draft Declaration	2165
Sweden: Amendments to Articles 16, 19 and 21 of the Draft Declaration	2167
Ninety-Eighth Meeting of the Third Committee, 9 October 1948	2167

United Kingdom: Amendments to the Preamble and Article 12 of the Draft Declaration	2175
Amendments to Article 1, Order Proposed by the Chairman	2175
Saudi Arabia: Amendment to Article 10 of the Draft Declaration	2177
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 2 of the Draft Declaration	2177
Australia: Amendments to Preamble and Article 23 of the Draft Declaration	2178
Panama: Amendments to Articles 10 to 28 of the Draft Declaration	2179
Turkey: Amendment to Article 23 of the Draft Declaration	2180
Ninety-Ninth Meeting of the Third Committee, 11 October 1948	2181
Hundredth Meeting of the Third Committee, 12 October 1948	2191
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 3 of the Draft Declaration	2202
Lebanon: Amendments to Draft Declaration	2203
Cuba: Amendments to Articles 23 to 27 of the Draft Declaration	2204
Lebanon: Amendment to the Draft Declaration	2206
Netherlands: Amendment to the Draft Declaration	2206
Egypt: Amendments to the Draft Declaration	2206
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Amendment to Article 3 of the Draft Declaration	2208
Mexico: Amendments to Articles 3, 6, 7, 14, 23 and 25 of the Draft Declaration	2208
New Zealand: Amendments to Preamble and Articles 10, 12, 20, 21, 22, 23 and 27 of the Draft Declaration	2210
Uruguay: Amendment to the Draft Declaration	2211
France: Amendments to Draft Declaration of Human Rights	2213
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 3 of the Draft Declaration	2215
Uruguay: Proposal	2215
Hundred and First Meeting of the Third Committee, 13 October 1948	2216
France: Amendment to the Additional Article in the Declaration Concerning Petitions and Communications	2222
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 4 of the Draft Declaration	2222
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 5 of the Draft Declaration	2223
Uruguay, Cuba, Lebanon: Joint Amendment to Article 3 of the Draft Declaration	2224
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 6	2224
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 7	2225
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 8	2227
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 9	2228
Hundred and Second Meeting of the Third Committee, 14 October 1948	2229
France and Lebanon: French Version of Article 2 of the Draft Declaration	2239
Lebanon: Amendment to the USSR Amendment to Article 3	2240

Hundred and Third Meeting of the Third Committee, 15 October 1948	2240
Uruguay, Cuba, Lebanon: Joint Amendment to Article 3 of the Draft Declaration	2251
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 10 of the Draft Declaration	2251
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 14 of the Draft Declaration	2252
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 11 of the Draft Declaration	2254
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 12 of the Draft Declaration	2255
Hundred and Fourth Meeting of the Third Committee, 16 October 1948	2256
Sweden: Proposal	2268
Belgium: Proposal to Modify the Text of the Joint Amendment to Article 3	2268
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 13 of the Draft Declaration	2268
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 15 of the Draft Declaration	2270
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 16 of the Draft Declaration	2271
Hundred and Fifth Meeting of the Third Committee, 18 October 1948	2272
Hundred and Seventh Meeting of the Third Committee, 19 October 1948	2281
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 25 of the Draft Declaration	2294
Hundred and Eighth Meeting of the Third Committee, 20 October 1948	2295
Hundred and Ninth Meeting of the Third Committee, 21 October 1948	2300
Hundred and Tenth Meeting of the Third Committee, 22 October 1948	2303
Hundred and Eleventh Meeting of the Third Committee, 23 October 1948	2312
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 17 of the Draft Declaration	2321
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 18 of the Draft Declaration	2323
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 19 of the Draft Declaration	2324
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 20 of the Draft Declaration	2326
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 21 of the Draft Declaration	2328
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 22 of the Draft Declaration	2330
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 23 of the Draft Declaration	2332
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 24 of the Draft Declaration	2334
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 26 of the Draft Declaration	2336
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 27 of the Draft Declaration	2336
Amendment to the Article on Measures of Implementation	2338
Proposed Additional Articles to the Draft Declaration	2338
Mexico: Amendment to Article 6 of the Draft Declaration	2339
Mexico, Chile, Venezuela: Amendment to Article 6 of the Draft Declaration	2340
Cuba: Addendum to Article 6 of the Draft Declaration	2340
Hundred and Twelfth Meeting of the Third Committee, 25 October 1948	2340
Hundred and Thirteenth Meeting of the Third Committee, 26 October 1948	2350
Amendment to Article 6 of the Draft Declaration Adopted by the Third Committee	2360
Panama: Revised Amendment to Article 7 of the Draft Declaration	2361

Synthesized Text for Article 7 Elaborated Jointly by the Delegations of Cuba, Ecuador, France, Mexico, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Uruguay	2361
Hundred and Fourteenth Meeting of the Third Committee, 27 October 1948	2362
Addendum to Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 10	2369
Hundred and Fifteenth Meeting of the Third Committee, 28 October 1948	2369
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 10 of the Draft Declaration	2378
Hundred and Sixteenth Meeting of the Third Committee, 29 October 1948	2380
Hundred and Seventeenth Meeting of the Third Committee, 29 October 1948	2390
Additional Articles Proposed for the Draft Declaration	2392
United Kingdom: Proposed Compromise for Text of Article 10 of the Draft Declaration	2393
Text of Articles 1 to 9 of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Third Committee	2393
Hundred and Nineteenth Meeting of the Third Committee, 30 October 1948	2395
Hundred and Twentieth Meeting of the Third Committee, 2 November 1948	2405
Text of Articles 10 and 11 of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Third Committee	2418
France and Brazil: Compromise Wording for the French Amendment to Article 12	2419
Hundred and Twenty-First Meeting of the Third Committee, 3 November 1948	2419
Hundred and Twenty-Second Meeting of the Third Committee, 4 November 1948	2434
Brazil: Amendment to the Third Paragraph of the French Amendment	2442
Hundred and Twenty-Third Meeting of the Third Committee, 5 November 1948	2442
Additional Articles Proposed for the Draft Declaration	2453
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 19 of the Draft Declaration	2454
Hundred and Twenty-Fourth Meeting of the Third Committee, 6 November 1948	2454
Belgium: Compromise Amendment to Article 15 of the Draft Declaration	2462
Hundred and Twenty-Fifth Meeting of the Third Committee, 8 November 1948	2462
Hundred and Twenty-Sixth Meeting of the Third Committee, 8 November 1948	2476
Text as adopted by the Committee for articles 12 to 14 of the draft Declaration	2487
Saudi Arabia: Amendment to Article 16 of the Draft Declaration	2487

Hundred and Twenty-Seventh Meeting of the Third Committee, 9 November 1948	2488
Hundred and Twenty-Eighth Meeting of the Third Committee, 9 November 1948	2503
Belgium: Amendment to Article 18	2514
Hundred and Twenty-Ninth Meeting of the Third Committee, 10 November 1948	2514
Hundred and Thirtieth Meeting of the Third Committee, 10 November 1948	2527
Text of Articles 15 to 17 of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Committee	2536
France: Amendment to the Cuban Amendment to Article 18	2537
Poland: Compromise Text for Article 18	2537
Iraq: Amendment to Article 19 of the Draft Declaration	2537
Hundred and Thirty-First Meeting of the Third Committee, 11 November 1948	2538
Hundred and Thirty-Second Meeting of the Third Committee, 11 November 1948	2549
France: Amendment to Article 19 of the Draft Declaration	2557
China: Compromise Suggestion for Article 19 of the Draft Declaration	2558
United Kingdom: Redraft Proposal for Paragraph 3 of the Chinese Compromise Suggestion for Article 19	2558
Uruguay: Text Proposed to Replace Paragraph 3 of Article 19 of the Draft Declaration	2558
Hundred and Thirty-Third Meeting of the Third Committee, 12 November 1948	2559
Hundred and Thirty-Fourth Meeting of the Third Committee, 12 November 1948	2570
Text of Articles 18 to 20 of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Committee	2576
New Zealand: Amendments to the Preamble and Articles 10, 12, 20, 21, 22, 23 and 27 of the Draft Declaration	2577
France: Amendments	2577
Chile: Compromise Suggestion for Article 20 of the Draft Declaration	2578
Hundred and Thirty-Seventh Meeting of the Third Committee, 15 November 1948	2578
Hundred and Thirty-Eighth Meeting of the Third Committee, 15 November 1948	2583
Cuba: Amendment to Article 21 of the Draft Declaration	2598

Hundred and Thirty-Ninth Meeting of the Third Committee, 16 November 1948	2598
Hundred and Fortieth Meeting of the Third Committee, 16 November 1948	2607
Hundred and Forty-First Meeting of the Third Committee, 16 November 1948	2622
Article 21	2629
United States: Amendment to Article 22 of the Draft Declaration	2629
Norway: Amendment to Article 22 of the Draft Declaration and to the Yugoslav Amendment to Article 22	2630
France: Proposed Amendments to Articles 27 and 28	2630
France: Amendment to Article 22	2631
Hundred and Forty-Second Meeting of the Third Committee, 17 November 1948	2631
Hundred and Forty-Third Meeting of the Third Committee, 17 November 1948	2639
Turkey: Amendment to Article 23 of the Draft Declaration	2651
China: Draft Amendment to Article 22	2652
Australia: Amendment to Article 22 of the Draft Declaration	2652
Ecuador: Amendment to Article 22 of the Draft Declaration	2652
France: Amendment to Document A/C.3/347/Rev.1	2653
Ecuador: Amendment to the Preamble	2653
Hundred and Forty-Fourth Meeting of the Third Committee, 18 November 1948	2654
Hundred and Forty-Fifth Meeting of the Third Committee, 18 November 1948	2662
Australia, United States: Amendment to Article 23 of the Draft Declaration	2668
Revised Version of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Amendment to Article 23 of the Draft Declaration	2668
United Kingdom: Amendment to Article 23 of the Draft Declaration	2668
France: Amendment to Article 23 of the Draft Declaration	2669
Mexico, United States: Joint Amendment to Article 23 of the Draft Declaration	2669
Denmark: Addendum	2669
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Compromise Proposal on Article 21, Paragraph 2	2670
Hundred and Forty-Sixth Meeting of the Third Committee, 19 November 1948	2670
Hundred and Forty-Seventh Meeting of the Third Committee, 19 November 1948	2678

Hundred and Forty-Eighth Meeting of the Third Committee, 19 November 1948	2693
Panama: Amendment to Article 24 of the Draft Declaration	2701
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 27 of the Draft Declaration	2701
Recapitulation of Amendments to Article 28 of the Draft Declaration	2703
Additional Articles Proposed for the Draft Declaration	2704
Recapitulation of Amendments to the Preamble of the Draft Declaration	2706
France: Amendment to Article 24 of the Draft Declaration	2709
Philippine-Argentine Joint Amendment: Revised Version of the Amendments to Article 24 of the Draft Declaration	2710
New Zealand: Amendment to Article 24 of the Draft Declaration	2710
Cuba, France, Mexico: Joint Amendment to Article 25 of the Draft Declaration	2710
Hundred and Forty-Ninth Meeting of the Third Committee, 20 November 1948	2711
Hundred and Fiftieth Meeting of the Third Committee, 20 November 1948	2717
China: Compromise Text for Article 25 of the Draft Declaration	2729
Report of Sub-Committee 3 of the Third Committee Submitted by Dr. Guy Pérez Cisneros (Cuba) Rapporteur	2729
Hundred and Fifty-First Meeting of the Third Committee, 22 November 1948	2738
Hundred and Fifty-Second Meeting of the Third Committee, 22 November 1948	2744
Text of Articles 22 to 26 of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Committee	2754
Hundred and Fifty-Third Meeting of the Third Committee, 23 November 1948	2755
Lebanon: Amendment to Article 20 of the Draft Declaration	2766
Hundred and Fifty-Fourth Meeting of the Third Committee, 24 November 1948	2766
Hundred and Fifty-Fifth Meeting of the Third Committee, 24 November 1948	2777
Hundred and Fifty-Sixth Meeting of the Third Committee, 25 November 1948	2784
Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic: Amendment to Article 21 as Submitted by Sub-Committee 3 to the Third Committee	2795
Text of Articles 27 and 28 of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Committee	2795
Hundred and Fifty-Seventh Meeting of the Third Committee, 25 November 1948	2796

Hundred and Fifty-Eighth Meeting of the Third Committee, 25 November 1948	2806
Text of Article 21 of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Committee	2816
United Kingdom: Draft Resolution: Additional Article on Measures of Implementation	2817
France: Amendment to United Kingdom: Draft Resolution A/C.3/370	2817
Hundred and Fifty-Ninth Meeting of the Third Committee, 26 November 1948	2818
Hundred and Sixtieth Meeting of the Third Committee, 26 November 1948	2827
Draft Resolution on Article on Measures of Implementation as Adopted by the Third Committee	2835
Corrigendum to Document E/800, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics	2835
Haiti: Draft Resolution	2836
Hundred and Sixty-First Meeting of the Third Committee, 27 November 1948	2836
Hundred and Sixty-Second Meeting of the Third Committee, 27 November 1948	2847
Present State of Debate on United Kingdom Draft Resolution	2857
Cuba and Chile: Amendment to the Third Paragraph of the Preamble	2857
France: Amendment Corrigendum to Document A/C.3/339	2858
Ecuador: Amendment to the Preamble Corrigendum to Document A/C.3/351	2858
Draft Resolution Adopted by the Third Committee Concerning the Three Proposals of Additional Articles Submitted Respectively by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Yugoslavia (Article B) and Denmark	2858
Argentina: Draft Resolution Concerning the Article Relative to the Right to Resist Acts of Oppression or Tyranny	2859
Chile: Alternative Text for the Additional Article Submitted by Cuba	2860
Hundred and Sixty-Third Meeting of the Third Committee, 29 November 1948	2860
Hundred and Sixty-Fourth Meeting of the Third Committee, 29 November 1948	2872
Text of Articles 1 to 28 of the Draft Declaration and Text of an Additional Article as Adopted by the Third Committee	2881
Greece: Drafting Amendment to the Last Paragraph of the Preamble	2886
Draft Resolution Suggested by the Chairman	2887
France: Draft Resolution	2887
Cuba, Chile, France: Joint Amendment to the Preamble	2888
Australia and France: Joint Amendment to the Preamble	2888
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Amendment to the Preamble	2888

Hundred and Sixty-Fifth Meeting of the Third Committee, 30 November 1948	2889
Hundred and Sixty-Sixth Meeting of the Third Committee, 30 November 1948	2901
Hundred and Sixty-Seventh Meeting of the Third Committee, 30 November 1948	2914
Text of Preamble of the Draft Declaration Adopted by the Third Committee	2924
United Kingdom: Proposed Drafting Changes to Articles 4, 5, 6, 10, 14 and 23 of the Draft Declaration	2925
Ecuador: Proposed Arrangements for the First Six Articles	2926
Cuba: Amendment to Article 2	2926
France: Compromise Proposal for the Text of Article 2	2927
Cuba: Draft Plan of the Declaration of Human Rights	2927
Cuba: Amendment to the Additional Article, to Become Paragraph 2 of Article 2	2928
Cuba: Amendment to the Additional Article, to Become Paragraph 2 of Article 2	2929
Belgium: Proposal for the Text of Article 6	2929
Text of Articles 1 to 10 of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Sub-Committee 4	2929
Text of Articles 11 to 13 of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Sub-Committee 4	2931
Cuba: Amendment to Article 14	2931
Text Proposed by China, the United Kingdom and the United States of America for Article 14	2932
China: Suggested Re-draft of Paragraph 1 of Article 23	2932
Text of Articles 15 to 19 as Adopted by the Sub-Committee 4	2932
Cuba: Amendment to Article 20	2933
France: Amendment to Article 20	2934
Lebanon: Drafting Amendment to Article 20	2934
China: Suggested Rearrangement of the Last Three Sentences in Paragraph 1 of Article 23 of the Draft Declaration	2934
Cuba: Proposal Concerning the Order of the Articles in the Draft Declaration	2935
Text of Articles 21 to 28 of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Sub-Committee 4	2936
Text of Articles 21 to 28 of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Sub-Committee 4, Corrigendum	2937
Text of Article 14 of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Sub-Committee 4	2938

Text of Article 20 of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Sub-Committee 4	2938
Text of Articles of the Draft Declaration as Adopted by the Sub-Committee 4	2939
France: Proposal for the Last Paragraph of the Preamble	2944
Draft Report of Sub-Committee 4 of the Third Committee	2944
Report of Sub-Committee 4 of the Third Committee	2955
Note by the Secretary-General	2959
Cuba: Amendments to the French Draft Resolution	2960
Text of Preamble as Adopted by Sub-Committee 4	2960
Hundred and Seventy-Fourth Meeting of the Third Committee, 4 December 1948	2961
Hundred and Seventy-Fifth Meeting of the Third Committee, 4 December 1948	2963
Lebanon: Compromise Proposal for Article 2 Paragraph 2 (A/C.3/400)	2968
New Zealand: Draft Resolution	2969
Greece: Proposal for Article 28	2969
Hundred and Seventy-Sixth Meeting of the Third Committee, 6 December 1948	2970
Hundred and Seventy-Seventh Meeting of the Third Committee, 6 December 1948	2981
Hundred and Seventy-Eighth Meeting of the Third Committee, 6 December 1948	2990
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Draft Resolution	3003
Report of the Third Committee	3003
United Kingdom: Amendment to Article 3 of the Draft Declaration Proposed by the Third Committee	3011
Hundred and Seventy-Ninth Meeting of the Third Committee, 7 December 1948	3012
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Amendments to the Draft Declaration Proposed by the Third Committee (A/777)	3018
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Draft Resolution	3019
Report by Mr P. B. Ryckmans (Belgium) of the Group of Linguistic Experts of Sub-Committee 4	3019
Delegation of the USSR: Draft Resolution	3021
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Draft Resolution	3021
Verbatim Record of the Hundred and Eightieth Meeting of the General Assembly, 9 December 1948	3022
United Kingdom: Amendment to Article 3 of the Draft Declaration Proposed by the Third Committee (A/777)	3040

Verbatim Record of the Hundred and Eighty-First Meeting of the General Assembly, 10 December 1948	3041
Verbatim Record of the Hundred and Eighty-Second Meeting of the General Assembly, 10 December 1948	3053
Verbatim Record of the Hundred and Eighty-Third Meeting of the General Assembly, 10 December 1948	3072
International Bill of Human Rights	3091
Table of provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights	3100
Subject index	3106

Preface

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights has been the centrepiece of the modern international law of human rights for more than sixty years. If anything, its significance continues to grow. The Declaration was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on 10 December 1948. The Charter of the United Nations, which entered into force in October 1945, recognized the importance of human rights but gave only the most general indications about the content of the concept. At the time the Charter was adopted, at the San Francisco Conference in June 1945, United States President Harry S. Truman said that “under this document [the Charter] we have good reason to expect an international bill of rights, acceptable to all the nations involved”.

The official documents relating to the drafting of the Universal Declaration are reproduced in this collection, from the pioneering work of the so-called “nuclear” Commission on Human Rights, in 1946, to the final drama of the vote in the General Assembly on the evening of 10 December 1948. There are more than 700 individual documents. The material actually begins with the work of the Preparatory Commission, set up in late 1945 following the entry into force of the Charter of the United Nations. Thus, it does not contain the proceedings of the San Francisco Conference or of the earlier Dumbarton Oaks discussions. It concludes with the resolution of the General Assembly to which the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is annexed. The documents are drawn from a range of United Nations bodies, essentially the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary organs, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. Relevant materials from the 1948 Conference on Freedom of Information and of the Press are also included. Every item in this collection bears an official United Nations document code.

Students of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights might well go beyond these materials, consulting the archival records of the various governments involved in the adoption of the Declaration and perhaps even those that were not Member States at the time. The memoirs of participants in the debates, as well as their unpublished papers, may also provide insight. Documents in the archives of non-governmental organizations might also be canvassed. But all of these materials are beyond the scope of the present project.

The official drafting history is important to the historiography of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as well as to human rights law more generally. It is also of special relevance to the interpretation of the Declaration. When a document such as the Declaration is being negotiated, participating States are quite conscious of the fact that they are constructing a documentary record that will be consulted in the future and quite possibly invoked in legal disputes. They make statements and reservations that are intended to condition the future interpretation of the text that is being adopted.

Affirming what is undoubtedly a customary principle of the interpretation of treaties, article 32 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties says recourse may be had to the preparatory work of a treaty and the circumstances of its conclusion, but only as a supplementary means of interpretation when other principles leave the meaning ambiguous or obscure or lead to a result which is manifestly absurd or unreasonable. Strictly speaking, the Vienna Convention is not applicable because the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is not a treaty. However, the negotiating history and subsequent application indicate that it is treaty-like, and there is no good reason to apply a different approach to interpretation of the Declaration from that which would be used for a treaty.

In practice, the travaux préparatoires of international legal instruments are regularly consulted by courts without much insistence on the exhaustion of other techniques of interpretation, despite the words of the Vienna Convention. The International Court of Justice has often used the travaux to “confirm its reading of the relevant texts”.<sup>1</sup> There is the inevitable objection that reliance on the drafting history risks freezing the interpretation of an instrument, making its meaning dependent upon the prevailing views at the time of its adoption. This is a particular concern with human rights texts. Alejandro Alvarez, who authored one of the texts that most influenced the drafters of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in an opinion he wrote at the International Court of Justice, said that “a treaty or a text that has once been established acquires a life of its own. Consequently, in interpreting it, we must have regard to the exigencies of contemporary life rather than to the intentions of those who framed it.”<sup>2</sup> The principle of dynamic or evolutive interpretation is especially significant with respect to instruments that protect human rights.<sup>3</sup> But regardless of their legal significance, the travaux préparatoires are of undeniable historical interest. The lawmaking process itself is one of endless fascination, especially on a topic of such importance.

<sup>1</sup> Application of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (Georgia v. Russia), Preliminary Objections, 1 April 2011, para. 142. Also: Sovereignty over Pulau Ligitan and Pulau Sipadan (Indonesia/Malaysia), Judgment, [2002] ICJ Reports 653, para. 53; Maritime Delimitation and Territorial Questions between Qatar and Bahrain (Qatar v. Bahrain), Jurisdiction and Admissibility, Judgment, [1995] ICJ Reports 21, para. 40.

<sup>2</sup> Competence of the Assembly for the Admission of a State to the United Nations, [1950] ICJ Reports 18.

<sup>3</sup> Vo c. France [GC], no. 53924/00, ECHR 2004 VIII, para. 82. Also: Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, 10 February 2009, para. 80; Micallef v. Malta [GC], no. 17056/06, 15 October 2009, para. 81; Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, 17 September 2009, para. 104.

As an exception, two official United Nations documents of some length have been omitted from this compilation, the report of Professor Charles de Visscher to the Institut de droit international<sup>4</sup> and the report of Professor Hersch Lauterpacht to the International Law Association.<sup>5</sup> These two documents are readily available in other published sources. Although consulted by the drafters they were not, strictly speaking, generated by States as part of the drafting process. Rather, they were reproduced by the Secretariat for the convenience of delegates. It should be recalled that this was prior to the availability of photocopying. For the reports of de Visscher and Lauterpacht to be made available, they needed to be retyped and then mimeographed, as well as translated into French, the other working language of the United Nations. Admittedly, the exclusion of these documents from this collection may be open to question, as the claim that such expert opinions should be part of the travaux is not without considerable merit.<sup>6</sup>

Verbatim transcripts of many of the meetings were taken. These are available in the archives of the United Nations as well as in some private archival collections. However, as a general rule they are not part of the official record of the negotiations and they are not reproduced in this collection, with the exception of the rather perfunctory sessions of the General Assembly. Most of the debates take the form of “summary records”, which amount to précis prepared by professionals within the United Nations Secretariat. They may lack some of the colour of a verbatim record although they should provide a reliable guide to the content. Summary Records are circulated to delegates so that corrections may be made. The corrections are then issued as distinct documents and incorporated in subsequent versions, notably in the Official Records of the organ in question.

Where the texts of documents have been taken from the Official Records this is indicated in a footnote, although the original code is used for identification of the document. This is the case for documents of the General Assembly, its Third Committee and the plenary Economic and Social Council. Comparison of the texts in the original documents and the versions published in the Official Records indicates that minor changes of an editorial nature are sometimes made. There does not appear to be any meaningful difference from the standpoint of substance, however. In the interests of thoroughness, a scholar might wish to consult the original mimeographed text as well as the version in the Official Records, which has been edited and bears slight annotations and cross-references.

<sup>4</sup> E/CN.4/40.   <sup>5</sup> E/CN.4/89.

<sup>6</sup> Yves Le Bouthillier, ‘Article 32’, in Olivier Corten and Pierre Klein, eds., The Vienna Conventions on the Law of Treaties, A Commentary, Vol. I, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2011, pp. 853–4.

In this compilation, small grammatical and technical mistakes have frequently been corrected without any indication to this effect appearing to indicate the change. It was felt that highlighting the existence of obvious errors would smack of pedantry and be of no practical use to those who consult these materials. There has been an attempt to avoid excessive use of [sic]. Sometimes, however, where the original meaning was unclear, its use has seemed unavoidable if an accurate reflection of the original documents is to be provided. Very occasionally the original document, which was actually reproduced by mimeography, is not clear, and this has been indicated. Spellings have been rendered consistent in accordance with the publisher's approved style.

Most of the travaux were prepared using typewriters. Titles and emphasis were indicated using a combination of upper case, underlining, centring and indenting, with practice varying considerably even for documents generated at the same set of meetings. Although the United Nations probably had a formal style guide to assist those who were typing and editing the documents, it was not followed rigorously. Differences seem to reflect the practice of the individuals preparing the materials. Consequently, the formatting of the documents in this collection follows the originals but only in a very general sense. Words entirely in upper case have been avoided, and italics have replaced underlining.

Pagination of the originals is indicated using square brackets. Footnotes in the original are reproduced within the text itself and generally appear at the end of each page, immediately before the page break. At the time, multiple asterisks rather than numerals were usually employed for footnotes. The consecutively numbered footnotes in this compilation are the work of the editor. They provide indications about the meaning of the original and indicate errors and corrections. They are also used to provide annotations intended to assist the reader in understanding references made in the documents.

Each United Nations document is identified by the document code followed by the date of issue of the document. The document code indicates the body that produced the document ("A/" for General Assembly, "E/" for Economic and Social Council, "E/CN.4/" for Commission on Human Rights, and so on; see the Table of Documents for a full indication). The documents are presented in chronological order rather than grouped by the organ that produced them. Of course, because the work was carried out by one organ at a time, the documents of a particular body, such as the Drafting Committee, tend to be clustered together. But occasionally they are interrupted by a document from another source that may have been issued while the Committee was in session. For a list of documents emanating from one particular body, the Table of Documents should be consulted.

Although the date of the document is the basis for establishing the chronological order, an exception is made in the case of the Summary Records and Verbatim

Reports. These documents recording the debates themselves are often issued days or weeks after the meeting and their issuance does not necessarily follow the chronology of the meetings themselves. For such documents, the date of the meeting is the basis for the classification; an explanatory footnote indicates the date of issuance of the document, as it appears on the original.

Difficult editorial decisions arose because of the relationship between the draft declaration and the draft covenant. Initially, work was undertaken on the “bill of rights” but by June 1947 the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights had separated the project into three components, a draft manifesto (ancestor of the Declaration), a draft convention (ancestor of the two International Covenants, finally adopted in 1966) and the issue of implementation, a complex subject that to some extent remains unfinished business. Negotiations of the draft declaration and draft covenant proceeded in parallel. Because, in some cases, the provisions and the rights in question were closely related, documents that at first glance appear to concern the draft covenant or measures of implementation have been included in the compilation. As a rule of thumb, when reference was made to the draft declaration, even in the context of a discussion directly related to one of the other two subjects, the document is included in this compilation.

At the time the Universal Declaration was drafted, the United Nations had five official languages (Arabic was added in 1973) but for the first years English and French were the working languages. Spanish was added on 7 December 1948, the same day that the Third Committee adopted the draft declaration.<sup>7</sup> The travaux are available in both English and French, although delegations were free to submit documents in any of the official languages. Occasionally, the originals were in Spanish or Russian, though never in Chinese. They were then translated into the two working languages. The documents in this collection are the English-language versions. When a document was issued in a language other than English, this is indicated. Otherwise, English is presumed. A thorough researcher would be wise to review the French-language texts as well, to ensure that there are no discrepancies.

My thanks go first and foremost to Christina Szurlej, who is completing a doctorate in international human rights law in an area related to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Christina worked indefatigably in the compilation of these materials, bringing her considerable expertise to bear on the project. She received invaluable assistance from Bethan McGarry, who interned at the Irish Centre for Human Rights during 2011 while research on this project was ongoing. Penelope Soteriou made an important contribution at the proofreading stage. The Vice-President for Research at the National University of Ireland Galway, Terry Smith, provided support for the project and, indeed, made it possible. I am also grateful to Middlesex University, where I was appointed Professor of International Law in 2011 and where the bulk of the work on this project was conducted.

<sup>7</sup> GA Res. 246(III).

The assistance of many librarians is greatly appreciated, notably those of the Dag Hammarskjöld Library at United Nations headquarters in New York, in particular the reference and digitalization team, and of the British Library in London, in particular Vera Eterovic and Jerry Jenkins. Help from Deborah Gardner and Fay Rosenfeld of Roosevelt House in New York is also acknowledged.

Finally, many thanks are due to Finola O’Sullivan, Nienke van Schaverbeke, Sarah Roberts and Richard Woodham of Cambridge University Press.

William A. Schabas
London, 10 December 2012

Foreword

“All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights . . . Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person . . . All are equal before the law.”

With these fundamental words, the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights recognized that all the human rights – civil, cultural, economic, political and social – belonged inherently to all the people of the world. The Declaration is the cornerstone of modern human rights law: it stipulates that these rights inherently belong to people, rather than being “gifts” which can be bestowed upon them, or denied to them, by design, fate or the whims of their rulers.

Composed of 30 succinct provisions, the Declaration has probably had more impact on mankind than any other document in modern history. Adopted in the 5 official languages of the United Nations, it has been translated into another 380 versions, all of them available on the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights. The Declaration offers a “common understanding” of the rights and freedoms enshrined in the Declaration itself, and the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the many general and specialized treaties, declarations and other instruments that followed its adoption.

Immediately after the end of the Second World War, statesmen and stateswomen, diplomats, journalists, activists and – above all – the “common people”, to use the words of the inspiring preamble to the Declaration, wanted to prevent such a devastating conflict ever happening again. This meant tackling its causes as well as its aftermath. They were determined to ensure that there would never be another Holocaust, and that everyone – especially the poor, the hungry, the displaced and the marginalized – would in future have systems to support them and international legal frameworks to protect them. Many of the world’s most impressive legal treaties and institutions, including the United Nations itself, date back to this fertile period in the late 1940s. But the Universal Declaration had and still has a truly special place.

It has been more than six decades since the Declaration was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly, on 10 December 1948. Human rights had already featured in the Charter, which dates from June 1945, but the founding document of the United Nations left some important matters to be resolved. The Charter spoke in a general sense about human rights and fundamental freedoms, the importance of international cooperation, the essential precondition of peace, and the equality of women and men. The Universal Declaration articulated a more developed and detailed view of the scope of these rights, using concise texts to explore the scope of the freedoms of religion and expression, and to privacy, the family, migration, education, fair employment and a host of other issues.

Yet the Declaration was never intended to be the last word on the subject. Rather, the formulation of human rights was viewed as a work in progress, and there was much unfinished business, including more treaties to be negotiated. The Declaration is not only a seminal document in the development of international human rights law, it is also a living instrument that continues to be relevant to and applied in a broad range of contexts. The Declaration is regularly cited by tribunals throughout the world, as well as by the United Nations treaty bodies. Recently, its importance was enhanced when the Human Rights Council identified the Declaration as one of the central legal bases for the Universal Periodic Review process. In addition to explicit references to the Declaration by States in their reports to the Council, and in the comments of their peers, the content of the Declaration underpins the mechanism as a whole.

In this context, this comprehensive collection of the United Nations documents relevant to the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights assembled by Professor William Schabas will undoubtedly contribute to furthering the understanding of the body of human rights. A complex understanding of the core fundamental rights and freedoms emerges from this material. It traces the drafting of the Universal Declaration through the early work of the Nuclear Commission on Human Rights and then the Commission itself to the General Assembly, as well as in the specialized work of bodies like the Commission on the Status of Women and the Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities. Never has the drafting record of the Universal Declaration been so accessible, not only because the compilation of documents is thorough and complete but also because of the detailed indexing. Henceforth, those who research the meaning and content of human rights will turn systematically to this record of the early debates. New insights into fundamental rights will emerge as the preparatory work is carefully scrutinized. I wish personally to commend Professor Schabas for this outstanding collection.

Today, the international human rights movement has many dimensions. Professionals and activists take on a variety of roles, as diplomats, NGO campaigners and ordinary citizens who participate in the development of the shared vision launched by the Declaration. As Eleanor Roosevelt once said, human rights begin in small places, close to home. An important contribution to this constantly evolving system is made by scholars and academics, who enrich our grasp of the content of international human rights. They examine the history of human rights, analysing the themes of the time and the unresolved debates. This exploration of the past helps in better understanding the present as well as in pointing the way to the future.

Navanetham Pillay
United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights
Geneva, 3 October 2012

Table of documents

1. Preparatory Commission

PC/20	2
PC/EX/113/Rev.1	1

2. General Assembly

Resolutions

A/RES/43(I)	97
A/RES/128(II)	1004
A/RES/217(III)	3091

Documents

A/3	3
A/65	71
A/101	77
A/118	78
A/125	78
A/140	81
A/148	79
A/234	94
A/374	1003
A/625	2018
A/632	2022
A/777	3003
A/778	3011
A/778/Rev.1	3040
A/784	3018
A/785	3019
A/785/Rev.1	3021
A/785/Rev.2	3021

Procès-verbaux

A/PV.7	5
A/PV.46	82
A/PV.55	96
A/PV.139	2024
A/PV.145	2027
A/PV.147	2030
A/PV.148	2030
A/PV.180	3022
A/PV.181	3041
A/PV.182	3053
A/PV.183	3072

2.1. Bureau

A/BUR/6	4
A/BUR/40	82

2.2. First CommitteeDocuments*

A/C.1/38	83
----------	----

Summary Records

A/C.1/SR.41	88
-------------	----

2.3. Third CommitteeDocuments*

A/C.3/126	86
A/C.3/135	93
A/C.3/166	956
A/C.3/167	957
A/C.3/170	957
A/C.3/171	958
A/C.3/172	959
A/C.3/175	959

A/C.3/176	960
A/C.3/177	960
A/C.3/179	961
A/C.3/181	963
A/C.3/183	965
A/C.3/184	968
A/C.3/184/Rev.1	969
A/C.3/186	967
A/C.3/187	967
A/C.3/214	2042
A/C.3/215	2053
A/C.3/216	2053
A/C.3/217	2073
A/C.3/217/Corr.2	2163
A/C.3/218	2076
A/C.3/219	2082
A/C.3/220	2082
A/C.3/221	2095
A/C.3/222	2099
A/C.3/223	2099
A/C.3/224	2074
A/C.3/225	2109
A/C.3/226	2110
A/C.3/227	2110
A/C.3/228	2110
A/C.3/229	2111
A/C.3/230	2111
A/C.3/231	2138
A/C.3/232/Corr.1	2598
A/C.3/233	2142
A/C.3/234	2143
A/C.3/235	2143
A/C.3/236	2143
A/C.3/237	2144
A/C.3/238	2144
A/C.3/239	2144
A/C.3/240	2145
A/C.3/241	2145
A/C.3/242	2145
A/C.3/243	2146

A/C.3/244	2156
A/C.3/244/Rev.1	2213
A/C.3/244/Rev.1/Corr.1	2222
A/C.3/244/Rev.2/Corr.1	2557
A/C.3/245	2163
A/C.3/246	2164
A/C.3/247	2164
A/C.3/247/Rev.1	2487
A/C.3/248	2164
A/C.3/249	2165
A/C.3/250	2165
A/C.3/251	2165
A/C.3/252	2167
A/C.3/253	2175
A/C.3/254	2175
A/C.3/255	2177
A/C.3/256	2177
A/C.3/257	2178
A/C.3/259	2202
A/C.3/259/Add.1	2215
A/C.3/260	2203
A/C.3/261	2204
A/C.3/262	2206
A/C.3/263	2206
A/C.3/264	2206
A/C.3/265	2208
A/C.3/266	2208
A/C.3/267	2210
A/C.3/267/Corr.1	2577
A/C.3/268	2211
A/C.3/269	2239
A/C.3/270	2215
A/C.3/271	2222
A/C.3/272	2223
A/C.3/273	2180
A/C.3/273/Rev.1	2651
A/C.3/274	2224
A/C.3/274/Rev.1	2251
A/C.3/275	2224
A/C.3/276	2225

A/C.3/277	2227
A/C.3/278	2228
A/C.3/279	2240
A/C.3/280	2179
A/C.3/280/Corr.1	2701
A/C.3/281	2268
A/C.3/282	2268
A/C.3/283	2251
A/C.3/283/Add.1	2369
A/C.3/283/Rev.2	2378
A/C.3/284/Rev.1	2254
A/C.3/285/Rev.1	2255
A/C.3/286/Rev.1	2268
A/C.3/287	2252
A/C.3/288/Rev.1	2270
A/C.3/289/Rev.1	2271
A/C.3/294/Rev.1	2321
A/C.3/295/Rev.1	2323
A/C.3/296/Rev.1	2324
A/C.3/296/Rev.1/Corr.1	2454
A/C.3/297/Rev.1	2326
A/C.3/298/Rev.1	2328
A/C.3/299/Rev.1	2330
A/C.3/300	2332
A/C.3/301	2334
A/C.3/302	2294
A/C.3/303/Rev.1	2336
A/C.3/304/Rev.1	2336
A/C.3/304/Rev.2	2701
A/C.3/305/Rev.1	2703
A/C.3/306	2338
A/C.3/307	2338
A/C.3/307/Rev.1	2392
A/C.3/307/Rev.1/Add.1	2453
A/C.3/307/Rev.1/Add.2	2669
A/C.3/307/Rev.2	2704
A/C.3/307/Rev.2/Corr.2	2835
A/C.3/308	2339
A/C.3/309	2340
A/C.3/310	2340

A/C.3/311	2360
A/C.3/312	2361
A/C.3/313	2361
A/C.3/314/Rev.1	2706
A/C.3/314/Rev.1/Add.1	2857
A/C.3/314/Rev.1/Add.2	2886
A/C.3/319	2393
A/C.3/320	2393
A/C.3/321	2418
A/C.3/322	2419
A/C.3/324	2442
A/C.3/325	2462
A/C.3/326	2487
A/C.3/328	2514
A/C.3/329	2536
A/C.3/330	2537
A/C.3/331	2537
A/C.3/332	2537
A/C.3/333	2558
A/C.3/334	2558
A/C.3/335	2558
A/C.3/339	2577
A/C.3/339/Corr.1	2858
A/C.3/340	2578
A/C.3/341	2576
A/C.3/342	2629
A/C.3/343	2629
A/C.3/344	2630
A/C.3/345	2630
A/C.3/346	2631
A/C.3/347/Rev.1	2652
A/C.3/348	2652
A/C.3/349	2652
A/C.3/350	2653
A/C.3/351	2653
A/C.3/351/Corr.1	2858
A/C.3/352	2668
A/C.3/353	2668

A/C.3/354	2668
A/C.3/355	2669
A/C.3/356	2669
A/C.3/357	2709
A/C.3/358	2710
A/C.3/359	2710
A/C.3/360	2710
A/C.3/361	2729
A/C.3/363	2729
A/C.3/364	2754
A/C.3/365	2766
A/C.3/366	2795
A/C.3/367	2816
A/C.3/368	2795
A/C.3/370	2817
A/C.3/371	2817
A/C.3/372	2835
A/C.3/373	2836
A/C.3/376	2858
A/C.3/377	2859
A/C.3/378	2860
A/C.3/379	2881
A/C.3/380	2887
A/C.3/381	2887
A/C.3/382/Rev.1	2888
A/C.3/383	2888
A/C.3/385	2888
A/C.3/386	2924
A/C.3/397	2934
A/C.3/400	2944
A/C.3/400/Rev.1	2955
A/C.3/401	2959
A/C.3/402	2960
A/C.3/404	2968
A/C.3/405	2969
A/C.3/406	2969
A/C.3/407	3003
A/C.3/W.2	80
A/C.3/W.13	2857

Summary Records

A/C.3/SR.33	84
A/C.3/SR.42	87
A/C.3/SR.45	94
A/C.3/SR.88	2031
A/C.3/SR.89	2037
A/C.3/SR.90	2044
A/C.3/SR.91	2053
A/C.3/SR.92	2061
A/C.3/SR.93	2084
A/C.3/SR.94	2100
A/C.3/SR.95	2128
A/C.3/SR.96	2148
A/C.3/SR.97	2157
A/C.3/SR.98	2167
A/C.3/SR.99	2181
A/C.3/SR.100	2191
A/C.3/SR.101	2216
A/C.3/SR.102	2229
A/C.3/SR.103	2240
A/C.3/SR.104	2256
A/C.3/SR.105	2272
A/C.3/SR.107	2281
A/C.3/SR.108	2295
A/C.3/SR.109	2300
A/C.3/SR.110	2303
A/C.3/SR.111	2312
A/C.3/SR.112	2340
A/C.3/SR.113	2350
A/C.3/SR.114	2362
A/C.3/SR.115	2369
A/C.3/SR.116	2380
A/C.3/SR.117	2390
A/C.3/SR.119	2395
A/C.3/SR.120	2405
A/C.3/SR.121	2419
A/C.3/SR.122	2434
A/C.3/SR.123	2442

A/C.3/SR.124	2454
A/C.3/SR.125	2462
A/C.3/SR.126	2476
A/C.3/SR.127	2488
A/C.3/SR.128	2503
A/C.3/SR.129	2514
A/C.3/SR.130	2527
A/C.3/SR.131	2538
A/C.3/SR.132	2549
A/C.3/SR.133	2559
A/C.3/SR.134	2570
A/C.3/SR.137	2578
A/C.3/SR.138	2583
A/C.3/SR.139	2598
A/C.3/SR.140	2607
A/C.3/SR.141	2622
A/C.3/SR.142	2631
A/C.3/SR.143	2639
A/C.3/SR.144	2654
A/C.3/SR.145	2662
A/C.3/SR.146	2670
A/C.3/SR.147	2678
A/C.3/SR.148	2693
A/C.3/SR.149	2711
A/C.3/SR.150	2717
A/C.3/SR.151	2738
A/C.3/SR.152	2744
A/C.3/SR.153	2755
A/C.3/SR.154	2766
A/C.3/SR.155	2777
A/C.3/SR.156	2784
A/C.3/SR.157	2796
A/C.3/SR.158	2806
A/C.3/SR.159	2818
A/C.3/SR.160	2827
A/C.3/SR.161	2836
A/C.3/SR.162	2847
A/C.3/SR.163	2860

A/C.3/SR.164	2872
A/C.3/SR.165	2889
A/C.3/SR.166	2901
A/C.3/SR.167	2914
A/C.3/SR.174	2961
A/C.3/SR.175	2963
A/C.3/SR.176	2970
A/C.3/SR.177	2981
A/C.3/SR.178	2990
A/C.3/SR.179	3012
2.3.1. Drafting Sub-committee on article 22
A/C.3/SC.3/1	2670
2.3.2. Drafting Sub-committee on the Declaration
A/C.3/SC.4/1	2925
A/C.3/SC.4/2	2926
A/C.3/SC.4/3	2926
A/C.3/SC.4/4	2927
A/C.3/SC.4/5/Rev.1	2929
A/C.3/SC.4/6	2929
A/C.3/SC.4/7	2929
A/C.3/SC.4/8	2927
A/C.3/SC.4/8/Rev.1	2935
A/C.3/SC.4/9	2931
A/C.3/SC.4/10	2931
A/C.3/SC.4/11	2932
A/C.3/SC.4/12	2932
A/C.3/SC.4/13	2932
A/C.3/SC.4/14	2933
A/C.3/SC.4/15	2934
A/C.3/SC.4/16	2934
A/C.3/SC.4/17	2936
A/C.3/SC.4/17/Corr.1	2937
A/C.3/SC.4/18	2938
A/C.3/SC.4/19	2938
A/C.3/SC.4/20	2939
A/C.3/SC.4/21	2944
A/C.3/SC.4/22	2960
A/C.3/SC.4/23	3019

3. Economic and Social CouncilResolutions*

E/RES/5(I)	20
E/RES/9(II)	70
E/RES/46(IV)	275
E/RES/48(IV)	276
E/RES/52(IV)	264
E/RES/84(V)	955
E/RES/118(VI)B	1389
E/RES/120(VI)C	1389
E/RES/151(VII)	2017

Documents

E/7	15
E/20	18
E/27	19
E/38	53
E/56	66
E/56/Rev.1	68
E/248	88
E/259	226
E/281	232
E/353	250
E/383	266
E/386	270
E/386/Add.1	271
E/422	242
E/439	239
E/533	951
E/600	1336
E/737	1389
E/738	1389
E/800	1964
E/965	1984
E/1009	1990
E/1046	2017
E/CT.2/2	71
E/ORG/1	14

E/ORG/2	18
E/ORG/3	13
Summary records
E/SR.18	58
E/SR.19	59
E/SR.20	65
E/SR.79	265
E/SR.84	272
E/SR.108	952
E/SR.109	953
E/SR.128	1381
E/SR.157	1388
E/SR.180	1982
E/SR.201	1985
E/SR.202	1989
E/SR.215	1991
E/SR.218	2009
3.1. Second Committee
E/C.2/28	232
E/C.2/32	237
3.2. Committee on Social Affairs
Documents
E/AC.7/8	250
E/AC.7/12	258
E/AC.7/13	252
E/AC.7/15	268
E/AC.7/15/Add.1	269
E/AC.7/18	270
E/AC.7/19	255
E/AC.7/20	259
Summary Records
E/AC.7/SR.33	1384
E/AC.7/SR.39	1386

3.4. Commission on Human RightsDocuments*

E/CN.4/2	98
E/CN.4/4	164
E/CN.4/11	175
E/CN.4/12	176
E/CN.4/13	176
E/CN.4/15	203
E/CN.4/17	212
E/CN.4/19	214
E/CN.4/21	908
E/CN.4/31	969
E/CN.4/32	999
E/CN.4/35	1013
E/CN.4/36	1022
E/CN.4/36/Add.1	1035
E/CN.4/36/Add.2	1144
E/CN.4/38	1017
E/CN.4/39	1024
E/CN.4/40	1077
E/CN.4/41	1078
E/CN.4/42/Rev.1	1113
E/CN.4/43	1114
E/CN.4/44	1114
E/CN.4/46	1123
E/CN.4/47	1124
E/CN.4/48	1125
E/CN.4/49	1125
E/CN.4/50	1141
E/CN.4/51	1142
E/CN.4/52	1182
E/CN.4/57	1241
E/CN.4/58	1268
E/CN.4/60	1287
E/CN.4/62	1288
E/CN.4/65	1288
E/CN.4/66	1288
E/CN.4/67	1289

E/CN.4/68	1289
E/CN.4/70	1289
E/CN.4/72	1292
E/CN.4/74	1292
E/CN.4/76	1293
E/CN.4/77	1320
E/CN.4/77/Annex A	1325
E/CN.4/78	1334
E/CN.4/80	1392
E/CN.4/81	1390
E/CN.4/82/Add.1	1414
E/CN.4/82/Add.11	1565
E/CN.4/82/Add.12	1727
E/CN.4/82/Add.2	1424
E/CN.4/82/Add.3	1441
E/CN.4/82/Add.4	1432
E/CN.4/82/Add.5	1440
E/CN.4/82/Add.7	1483
E/CN.4/82/Add.8	1502
E/CN.4/82/Add.9	1509
E/CN.4/82/Rev.1	1403
E/CN.4/83	1437
E/CN.4/84	1438
E/CN.4/85	1442
E/CN.4/89	1528
E/CN.4/95	1603
E/CN.4/97	1624
E/CN.4/98	1625
E/CN.4/99	1618
E/CN.4/100	1648
E/CN.4/102	1649
E/CN.4/103	1656
E/CN.4/104	1656
E/CN.4/105	1709
E/CN.4/106	1751
E/CN.4/107	1754
E/CN.4/108	1733
E/CN.4/109	1710
E/CN.4/110	1733

E/CN.4/111	1769
E/CN.4/112	1769
E/CN.4/113	1770
E/CN.4/114	1809
E/CN.4/117	1810
E/CN.4/119	1826
E/CN.4/120	1826
E/CN.4/121	1827
E/CN.4/122	1827
E/CN.4/124	1834
E/CN.4/125	1853
E/CN.4/126	1854
E/CN.4/127	1854
E/CN.4/129	1854
E/CN.4/131	1869
E/CN.4/132	1870
E/CN.4/133	1870
E/CN.4/135	1871
E/CN.4/137	1887
E/CN.4/138	1887
E/CN.4/139	1888
E/CN.4/140	1889
E/CN.4/141	1889
E/CN.4/143	1906
E/CN.4/144	1906
E/CN.4/146	1907
E/CN.4/147	1908
E/CN.4/148	1920
E/CN.4/148/Add.1	1940
E/CN.4/149	1922
E/CN.4/150	1923
E/CN.4/152	1908
E/CN.4/W.4	106
E/CN.4/W.4/Add.1	118
E/CN.4/W.8	118
E/CN.4/W.16	147
E/CN.4/W.18	193

Summary Records

E/CN.4/SR.1	155
E/CN.4/SR.2	160
E/CN.4/SR.7	168
E/CN.4/SR.8	171
E/CN.4/SR.9	177
E/CN.4/SR.10	180
E/CN.4/SR.11	185
E/CN.4/SR.12	189
E/CN.4/SR.13	192
E/CN.4/SR.14	198
E/CN.4/SR.15	204
E/CN.4/SR.16	208
E/CN.4/SR.17	217
E/CN.4/SR.18	223
E/CN.4/SR.20	225
E/CN.4/SR.23	1098
E/CN.4/SR.25	1107
E/CN.4/SR.26	1115
E/CN.4/SR.27	1119
E/CN.4/SR.28	1126
E/CN.4/SR.29	1133
E/CN.4/SR.30	1157
E/CN.4/SR.34	1253
E/CN.4/SR.35	1259
E/CN.4/SR.36	1268
E/CN.4/SR.37	1276
E/CN.4/SR.39	1290
E/CN.4/SR.40	1293
E/CN.4/SR.41	1304
E/CN.4/SR.42	1314
E/CN.4/SR.46	1625
E/CN.4/SR.47	1633
E/CN.4/SR.48	1638
E/CN.4/SR.49	1657
E/CN.4/SR.50	1664
E/CN.4/SR.51	1675
E/CN.4/SR.52	1682
E/CN.4/SR.53	1693

E/CN.4/SR.54	1700
E/CN.4/SR.55	1710
E/CN.4/SR.56	1720
E/CN.4/SR.57	1733
E/CN.4/SR.58	1741
E/CN.4/SR.59	1754
E/CN.4/SR.60	1761
E/CN.4/SR.61	1770
E/CN.4/SR.62	1781
E/CN.4/SR.63	1790
E/CN.4/SR.64	1798
E/CN.4/SR.65	1810
E/CN.4/SR.66	1817
E/CN.4/SR.67	1835
E/CN.4/SR.68	1846
E/CN.4/SR.69	1855
E/CN.4/SR.70	1862
E/CN.4/SR.71	1871
E/CN.4/SR.72	1881
E/CN.4/SR.73	1889
E/CN.4/SR.74	1896
E/CN.4/SR.75	1909
E/CN.4/SR.76	1918
E/CN.4/SR.77	1923
E/CN.4/SR.78	1931
E/CN.4/SR.80	1946
E/CN.4/SR.81	1955

4.1. Nuclear Commission on Human Rights

E/HR/1	15
E/HR/3	21
E/HR/5	34
E/HR/6	35
E/HR/8	37
E/HR/9	39
E/HR/12	40
E/HR/13	41
E/HR/15	43
E/HR/16	47
E/HR/19	49

4.2. Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights on the International Bill of Rights

Documents

E/CN.4/AC.1/2	277
E/CN.4/AC.1/3	281
E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.1	332
E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.2	305
E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.3	318
E/CN.4/AC.1/4	288
E/CN.4/AC.1/4/Add.1	811
E/CN.4/AC.1/5	308
E/CN.4/AC.1/6	299
E/CN.4/AC.1/6/Add.1	330
E/CN.4/AC.1/7	308
E/CN.4/AC.1/8	712
E/CN.4/AC.1/8/Rev.1	828
E/CN.4/AC.1/9	717
E/CN.4/AC.1/10	746
E/CN.4/AC.1/11	746
E/CN.4/AC.1/12	831
E/CN.4/AC.1/13	830
E/CN.4/AC.1/14	864
E/CN.4/AC.1/15	945
E/CN.4/AC.1/16	1423
E/CN.4/AC.1/17	1475
E/CN.4/AC.1/18	1475
E/CN.4/AC.1/20	1492
E/CN.4/AC.1/29	1517
E/CN.4/AC.1/37	1531
E/CN.4/AC.1/39	1548
E/CN.4/AC.1/40	1565
E/CN.4/AC.1/41	1586
E/CN.4/AC.1/W.1	788
E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2	790
E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2/Rev.1	811
E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2/Rev.2	837

Summary Records

E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.1	313
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.2	718
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.3	727
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.4	737
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.5	775
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.6	782
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.7	795
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.8	800
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.9	818
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.10	827
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.12	844
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.13	850
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.14	868
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.15	877
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.16	882
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.17	890
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.18	900
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.20	1477
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.21	1485
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.33	1528
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.34	1530
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.35	1533
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.36	1539
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.37	1548
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.38	1556
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.39	1567
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.40	1572
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.41	1586
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.42	1598
E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.44	1599

4.3. Working Group on the Declaration of the Commission on Human Rights
(December 1947)

Summary Records

E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.1	1160
E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.2	1163
E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.3	1173

E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.4	1189
E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.5	1194
E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.6	1202
E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.7	1209
E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.8	1219
E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.9	1227

4.4. Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press

Documents

E/CN.4/Sub.1/36	1364
E/CN.4/Sub.1/43	1366
E/CN.4/Sub.1/45	1373
E/CN.4/Sub.1/48	1373
E/CN.4/Sub.1/56	1380
E/CN.4/Sub.1/60	1380

Summary Records

E/CN.4/Sub.1/SR.24	1366
E/CN.4/Sub.1/SR.25	1368
E/CN.4/Sub.1/SR.27	1374
E/CN.4/Sub.1/SR.28	1378
E/CN.4/Sub.1/SR.45	1380

4.5. Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

Documents

E/CN.4/Sub.2/5	961
E/CN.4/Sub.2/16	1006
E/CN.4/Sub.2/21	1022
E/CN.4/Sub.2/22	1054
E/CN.4/Sub.2/26	1077
E/CN.4/Sub.2/29	1107
E/CN.4/Sub.2/38	1151

Summary Records

E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.1	1009
E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.3	1025
E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.4	1027
E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.5	1037

E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.6	1043
E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.7	1054
E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.8	1058
E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.9	1070
E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.10	1081
E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.11	1085
E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.17	1169
E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.18	1181

5. Commission on the Status of Women

Documents

E/CN.6/69	1362
E/CN.6/74	1362

Summary Records

E/CN.6/SR.12	229
E/CN.6/SR.28	1354
E/CN.6/SR.29	1360
E/CN.6/SR.36/Corr.1	1365

6. Conference on Freedom of Information and of the Press

Documents

E/CONF.6/17	1398
E/CONF.6/65	1419
E/CONF.6/69	1418
E/CONF.6/74	1420

Summary Records

E/CONF.6/SR.10	1420
----------------	------

6.1. Fourth Committee

Documents

E/CONF.6/C.4/1	1391
E/CONF.6/C.4/1/Rev.1	1393
E/CONF.6/C.4/3	1393
E/CONF.6/C.4/8	1394
E/CONF.6/C.4/9	1394

E/CONF.6/C.4/10	1395
E/CONF.6/C.4/71	1402

Summary Records

E/CONF.6/C.4/SR.10	1400
E/CONF.6/C.4/SR.24	1402
E/CONF.6/C.4/SR.4	1395
E/CONF.6/C.4/SR.5	1398
E/CONF.6/C.4/SR.6	1399

Abbreviations and acronyms

AF of L	American Federation of Labor
FAO	Food and Agriculture Organization
HRDC	Human Rights Commission Drafting Committee
IFCTU	International Federation of Christian Trade Unions
ILO	International Labour Organization
IMT	International Military Tribunal
IRO	International Refugee Organization
TWC	Trials of the War Criminals
UNCIO	United Nations Conference on International Organization
UNESCO	United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization
UNICEF	United Nations Children's Fund
WFTU	World Federation of Trade Unions
WHO	World Health Organization

Introductory essay: the drafting and significance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on 10 December 1948 following a complex drafting process that took nearly two years. Consisting of a preamble and thirty concise articles, totalling less than 1,800 words, the Declaration describes itself as “a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations”. It was designed to be part of a package comprising three components: a declaration or manifesto, a treaty or covenant, and provisions for implementation. The other parts followed the Declaration later, taking nearly two decades for adoption and another ten years for entry into force. The great impact of the Universal Declaration may not have been immediate.<sup>1</sup> Its significance has grown over the years and continues to grow. The Declaration has been invoked in scores of international treaties, in national constitutions and legislation, and in judicial decisions at both the national and the international levels.<sup>2</sup> In 2007, the United Nations Human Rights Council decided that all Member States would present periodic reports on their human rights compliance. Central to the legal framework of this new and novel procedure, known as Universal Periodic Review, are the standards set out in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.<sup>3</sup>

Many of the principles that underpin the modern law of human rights can be traced back centuries, and even further. Religious texts and writings of ancient philosophers provide a fertile source. These materials are of special interest to those who base the norms we recognize today in natural law. From such a standpoint, fundamental rights and the protection of human dignity are and always have been our entitlement. Following this natural law perspective, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is more of a codification of existing principles than an exercise in creative lawmaking.<sup>4</sup> Certainly, nobody would contend that the Universal Declaration was cut from whole cloth. Nevertheless, it is also evident from these travaux préparatoires that the drafters were also setting new standards, provoked by a desire to put the misery of the social and political environment associated with the Second World War behind them. They were also sensitive to the evolving nature of human rights; the standards they defined should also leave room for growth and expansion as principles of human decency evolved. Either way, whether one's philosophical bent is towards natural law or whether it is more positivistic, the process by which the fundamental norms were identified during 1947 and 1948 is of profound interest.

<sup>1</sup> Samuel Moyn, The Last Utopia, Human Rights in History, Cambridge, MA and London: Belknap Press, 2010.

<sup>2</sup> Egon Schwelb, “The Influence of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights on International and National Law”, (1959) 53 Proceedings of the American Society of International Law 217; Hurst Hannum, “The Status of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in National and International Law”, (1995) 25 Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law 287.

<sup>3</sup> Institution-building of the United Nations Human Rights Council, HRC/RES/5/1, 5/1, Annex, I.A.1(b).

The most direct ancestor of the actual language in the Universal Declaration is the Magna Carta, a covenant imposed by his barons upon the English king in 1215. It set out certain rights for "freemen" and affirmed that even the monarch was not above the law. The Magna Carta launched an increasingly robust legal tradition that manifested itself in such texts as the Habeas Corpus Acts and the 1688 Bill of Rights. In the seventeenth century, religious and political refugees brought this law with them to the United States where, as part of the War of Independence, the norms became entrenched in the Constitution. Translated into French and exported by Thomas Jefferson and the Marquis de Lafayette, the language of human rights and the rule of law surfaced in revolutionary Paris. Over the next 150 years, the proclamations of the Americans and the French provided models for many others who associated statehood and independence with an entitlement of individuals to certain fundamental rights. By the early twentieth century, fundamental human rights were familiar components of many national constitutions. However, there was as yet no global benchmark nor, for that matter, a proper forum in which to proclaim one.

The beginnings of international human rights law

Although provisions in international treaties addressing specific human rights issues, such as the slave trade and the rights of religious minorities, can be found as early as the seventeenth century, the advent of texts that resemble those of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights dates from the end of the First World War. At the Paris Peace Conference, in 1919, Japan proposed that the Covenant of the League of Nations include a clause recognizing racial equality. This met with vigorous opposition from President Woodrow Wilson, who blocked adoption, although the proposal garnered support from a majority of delegations. In angry reaction, American blacks rioted in Washington and other cities.<sup>5</sup> Despite this setback, the new post-War legal order manifested several important innovations in the protection of minorities and refugees, and the rights of labour.

<sup>4</sup> Johannes Morsink, "The Philosophy of the Universal Declaration", (1984) 6 Human Rights Quarterly 309.

During the inter-war period, initiatives aimed at the international recognition of fundamental rights emerged within global civil society.<sup>6</sup> A proposal for a comprehensive declaration of human rights issued from the Institut de Droit International. A rather elite body composed of eminent legal scholars, the Institut undertook the drafting of the “Declaration of the International Rights of Man” under the leadership of André Mandelstam. It was adopted in 1929. The Declaration contained clauses that addressed the rights to life, liberty and property, without distinction based on prohibited grounds that included race, sex, language and religion. Years later, René Cassin credited the Institut de Droit International with playing an important role in the history of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, noting in particular that the right to life was included as part of the 1929 Declaration.<sup>7</sup>

The international concern with human rights moved to centre stage following the outbreak of the Second World War.<sup>8</sup> With the aggressors deeply committed to policies of racial discrimination, brutal suppression of free speech and political opposition, and even genocide, the War was presented as a struggle between value systems. In a January 1941 speech to Congress, many months before the United States formally entered the conflict, American President Franklin D. Roosevelt proposed the “four freedoms” as a condensed vision of the ideas for which the War was being fought:

In the future days, which we seek to make secure, we look forward to a world founded upon four essential human freedoms.

The first is freedom of speech and expression – everywhere in the world.

The second is freedom of every person to worship God in his own way – everywhere in the world.

The third is freedom from want – which, translated into world terms, means economic understandings which will secure to every nation a healthy peacetime life for its inhabitants – everywhere in the world.

The fourth is freedom from fear – which, translated into world terms, means a world-wide reduction of armaments to such a point and in such a thorough fashion that no nation will be

<sup>5</sup> Paul Gordon Lauren, The Evolution of International Human Rights, Visions Seen, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2003, pp. 98–100.

<sup>6</sup> Jan Herman Burgers, “The Road to San Francisco: The Revival of the Human Rights Idea in the Twentieth Century”, (1992) 14 Human Rights Quarterly 447.

<sup>7</sup> René Cassin, “La déclaration universelle et la mise en oeuvre des droits de l’homme”, (1951) 79 Recueil de Cours de l’Académie de Droit International 241, at p. 272. The 1929 Declaration was also examined by the drafters of the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man: Inter-American Council of Jurists, Recomendaciones e informes, documentos oficiales, 1945–1947, Washington, DC: Organization of American States, 1948, pp. 18–19.

<sup>8</sup> On the link between the Second World War and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, see: Johannes Morsink, “World War Two and the Universal Declaration”, (1991) 15 Human Rights Quarterly 357.

in a position to commit an act of physical aggression against any neighbor – anywhere in the world.

That is no vision of a distant millennium. It is a definite basis for a kind of world attainable in our own time and generation. That kind of world is the very antithesis of the so-called new order of tyranny which the dictators seek to create with the crash of a bomb.

To that new order we oppose the greater conception – the moral order. A good society is able to face schemes of world domination and foreign revolutions alike without fear.<sup>9</sup>

Roosevelt's four freedoms were later incorporated in the preambles of the primary documents comprising the International Bill of Rights, namely the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Even today they are a helpful reference, binding together what some have called the generations of human rights: the classic political liberties of the first generation, the economic and social entitlements of the second, and the importance of peace in the third.

In August 1941, Roosevelt and Churchill met aboard-ship off the coast of Newfoundland and adopted what became known as the “Atlantic Charter”. The Charter affirmed “the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live” and pledged that: “after the final destruction of the Nazi tyranny, they hope to see established a peace which will afford to all nations the means of dwelling in safety within their own boundaries, and which will afford assurance that all the men in all the lands may live out their lives in freedom from fear and want”.<sup>10</sup> Nelson Mandela would later observe that:

Some in the West saw the Charter as empty promises, but not those of us in Africa. Inspired by the Atlantic Charter and the fight of the Allies against tyranny and oppression, the [African National Congress] created its own Charter . . . We hoped that the government and ordinary South Africans would see that the principles they were fighting for in Europe were the same ones we were advocating at home.<sup>11</sup>

In parallel to these statements at the highest level were initiatives by public intellectuals like H. G. Wells, who prepared his own draft “Declaration of Rights”. Wells published a book entitled The Rights of Man or What Are We Fighting For?<sup>12</sup> It stated the case for the familiar judicial rights, such as habeas corpus, but also insisted upon “the right to subsistence”, and “the right to work and to have property”. Hersch Lauterpacht, who was Professor of International Law at the University of Cambridge, prepared the “International Bill of the Rights of Man” at the request of the American

<sup>9</sup> Congressional Record, 1941, Vol. 87, Pt I.

<sup>10</sup> “Atlantic Charter, August 12, 1941”, in Elizabeth Borgwardt, A New Deal for the World, America's Vision for Human Rights, Cambridge, MA and London: Harvard University Press, 2005, pp. 303–4.

<sup>11</sup> Nelson Mandela, A Long Walk to Freedom, Boston: Little Brown, 2000, pp. 82–3.

<sup>12</sup> H. G. Wells, The Rights of Man or What Are We Fighting For? Harmondsworth: Penguin Books, 1940.

Jewish Committee.<sup>13</sup> Probably the most influential of these non-official efforts in terms of the Universal Declaration was undertaken by the American Law Institute.<sup>14</sup>

The central role of human rights in the War aims of the Allies was broadened considerably on 1 January 1942, when thirty-six States, including the United States, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, China, Canada, Haiti, Cuba, India, New Zealand and South Africa signed the Declaration of the United Nations. It proclaimed a commitment to providing a “decent life, liberty, independence, and religious freedom”, and pledged a crusade “to preserve human rights and justice in their own lands as well as in other lands”.<sup>15</sup> The Declaration of the United Nations made only the most oblique reference to the establishment of a new international organization. In 1944 that subject took on greater importance.

Human rights and the Charter of the United Nations

The principal stage in preparations for the post-War world order was the Dumbarton Oaks Conference, organized in Washington in August, September and October 1944 by the United States and the United Kingdom, together with the Soviet Union and, later, China. The “Proposals for the Establishment of a General International Organization” were the result.<sup>16</sup> The human rights language that had figured in the Atlantic Charter and the Declaration of the United Nations was no longer present. An American proposal to list human rights as one of the main purposes was rejected by Britain and the Soviet Union. By the time China arrived at the meeting, “the Big Three (Britain, the Soviet Union, and the United States) already had agreed among themselves to bury any mention of human rights deep within the text and confine it to social and economic cooperation, and to completely eliminate all mention of racial equality as originally proposed by China”.<sup>17</sup> Ultimately, there was only one perfunctory reference: “promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms”.<sup>18</sup> Confident of military victory, the Great Powers were no longer as concerned as they had been a few years previously about the need to rally smaller countries and their populations, as well as minorities within their own borders, by promises of freedom, equality and self-determination.

<sup>13</sup> Hersch Lauterpacht, An International Bill of the Rights of Man, New York: Columbia University Press, 1945. See also: Elihu Lauterpacht, The Life of Sir Hersch Lauterpacht, QC, FBA, LL.D., Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2010, pp. 251–64.

<sup>14</sup> American Law Institute, Report to the Council of the Institute and Statement of Essential Human Rights, New York: American Law Institute, 1944.

<sup>15</sup> Cited in Paul Gordon Lauren, The Evolution of International Human Rights, Visions Seen, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2003, p. 140.

<sup>16</sup> Wilhelm G. Grewe and Daniel Erasmus Khan, “History”, in Bruno Simma, ed., The Charter of the United Nations, A Commentary, 2nd edn, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2002, pp. 1–12.

<sup>17</sup> Paul Gordon Lauren, The Evolution of International Human Rights, Visions Seen, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2003, p. 163.

<sup>18</sup> “Dumbarton Oaks Proposals for a General International Organization”, Documents of the U.N. Conference on International Organization, San Francisco, 1945, Vol. III, London, New York: United Nations Information Organizations, 1945, Doc. 1 G/1, pp. 1–23, at p. 19.

The shortcomings of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals were strongly criticized by many of the States that had not been involved but were expected to participate in the creation of the new organization.<sup>19</sup> Dissatisfaction within Latin America was particularly apparent at the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace, convened at Chapultepec in Mexico City in February 1945. Recalling that the participants at Chapultepec “did not take part in the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations”, the Conference adopted a number of resolutions concerning the protection of human rights. The most significant affirmed the need for “a system of international protection of these rights”. The resolution mandated the Inter-American Juridical Committee to prepare a “Declaration of the International Rights and Duties of Man”.<sup>20</sup>

The Charter of the United Nations was adopted at the San Francisco Conference, which convened in April 1945 and concluded on 26 June. Many States made proposals to insert provisions concerning human rights in the draft Charter, including South Africa,<sup>21</sup> Panama<sup>22</sup> and Cuba.<sup>23</sup> But credit for the campaign in favour of human rights provisions is also due to another party that was absent at Dumbarton Oaks, civil society.<sup>24</sup> John Humphrey wrote that the Charter of the United Nations would have had “only a passing reference” to human rights were it not for the efforts of non-governmental organizations.<sup>25</sup> Confronted with such unexpected pressures, the Great Powers realized that they would need to correct the oversight in the Dumbarton Oaks proposals and incorporate provisions in the Charter concerning human rights.

There are seven relevant references to human rights in the Charter of the United Nations, one in the preamble, one in the statement of purposes of the United Nations, one governing the authority of the General Assembly, and the remainder in the Chapters that concern the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council.<sup>26</sup> Article 68

<sup>19</sup> Paul Gordon Lauren, The Evolution of International Human Rights, Visions Seen, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2003, pp. 168–70.

<sup>20</sup> Pan American Union, Inter-American Conference on War and Peace, Washington, DC: Pan American Union, 1945.

<sup>21</sup> “Verbatim Minutes of the Sixth Plenary Session”, Documents of the U.N. Conference on International Organization, San Francisco, 1945, Vol. I, London, New York: United Nations Information Organizations, 1945, Doc. 55 P/13, pp. 416–55, at p. 425.

<sup>22</sup> “Additional Amendments Proposed by the Delegation of the Republic of Panama concerning the Proposals for the Maintenance of Peace and Security agreed upon at the Conference of Dumbarton Oaks”, Documents of the U.N. Conference on International Organization, San Francisco, 1945, Vol. III, London, New York: United Nations Information Organizations, 1945, Doc. 2 G/7(g)(2), pp. 265–269.

<sup>23</sup> “Seven Proposals on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals Submitted by the Delegation of Cuba”, Documents of the U.N. Conference on International Organization, San Francisco, 1945, Vol. III, London, New York: United Nations Information Organizations, 1945, Doc. 2 G/14(g), pp. 493–509, at pp. 499–502.

<sup>24</sup> William Korey, NGOs and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, New York: St Martin’s Press, 1998, pp. 29–42.

<sup>25</sup> John P. Humphrey, “The UN Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, in Evan Luard, ed., The International Protection of Human Rights, London: Thames & Hudson, 1967, pp. 30–58, at pp. 39–40.

<sup>26</sup> Egon Schwelb, “The International Court of Justice and the Human Rights Clauses of the Charter”, (1972) 68 American Journal of International Law 337; F. Jhabvala, “The Drafting of the Human Rights Provisions of the UN Charter”, (1997) 44 Netherlands International Law Review 1. For the text of the relevant provisions, see E/CN.4/W.4.

is of particular significance because of its call for the establishment of a Commission on Human Rights as a subsidiary organ of the Economic and Social Council. This modest presence of human rights in the Charter is mitigated by one of the principles, which is set out in article 2(7): “Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state . . .” Paul Gordon Lauren has written that “it is easy to conclude that the delegates who drafted and signed the Charter engaged in nothing less than deliberate duplicity. That is, they cynically and capriciously took away with one hand what they had given with the other.”<sup>27</sup> But Lauren is actually somewhat more charitable, believing that many delegates thought there was no incompatibility between the recognition of international human rights in article 1 and the affirmation of State sovereignty in article 2.

A proposal from Panama<sup>28</sup> to include a declaration of human rights as part of the Charter was not acted upon at San Francisco. The Committee responsible for the Preamble, Purposes and Principles of the Charter was sympathetic, but reported that:

the present Conference, if only for lack of time, could not proceed to realize such a draft in an international contract. The Organization, once formed, could better proceed to consider the suggestion and to deal effectively with it through a special commission or by some other method. The Committee recommends that the General Assembly consider the proposal and give it effect.<sup>29</sup>

Panama returned the following year, strongly pushing, along with other Latin American States, for the codification of human rights.<sup>30</sup>

Drafting of the Declaration

The Charter of the United Nations adopted in June in San Francisco entered into force later in 1945, on 24 October, following ratification by the Soviet Union, Ukraine, Byelorussia and Poland. The Final Act of the San Francisco Conference contemplated a Preparatory Commission. That body was already at work by November, in London, making ready for the first sessions of the principal organs. On 12 November 1945, the Executive Committee of the Commission submitted a range of proposals including expectations for the initial work of the Commission on Human Rights. The report states:

<sup>27</sup> Paul Gordon Lauren, The Evolution of International Human Rights, Visions Seen, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2003, p. 193.

<sup>28</sup> “Additional Amendments Proposed by the Delegation of the Republic of Panama concerning the Proposals for the Maintenance of Peace and Security agreed upon at the Conference of Dumbarton Oaks”, Documents of the U.N. Conference on International Organization, San Francisco, 1945, Vol. III, London, New York: United Nations Information Organizations, 1945, Doc. 2 G/7(g)(2), pp. 265–9.

<sup>29</sup> Report of Rapporteur of Committee I to Commission I, UNCIO Doc. 944, I/1/34(I), p. 11.

<sup>30</sup> Mary Ann Glendon, “Forgotten Crucible: The Latin American Influence on the Universal Human Rights Idea”, (2003) 16 Harvard Human Rights Journal 27.

“In particular the work of the Commission might be directed towards the following objects: (a) formulation of an international bill of rights.”<sup>31</sup> This is the starting point of the drafting of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and therefore the first document in the present collection. It confirms the momentum that had developed in San Francisco for human rights in general, as a core activity of the United Nations. Drafting of the bill of rights, as it was then called, constituted a huge piece of unfinished business. There was at the time no clarity on the form the bill of rights might take.

The first session of the United Nations General Assembly convened in January 1946 in London. Meetings were held at the Westminster Central Hall (or “Methodist Central Hall”; it was built early in the twentieth century on the centenary of the death of John Wesley), facing the Houses of Parliament. On 5 January 1946, Cuba submitted a request to incorporate in the agenda of the first session an item on a “Declaration of the International Duties and Rights of Man”.<sup>32</sup> Cuba’s representative, Ernesto Dihigo, told the General Assembly that “we need to tell the world that we have not forgotten the promises that were made in San Francisco”.<sup>33</sup> But the General Assembly voted down the Cuban request to modify the agenda.<sup>34</sup> Article 13(1)(b) of the Charter authorizes the General Assembly to “initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of: . . . assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion”. Nevertheless, the prevailing view was that the initial discussions of the proposed bill of rights belonged with the Commission on Human Rights, as the Preparatory Commission had expected. The Commission on Human Rights was subordinate to the Economic and Social Council, not the Assembly. Henceforth, the General Assembly did not play a significant role in the drafting of the Universal Declaration until the final phase, in September 1948. Then, over nearly three months of intense activity, it thoroughly reworked the earlier drafts and crafted the final version.

The Economic and Social Council, whose authority in the area of human rights was stated explicitly in the Charter of the United Nations, also met in London in early 1946. Rebuffed by the General Assembly, the Cuban delegation turned its attention to the Council. This time its proposal was associated with a draft declaration.<sup>35</sup> Before concluding its work, towards the end of February 1946, the Council adopted a resolution establishing the Commission on Human Rights and confirming that its mandate was to prepare an international bill of rights.

1. The Economic and Social Council, being charged under the Charter with the responsibility of promoting universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, and requiring advice and assistance to enable it to discharge this responsibility,
Establishes a Commission on Human Rights.

<sup>31</sup> PC/EX/113/Rev.1. <sup>32</sup> A/3. <sup>33</sup> A/PV.7, p. 103. <sup>34</sup> Ibid., p. 107. <sup>35</sup> E/HR/1.

2. The work of the Commission shall be directed towards submitting proposals, recommendations and reports to the Council regarding:

(a) an International bill of rights; ...<sup>36</sup>

The Economic and Social Council set up a Nuclear Commission on human rights. It was envisaged as a temporary body, charged with making recommendations on the definitive composition of the Commission on Human Rights, the establishment of which was expressly contemplated by article 68 of the Charter of the United Nations. The members of the Nuclear Commission, who were named in the resolution itself, included individuals destined to play very important roles in the drafting of the Universal Declaration, notably René Cassin<sup>37</sup> and Eleanor Roosevelt.<sup>38</sup>

The Nuclear Commission on Human Rights

The Nuclear Commission convened on 29 April 1946 at Hunter College, then located in the Bronx in buildings constructed in 1931 by the New York State Works Project Administration. It was the women's college of the City University of New York system, an institution with which the Roosevelts had a long attachment. In 1943, Eleanor had given Hunter College a Manhattan townhouse she had received as a wedding present. Today, the Bronx campus where the Nuclear Commission met in 1946 is known as Lehman College.

Of the nine members, only six actually attended the sessions of the Nuclear Commission: René Cassin (France), C. L. Hsia (China), K. C. Neogi (India), Dusan Brkish (Yugoslavia), Eleanor Roosevelt (United States) and Nicolai Kriukov (USSR).<sup>39</sup> Cassin arrived a few days late – “delayed somewhere on an airplane”, wrote Eleanor Roosevelt in her daily newspaper column “My Day” – although the summary record states that he was present from the first session. The provisional agenda did not in fact contain a point addressing specifically the International Bill of Rights. However, item 8 on the agenda indicated that documents submitted by Member States were to be considered, and it listed the two draft declarations proposed by Cuba and Panama.<sup>40</sup> A United Nations official, Henri

<sup>36</sup> E/27.

<sup>37</sup> René Cassin (1887–1976) was a French jurist, law professor and judge. A soldier in World War I, he went on to form the Union Fédérale, an organization of veterans. When France was occupied, he joined the Free French forces in London and worked closely with Charles de Gaulle. Cassin was a judge at the European Court of Human Rights, serving as its President from 1965 to 1968. He received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1968 for his work in drafting the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

<sup>38</sup> Eleanor Roosevelt (1884–1962) was the wife of American President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who died in April 1945. She campaigned actively for the establishment of the United Nations, and served on the Commission on Human Rights from its first meeting until 1953. On the drafters of the Declaration, see generally: M. Glen Johnson, “A Magna Carta for Mankind: Writing the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, in M. Glen Johnson and Janusz Symonides, eds., The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, A History of its Creation and Implementation, 1948–1998, Paris: UNESCO Publishing, 1998, pp. 19–78.

<sup>39</sup> E/HR/6. <sup>40</sup> E/HR/5.

Laugier, opened the session.<sup>41</sup> After some general introductory comments, he turned to the task that was to occupy the Commission for the next two years:

You will have to study all the declarations of rights which were born in the spirit of man and people on the march toward their liberation. You will have to show that the political rights are the first condition of liberty but that today the progress of scientific and industrial civilization has created economic organizations which are inflicting on politically free men intolerable servitude, and that therefore, in the future, the declaration of the rights of man must be extended to the economic and social fields. You will have to look for a basis for a fundamental declaration on human rights, acceptable to all the United Nations, the acceptance of which will become the essential condition of the admission in the international community.<sup>42</sup>

When he finished, the Nuclear Commission elected Eleanor Roosevelt as its Chairman. The next day, she wrote:

Mr. Laugier made us a serious and inspiring speech, but I think all of us fully realize that our responsibility is great. Being chairman rather frightened me, since I am not very good on parliamentary law! Fortunately, we adopted the rules of procedure which were suggested for the commission, so I only have to keep them before me in case any difference of opinion crops up.

Eleanor was usually listed as “Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt”, language that might today seem inappropriate but that must be understood in its context. Perhaps it reflects deference to her husband, who had died less than a year earlier. Franklin Delano Roosevelt’s cousin, she was born with the same surname. Eleanor Roosevelt presided over the debates in the full Commission until it handed its well-polished draft over to the Economic and Social Council in June 1948. She remained engaged subsequently as head of the United States delegation in the Third Committee of the General Assembly and was present on 10 December 1948 when the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was adopted.

After some initial discussion, the Nuclear Commission quickly recognized that its task was not to draft a declaration or bill of rights. This was to be the priority of the full Commission, whose establishment was expected to follow the next session of the Economic and Social Council.<sup>43</sup> Only late in its proceedings, on 6 May 1946, with René Cassin in the chair, did the Nuclear Commission discuss how the International Bill of Rights was to be prepared.<sup>44</sup> Cassin noted that the draft declarations then on the table, from Panama and Cuba, had been produced in the western hemisphere, and he thought it might be useful to assemble regional meetings of European, African and Asian experts in order to pursue the discussion.

<sup>41</sup> Henri Laugier (1888–1973), a French physiologist, was Rector of the University of Algiers from 1943. He was instrumental in establishing the World Health Organization and UNICEF. In 1952, he became a member of the executive council of UNESCO.

<sup>42</sup> E/HR/6, pp. 2–3. <sup>43</sup> E/HR/9, p. 3. <sup>44</sup> E/HR/13.

In its report to the Economic and Social Council, the Nuclear Commission said:

The Commission felt that while it was within its competence to draft a bill of human rights, it was not as yet in a position to do so, but it would proceed with the preparatory work. The Commission agreed that the full Commission should determine the character of the bill which is to be drafted, as well as the content and the form of the bill (for instance, should it be a resolution by the Assembly of the United Nations or an appendix to the Charter, having to be integrated into the constitution of each Member Nation, or a convention between the States, or in any other form). Therefore, it was decided to recommend that the full Commission should draft an international bill of rights as soon as possible, and that this draft should be circulated among the United Nations governments for their comment.<sup>45</sup>

The recommendation was formulated as follows:

The Commission recommends that:

1. The full Commission should draft an international bill of rights as soon as possible. The nuclear Commission should proceed with the preparations for such a bill. The draft of the international bill of rights, as completed by the full Commission should be circulated among the United Nations governments for their suggestions.
2. The detailed examination of the documents submitted by the delegations of Cuba and Panama (Documents E/HR/2 and E/HR/3) should be left to the full Commission or to a later session of the nuclear Commission.<sup>46</sup>

Two years later, in an article published in the journal Foreign Affairs, Roosevelt said: "Many of us thought that lack of standards for human rights the world over was one of the greatest causes of friction among the nations, and that recognition of human rights might become one of the cornerstones on which peace could eventually be based."<sup>47</sup> Although uncertain at the time whether it would reconvene in a second session, this was in fact the final meeting of the Nuclear Commission.

The Economic and Social Council considered the report of the Nuclear Commission at its second session, in May and June 1946.<sup>48</sup> The Council formally established the Commission on Human Rights and determined its composition as a political body whose members would be States rather than individual experts. The mandate set out in the February resolution of the Council, listing the preparation of "proposals, recommendations and reports to the Council regarding: (a) an International bill of rights" was renewed. A paragraph in the initial draft resolution affirmed: "The Commission is requested to draft an international bill of rights as soon as possible. The draft of this bill shall be circulated to the Members of the United Nations for their suggestions."<sup>49</sup> But this paragraph disappeared from subsequent drafts.<sup>50</sup>

<sup>45</sup> E/38, pp. 3–4. <sup>46</sup> Ibid., p. 6.

<sup>47</sup> Eleanor Roosevelt, "The Promise of Human Rights", (April 1948) 40 Foreign Affairs. <sup>48</sup> E/SR.18–20.

<sup>49</sup> E/56, p. 3. <sup>50</sup> E/56/Rev.1; E/56/Rev.2.

Before the full Commission on Human Rights was able to convene, in January 1947, debate about the bill of rights returned to the General Assembly. Although the first session had begun in January 1946, in London, it was continued later in the year in New York City. Panama asked that its draft declaration on fundamental rights and freedoms, together with a companion declaration on rights and duties of States, be placed on the agenda.<sup>51</sup> Panama's request was referred to the First Committee of the General Assembly, known at the time as the Political and Security Committee, and to the Third Committee, known as the Social, Humanitarian and Cultural Committee.<sup>52</sup> Panama's representative, Ricardo Alfaro, pleaded eloquently for the General Assembly to consider adoption of the draft that his delegation had submitted. But Eleanor Roosevelt contended that the matter should be referred to the Commission on Human Rights and her proposed resolution along these lines was successful.<sup>53</sup> John Humphrey,<sup>54</sup> who had only just begun his service as Secretary of the Commission on Human Rights, watched the debate between Alfaro and Roosevelt "from the sidelines". The final resolution was "a good decision", Humphrey recalled:

For while the adoption of the United Nations declaration of human rights was postponed for two years, the 1948 text was better than anything the Assembly would have adopted in 1946; and the long debates in the Human Rights Commission, to which much publicity was given, helped to educate both governments and world opinion. The longer process also gave the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations an opportunity to contribute to the final result.<sup>55</sup>

The General Assembly debate further clarified the responsibility of the Commission for the preparation of the draft bill or declaration.

<sup>51</sup> A/101. <sup>52</sup> A/BUR/40; A/PV.46, p. 931. <sup>53</sup> A/C.3/SR.33; A/PV.55; A/RES/43(I).

<sup>54</sup> Canadian legal academic John Peters Humphrey (1905–95) served as Director of the United Nations Division of Human Rights from 1946 to 1968. On several occasions, Humphrey wrote about the drafting of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and its legal significance, most notably in his memoir: Human Rights and the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984. For substantial excerpts from the memoirs, see: "Memoirs of John P. Humphrey, the First Director of the United Nations Division of Human Rights", (1983) 5 Human Rights Quarterly 387. Humphrey's diaries, on which the memoirs are based, have been published: A.J. Hobbins, ed., On the Edge of Greatness: The Diaries of John Humphrey, First Director of the United Nations Division of Human Rights, Vol. I, Montreal and Kingston: McGill-Queen's University Press, 1994 (covering 1948). See also: John P. Humphrey, "The Universal Declaration of Human Rights: Its History, Impact and Juridical Character", in B.G. Ramcharan, ed., Human Rights, Thirty Years After the Universal Declaration: Commemorative Volume on the Occasion of the Thirtieth Anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, The Hague: Martinus Nijhoff, 1979, pp. 21–37; "International Bill of Rights: Scope and Implementation", (1975–6) 17 William and Mary Law Review 527; "The UN Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights", in Evan Luard, ed., The International Protection of Human Rights, London: Thames & Hudson, 1967, pp. 30–58; "La nature juridique de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme", (1981) 12 Revue Générale de Droit 397.

<sup>55</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 14.

The first session of the Commission on Human Rights

The first United Nations Commission on Human Rights was composed of eighteen members. The compromise reached in the previous session of the Economic and Social Council attempted to balance two competing visions, one in which the members of the Commission were experts acting independently of governments, and the other in which the Commission was composed of Member States. The unrealistic and unworkable solution was to have individual representatives designated for their expertise but who were proposed by the Member States belonging to the Commission. Over the years, the Commission's membership was expanded, and rules adopted to ensure equitable representation of the regions of the world. By 2006, when it was dissolved and replaced by the Human Rights Council, which is directly subordinate to the General Assembly, the Commission had fifty-three members, larger than the General Assembly itself at its first session in 1946.

The Commission's first session took place from 27 January to 10 February 1947. The meetings were held at Lake Success, where the United Nations had established temporary premises in a factory that had been the home of the Sperry Gyroscope Company during the War. Just outside the border of New York City on Long Island, it is about 25 kilometres by road from the permanent United Nations headquarters located on First Avenue in Manhattan.

Besides Eleanor Roosevelt and René Cassin, who had already contributed to the progress of the project as members of the Nuclear Commission, there were other distinguished individuals, among them Charles Malik<sup>56</sup> of Lebanon and Carlos Romulo<sup>57</sup> of the Philippines, both of whom would become Presidents of the United Nations General Assembly.<sup>58</sup> The British sent Charles Dukes,<sup>59</sup> described by legal historian Brian Simpson as “a retired trade unionist whose mind was unencumbered by the least knowledge of international law . . . [a] gifted amateur”.<sup>60</sup> They passed over Hersch Lauterpacht on the recommendation of the Legal Adviser of the Foreign Office, who said he would be “a very bad candidate . . . Professor Lauterpacht, though a distinguished and industrious international lawyer is, when <sup>56</sup> Charles Habib Malik (1906–87) was Lebanese representative and Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights. He later served as President of the Economic and Social Council, and Chairman of the Third Committee of the General Assembly in 1948 when the final draft of the Universal Declaration was being debated. Verbatim transcripts of some of Malik's more important statements during the negotiations are published in: Habib C. Malik, ed., The Challenge of Human Rights, Charles Malik and the Universal Declaration, Oxford: Centre for Lebanese Studies, 2000.

<sup>57</sup> Carlos P. Romulo (1901–85) of the Philippines held the rank of Brigadier-General. During the Second World War, he was General McArthur's aide-de-camp on Bataan, Corregidor and in Australia. In 1941 he won the Pulitzer Prize for journalism, and he published several books in the United States.

<sup>58</sup> Susan Waltz, “Universalizing Human Rights: The Role of Small States in the Construction of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, (2001) 23 Human Rights Quarterly 44.

<sup>59</sup> Charles Dukes (1880–1948), subsequently Lord Dukeston, was a British trade unionist and parliamentarian.

<sup>60</sup> A. W. Brian Simpson, Human Rights and the End of Empire, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2001, pp. 350–2.

all is said and done, a Jew recently come from Vienna. I think the representative of HMG on human rights must be a very English Englishman . . .'<sup>61</sup>

Eleanor Roosevelt was confirmed as Chairman of the Commission. The Vice-Chairman was P. C. Chang<sup>62</sup> of China. Humphrey said he was initially put off by his somewhat gruff manner and his uninhibited criticisms of the Secretariat, but I soon learned to appreciate his great human qualities and we became friends. He was a master of the art of compromise and, under cover of a quotation from Confucius, would often provide the formula which made it possible for the Commission to escape from some impasse.<sup>63</sup>

Humphrey described Chang and Malik as the intellectual heavyweights of the Commission, noting that "they were usually in disagreement".<sup>64</sup>

Prior to the opening of the session, the Secretariat produced a substantial study of the question that reviewed the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the place of human rights in international law, referring to the recent peace treaties as well as constitutional provisions of international organizations like UNESCO and the International Labour Organization. The document also discussed the form an international bill of rights might take, noting three general approaches: a declaration or other act of the General Assembly, a multilateral convention, or an amendment to the Charter. The first option would "undoubtedly be easier to achieve" but might not have "the binding character desirable for an International Bill of Rights", while the second would leave no doubt about its binding character but would take considerable time to accomplish. Amending the Charter was a difficult and complex proposition. The Secretariat noted that the three forms were not necessarily mutually exclusive: "Indeed, it is suggested that the Bill might first take the form of an act of the General Assembly pending the adoption and ratification of a convention and that, later, the Bill might be incorporated into the Charter as an integral part of the fundamental law of the United Nations."<sup>65</sup> The Secretariat also prepared documents analysing the drafts that had already been submitted, as well as unofficial proposals from scholars and public intellectuals like H. G. Wells and Hersch Lauterpacht.<sup>66</sup>

<sup>61</sup> Ibid.

<sup>62</sup> Diplomat and educator, Peng-chun Chang (1892–1957) represented China as Vice-Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights. Chang's talent for resolving disagreements was said to have been instrumental in helping the Commission reach compromises during the negotiations that led to the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. A great admirer of Chang, Eleanor Roosevelt wrote: "Dr. Chang was a pluralist and held forth in charming fashion on the proposition that there is more than one kind of ultimate reality. The Declaration, he said, should reflect more than simply Western ideas and Dr. Humphrey would have to be eclectic in his approach" (Eleanor Roosevelt, On My Own, New York: Harper, 1958, p. 77).

<sup>63</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 23.

<sup>64</sup> Ibid. <sup>65</sup> E/CN.4/W.4, pp. 10–11. <sup>66</sup> E/CN.4/W.16.

At this first session, the Commission spent some time discussing the substance of human rights. Consideration was given to the general philosophy underpinning human rights,<sup>67</sup> the status of women<sup>68</sup> and the rights of minorities.<sup>69</sup> There was also considerable debate about the form that the bill should take, with the United States favouring a non-binding General Assembly resolution while India sought something far more imperative.<sup>70</sup> Australia launched its campaign for the establishment of an international human rights court.<sup>71</sup> It soon became evident enough that, for progress to be made, the task of preparing a draft could not be completed in the Plenary Commission. One proposal was to assign this task to the Secretariat, which had already produced a great deal of background material. The other was to establish a small drafting committee. There were concerns about whether the Commission should delegate its authority, and whether outside experts ought to be consulted. Finally, it was agreed to constitute a drafting committee composed of the Chairman, the Vice-Chairman and the Rapporteur. Thereby, Roosevelt, Chang and Malik were charged “with the assistance of the Secretariat, the task of formulating a preliminary draft international bill of human rights, in accordance with the instructions and decisions of the first session of the Commission, to be submitted to the second session of the Commission for thorough examination”.<sup>72</sup>

After the Commission adjourned, Eleanor Roosevelt invited her two colleagues, Chang and Malik, as well as John Humphrey, for a meeting in her Washington Square apartment. Humphrey said it became obvious that the committee could not draft a bill because “Chang and Malik were too far apart in their philosophical approaches to be able to work together on a text”.<sup>73</sup> Chang had suggested that, before attempting a draft, Humphrey should put his other duties aside for six months and study Chinese philosophy, which was “his way of saying that Western influences might be too great, and he was looking at Malik as he spoke”.<sup>74</sup> Malik, who was a devout Greek Orthodox Christian, retorted with a lengthy exposition on the philosophy of Thomas Aquinas.<sup>75</sup> Before the tea party had finished, it was agreed that Humphrey would prepare a preliminary draft. “I didn’t go to China nor did I study the writings of Confucius!” Humphrey recalled.<sup>76</sup> In a letter, Humphrey boasted to his sister that he had been asked to “play the role of a Jefferson”,<sup>77</sup>

<sup>67</sup> E/CN.4/SR.7, pp. 4–5; E/CN.4/SR.8, pp. 1–3; E/CN.4/SR.9, pp. 1–6; E/CN.4/14, pp. 1–8.

<sup>68</sup> E/CN.4/SR.1, p. 6. <sup>69</sup> E/CN.4/SR.2, pp. 3–4. <sup>70</sup> E/CN.4/SR.15, pp. 2–4.

<sup>71</sup> E/CN.4/15; E/CN.4/SR.15, pp. 2–3; E/CN.4/SR.16, pp. 1–5. <sup>72</sup> E/CN.4/SR.12, p. 5.

<sup>73</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 29.

<sup>74</sup> Ibid. <sup>75</sup> Eleanor Roosevelt, On My Own, New York: Harper, 1958, p. 77.

<sup>76</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984.

<sup>77</sup> Mary Ann Glendon, A World Made New, Eleanor Roosevelt and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, New York: Random House, 2001, p. 47.

referring to the author of the American Declaration of Independence. But in his memoirs he wrote modestly: "I was no Thomas Jefferson."<sup>78</sup>

The fourth session of the Economic and Social Council

The Soviet delegate had indicated his displeasure with the establishment of the drafting committee.<sup>79</sup> When the Commission's report was discussed at the fourth session of the Economic and Social Council, in March and April 1947, the debate on this procedural issue was renewed. Noting that the Commission's decision to establish the drafting committee had been made before any decisions had been taken on the substance of the rights themselves, the Soviet Union said this had considerably enlarged the scope of the work of the drafting committee. It was too small, and lacked geographic balance, particularly because of the absence of "representatives of the European countries".<sup>80</sup> The Rapporteur of the Commission, Charles Malik, conceded that the term "drafting group" was rather unfortunate, and had only been used because an equivalent to the French word bureau could not be found.<sup>81</sup> Malik was implying that the drafting committee's role was more administrative in nature, one of coordinating the compilation of materials by the Secretariat rather than a truly creative function. Malik told the Economic and Social Council that "the entire Commission should be considered a drafting committee, which would eventually submit the draft to the Council. Consequently, the entire Commission should be considered a drafting committee, which would eventually submit the draft to the Council."<sup>82</sup>

Czechoslovakia proposed that the drafting committee be enlarged by adding Australia, France, Chile and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. There was much debate in the Social Committee of the Economic and Social Council about the composition of the drafting body, which was then being designated a "temporary Sub-Commission" of the Commission on Human Rights. Eventually, Eleanor Roosevelt, who had not attended these sessions, broke the impasse with a letter indicating her willingness as Chairman of the Commission to establish a drafting committee composed of Australia, China, Chile, France, Lebanon, the United States, the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.<sup>83</sup> The resolution of the Economic and Social Council "noted with approval" the letter from Roosevelt and decided that the drafting committee's text should be submitted to the next session of the Commission on Human Rights. The resolution provides the first indication that a timetable had been set. After the Commission had considered the drafting committee version, the draft would then be examined by the Economic and Social Council “with a view to recommending an International Bill of Human Rights to the General Assembly in 1948”.<sup>84</sup>

<sup>78</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 31.

<sup>79</sup> E/CN.4/SR.16, p. 5. <sup>80</sup> E/SR.68, p. 104. <sup>81</sup> E/SR.69, p. 4. <sup>82</sup> Ibid. <sup>83</sup> E/383.

Debate on the Commission’s report also provided the Economic and Social Council with a forum to consider the substance of the declaration. Charles Malik said it offered the United Nations the opportunity to answer the question “What is man?” The declaration would provide meaning to the phrase “dignity and worth of the human person” in the preamble of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>85</sup> Peng-chun Chang declared that “after the myopia of the last hundred and fifty years, nations were at last on the threshold of a new humanistic period. The bill envisaged should be based on the aspiration for a new humanism.”<sup>86</sup> The United States said the declaration “should be as bold and as broad as possible and, in addition to the traditional categories of rights, it should embrace social rights such as those of employment, social security and equal opportunity as well as minimum standards of economic, cultural and social wellbeing”.<sup>87</sup>

The first session of the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights

On 8 April 1947, Eleanor Roosevelt formally appointed the eight-member Drafting Committee in accordance with the decision of the Economic and Social Council, proposing that it convene at Lake Success on 9 June for its first session.<sup>88</sup> The Economic and Social Council had also mandated the Secretariat “to prepare a documented outline concerning an International Bill of Human Rights”. In order to prepare the text, John Humphrey sequestered himself for a week at the Lido Beach Hotel, an elegant Moorish-themed resort on Long Island known as the “Pink Lady”.<sup>89</sup> The “draft outline” that emerged consisted of a preamble (or rather of ideas to be included in a preamble) and forty-eight articles. It was issued as an official document on 4 June 1947.<sup>90</sup> Eleanor Roosevelt explained that “the Secretariat Draft Outline was not a proposed Bill of Human Rights, but simply a working document on the basis of which the Drafting Committee hoped to prepare a preliminary draft bill for the consideration of the Commission on Human Rights”.<sup>91</sup> Despite this caveat, the draft outline was of seminal importance in that it framed the debate.

<sup>84</sup> E/RES/46(IV). <sup>85</sup> E/SR.69, p. 5. <sup>86</sup> Ibid., pp. 7–8. <sup>87</sup> Ibid., p. 5. <sup>88</sup> E/CN.4/AC.1/2, para. 13.

<sup>89</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 31.

<sup>90</sup> E/CN.4/AC.1/3. <sup>91</sup> E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.1, p. 5.

Humphrey's draft began with a reference to the "four freedoms", an allusion that remains in the final version of the Declaration.<sup>92</sup> The text also made an important link between human rights and peace:

The Preamble shall refer to the four freedoms and to the provisions of the Charter relating to human rights and shall enunciate the following principles:

1. that there can be no peace unless human rights and freedoms are respected;
2. that man does not have rights only; he owes duties to the society of which he forms part;
3. that man is a citizen both of his State and of the world;
4. that there can be no human dignity unless war and the threat of war is abolished.<sup>93</sup>

It did not contain any subheadings; these were added a few days later when the provisions were divided into three broad categories, Liberties, Social Rights and Equality.<sup>94</sup> In a general sense, this presaged the subsequent classification that has become entrenched in modern human rights law, with Liberties corresponding to civil and political rights, and Social Rights to economic, social and cultural rights. Equality rights resisted description under one or the other of these rubrics. In any case, there were only two articles dealing with Equality, the first entitled "No discrimination" and the second, "Right of minorities to maintain special institutions with State aid".

The Secretariat outline drew heavily upon the materials that had already been submitted to the United Nations, of which Humphrey said the best was that prepared by the American Law Institute: "I borrowed freely from it."<sup>95</sup> The Secretariat subsequently compiled a massive document, consisting of more than 400 pages, reproducing the various materials that it had consulted in preparing the draft.<sup>96</sup> For each provision in the Secretariat's draft outline, the sources were collated, according to the following structure: Observations by Members of the Commission on Human Rights at its First Session, drawn from the Verbatim Record of the meetings; Draft International Declarations or Proposals Submitted by Governments to the Commission on Human Rights (five documents were considered, from Chile, Cuba, Panama, India and the United States of America; proposals from France and the United Kingdom arrived too late to be included); National Constitutions

<sup>92</sup> Johannes van Aggelen, "The Preamble of the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights", (2000) 28 Denver Journal of International Law and Policy 129; Martti Koskenniemi, "The Preamble of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights", in G. Alfredsson and A. Eide, eds., The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, The Hague, Boston, London: Martinus Nijhoff, 1999, pp. 27–39.

<sup>93</sup> For other references on the relationship between the Universal Declaration and peace, see: Robert Kolb, "The Relationship between International Humanitarian Law and Human Rights Law: A Brief History of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the 1949 Geneva Conventions", (1998) 324 International Review of the Red Cross 409.

<sup>94</sup> E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.2. For the Secretariat's explanation, see E/CN.4/AC.1/7, p. 6.

<sup>95</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 32.

<sup>96</sup> E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.1.

(fifty constitutions were studied; with respect to Australia, Canada, New Zealand and the United Kingdom the document noted that there were “no written provisions”); and Draft Declarations from Non-Governmental Organizations, of which there was only one, from the American Federation of Labor. On occasion, the draft made explicit acknowledgement of the origin of a provision, for example noting that much of articles 2, 11 and 30 was derived from the Panamanian draft.<sup>97</sup> However, Humphrey had not used much of this material, and in particular the compilation of constitutions, in preparing the Secretariat outline.<sup>98</sup>

Ironically, although the English common law is absent from the document in a technical sense, its impact was enormous on the earliest of the fundamental rights provisions in the written constitutions adopted at the time of the American and French revolutions, which were of course included in the compilation. In turn, the American Bill of Rights and the French Déclaration des droits de l'homme et du citoyen served as models for the constitutions adopted during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries by independent States around the world, and these represent the vast majority of the constitutions referred to in the document. The list is very largely dominated by Europe and Latin America. Some eighteen European constitutions were considered, including four socialist constitutions, from Byelorussia, Soviet Union, Ukraine and Yugoslavia. Latin America accounted for eighteen constitutions. There were only five from Asia (Afghanistan, China, India, Philippines and Siam), with another five from the Middle East (Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia and Syria). Only four African constitutions were considered (Egypt, Ethiopia, Liberia and South Africa).

When the session began, Eleanor Roosevelt urged the Drafting Committee not to be too ambitious. The United States had decided not to propose its own draft, she explained, judging the Secretariat Outline to be a useful starting point for discussion. Roosevelt thought that the most the Committee could accomplish would be to agree upon the rights to be included in the draft bill.<sup>99</sup>

At its second meeting, the Drafting Committee began studying the individual rights in detail. Roosevelt proposed that they begin with article 3 of the Secretariat draft (“Everyone has the right to life. This right can be denied only to persons who have been convicted under general law of some crime to which the death penalty is attached.”). She said that “she understood that there is a movement underway in some States to wipe out the death penalty completely. She suggested that it might be better not to use the phrase ‘death penalty’.”<sup>100</sup> René Cassin was cautious, stating

<sup>97</sup> Ibid., pp. 12, 78, 256.

<sup>98</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 32.

<sup>99</sup> E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.1, p. 2. See also the “Memorandum of Conversation with Eleanor Roosevelt”, 3 June 1947, of State Department official James P. Hendrick in Alinda Black, ed., The Eleanor Roosevelt Papers, Vol. I: The Human Rights Years, 1945–1948, Charlottesville, VA and London: University of Virginia Press, 2007, pp. 556–9.

<sup>100</sup> E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.2, p. 10.

“that if the principle of universal abolition of the death penalty could be adopted it should not impose a strict obligation on States which wished to maintain the death penalty”.<sup>101</sup> The Soviet member, Professor Koretsky, said “that the United Nations should not in any way signify approval of the death penalty”, adding that it had been abolished in his country.<sup>102</sup> Santa Cruz of Chile argued for recognition of the life of any being, born or unborn, and for the principle that those who are unable to support themselves have the right to be supported and protected. He suggested that it might be better to include the text of the Chilean draft on this subject.<sup>103</sup>

Over the next few days, the Drafting Committee examined the provisions in the Secretariat draft, comparing them with the texts proposed by the United Kingdom and the United States, where applicable.<sup>104</sup> Then it turned its sights on the form that the bill of rights should take. Views were quite divergent on this issue, with strongly held opinions in favour of both a declaration or manifesto and a binding treaty or convention. At the end of its first week of meetings, the Drafting Committee decided to establish a “Temporary Working Group” consisting of René Cassin, Charles Malik and Geoffrey Wilson. Its tasks were to suggest a “logical rearrangement” of the Secretariat draft and a redraft of its provisions in light of the week’s discussions, and to recommend how the substance of the articles could be divided between a manifesto and a convention.<sup>105</sup>

When the Drafting Committee resumed the following week, the Working Group had held two meetings. It had chosen to ask René Cassin to formulate a “rough-draft Declaration”. Cassin’s text consisted of a preamble and forty-four articles.<sup>106</sup> Explaining what he had done, Cassin said:

that he was conscious of the imperfection of his work. He explained that he had taken the liberty of drafting a Preamble to express the general principles. He agreed with the Chairman that the declaration should not be too wordy and too detailed, and cited as models the Declarations of Cuba and of the American Association of Human Rights and the Protection of Man. He invited his colleagues to propose abbreviations and deletions wherever necessary. The chapter indications had been inserted merely as a guide for his work, he explained, but he believed they should eventually be deleted.<sup>107</sup>

This is the famous Cassin draft that has sometimes been described as the original version of the Universal Declaration. In an article in the UNESCO Courier published on the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration, Cassin was identified in the headline as “the author of the first draft of the Universal Declaration”.<sup>108</sup> In the article itself, Cassin explained: “An eight-member drafting committee then called on me to prepare a preliminary draft Declaration, on the basis of material assembled by Professors John P. Humphrey and Emile Giraud, and proposals submitted by certain governments (Panama and Cuba). This draft was presented to the Committee on June 3, 1947.<sup>109</sup> It is seriously understating the significance of the Humphrey draft to label it “material assembled”. The Working Group had asked Cassin for a “logical rearrangement” and “redraft” of the 48-article text prepared by John Humphrey, which it had already spent several days discussing. Mary Ann Glendon cites the verbatim transcript, where on 17 June 1947 Eleanor Roosevelt states: “Now we come to Mr. Cassin’s draft, which has based itself on the Secretariat’s comparative draft.”<sup>110</sup>

<sup>101</sup> Ibid. <sup>102</sup> Ibid., p. 11. <sup>103</sup> Ibid. <sup>104</sup> E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.2; E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.3; E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.4.

<sup>105</sup> E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.6, p. 8. <sup>106</sup> E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2/Rev.1. <sup>107</sup> E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.6, p. 2.

<sup>108</sup> The impression lingers in the literature. See Florence Benoît-Rohmer, “France: The Origins, with the Prospect of Increasing Effect”, in Vinodh Jaichand and Markku Suksi, eds., 60 Years of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in Europe, Antwerp, Oxford, Portland: Intersentia, 2009, pp. 19–26, at pp. 19–20.

René Cassin’s draft was the basis for a new review of the substantive provisions of the draft declaration. Professor Glendon says the Cassin draft “preserved most of the substantive content of Humphrey’s draft, but under his hand the document acquired an internal logic and achieved greater unity”.<sup>111</sup> Cassin’s biographer acknowledges that he was not “le père exclusif de la Déclaration”, but insists that “en comparaison de ce que d’autres personnalités ont apporté au projet à titre individuel, il en est le principal inspirateur”.<sup>112</sup> Agi cites Cassin’s remarks at a press conference, held in early July 1949, when he recognized that the United Nations Secretariat had prepared “une documentation préparatoire remarquable” but then insisted that “une Déclaration internationale ne saurait être la photographie, même agrandie, des nombreuses déclarations des droits de l’homme nationales . . .”<sup>113</sup>

Late in the second week of its first session, the Drafting Committee devoted a meeting to consideration of the proposed convention, examining drafts proposed by the United States and the United Kingdom.<sup>114</sup> This was the beginning of the bifurcation in the drafting process, with the declaration and the convention being treated as distinct texts. Although no formal decision had been taken by the Commission as a whole, already at this first session the Drafting Committee had begun to work on two separate documents. In addition, the question of implementation was increasingly treated as a third strand in the drafting of the international bill of rights.<sup>115</sup> The discussion about the proposed court of human rights took place under this heading. It was nevertheless also relevant to discussion of the draft declaration to the extent that a right to a remedy was recognized.

By the close of the first session of the Drafting Committee, on 25 June 1947, the Committee had reduced Cassin’s draft to thirty-six articles. It did not adopt a complete text, however. Instead, where views of the Committee’s members were <sup>109</sup> René Cassin, “How the Charter of Human Rights Was Born”, UNESCO Courier, January 1968, p. 4. Cassin was mistaken about the date: the “rough draft” he prepared was issued on 16 June 1947.

<sup>110</sup> Mary Ann Glendon, A World Made New, Eleanor Roosevelt and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, New York: Random House, 2001, p. 65.

<sup>111</sup> Ibid., p. 63. <sup>112</sup> Marc Agi, René Cassin, Prix Nobel de la Paix (1887–1976), Paris: Perrin, 1998, p. 229.

<sup>113</sup> Ibid. <sup>114</sup> E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.11. <sup>115</sup> E/CN.4/AC.1/12.

not unanimous, the alternatives were set out. The Drafting Committee described the result, consisting of Annex F of its report, as “a working paper for a preliminary draft of an International Manifesto or Declaration on Human Rights”.<sup>116</sup> The Drafting Committee also adopted elements of a draft convention and discussed the issue of implementation.

Freedom of association and trade union rights

In the months that followed the first session of the Drafting Committee, several distinct issues within the general field of human rights were addressed by specialized bodies and interest groups within the United Nations as a contribution to the process of drafting the Universal Declaration: trade union rights, discrimination and the rights of minorities, refugees, women’s rights, and freedom of expression and information. To some extent these activities reflected the emerging tensions of the Cold War, as one or the other bloc sought to advance its particular priorities. The first of these issues concerned freedom of association and trade union rights.

The initial draft declaration prepared by John Humphrey had no reference to trade unions, despite his socialist views. Cassin’s draft contained a more robust recognition of the rights of assembly and association, but still no reference to unions.<sup>117</sup> The issue of trade union rights was simmering at the Economic and Social Council, however, where the World Federation of Trade Unions had been very actively campaigning. A resolution entitled “Trade Union Rights (Freedom of Association)” was adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its fifth session, in early August 1947. The resolution noted that the Council was awaiting reports on the issue from the International Labour Organization, adding that it was also awaiting “the report which it will receive in due course from the Commission on Human Rights on those aspects of the subject which might appropriately form part of the bill or declaration on human rights”.<sup>118</sup>

In October, the Dominican Republic invoked the ECOSOC resolution in support of a similar initiative in the General Assembly. The preamble of the draft resolution that it submitted said “the resolution adopted on 8 August 1947 by the Economic and Social Council aims at the establishment, as soon as possible, of international machinery for safeguarding the freedom of association of trade unions, citing this need as one of the essential features of the proposed Bill of Human Rights”.<sup>119</sup> France followed shortly with its own draft resolution on the same subject, “Request[ing] the Secretary-General to arrange for the Commission on Human Rights to collaborate in the study of those aspects of trade union rights which would form part of the bill or declaration on human rights".<sup>120</sup> Chile followed with an amendment to the Dominican and French resolutions:

<sup>116</sup> E/CN.4/21, para. 17.

<sup>117</sup> Johannes Morsink, The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Origins, Drafting, and Intent, Philadelphia: Penn, 2000, p. 168.

<sup>118</sup> E/RES/84(V). <sup>119</sup> A/C.3/166.

Recommends the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council when drafting the Declaration on Human Rights prepared by the Drafting Committee, to include among the rights inherent in the human person social rights and liberties and a minimum of economic security for the worker against unemployment and social insecurity, in accordance with the principles of human dignity and of non-discrimination on grounds of race, sex, language or religion proclaimed in the Charter.<sup>121</sup>

The Secretariat's Division of Human Rights prepared a detailed memorandum for the Commission on Human Rights discussing the difficulties in formulating freedom of association in the context of trade union activities.<sup>122</sup> It noted that the Commission would have to decide whether to make specific reference to trade union rights or to propose a more general formulation on freedom of association, something the Secretariat thought would be more difficult. "States may, for instance, be less prepared to undertake obligations on an international level concerning the right of association for political purposes, than in the matter of trade union rights", the Secretariat advised.<sup>123</sup> It noted that draft provisions had been suggested by the World Federation of Trade Unions, the American Federation of Labor and the International Labour Organization.

On 17 November 1947, the General Assembly adopted a resolution entitled "Trade Union Rights (Freedom of Association)". It officially approved of two Economic and Social Council resolutions adopted earlier that year, and made explicit reference to the drafting of the declaration of human rights. The resolution transmitted the report of the International Labour Organization to the Commission on Human Rights "with the same objects as those stated in resolution 52(IV) of the Economic and Social Council" – which was to say, to be considered in drafting the declaration.<sup>124</sup>

The following year, when it adopted the final text of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the General Assembly opted for both a general recognition of freedom of association, in article 20,<sup>125</sup> and a separate reference to trade union rights in article 23.<sup>126</sup> A Swedish proposal submitted to the Third Committee of the General Assembly to include the right to strike in the Universal Declaration<sup>127</sup> was rejected on an exceedingly close vote of 15 against to 13 in favour, with 13 abstentions.<sup>128</sup>

<sup>120</sup> A/C.3/167. <sup>121</sup> A/C.3/171. <sup>122</sup> E/CN.4/31, pp. 9–12. <sup>123</sup> Ibid., p. 24. <sup>124</sup> A/RES/128(II).

<sup>125</sup> "(1) Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association. (2) No one may be compelled to belong to an association."

<sup>126</sup> "(4) Everyone has the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests."

<sup>127</sup> A/C.3/252. It was withdrawn by Sweden and then reintroduced by Poland. <sup>128</sup> A/C.3/SR.140, p. 534.

Non-discrimination and the rights of minorities

The Commission on Human Rights established two sub-commissions. The first to be created was the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press, although it was short-lived, holding its fifth and final session in 1952. The second was the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,<sup>129</sup> renamed the Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in 1999. The second sub-commission functioned for many years as a think tank for the Commission on Human Rights. It was dissolved in 2006, when some of its functions devolved to a new body known as the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee. Both sub-commissions held rather lengthy deliberations about the provisions of the draft declaration relevant to their areas of expertise. Unlike the Commission itself, which was an overtly political body composed of Member States rather than individual experts, the members of the sub-commissions were, in principle, independent. Nominated for election by Member States, however, not all members operated at arm's length from the governments that supported them. In the early years of the Cold War, there was a sense that each of the two sub-commissions played to a strength of one of the major blocs. Accordingly, Western States tilted towards the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press, while the Soviet Union and its allies favoured the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities began its first session in November 1947. In its report to the Commission, the Drafting Committee had asked that the non-discrimination provision, article 6, as well as articles 13, 15, 28 and 36, be referred to the Sub-Commission "for thorough consideration".<sup>130</sup> But there had been no session of the Commission in the interim. At its first meeting, John Humphrey told the Sub-Commission that, although the relevant provisions were not legally before it, "he was confident that the Commission would be disappointed if the Sub-Commission did not discuss them".<sup>131</sup>

Article 6 of the Drafting Committee proposal stated: "Everyone is entitled to the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion." Much of the debate in the Sub-Commission concerned whether the list of enumerated groups, which was drawn from article 1(3) of the Charter of the United Nations, could be enlarged by adding terms such as colour and political opinion,<sup>132</sup> property status, and national and social origin.<sup>133</sup> The detailed enumeration of prohibited forms of discrimination set out in article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights traces its origins to the discussions in the first session of the Sub-Commission. The Sub-Commission agreed on the following provision: “Every one is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, property status, or national or social origin.” The final version of article 2 of the Declaration is almost identical, the only modification being the addition of “birth or other” after “property” and an inconsequential change in the order of the enumerated categories.

<sup>129</sup> See: John P. Humphrey, "The United Nations Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities", (1968) 62 American Journal of International Law 869.

<sup>130</sup> E/CN.4/21, pp. 74, 76, 78, 79, 81. <sup>131</sup> E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.1, p. 10. <sup>132</sup> E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.4.

<sup>133</sup> E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.6.

The issue of incitement to racial hatred or discrimination proved to be quite controversial. It had not been addressed at all by the Drafting Committee or in any of the earlier work on the draft declaration. The Sub-Commission did not agree on a provision requiring the criminalization of such incitement. However, it recommended that the Commission on Human Rights include provisions in the declaration, as well as in the convention, “in the appropriate places, of clauses condemning incitement to violence against religious groups, nations, races, or minorities”.<sup>134</sup> The result appears in article 7 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in article 20(2) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. The debate about criminalization lingers, as can be seen in the various reservations to article 20(2) of the Covenant.<sup>135</sup>

The Sub-Commission revised the Drafting Committee’s provision dealing with freedom of movement, making it more absolute and unconditional. It declined to take a view on the provision dealing with the right to marry, leaving this for consideration by the Commission on the Status of Women. Great attention was also devoted to article 36 dealing with the rights of minorities. This is the first developed consideration of the definition of minority rights within the United Nations system. Ultimately, of course, the version proposed by the Sub-Commission was not retained and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights contains no explicit provision governing the rights of minorities.

The second session of the Commission on Human Rights

The second session of the Commission on Human Rights convened in Geneva, at the Palais des Nations, in December 1947. Initially, the Commission debated the report of the Drafting Committee. The Committee’s report had already oriented the work towards the preparation of two separate documents, a declaration and a convention, but the approach had not yet met with consensus. Probably, it was still widely believed that both texts could be finalized reasonably quickly with a view to their joint adoption, something that soon turned out to be completely unrealistic. For while the General Assembly was able to agree upon the text of a declaration, in December 1948, prompt adoption of a convention eluded the drafters. That work only concluded nearly twenty years later, with the completion of the two international covenants on human rights. Entry into force of the covenants took yet another decade.

<sup>134</sup> E/CN.4/52, p. 6.

<sup>135</sup> See the discussion by Judge Theodor Meron in Nahimana et al. v. Prosecutor (ICTR-99-52-A), Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Meron, 28 November 2007.

Some members of the Commission, in December 1947, were concerned that a declaration with no corresponding treaty obligations would be an empty commitment, without legal authority. The proposed declaration was essentially preambular in nature, they believed. Taken alone, it would be sterile and insignificant. The passage of time has proven this to be a harsh and ultimately flawed assessment. Not only did the Universal Declaration stand alone as the normative basis for human rights within the United Nations system for many years, until subsequent treaties were adopted and entered into force, but also it remains to this day the paramount human rights instrument and an autonomous source of obligation. This is the fundamental ambiguity of the legal significance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. More than sixty years after its adoption, there is still no undisputed vision of its place in international law. The issue is discussed at greater depth later in this introductory chapter.

Without deciding whether a declaration could be adopted in the absence of a convention, the members of the Commission on Human Rights nevertheless agreed to continue with the bifurcated approach adopted in June 1947 by the Drafting Committee. Belgium proposed that three Working Parties be established, to deal with the declaration, the convention or conventions, and the subject of implementation.<sup>136</sup> In presenting the resolution, Professor Fernand Dehousse<sup>137</sup> explained that Belgium sought a compromise between those delegations that favoured proceeding with a declaration alone and those that insisted on a convention. The Soviets had objected that it was necessary to agree upon the substance of human rights before the form the bill would take could be resolved, but Dehousse contended this objection could be met by coordinating the discussions of the Working Groups. In this way, the Commission could proceed on both planes, in effect postponing any decision on whether to separate the two documents. Nevertheless, he hinted at the outcome: “Those members who were in favour of a Convention only were cherishing an illusion, as the Declaration was the most advanced of the three drafts and it was the wish of the majority of the Commission's members that the present discussions should at least produce a Declaration."<sup>138</sup> After much debate, the Commission voted to proceed along the lines suggested by Belgium.<sup>139</sup>

<sup>136</sup> E/CN.4/44.

<sup>137</sup> Fernand Dehousse (1906–76) was a Belgian politician and academic who represented Belgium at the United Nations General Assembly from 1946 to 1948. From 1951 to 1952, Dehousse was President of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe. Later, he was a member of the European Assembly (which subsequently became the European Parliament).

Dehousse also spoke to the issue of terminology. He did not like the reference to a "bill" of human rights, which he said had no French translation. Until that point, the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council had spoken of the "international bill of human rights". But with the proposed division into two or more separate instruments, the nature of the "bill" had become unclear.<sup>140</sup> Nor did he approve of "convention" as this "designated international agreements of less importance than treaties".<sup>141</sup> He thought the term "Charter" should be reserved exclusively for the basic instrument of the United Nations. The Commission should opt for the word "covenant", he said.<sup>142</sup> This is the first such reference to use of the term "covenant" as a label for the draft convention anywhere in the travaux préparatoires. Before that morning's deliberations had concluded, several of the delegates had taken up the suggestion, describing the proposed convention as a "covenant", and the term quickly prevailed. The Commission confirmed the change in nomenclature at the conclusion of its second session. It also agreed to use the term "International Bill of Rights" (or, for brevity, "Bill of Rights") to describe the three documents being prepared, namely the declaration, the covenant and the measures of implementation.<sup>143</sup>

There had been some question as to whether all three Working Groups could be established immediately, for technical reasons, as the Secretariat was not able to provide enough interpreters. When the Working Groups were formally established, the following day, Eleanor Roosevelt said the problem had been solved by establishing linguistically homogeneous groups. Thus, the three bodies could work simultaneously. She placed herself in the Working Group on the declaration, together with delegates from Byelorussia, the Soviet Union, the Philippines, Panama and China.<sup>144</sup> René Cassin asked, "in view of the part he had played over a long period in the work connected with the elaboration of an International Declaration of Rights, to be associated with the work of the Group on the declaration, rather than with that of the Group on the Convention", to which France had been assigned. It was agreed that France and China would swap places.<sup>145</sup> In this way, the language issue was adroitly finessed; the Working Group on the declaration would get the interpreters and could operate in both French and English, while the other Working Groups would use English only.

<sup>138</sup> E/CN.4/SR.28, p. 4. <sup>139</sup> E/CN.4/SR.29, p. 14.

<sup>140</sup> See, e.g., the comments of Eleanor Roosevelt at E/CN.4/SR.29, pp. 4–5. <sup>141</sup> E/CN.4/SR.28, p. 5.

<sup>142</sup> Ibid. See also: E/CN.4/SR.42, p. 9. <sup>143</sup> E/CN.4/SR.42, p. 12. <sup>144</sup> E/CN.4/SR.30, p. 2. <sup>145</sup> Ibid., p. 3.

The Plenary Commission adjourned and the Working Group on the declaration convened immediately. Eleanor Roosevelt was elected Chairman and René Cassin Rapporteur. In addition, the Group consisted of A. S. Stepanenko of Byelorussia, M. Amado of Panama, General Carlos P. Romulo of the Philippines and A. E. Bogomolov of the Soviet Union. But the room was more crowded. The United Kingdom sent an observer, and there were two representatives of the Commission on the Status of Women, and a representative from the International Labour Organization, as well as consultants from several non-governmental organizations: the Inter-Parliamentary Union, American Federation of Labor, International Federation of Christian Trade Unions, World Jewish Congress, International Committee of the Red Cross, International Council of Women, Commission of the Churches on International Affairs, International Union of Catholic Women's Leagues, Consultative Council of Jewish Organizations. Over the coming days, the Working Group held nine meetings during which it reviewed, article by article, the text adopted by the Drafting Committee in June. The Working Group also took into account the proposals adopted the previous week by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.<sup>146</sup> Whereas the Drafting Committee had produced a list of options rather than a more polished document, the Working Group was able to provide a full draft declaration. Many provisions were accompanied by explanatory comments.<sup>147</sup> Because it had been adopted at the European headquarters of the United Nations, the draft was often referred to subsequently as the "Geneva text".

The Plenary Commission on Human Rights reconvened to consider the report of the Working Group and proceeded to another article-by-article review. Frequently, it discussed the relevant texts of both the declaration and the convention together, thereby resolving any inconsistencies that might have arisen as a result of the separation of the two Working Groups. The Commission adopted a draft declaration on human rights accompanied by a range of comments, as well as proposals for some new provisions.<sup>148</sup> In what proved a precursor of its eventual abstention in the vote in the General Assembly the following year, the Soviet Union indicated its dissatisfaction with the text adopted by the Commission and said it reserved the right to present its own draft declaration.<sup>149</sup> The Commission projected a second meeting of the Drafting Committee, to be held in May 1948, followed by its own third session in June. This would complete its work on the declaration and enable adoption by the General Assembly by the end of 1948. The Commission asked the Secretary-General of the United Nations to transmit the report on its second session to governments, asking that they submit their comments by April.<sup>150</sup>

<sup>146</sup> E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.9, pp. 5–21. <sup>147</sup> E/CN.4/57. <sup>148</sup> E/CN.4/77/Annex A; E/600, pp. 15–24.

<sup>149</sup> Ibid., p. 1, fn. <sup>150</sup> E/600, para. 13.

Women's equality and the contribution of the Commission on the Status of Women

The Commission on the Status of Women was established by the Economic and Social Council in 1946, in accordance with article 68 of the Charter of the United Nations. Like the Commission on Human Rights, its creation was preceded by a “nuclear” body. It was originally designated as a Sub-Commission of the Commission on Human Rights.<sup>151</sup> At the first session, the members requested the Economic and Social Council to upgrade the body to the status of a Commission, a demand that the Council accepted forthwith. The importance of involving the Commission on the Status of Women in the drafting of the Universal Declaration was raised by Hansa Mehta of India at the very first session of the Commission on Human Rights.<sup>152</sup> In February 1947, the Commission on the Status of Women adopted a decision addressed to the Economic and Social Council requesting that it be represented by its officers at the Commission of Human Rights when the draft bill of rights was being considered. The Commission on the Status of Women also asked that the draft bill be circulated among its members.<sup>153</sup> The Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution declaring that “the Commission on the Status of Women be represented by its officers, the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur, at the sessions of the Commission on Human Rights when sections of the draft of the international bill of human rights concerning the particular rights of women are under consideration, to participate, without vote, in the deliberations thereon”. In addition, the preliminary draft of the international bill was to be circulated to the Commission on the Status of Women at the same time as it was made available to the members of the Commission on Human Rights.<sup>154</sup>

At its first session in June 1947, the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights had decided to postpone consideration of article 15, on the right to marry, until recommendations made by the Commission on the Status of Women were discussed by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.<sup>155</sup> Marie-Hélène Lefauchaux, President of the Commission on the Status of Women, attended meetings of the Sub-Commission in November and December 1947 when it was studying relevant provisions of the draft declaration. When it was debating a proposal from the Soviet Union to criminalize discrimination based on distinctions of race, nationality or religion, Mme Lefauchaux intervened to point out that omission of the word “sex” was surely an oversight.<sup>156</sup> When called upon to participate in a discussion of article 15 by the Sub-Commission, she explained that the Commission on the Status of Women would not in fact meet until January 1948.<sup>157</sup> As a result, the Sub-Commission did not pronounce itself on article 15, “since the Commission on the Status of Women, which was to meet in January next, was the proper body to make an exhaustive study of the Article, particularly from the point of view of marriage”.<sup>158</sup>

<sup>151</sup> E/27. <sup>152</sup> E/CN.4/SR.1, p. 6. <sup>153</sup> E/CN.6/SR.12, p. 10; E/281, p. 10.

<sup>154</sup> E/RES/48(IV), paras. A.(3), (4). Also: E/RES/46(IV), para. A.(f). <sup>155</sup> E/CN.4/21, p. 86.

<sup>156</sup> E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.8, p. 12.

At the December 1947 session of the Commission on Human Rights, the Chairman of the Commission on the Status of Women expressed surprise about this. Bodil Begtrup explained that the previous report of the Commission on the Status of Women had advocated full equality of civil rights.<sup>159</sup> A general statement saying “everyone has full equality of civil rights, irrespective of marriage, race, language or religion” might be included.<sup>160</sup> She also insisted that “as sex equality was a right which had been acquired but recently, it would be necessary to emphasize it explicitly in certain Articles, and, even, to make particular mention of certain rights guaranteed specially to women”. She proposed that the Preamble include the following sentence: “When a word indicating the masculine sex is used in connection with a provision contained in the following Bill of Human Rights, the provision in question is to be considered as applying without discrimination to women.”<sup>161</sup> With respect to article 1, she said the word “men” should be replaced by “human beings”.<sup>162</sup> When the prohibition of slavery was being discussed, Mrs Begtrup asked whether the words “in all its forms” were meant to cover the traffic in women, indicating that it might be preferable to mention the matter.<sup>163</sup> Concerning the right to a nationality, she said that many women forfeited their nationality on marriage; the issue should be made the subject of a separate convention.<sup>164</sup> Concerning social security, she preferred distinct references to “mothers’ rights’ and “protection of children” over “protection of mothers and children”.<sup>165</sup> She also sought a reference to “motherhood” so as to cover the pre-natal state.<sup>166</sup> Begtrup’s colleague, Evdokia Uralova, who also attended the meetings of the Working Group as Rapporteur of the Commission on the Status of Women, intervened to argue for recognition that women should receive equal pay for equal work.<sup>167</sup>

Concerning the right to life, Bodil Begtrup intervened during meetings of the Working Group on the declaration when a representative of the International Federation of Christian Trade Unions suggested the right should exist from the moment of conception, noting that this idea “could not be reconciled with the provisions of certain advanced legislation which in certain cases provided for

<sup>157</sup> E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.9, p. 7.      <sup>158</sup> E/CN.4/52, p. 7.

<sup>159</sup> On Bodil Begtrup’s contribution, see: Eva Maria Lassen, “Denmark: A Document of Ideological Importance”, in Vinodh Jaichand and Markku Suksi, eds., 60 Years of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in Europe, Antwerp, Oxford, Portland: Intersentia, 2009, pp. 43–57.

<sup>160</sup> E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.5, p. 8.      <sup>161</sup> E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.2, pp. 2–3.      <sup>162</sup> Ibid., p. 4.

<sup>163</sup> E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.4, pp. 2, 3.      <sup>164</sup> E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.5, p. 11.      <sup>165</sup> E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.6, pp. 2–3.

<sup>166</sup> E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.8, p. 12.      <sup>167</sup> E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.7, p. 13.

the right of abortion”.<sup>168</sup> She returned to the point in the Plenary, noting “that the laws of a large number of civilized countries allowed abortion, in cases clearly specified by the law, in order to preserve the life of the woman”.<sup>169</sup>

The Commission on the Status of Women met in January 1948. Bodil Begtrup provided a detailed presentation on her participation in the previous session of the Commission on Human Rights, towards which her colleagues in the Commission on the Status of Women were generally very favourable. The Commission was unhappy with the reference in article 1 to “brothers”. The Chinese delegate suggested it be replaced with “members of the same family”, while the Indian member proposed “in a spirit of brotherhood”. There was also a suggestion to use “in a spirit of brotherhood and sisterhood”, but the Commission agreed on “spirit of brotherhood” as this “sufficiently expressed the idea advocated”.<sup>170</sup> Today, the reference to “brotherhood” in article 1 of the Universal Declaration is often mentioned as a regrettable manifestation of archaic and sexist language, and it is curious to observe that the term actually originated in the Commission on the Status of Women in an attempt to confront this very problem. The Commission on Human Rights reacted favourably to the proposal and, although the text it adopted was not identical, the representative of the Commission on the Status of Women confirmed that it “was in conformity with its wishes”.<sup>171</sup> According to Johannes Morsink, “the lack of sexism in the Universal Declaration is primarily due to the aggressive lobbying of Begtrup and the steady pressure of the Soviet delegation”.<sup>172</sup>

Monogamy was the only other issue considered by the Commission on the Status of Women with respect to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Although some members would have preferred an explicit endorsement of monogamy, the Commission agreed to leave the matter to implication and confine its proposal to the following text for article 13: “Men and women shall have equal rights to contract or dissolve marriage in accordance with the law.” At the same time, it agreed to include the following in its report to the Economic and Social Council:

1. Monogamy. The Commission emphasizes its belief in the principle of monogamy and urges the United Nations to work for the acceptance of this principle.
2. Freedom of Choice. This right cannot be fully guaranteed unless it is recognized that individuals have the right to leave their country on marriage and to reside with the other partner in any country from which they cannot lawfully be excluded. The Commission therefore notes with satisfaction the terms of Article 10(2) of the Draft Declaration on Human Rights (E/600) as recognizing a right essential for safeguarding freedom of choice in marriage.<sup>173</sup>

<sup>168</sup> E/CN.4/AC.2/SR.2, p. 8.   <sup>169</sup> E/CN.4/SR.35, p. 13.   <sup>170</sup> E/CN.6/SR.28, p. 4.

<sup>171</sup> E/CN.4/SR.50, p. 17.

<sup>172</sup> Johannes Morsink, The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Origins, Drafting, and Intent, Philadelphia: Penn, 2000, p. 117. For feminist perspectives on the Universal Declaration, see: Helen Bequaert-Holmes, “A Feminist Analysis of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, in Carol C. Gould, ed., Beyond Domination: New Perspectives on Women and Philosophy, Totowa, NJ: Rowman and Allanheld, 1983, pp. 250–71; Johannes Morsink, “Women’s Rights in the Universal Declaration”, (1991) 13 Human Rights Quarterly 229; Hilary Charlesworth, “The Mid-Life Crisis of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, (1998) 55 Washington and Lee Law Review 781.

The reference to dissolution of marriage had been adopted without any debate in the Commission on the Status of Women. However, it raised objections elsewhere on religious grounds. Presenting the proposal to the Commission on Human Rights, the Vice-Chairman of the Commission on the Status of Women said that it was aware that a certain section of public opinion had protested against that text on religious grounds, which the Commission understood and respected. But since the Commission had been appointed to safeguard their rights and protect the interests of woman throughout the world, it had been obliged to take account, not only of the views of groups that did not recognize divorce, but also of the existing situation in countries where, divorce being legally recognized, the relevant legislation usually placed women at a disadvantage.<sup>174</sup>

The result can be seen in the reference to dissolution of marriage in article 16 of the Declaration.

Freedom of information and of the press

Both the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press and the Conference on Freedom of Information and of the Press considered relevant provisions of the draft declaration in early 1948, prior to the second session of the Drafting Committee and the third session of the Commission on Human Rights. The Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press convened at Lake Success, New York, in January 1948 for its second session. The Commission on Human Rights had asked it to examine articles 17 and 18 of the draft text that had been adopted in December 1947, as well as the corresponding provision in the draft covenant. The debate was informed by what Humphrey later described as “[t]he deep incompatibilities between the communist and liberal approaches to the functions of the press”.<sup>175</sup>

The Sub-Commission struck a drafting committee which prepared two versions, but it also considered a number of proposals. It decided to merge the two articles of the Commission’s December draft into a single provision that starts to resemble the final version of article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: “Everyone shall have the right to freedom of thought and expression; this shall include freedom to hold opinions without interference; and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas by any means and regardless of frontiers.”<sup>176</sup> Given the ideological

<sup>173</sup> E/CN.6/74, pp. 13–14. <sup>174</sup> E/CN.4/SR.58, p. 10.

<sup>175</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 36.

<sup>176</sup> E/CN.4/80, para. 12.

tensions that were so present at the time, Humphrey considered that agreement on a definition of freedom of information was “a considerable achievement”.<sup>177</sup>

The Conference on Freedom of Information and of the Press, which was held in Geneva at the Palais des Nations a few months later, adopted essentially the same provision.<sup>178</sup>

The second session of the Drafting Committee

The Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights reconvened for its second session in New York over three weeks in May 1948. The draft declaration had been considerably altered since it had first met a year earlier, the result of two sessions of the Commission on Human Rights. The discussions had been enriched by reports from the two Sub-Commissions, the Commission on the Status of Women and the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information and of the Press. Moreover, as requested by the Commission in December 1947, several Member States had submitted observations: Pakistan, Canada, Netherlands, Australia, United States, Mexico, Brazil, United Kingdom, South Africa, Egypt and Norway.<sup>179</sup>

The Drafting Committee produced a revised version of the declaration, drawing upon the previous work.<sup>180</sup> It focussed more attention on the draft covenant, however, and only managed to redraft parts of the declaration. The Committee had no time at all to consider implementation.

The third session of the Commission on Human Rights

The second session of the Drafting Committee was followed immediately by the third session of the Commission on Human Rights. A few days at the start of the meeting were lost due to the absence of the representatives of Byelorussia and Ukraine, who had not obtained visas to travel to the United States. The Commission protested to the Secretary-General, noting that this violated the arrangements between the United Nations and the host State.

Given that the Drafting Committee had devoted more attention to the covenant than the declaration, the Commission decided that it would concentrate on the draft declaration. It conducted an article-by-article examination of the draft, concluding

<sup>177</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 36.

<sup>178</sup> E/CONF.6/C.4/71; E/CONF.6/65, p. 36; E/CN.4/84.

<sup>179</sup> E/CN.4/85. After the official deadline, the Secretary-General received observations from India (E/CN.4/82/Add.7), France (E/CN.4/82/Add.8), the United Kingdom (E/CN.4/82/Add.9), Sweden (E/CN.4/82/Add.11), New Zealand (E/CN.4/82/Add.12).

<sup>180</sup> E/CN.4/95.

its work with a further revised version, implementing many changes to the text. For the first time in the drafting of the declaration, great attention was devoted to the Preamble.

The seventh session of the Economic and Social Council

The final draft adopted by the Commission on Human Rights in June 1948 was only considered superficially by the Economic and Social Council at its seventh session, in July and August 1948. Perhaps this was a foreboding of the rather secondary role that the Council would play in the area of human rights within the United Nations. This is despite articles 55 and 60 of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as article 68, which confirm that the Commission on Human Rights is a body subsidiary to the Economic and Social Council. Instead, at this decisive moment in the development of the United Nations human rights regime, the Council played only the most perfunctory role.

The Council set up a Human Rights Committee and charged it with reviewing the draft declaration, as well as several other matters. It soon became apparent that the Committee was overwhelmed with work. In addition to the declaration, three draft conventions on freedom of information and the draft genocide convention were on the agenda. This was an impossible workload given the limited time and the pressure to deliver a draft declaration of human rights to the General Assembly for its third session later in the year. The Council decided to recall the draft declaration to the Plenary. According to a ruling by the President, the plenary sessions would provide “an opportunity for general statements of position by representatives, without other debate or decisions other than a decision to transmit the documents to the General Assembly together with the statement of position”.<sup>181</sup>

Many of the comments in the Plenary of the Economic and Social Council were critical of the draft, and several informal proposals were made indicating dissatisfaction with one provision or another. The summary of the discussion in the Council’s report to the General Assembly reads as follows:

It was generally recognized that a draft Declaration in the form in which it was presented to the Council was still imperfect. Criticisms were made that it was not sufficiently universal, or precise; that sufficient time should be allowed to produce a better draft having regard to the novel and difficult character of the task; that it did not give sufficient prominence to rights which could not be enumerated in national declarations, such as the rights of stateless persons; that it was inadequate in respect of the protection of and the promotion of respect of human rights, particularly rights of an economic and social character, as in respect of the proper emphasis on duties to the State.

<sup>181</sup> E/SR.201.

Amendments and suggestions relating to specific articles were also put forward. All members stressed the importance of the draft Declaration.<sup>182</sup>

The early part of the debate leaves the impression that there was widespread opposition to the submission of the draft to the General Assembly. For example, New Zealand said the declaration should be reconsidered in the light of detailed comments by governments on the Commission's most recent draft. Its delegate thought that an acceptable draft declaration might be ready for the 1949 General Assembly.<sup>183</sup> The Netherlands did not support a declaration in the absence of a corresponding covenant with provisions for implementation, which it said would "have little meaning". Its delegate said the declaration should be referred back to the Commission for further study.<sup>184</sup> Denmark also supported the deferral of the declaration, although it said it would not make a formal proposal to this effect.<sup>185</sup>

The United States expressed determination that the declaration be adopted.<sup>186</sup> France took a similar position, with René Cassin insisting that the draft be transmitted to the General Assembly for prompt adoption. He devoted many of his remarks to the issue of adoption of a declaration while the covenant remained unfinished, arguing that a staged enactment of the International Bill of Rights was the preferred route.<sup>187</sup> As the debate continued, other delegations expressing strong support for immediate transmittal to the General Assembly included Venezuela,<sup>188</sup> Chile,<sup>189</sup> Australia,<sup>190</sup> Lebanon<sup>191</sup> and the United Kingdom.<sup>192</sup> Santa Cruz of Chile observed that in the discussion "practically all the Council members had expressed the desire that the General Assembly should adopt a Declaration".<sup>193</sup>

After two three-hour sessions of discussion, the Economic and Social Council voted to transmit to the General Assembly the draft International Declaration of Human Rights submitted to the Council by the Commission on Human Rights in the report of its third session.<sup>194</sup> The final act was about to begin.

The third session of the General Assembly

Exceptionally, the General Assembly met in Paris in 1948. The sessions were held at the Palais de Chaillot, which is on a rise of land known as the Trocadéro located directly across the Seine from the Eiffel Tower. The Palais de Chaillot was built in 1937 for the Exposition internationale. This is where the famous photograph of a triumphant Hitler, with his back to the Eiffel Tower, was taken on 23 June 1940. Today, it contains plaques commemorating the adoption of the Universal

<sup>182</sup> A/625, para. 131. <sup>183</sup> E/SR.215, p. 652. <sup>184</sup> Ibid., p. 643. <sup>185</sup> Ibid., pp. 653–4.
<sup>186</sup> Ibid., pp. 642–3. <sup>187</sup> Ibid., pp. 648–52. <sup>188</sup> Ibid., pp. 655–6. <sup>189</sup> Ibid., pp. 694–5.
<sup>190</sup> Ibid., pp. 695–6. <sup>191</sup> Ibid., p. 697. <sup>192</sup> Ibid., pp. 697–8. <sup>193</sup> Ibid., p. 700.

<sup>194</sup> E/RES/151(VII). There is no record of a vote being taken, but adoption of the resolution is confirmed in the report of the Council to the General Assembly: A/625, para. 131.

Declaration of Human Rights. The passage facing the Palais is now known as the “esplanade des droits de l’homme”.

Apart from a few days at the beginning and the end of the process, in mid-December, the work of the General Assembly on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was conducted not in the Plenary but by its Third Committee and the various subsidiary bodies that it set up. In parallel, the Sixth Committee was labouring over the other great document to emerge from the Third Session of the General Assembly, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide. It was adopted unanimously on 9 December 1948, a day before the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.<sup>195</sup> Its guiding spirit, Raphael Lemkin, considered the Universal Declaration to be a distraction and did not support its adoption.<sup>196</sup>

Surprisingly, during the general debate in the Plenary General Assembly, in late September, only a few speakers addressed themselves to the draft declaration. Important remarks were delivered by George Marshall on behalf of the United States,<sup>197</sup> and Charles Malik of Lebanon delivered an eloquent talk on the philosophical issues.<sup>198</sup> But for the most part, this high-level segment of the Assembly featuring ministers and similar officials showed the priorities to be elsewhere: Palestine and Israel, disarmament, Korea, and other matters.

The Third Committee began its work on 30 September 1948, and devoted virtually all of its time to the draft declaration over the next ten weeks, meeting in two, and sometimes three, sessions each day, and occasionally on a Saturday. Some 148 formal proposals of amendment to the provisions were submitted during this time. The proceedings were chaired by Charles Malik, the Lebanese intellectual who had participated in the first sessions of the Commission and who had been the Rapporteur of the Drafting Committee.

The first meeting was consumed by the issue of how to proceed, with China and the United States urging that the Committee begin examining the draft declaration adopted by the Commission in June 1948, while others sought that there be a more general discussion. The latter view prevailed, and the Committee decided that it would start with a general discussion of the entire report of the Commission on Human Rights. This meant that the covenant, implementation and the general philosophy of the International Bill of Rights could also be considered.<sup>199</sup>

<sup>195</sup> On the relationship between the drafting of the two documents, see: Johannes Morsink, “Cultural Genocide, the Universal Declaration, and Minority Rights”, (1999) 21 Human Rights Quarterly 1009; William Schabas, “Les droits des minorités: Une déclaration inachevée”, in Déclaration universelle des droits de l’homme 1948–98: Avenir d’un idéal commun, Paris: La Documentation française, 1999, pp. 223–42.

<sup>196</sup> Samantha Power, “A Problem from Hell”, America and the Age of Genocide, New York: Basic Books, 2002, pp. 74–6; Mark Mazower, No Enchanted Palace: The End of Empire and the Ideological Origins of the United Nations, Princeton and Oxford: Princeton University Press, 2009, p. 131.

<sup>197</sup> A/PV.139, pp. 20–1. <sup>198</sup> A/PV.145, pp. 41–6. <sup>199</sup> A/C.3/SR.88, pp. 31–2.

Eleanor Roosevelt, who was head of the United States delegation, opened the debate with a presentation of the draft declaration. Reassuring those States that were uncomfortable with the idea of a declaration in the absence of a convention, she noted that this was only “the first step in the elaboration of the human rights programme called for by the Charter; it was essential that it should be followed by a covenant of human rights, drafted in the form of a treaty and containing provisions for implementation”. She said it was expected that the Commission would deal with the covenant at its next session with a view to approval of the text by the General Assembly in 1949.<sup>200</sup> She continued:

The draft declaration was not a treaty or international agreement and did not impose legal obligations. It was rather a statement of basic principles of inalienable human rights, setting up a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations. Although it was not legally binding, the declaration would nevertheless, have considerable weight. Its adoption would commit Member States, in the words of the preamble, “to strive by teaching and education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms and by progressive measures, national and international, to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance, both among the peoples of Member States themselves and among the peoples of territories under their jurisdiction”.<sup>201</sup>

She warned the Committee of “the time which might be wasted if numerous amendments were to be considered. The declaration had already undergone minute scrutiny. Every Member State had had the opportunity to submit comments, and all comments received had been given careful attention, so that the document as it stood was widely representative of the views of Members of the United Nations.”<sup>202</sup>

When the general discussion had concluded, there was a new debate about how to proceed in the Third Committee. An Egyptian proposal whereby the Committee decided “to examine only the draft international declaration of human rights transmitted by the Economic and Social Council with a view to preparing a text for adoption by the General Assembly during the present session, without thereby ruling out statements of opinion on the other sections of the international bill of human rights” was adopted without significant opposition.<sup>203</sup> Egypt had also urged the Committee to consider the issue of the rights and duties of States. It became clear, in the course of discussion, that it was better to proceed with a detailed review of the provisions in the draft unencumbered by other issues.<sup>204</sup> The Soviet representative agreed to withdraw his insistence that the Preamble be discussed first. The Committee followed the Chairman’s lead and decided to begin by discussing the draft declaration article by article.<sup>205</sup>

<sup>200</sup> A/C.3/SR.89, p. 32. <sup>201</sup> Ibid., pp. 32–3. <sup>202</sup> Ibid., p. 33. <sup>203</sup> A/C.3/SR.95, p. 81.
<sup>204</sup> Ibid., pp. 89–90. <sup>205</sup> Ibid., p. 90.

Over the next two months, the Committee examined each article in the draft more or less consecutively, followed by the Preamble. It is impossible here to summarize the richness of the debate on the different provisions. Only one seemingly minor alteration will be mentioned: the change in nomenclature from “international declaration” to “universal declaration”. René Cassin first used the term in the general debate, at the beginning of October, saying that “[i]t was therefore essential that the declaration should be universal”.<sup>206</sup> The proposal that the title become the “universal declaration of human rights” was made by the French delegation in mid-November.<sup>207</sup> There was suspicion in some quarters; the Soviets charged that the French amendment “tended to make it binding upon all countries, whether they were Members of the United Nations or not”, an interesting allegation given that most delegates would not have described the declaration as “binding” in any event, whatever the title.<sup>208</sup> Cassin’s amendment succeeded, but by an unimpressive margin: 17 to 11, with 10 abstentions.<sup>209</sup>

At the end of November, the Third Committee struck a sub-committee “to examine the totality of the declaration of human rights, i.e. the twenty-nine articles and the preamble, adopted by the Third Committee, solely from the standpoint of arrangement, consistency, uniformity and style and to submit proposals thereon to the Third Committee”. The Sub-Committee was tasked to “set up a language group of five members, one for each of the official languages, to check and secure the exact correspondence of the text in the five official languages”.<sup>210</sup> Composed of eleven Member States (Australia, Belgium, China, Cuba, Ecuador, France, Lebanon, Poland, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States), the Sub-Committee proposed a number of relatively minor changes to the text, of which the most important are the division of what had been a combined article dealing with both torture and slavery into two distinct provisions, and the division of another combined article dealing with equality before the law and the right to an effective remedy. The article dealing with rest and leisure was placed after the provision on the right to work.<sup>211</sup>

The report of the Sub-Committee was considered by the Plenary Third Committee over the course of four meetings, three of them convened on 6 December. Changes to the arrangement of the articles were agreed to, as well as some minor adjustments to the proposals of the Sub-Committee. For the last time, each article was reviewed and voted upon again. The evening session on 6 December went into the early hours of the following day. As a result, the Third Committee adopted the final text of the draft declaration on 7 December 1948. Chile requested a roll-call vote. The result was 29 in favour and none against. There were 8

<sup>206</sup> A/C.3/SR.92, p. 61. Also: A/C.3/SR.163, p. 742; A/C.3/SR.165, p. 760. <sup>207</sup> A/C.3/339, A/C.3/381.

<sup>208</sup> A/C.3/SR.166, p. 775. <sup>209</sup> A/C.3/SR.167, p. 786. <sup>210</sup> A/C.3/SR.166, p. 781. <sup>211</sup> A/C.3/400/Rev.1.

abstentions, 6 of them from the Soviet bloc, which had been expected to vote against the draft.<sup>212</sup> The seventh was from South Africa, and the eighth – a bit of a surprise – from Canada.<sup>213</sup> John Humphrey, a Canadian himself, wrote that the abstention by Canada “shocked everyone, including me . . . Although I knew that the international promotion of human rights had no priority in Canadian foreign policy, it had never occurred to me that the government would carry its indifference to the point of abstaining in such an important vote.”<sup>214</sup>

The following day, the Soviets and their allies submitted a resolution calling for the debate to be postponed until the next session of the General Assembly, in 1949.<sup>215</sup> It was rejected by 26 votes to 6, with 1 abstention.<sup>216</sup> The Soviets also proposed a series of last-minute amendments, giving some indication of where their problems with the declaration lay. They sought recognition of a right to national self-determination, the protection of national minorities with respect to language and institutions and an affirmation of electoral rights without discrimination.<sup>217</sup> These were hardly irreconcilable differences, and the modest list of amendments tends to confirm that the Soviet Union and its associated powers did not quarrel fundamentally with the universal character of the declaration. Like many Member States, the Soviets had a rather long list of improvements that they favoured.<sup>218</sup>

The report adopted by the Third Committee<sup>219</sup> was discussed over four meetings of the Plenary General Assembly on 9 and 10 December 1948, with Herbert Evatt of Australia presiding. Charles Malik, who had chaired the proceedings in the Third Committee, observed that of the twenty-nine articles in the draft declaration adopted by the Third Committee, eighteen had been accepted without any opposition. Of some 1,233 individual votes, 88.08 per cent had been affirmative, 3.73 per cent negative, and 8.19 per cent had been abstentions.<sup>220</sup>

The declaration “might well become the Magna Carta of all mankind”, said Eleanor Roosevelt during the debate in the General Assembly.<sup>221</sup> It was “inspired by a sincere desire for peace”, she added.<sup>222</sup> Charles Malik said the declaration “had been inspired by opposition to the barbarous doctrines of Nazism and fascism and, more directly, by President Roosevelt’s proclamation of the four essential freedoms, as well as by the affirmation of human rights and fundamental freedoms mentioned

<sup>212</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 71.

<sup>213</sup> A/C.3/SR.178, pp. 879–80.

<sup>214</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 71. Canadian Foreign Minister Lester B. Pearson offered an explanation of the Canadian abstention when he spoke in the General Assembly three days later: A/PV.182, pp. 898–900. Documents in the National Archives of Canada indicate a more complex story than what Pearson presented: William A. Schabas, “Canada and the Adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, (1998) 43 McGill Law Journal 403; A. J. Hobbins, “Eleanor Roosevelt, John Humphrey and Canadian Opposition to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: Looking Back on the 50th Anniversary of the UNDHR”, (1998) 52 International Journal 325.

<sup>215</sup> A/C.3/407. <sup>216</sup> A/C.3/SR.179, p. 890. <sup>217</sup> A/784. <sup>218</sup> See, e.g., A/PV.180, pp. 854–7.

<sup>219</sup> A/777. <sup>220</sup> A/PV.180, p. 860. <sup>221</sup> Ibid., p. 862. <sup>222</sup> Ibid., p. 863.

on seven different occasions in the Charter”.<sup>223</sup> Malik said that the document emphasized four principles: non-discrimination, improvement in the living conditions of the masses, the duties of the individual towards society, and the decisive role of the State in guaranteeing human rights and freedoms.<sup>224</sup> René Cassin noted that “the declaration rested on four fundamental pillars: personal rights, relationships between man and his fellow men, public liberties and fundamental political rights, and economic and social rights”. Cassin observed: “The final texts of the declaration welded those elements together, for they implied ties between the individual and society and affirmed the need of an adequate social and international order capable of ensuring that rights were respected; they provided safeguards or hope of safeguards, while at the same time also imposing certain limitations upon mankind.”<sup>225</sup> He explained that “the four pillars of the declaration were all of equal importance, and no hierarchy of rights could be established in the declaration”.<sup>226</sup>

Several speakers discussed the legal nature of the declaration. René Cassin linked it to the binding provisions of the Charter of the United Nations:

Furthermore, while it was less powerful and binding than a convention, it had no less legal value, for it was contained in a resolution of the Assembly which was empowered to make recommendations; it was a development of the Charter which had brought human rights within the scope of positive international law. That being so, it could not be said that the declaration was a purely theoretical instrument. It was only a potential instrument; but that fact in no way detracted from the binding force of the provisions of the Charter.<sup>227</sup>

Count Carton de Wiart, the Belgian delegate, spoke to the same point:

In certain circles, it had been said that the declaration of human rights was a purely academic document. That statement was erroneous, for the declaration not only had an unprecedented moral value, it had also the beginnings of a legal value. The man in the street who appealed to the declaration could support his protests with the authority of the unanimous decision of the peoples and Governments of the United Nations.<sup>228</sup>

Other delegates, many of them visibly uncomfortable with the approach of Cassin and Carton de Wiart, insisted upon describing the declaration as being without any “legally binding character”.<sup>229</sup>

Several Soviet amendments were put to the vote during the evening session of 10 December 1948. Essentially, they were the same proposals that had been defeated in the Third Committee, including the motion to postpone adoption of the declaration until the following year.<sup>230</sup> There were 6 votes cast in favour, with 45 against and 3 abstentions.<sup>231</sup> The only change that was made to the draft adopted by the Third

<sup>223</sup> Ibid., p. 857. <sup>224</sup> Ibid., pp. 859–60. <sup>225</sup> Ibid., p. 865. <sup>226</sup> Ibid., p. 866. <sup>227</sup> Ibid., p. 866.

<sup>228</sup> A/PV.181, p. 879.

<sup>229</sup> Australia: A/PV.181, p. 876; Mexico: A/PV.181, p. 886; New Zealand: A/PV.181, p. 888.

<sup>230</sup> A/784; A/785/Rev.2. <sup>231</sup> A/PV.183, pp. 930–2.

Committee was deletion of an additional article, then referred to as article 3, concerning application of the declaration in trust and non-self-governing territories. On a proposal from the United Kingdom, the same idea was placed as the second paragraph of article 2: "Furthermore, no distinction shall be made on the basis of the political, jurisdictional or international status of the country or territory to which a person belongs, whether it be independent, Trust, Non-Self-Governing or under any other limitation of sovereignty."<sup>232</sup> It was adopted by 29 votes to 17, with 10 abstentions.<sup>233</sup> A convenient consequence was the elimination of one article, making the total a more elegant thirty and occasioning a renumbering of the entire document.

Poland insisted upon a separate vote on each paragraph in the Preamble and on each article. The results varied slightly, depending upon the provision in question, but there was always a large majority in favour.<sup>234</sup> Finally, the President put the document as a whole to a vote by roll-call vote. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights was adopted by 48 votes, with 8 abstentions:

In favour: Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Siam (Thailand), Sweden, Syria, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Abstaining: Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Ukrainian SSR, Union of South Africa, USSR, Yugoslavia.<sup>235</sup>

The vote was followed by adoption of four resolutions on related topics: the right of petition, the fate of minorities, publicity to be given to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights<sup>236</sup> and preparation of a draft covenant on human rights and draft measures of implementation.

The head of the Soviet delegation, Andrei Vyshinsky, presented a lengthy explanation for the abstention by the Soviet Union.<sup>237</sup> The allies of the Soviets formulated similar declarations in the General Assembly.<sup>238</sup> South Africa had made the reasons for its opposition to the Declaration well known in the Third Committee, but went a step further when it expressed its concern about the binding nature of the instrument:

<sup>232</sup> A/778/Rev.1. <sup>233</sup> A/PV.183, p. 932. <sup>234</sup> Ibid., pp. 932–3. <sup>235</sup> Ibid., p. 933.

<sup>236</sup> Daniel Helle and Maarit Kohonen, "Publicity for the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: General Assembly Resolution 217D(III)", in G. Alfredsson and A. Eide, eds., The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, The Hague, Boston, London: Martinus Nijhoff, 1999, pp. 725–41, 30–22.

<sup>237</sup> A/PV.183, pp. 923–9.

<sup>238</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, pp. 72–3.

[T]he fact that the declaration, although it was not in the nature of an international convention, would none the less impose certain obligations on Member States if it were accepted by the General Assembly, as it would probably be interpreted as an authoritative definition of fundamental rights and freedoms which had been left undefined in the Charter. If such an interpretation were accepted, those Member States who voted for the draft declaration would be bound in the same manner as if they had signed a convention embodying those principles, with the difference however that, in the case of a convention, the obligations undertaken would be clearly defined, whereas in the declaration there were set out a number of human rights which were not only very loosely stated but which few States would be prepared to undertake as a legal obligation.<sup>239</sup>

Though opposed to the Declaration, South Africa was confirming the view taken by Cassin and rejecting the thesis of many others who dismissed the instrument as “non-binding”. Saudi Arabia offered no explanation for its abstention. Humphrey assumed this was because of concern about article 18, which recognized the right to change one’s religion.<sup>240</sup>

Two years later, on 4 December 1950, the United Nations General Assembly decided that 10 December should be celebrated as “Human Rights Day”.

The General Assembly

Considering that on 10 December 1948 the General Assembly proclaimed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations,

Considering that the Declaration marks a distinct forward step in the march of human progress,

Considering that the anniversary of this event should be appropriately celebrated in all countries as part of a common effort to bring the Declaration to the attention of the peoples of the world,

Expressing its appreciation to all those countries Members or non members of the United Nations which have already celebrated this anniversary,

1. Invites all States and interested organizations to adopt 10 December of each year as Human Rights Day, to observe this day to celebrate the proclamation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights by the General Assembly on 10 December 1948, and to exert increasing efforts in this field of human progress.
2. Invites all States to report annually through the Secretary-General concerning the observance of Human Rights Day.<sup>241</sup>

This has been celebrated on 10 December ever since, with conferences, concerts, the award of prizes and the issuance of postage stamps.

<sup>239</sup> A/PV.182, p. 910.

<sup>240</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 73. Also: Susan Waltz, “Universal Human Rights: The Contribution of Muslim States”, (2004) 26 Human Rights Quarterly 799, at pp. 814–17.

<sup>241</sup> GA Res. 423(V).

The legal significance of the Universal Declaration

In contrast with at the time of its adoption, few people now would contest the enormous importance of the Universal Declaration. Nevertheless, the precise legal significance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was uncertain on the day of its adoption and remains so today. John Humphrey had “always thought that the Declaration would be the most important part of the international bill of rights”. Although “not technically binding”, it “would apply to all states and would have the great authority of the United Nations behind it”, he wrote; “It would also be a catalyst of national and international legislation.”<sup>242</sup> Egon Schwelb explained that “a complete denial of the legal relevance of the Universal Declaration does not do justice to a document which was adopted – without a dissenting vote – by the governments forming the most representative body of the international community”.<sup>243</sup>

Other contemporary observers were less enthusiastic. Hersch Lauterpacht responded very harshly to the Declaration’s adoption, dismissing entirely its claim to any legal status: “Not being a legal instrument, the Declaration would appear to be outside international law. Its provisions cannot properly be the subject-matter of legal interpretation. There is little meaning in attempting to elucidate, by reference to accepted canons of construction and to preparatory work, the extent of an obligation which is binding only in the sphere of conscience.”<sup>244</sup> Humphrey was so angry at Lauterpacht’s report to the International Law Association that he allowed his own membership in the organization to lapse. But he wrote much later that it was “only fair” to note that Lauterpacht’s comments were made “shortly after the adoption of the Declaration, before it began to have any real impact and before the subtle processes began to work which would make it part of the customary law of nations”.<sup>245</sup> Whatever the view taken from the perspective of 1948, however, the legal significance of the Declaration cannot today be reduced to an analysis of the understanding of those who drafted it. The sixty-five years that have followed its adoption establish and confirm its role as a source of legal obligation.

From the time of its adoption, the Declaration was invoked together with the Charter of the United Nations as an authoritative statement of the purposes and principles of the organization. Even before the third session was completed, the General Assembly called upon South Africa to enter into discussions with India and

<sup>242</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 64.

<sup>243</sup> Egon Schwelb, “The Influence of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights on International and National Law”, (1959) 53 Proceedings of the American Society of International Law 217, at p. 218.

<sup>244</sup> Hersch Lauterpacht, “The Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, (1948) 25 British Yearbook of International Law 354, at p. 369. Along similar lines, Josef L. Kunz, “The United Nations Declaration of Human Rights”, (1949) 43 American Journal of International Law 316, at p. 321: “it is not law”.

<sup>245</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 74.

Pakistan about its treatment of persons of Indian origin, “taking into consideration the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration of Human Rights”.<sup>246</sup> In Resolution 290(IV), “Essentials of Peace”, adopted the following year, noting that the Charter “lays down basic principles for an enduring peace”, the General Assembly called upon all nations “[t]o promote, in recognition of the paramount importance of preserving the dignity and worth of the human person, full freedom for the peaceful expression of political opposition, full opportunity for the exercise of religious freedom and full respect for all the other fundamental rights expressed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”.<sup>247</sup> In 1950, it was invoked in the first preambular paragraph of a resolution on freedom of information.<sup>248</sup> By 1960, the language of the Assembly had become quite peremptory: “All States shall observe faithfully and strictly the provisions of the . . . Universal Declaration of Human Rights.”<sup>249</sup> A 1969 study found the Declaration had been cited in seventy-five resolutions of the General Assembly, that it had been cited at least once in every session, and at least four times in every session from the fifteenth to the twenty-first, the only exception being the non-voting nineteenth session.<sup>250</sup>

The Proclamation of Tehran, adopted by the United Nations International Conference on Human Rights in 1968, said that the Universal Declaration “states a common understanding of the peoples of the world concerning the inalienable and inviolable rights of all members of the human family and constitutes an obligation for the members of the international community”.<sup>251</sup> The Vienna Declaration and Plan of Action, adopted in 1993, seems slightly more nuanced, saying the Declaration was “the source of inspiration and has been the basis for the United Nations in making advances in standard setting as contained in the existing international human rights instruments”. But it also reaffirms “commitment to the purposes and principles contained in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”.<sup>252</sup>

The Universal Declaration is also looked to as the authoritative statement of international standards by regional organizations. Adopted in November 1950, the European Convention on Human Rights acknowledges the significance of the Declaration in its preamble. It was invoked in the Final Communique of the Bandung Conference of 1955. The Universal Declaration is also cited in the principal treaties of the Inter-American and African human rights bodies. It is cited in the main instruments of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in

<sup>246</sup> “Treatment of People of Indian Origin in the Union of South Africa”, GA Res. 265(III), OP 1.

<sup>247</sup> “Essentials of Peace”, GA Res. 290(IV), OP 6.

<sup>248</sup> “Freedom of Information: Interference with Radio Signals”, GA Res. 424(V), PP 1.

<sup>249</sup> “Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries”, GA Res. 1514(XV), OP 7.

<sup>250</sup> Samuel A. Bleicher, “The Legal Significance of Re-Citation of General Assembly Resolutions”, (1969) 63 American Journal of International Law 444, at p. 463.

<sup>251</sup> A/CONF.32/41, para. 2. <sup>252</sup> A/CONF.157/23, Preamble.

Europe. Indeed, whether treaties fall inside or outside the United Nations system, if they concern human rights, it is almost inevitable that they refer to the Universal Declaration in the preamble.

“Binding” or “non-binding”?

It is today rather trite to state that the Universal Declaration is “not binding”, or that it is “non-binding law”. The idea that there is law that is not “binding” is a bit of a paradox. The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary defines law as a “rule of conduct imposed by security authority”, adding that it is a “body of rules, whether formally enacted or customary, which a particular State or community recognizes as governing the actions of its subjects or members and which it may enforce by imposing penalties”. Lexicographers would be puzzled at the suggestion that a distinction should be made between law that is binding and that which is not. Law is, by nature, “binding”. That which is not binding is not law. Probably, when reference is made to “non-binding law”, what is actually intended is an assessment of the enforceability of the law. From that perspective, it is not unreasonable to contend that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights consists of legal norms that are difficult to enforce, at least directly.

During the drafting of the Universal Declaration, several diplomats stated that it would not be a source of binding obligations. But contrary views were also expressed. René Cassin frequently linked the Declaration to the Charter of the United Nations, viewing its adoption as the completion of a project left unfinished at San Francisco. The special nature of the Declaration can be seen particularly in the discussions that took place in 1948, once it had been agreed to proceed with two or three distinct instruments, but not at the same pace. Over objections from some States, something that proves the salience of the issue, first the Commission on Human Rights, then the Economic and Social Council and finally the General Assembly agreed to go ahead with adoption of a declaration, although the draft covenant would wait for another day. It was widely believed that the covenant’s completion would take only another year. The result might have been different had the reality of a nearly twenty-year process been contemplated at the time. Still, if the Universal Declaration was without significance in the absence of a covenant, why did the Assembly proceed to its adoption? Surely it must have crossed the minds of those engaged in the process that the Declaration might be the end of the exercise, rather than the beginning.

Hersch Lauterpacht spoke directly to the point in an article in the 1948 British Yearbook of International Law. He lamented what he described as a “general repudiation of the idea that the Declaration imposed upon them a legal obligation to respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms which it proclaimed”.<sup>253</sup> Lauterpacht referred to statements in the General Assembly by France and Belgium, but noted that even these delegations had been equivocal in their assertions about the Declaration’s legally binding character. He also noted the position taken by Canada, which abstained in the final vote in the Third Committee out of concern that the national government was unable to bind the constituent provinces of the country because of a constitutional division of powers.<sup>254</sup>

Earlier, Lauterpacht had taken the position that the Charter of the United Nations itself imposed legal obligations in the area of human rights, but he was sceptical about proceeding with adoption of the Universal Declaration in the absence of a corresponding treaty. Commenting on the Universal Declaration after its adoption, he wrote:

The language of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the circumstances and the reasons of its adoption, and, above all, the clearly and emphatically expressed intention of the states Members of the United Nations who voted for the Resolution of the General Assembly, show clearly that the Declaration is not by its nature and by the intention of its parties a legal document imposing legal obligations.<sup>255</sup>

The corollary of the proposition that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is “not binding” is the assertion that human rights treaties – the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the various thematic treaties in the United Nations system dealing with racial discrimination, discrimination against women, torture, the rights of the child, migrant workers, the disabled and enforced disappearance – are, by contrast, “binding” legal instruments. The reality is more complex. The so-called “binding” treaties have modest enforcement mechanisms at best, although they are somewhat superior in this respect to the Universal Declaration. States Parties make broad reservations to the treaties. Very often, they fail to ensure direct application of the norms within their domestic legal order. They dispute the right of the “treaty bodies” charged with implementation to pronounce on the legality of such reservations. States also contest the authority of the treaty bodies to make enforceable orders. In theory, one State might sue another at the International Court of Justice for breach of one of these treaties. This has been tried rarely, with very limited results.<sup>256</sup>

<sup>253</sup> Hersch Lauterpacht, “The Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, (1948) 25 British Yearbook of International Law 354, at p. 356. On Lauterpacht’s critique, see: Jochen von Bernstorff, “The Changing Fortunes of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: Genesis and Symbolic Dimensions of the Turn to Rights in International Law”, (2008) 19 European Journal of International Law 903.

<sup>254</sup> Hersch Lauterpacht, “The Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, (1948) 25 British Yearbook of International Law 354, at pp. 362–3.

<sup>255</sup> Ibid., at p. 365.

<sup>256</sup> Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda), Judgment, [2005] ICJ Reports 168, paras. 217–19. But see: Application of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (Georgia v. Russian Federation), Preliminary Objections, 1 April 2011.

In practice, the human rights treaties mainly play a declaratory and hortatory role. To that extent, they do not differ very much from the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Perhaps the most significant distinction of the Declaration is the broad and vague scope of its provisions, in marked contrast with the much more detailed terms of the treaties. This is actually an advantage for the Universal Declaration, which can evolve and develop more easily. For example, in article 3, the Universal Declaration proclaims the right to life without exception, aside from the general limitation found in article 29(2). When the right to life is set out in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, on the other hand, it is shrouded in the antiquated language of capital punishment, which is presented as an exception to the general principle. Some States that still apply the death penalty actually invoke the Covenant in claiming that capital punishment is not prohibited by international law. Along similar lines, the Convention Against Torture distinguishes between torture as such and its analogue, the phenomenon of cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment. States have exploited the distinctions between the two, to some success. Under the Convention Against Torture, the prohibition of refoulement applies only to torture and not to cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment. We have no such difficulties with the Universal Declaration.<sup>257</sup>

Historically, the strength of the conventions has been their mechanisms of implementation. Despite shortcomings, these provide some form of individual petition mechanism for victims, as well as a monitoring function when States Parties present their periodic reports. The advent of Universal Periodic Review by the Human Rights Council, in 2006, has established something rather similar in the case of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Indeed, the Universal Periodic Review is broader than the reporting scheme for the treaties precisely because of its universality. China, which has not ratified the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, must report to the Human Rights Council on its compliance with civil and political rights, including issues relating to capital punishment.<sup>258</sup> The United States, which has not ratified the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, accounts for its conduct in areas of health care, housing and education to the Human Rights Council.<sup>259</sup> The legal foundation, in both cases, is the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

A pedant might object that, whereas the presentation of reports under the human rights conventions is a legal obligation, this is not the case for Universal Periodic

<sup>257</sup> Aoife Duffy, "Expulsion to Face Torture? Non-refoulement in International Law", (2008) 20 International Journal of Refugee Law 373, at p. 380.

<sup>258</sup> "China, National Report to the Human Rights Council, Universal Periodic Review", UN Doc. A/HRC/WG.6/4/CHN/1 (10 November 2008).

<sup>259</sup> "United States of America, National Report to the Human Rights Council, Universal Periodic Review", UN Doc. A/HRC/WG.6/9/USA/1.

Review, for which the requirement is set out in a resolution of the Human Rights Council. But, over the years 2008 to 2011, every Member State of the United Nations complied with the “non-binding” terms of the Human Rights Council resolution and participated in the Universal Periodic Review process. This is more than can be said for the reporting obligations imposed by the treaties, which have been frequently ignored, without apparent consequence other than some rather ephemeral and obscure public shame. The voluntary reporting to the Human Rights Council on compliance with the “non-binding” standard of the Declaration looks in some ways to be more robust and effective than the so-called “binding” obligations imposed by human rights treaties.

The debate about “binding” and “non-binding” highlights the fact that the conventions and covenants are addressed to States and to States alone. They can only be “binding” upon those who ratify them. The Universal Declaration, on the other hand, has a much broader audience. It is addressed not only to States but also to individuals, to organizations, to entities and to corporations. As the Preamble affirms, it is “a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations” that speaks to “every individual and every organ of society”. There is a useful, although admittedly isolated, reference in a Security Council resolution that highlights the point. In 1972, the Council referred to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as a legal standard to be respected in the area of labour rights in South-West Africa. Condemning “the recent repressive measures against African labourers in Namibia”, Security Council resolution 310(1972) calls “upon all States whose nationals and corporations are operating in Namibia . . . to use all available means to ensure that such nationals and corporations conform in their policies of hiring Namibian workers to the basic provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”. States were asked to report to the Secretary-General, and with rare exceptions they said they had no involvement with the South African regime. The United States answer was as follows:

In March 1972, the Government of the United States of America sent to some 40 American business firms interested in Namibian affairs the text of Security Council resolution 310 (1972), as well as the text of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights specified in paragraph 5 of that resolution. The letter forwarding those documents stated that the United States supported resolution 310(1972) and requested the co-operation of the companies in doing everything possible to ensure that any operations in Namibia in which they had an interest were fully consonant with the Declaration.<sup>260</sup>

Individuals and corporations may not be “bound” by the Universal Declaration in the sense they are treaties, but we are obliged to employ it as a guide to our lives and our activities.

<sup>260</sup> S/10752, Annex, p. 14. See also: Egon Schwelb, “An Instance of Enforcing the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: Action by the Security Council”, (1973) 22 International and Comparative Law Quarterly 161, at p. 162.

Asserting that there is no distinction in terms of legal effect between the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the treaties is a heretical Rubicon that this essay does not propose to cross, although with some reluctance. Nevertheless, using the notions of “non-binding” and “binding” as the distinguishing criterion in assessments of the legal nature of the Universal Declaration and the human rights treaties misses all of the subtlety in the relationship. Above all, it understates the weakness of the treaty systems and the potency of the Universal Declaration.

Sources of the Declaration's legal force

In 1948, Cassin considered that the Universal Declaration should not be read in isolation but rather together with the human rights clauses of the Charter of the United Nations. Hersch Lauterpacht disagreed, stating: “It is unlikely that any tribunal or other authority administering international law would accept a suggestion of that kind.”<sup>261</sup> Yet, less than two decades later, in a legendary dissent in one of the South-West Africa cases before the International Court of Justice, Judge Tanaka spoke of the Universal Declaration which, “although not binding in itself, constitute[s] evidence of the interpretation and application of the relevant Charter provisions”.<sup>262</sup> Linking the Declaration to the Charter in this way has the effect of incorporating it within treaty law.

More common, however, is the theory that the Universal Declaration constitutes a codification of customary international law. John Humphrey claimed he subscribed to the view as early as the adoption of the Declaration, saying he could not “remember anyone in 1948 who shared my views”.<sup>263</sup> There is today much authority for the proposition that much if not all of the Declaration constitutes a codification of customary international law.<sup>264</sup> Indeed, it is a relatively uncontroversial proposition although there is little discussion about the provisions of the Declaration that are not to be considered customary. Vice-President Ammoun of the International Court of Justice wrote that, although “the affirmations of the Declaration are not binding qua international convention . . . , they can bind States on the basis of custom within the meaning of paragraph 1(b) of [Article 38 of the Statute of the Court] . . . because they constituted a codification of customary law . . .

<sup>261</sup> Hersch Lauterpacht, “The Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, (1948) 25 British Yearbook of International Law 354, at p. 365.

<sup>262</sup> South West Africa (Second Phase), Judgment, [1966] ICJ Reports 6, p. 293 (Dissenting Opinion of Judge Tanaka).

<sup>263</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 65.

<sup>264</sup> Hurst Hannum, “The Status of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in National and International Law”, (1995) 25 Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law 287, at p. 340.

or because they have acquired the force of custom through a general practice accepted as law”.<sup>265</sup> Perhaps inspired by these remarks, the Court as a whole invoked the Universal Declaration as a normative standard in assessing Iran’s compliance with international law following the hostage-taking at the United States embassy: “Wrongfully to deprive human beings of their freedom and to subject them to physical constraint in conditions of hardship is in itself manifestly incompatible with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as with the fundamental principles enunciated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.”<sup>266</sup>

In addition to treaties and customary law, article 38(1)(c) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice lists “general principles of law recognized by civilized nations” as sources of international legal norms. The notion is often confused with custom but its meaning is distinct. There is some support for the view that the Universal Declaration, drafted with frequent reference to national constitutional provisions and then used as a basis for new texts of this nature, is a part of international law as a statement of “general principles”. Hersch Lauterpacht expressed such an assessment: “The Declaration gives expression to what, in the fullness of time, ought to become principles of law generally recognized and acted upon by states Members of the United Nations.”<sup>267</sup> Theodor Meron has also supported the notion.<sup>268</sup>

Occasionally, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights has been dismissed on the grounds that, despite its name, it is not in fact universal. In 1997, Malaysian Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad proposed that the Declaration be reviewed in light of the fact that the 1948 General Assembly was not representative.<sup>269</sup> But when Malaysia submitted its report to the Council in 2008, it did not take issue with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as a basis for the review.<sup>270</sup> Some parts of the world – notably Africa with only four members, Egypt, Ethiopia, Liberia and South Africa – were grotesquely underrepresented when the Declaration was adopted.<sup>271</sup> Yet Africa affirmed the centrality of the Declaration in the preamble of the African Charter of Human and Peoples’ Rights, which was

<sup>265</sup> Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (South West Africa) Notwithstanding Security Council Resolution 276 (1970), [1971] ICJ Reports 16, p. 76 (Separate Opinion of Vice-President Ammoun).

<sup>266</sup> United States Diplomatic and Consular Staff in Tehran, Judgment, [1980] ICJ Reports 3, para. 91.

<sup>267</sup> Hersch Lauterpacht, “The Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, (1948) 25 British Yearbook of International Law 354, at p. 367.

<sup>268</sup> Theodor Meron, Human Rights and Humanitarian Norms as Customary Law, Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1989, p. 88.

<sup>269</sup> Karin Mickelson, “How Universal is the Universal Declaration?”, (1998) 47 University of New Brunswick Law Journal 19, at p. 21.

<sup>270</sup> A/HRC/WG.6/4/MYS/1/Rev.1.

<sup>271</sup> Kéba M’baye, Les droits de l’homme en Afrique, Paris: Pedone, 1992, p. 41.

adopted in 1981 and entered into force in 1986, and which has been ratified by every State on the continent.<sup>272</sup>

One sceptic has cautioned that it is “easy to overstate the global and multicultural origins of the Universal Declaration”.<sup>273</sup> The flaw in such critiques is a failure to consider the repeated affirmation of the universality of the Declaration since 1948. Thus, while the “second world” States abstained in 1948, they later endorsed the Universal Declaration in the Helsinki Final Act of 1975. Another abstainer in the 1948 vote, Saudi Arabia,<sup>274</sup> boasted recently that it “was among the first States to participate in the drafting of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”.<sup>275</sup> The racist South Africa that abstained in 1948 is no longer the same country. Speaking to the United Nations General Assembly in 1998, then-President Nelson Mandela said:

Born in the aftermath of the defeat of the Nazi and fascist crime against humanity, this Declaration held high the hope that all our societies would, in future, be built on the foundations of the glorious vision spelt out in each of its clauses. For those who had to fight for their emancipation, such as ourselves who, with your help, had to free ourselves from the criminal apartheid system, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights served as the vindication of the justice of our cause.

An important dimension of the enforceability of human rights is a consequence of the direct implementation of the international instruments within domestic legislation. In some States, this is an automatic consequence of ratification of a treaty. Here, the pattern is very uneven. It does not seem that the Universal Declaration ever enjoys this sort of automatic incorporation into domestic law, precisely because it is not a treaty. However, there are some examples of the Universal Declaration being made part of national legislation by specific reference to it in a constitution or in legislation. The Special Statute for Trieste, adopted in 1954, directly incorporated the Universal Declaration into national law.<sup>276</sup> The example was followed subsequently by many other countries, particularly in Africa. In many legal systems, the Universal Declaration is cited in legal proceedings as a persuasive guide to the interpretation and application of human rights norms and principles.

Finally, there are some parts of the planet that the human rights treaties of the United Nations cannot reach, as a consequence of political exigencies. The best example might be Taiwan, a territory that is essentially ignored by the United Nations human rights mechanisms. The Republic of China is not a United

<sup>272</sup> African Charter of Human and Peoples’ Rights, (1986) 1520 UNTS 217.

<sup>273</sup> Samuel Moyn, The Last Utopia, Human Rights in History, Cambridge, MA and London: Belknap Press, 2010, p. 66.

<sup>274</sup> A/PV.183, p. 933. <sup>275</sup> A/HRC/WG.6/4/SAU/1, para. 19.

<sup>276</sup> Egon Schwelb, “The Influence of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights on International and National Law”, (1959) 53 Proceedings of the American Society of International Law 217, at p. 218

Nations Member State and cannot therefore ratify or accede to most of the major human rights treaties. But nobody would challenge the application of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights to its territory. Similar obligations can be made with respect to a number of quasi-States and analogous entities, such as Transnistria, Nagorno-Karabakh, Kosovo and Abkhazia.

As has already been noted, the Universal Declaration is listed as one of the main normative bases for the Universal Periodic Review conducted by the United Nations Human Rights Council since 2008. There have been only a limited number of references to provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in the course of the Universal Periodic Review, although in a very general sense the process does not focus on precise legal obligations set out in international instruments. Rather, it constitutes a general assessment of compliance with contemporary human rights standards, a function for which the Universal Declaration is especially well suited. The report of the United States to the Human Rights Council declares:

The fundamental truth which grounds the principles of government enshrined in our Constitution – that each person is created with equal value from which flows inalienable rights – is not an exclusively American truth; it is a universal one. It is the truth that anchors the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, it is the truth that underpins the legitimate purposes and obligations not just of our government, but of all governments.<sup>277</sup>

In its report to the Human Rights Council, Singapore stated that it “respect[s] the fundamental human rights enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”<sup>278</sup> and that it “fully subscribes to the principles enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. We respect the principle of the universality of human rights and consider human rights to be indivisible, with economic, social and cultural rights as important as civil and political rights.”<sup>279</sup> Of course, Singapore takes a narrow view of the scope of the Declaration, and more generally of international human rights law, something reflected in its exceedingly modest level of ratification of international treaties. According to Singapore, “[t]he manner in which all rights are attained and implemented must nevertheless take cognizance of specific national circumstances and aspirations”.<sup>280</sup> Moreover, “[a]s recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, individual rights must be subject to legal limits in order to protect the rights of others, as well as to maintain public order and general welfare”.<sup>281</sup>

Occasionally, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights has been invoked in the Human Rights Council by States as a normative standard that others are bound to apply. For example, during examination of the Universal Periodic Report of Saudi Arabia, Canada urged that it “cease application of torture, other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and corporal punishment of prisoners, in accordance with article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international human rights treaties to which it is a party”.<sup>282</sup> When it expressed concerns about treatment of participants in post-election protests, Germany spoke of Iran’s “obligation to respect human rights, enshrined in the Universal Declaration”.<sup>283</sup>

<sup>277</sup> A/HRC/WG.6/9/USA/1, para. 80. <sup>278</sup> A/HRC/WG.6/11/SGP/1, para. 20. <sup>279</sup> Ibid., para. 33.

<sup>280</sup> Ibid., para. 33. <sup>281</sup> Ibid., para. 110.

States have also invoked the Universal Declaration in defence against criticisms of their human rights performance, insisting that their policies are consistent with the Declaration. Cameroon rejected a recommendation concerning the decriminalization of homosexuality saying that this was not “contrary to the provisions of article 12 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”,<sup>284</sup> which protects the right to privacy. Cameroon also invoked article 26(2) as justification for limitations on human rights (this is a small error in the record; the reference should be to article 29(2)).<sup>285</sup> In its report to the Human Rights Council, Russia said that it had “become a party to the following cardinal international human rights instruments: the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”.<sup>286</sup>

Concluding remarks

Today, an instrument like the Universal Declaration of Human Rights would be negotiated differently. Greater flexibility and candour among delegates would be encouraged by a more minimalist documentary record. States often present their views in “non-papers”, which do not require document numbers and leave a less visible trace. Moreover, there is little, if any, voting, as texts are negotiated. Little by little, through compromise and concession, a consensus emerges. Less time is spent on procedural matters, something that consumed a substantial amount of time and energy in 1947 and 1948. At that time, there were quarrels about the order in which amendments would be voted, for example. That would seem strange to a modern-day negotiator, as instruments are generally adopted “by general agreement” – which is to say, by consensus. At the present time, the conventional wisdom is that piecemeal voting leads to unpredictable and sometimes incoherent results. But if that is really the case, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights does not confirm such a thesis. Perhaps an experienced diplomat will review the documents in this collection and speculate on whether the result would have been different and improved had the more collegial consensus-based approach been adopted.

<sup>282</sup> A/HRC/11/23, para. 44. <sup>283</sup> A/HRC/14/12, para. 33.

<sup>284</sup> A/HRC/11/37, para. 382. According to the Human Rights Committee, interpreting provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights that share a common ancestry with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the term “sex” as it appears in enumerations of grounds of prohibited discrimination is to include “sexual orientation”: Toonen v. Australia UN Doc. CCPR/C/50/D/488/1992 (1994), para. 8.7. For a contrary view: Sharon Yecies, “Sexual Orientation, Discrimination, and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, (2010–11) 11 Chicago Journal of International Law 789.

<sup>285</sup> A/HRC/11/37, para 383. <sup>286</sup> A/HRC/WG.6/4/RUS/1, para. 6.

In 1948, the United Nations was probably more bilingual than it is today. When the Universal Declaration was being drafted, more attention was given to the French text than would be the case with similar negotiations held in modern times. In the twenty-first century, treaties that will have several official-language versions are negotiated essentially on the basis of English-language texts. Preparation of the versions in the other official languages is viewed as a technical matter, a problem of translation rather than an effort to develop a shared understanding in two or more languages. At many points in the debates in 1947 and 1948, delegates commented specifically upon the wording of the French version of a given provision. Both Eleanor Roosevelt and John Humphrey were comfortable in the French language. Mary Ann Glendon reports on a session of the Nuclear Commission on Human Rights where René Cassin spoke for fifteen or twenty minutes without a pause for translation. Apparently, “the interpreter broke down in tears and fled the room, leaving Mrs. Roosevelt, who fortunately was fluent in French, to summarize his remarks as best she could”.<sup>287</sup> Humphrey wrote that “because I was a Canadian who spoke their language fluently, my relations with the French were always very close. I think they sometimes forgot that I was not French.”<sup>288</sup>

Roosevelt and Humphrey were not the only extraordinary individuals to work on the project. René Cassin later won the Nobel Peace Prize in acknowledgement of his important contribution. Chang, Malik and Romulo also belong among the Declaration’s primary architects. This collection of documents shows, however, that many other individuals participated in significant ways. As Humphrey was to write, there was no Jefferson. The Declaration’s great strength was the collective dimension of its authorship.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights was not the only important document to emerge in this dynamic period of international lawmaking. The Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide was also adopted at the Third Session of the General Assembly, along with a resolution calling for work to begin on the establishment of a permanent international criminal court.<sup>289</sup> Eight months later saw the adoption of the four Geneva Conventions on the protection of victims of armed conflict. In 1951, the Convention on the Status of Refugees was completed. Then, the progress of human rights seemed to falter. Those who adopted the Declaration in 1948 believed that the covenant would soon be finalized, probably at the 1949 session of the General Assembly. But its adoption took another seventeen years. Yet another decade passed for entry into force of what had become two covenants, a development that weakened the universality and indivisibility of the message given by the Universal Declaration. The momentum revived in the 1970s and 1980s, a fact that has led some historians to underestimate the seminal importance of the immediate post-War period.<sup>290</sup>

<sup>287</sup> Mary Ann Glendon, A World Made New, Eleanor Roosevelt and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, New York: Random House, 2001, p. 31.

<sup>288</sup> John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 59.

<sup>289</sup> Christopher C. Joyner, “Redressing Impunity for Human Rights Violations: The Universal Declaration and the Search for Accountability”, (1998) 26 Denver Journal of International Law and Policy 591.

The Declaration was created by special individuals and at a special moment in history. It is difficult to imagine the document's success in the absence of Roosevelt, Cassin, Humphrey and the others. But this brilliant group would almost surely have failed were the exercise to have taken place a decade later. Even in 1948, the dark clouds of the Cold War had descended upon the United Nations after a brief period of euphoria following the defeat of Nazi Germany.<sup>291</sup> The changing dynamics, as nostalgia for wartime alliance was gradually replaced with East–West tension, can often be seen in the travaux. The agreement reached on 10 December is all the more remarkable considering the sharp differences in outlook and philosophy that already prevailed.

The legacy of those who drafted the Declaration is a document that speaks to us today with an eloquence that is undiminished by age. At the time of the thirtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration, in 1978, Sean MacBride said that “the precepts of the [U]niversal Declaration are immutable and will remain valid forever: the right to life, freedom from torture, the right to be free from arbitrary arrest and detention and other such rights know no bounds of time”.<sup>292</sup> Perhaps – although it may not be the “last utopia”.<sup>293</sup> At some point in time, new texts may replace it as the benchmark of universal values, although that is unlikely to occur for many decades. Even then, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights will remain a key indicator of humanity's “common standard of achievement” at a certain stage in history.

<sup>290</sup> Samuel Moyn, The Last Utopia, Human Rights in History, Cambridge, MA and London: Belknap Press, 2010.

<sup>291</sup> Ashild Samnøy, “The Origins of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, in G. Alfredsson and A. Eide, eds., The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, The Hague, Boston, London: Martinus Nijhoff, 1999, pp. 3–22, at pp. 20–1.

<sup>292</sup> Cited in Hilary Charlesworth, “The Mid-Life Crisis of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”, (1998) 55 Washington and Lee Law Review 781, at p. 796.

<sup>293</sup> Samuel Moyn, The Last Utopia, Human Rights in History, Cambridge, MA and London: Belknap Press, 2010.

The Documents

PC/EX/113/Rev.1<sup>1</sup>

12 November 1945

Report by the Executive Committee to the Preparatory Commission of the United Nations<sup>2</sup>

...

[17]

Part III. Committee Reports and Supplementary Papers

...

[46]

...

Chapter III. The Economic and Social Council

...

[50]

...

Section 4. Organization of the Economic and Social Council

...

[51]

...

Commission on Human Rights

16. In general the functions of the Commission would be to assist the Council to carry out its responsibility under the Charter to promote human rights. The studies and recommendations of the Commission would encourage the acceptance of higher standards in this field and help to check and eliminate discrimination and other abuses.

[52]

<sup>1</sup> Published for the Preparatory Commission of the United Nations by His Majesty's Stationery Office, London, November 1945.

<sup>2</sup> The Preparatory Commission was established pursuant to Interim Arrangements adopted on 26 June 1945 at the same time as the Charter of the United Nations. It was composed of one representative of each signatory of the Charter. The Preparatory Commission was charged with making necessary arrangements between the signing of the Charter and the convening of the first sessions of the principal organs of the United Nations. Its first meeting was held on 27 June 1945, at which time responsibility was delegated to the Executive Committee. The full Preparatory Commission met again in London from 24 November to 24 December 1945.

17. In particular the work of the Commission might be directed towards the following objects:

- (a) formulation of an international bill of rights;
- (b) formulation of recommendations for an international declaration or convention on such matters as civil liberties, status of women, freedom of information;
- (c) protection of minorities;
- (d) prevention of discrimination on grounds of race, sex, language, or religion;
- (e) any matters within the field of human rights considered likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations.

18. Studies, recommendations and provision of information and other services would be made at the request of the General Assembly, or of the Economic and Social Council, whether on its own initiative or at the request of the Security Council or of the Trusteeship Council.

...

PC/20<sup>3</sup>

23 December 1945

Report of the Preparatory Commission of the United Nations

...

[28]

Chapter III. The Economic and Social Council

...

[28]

...

Section 4. Considerations and Recommendations Concerning the Organization of the Economic and Social Council

...

[36]

Commission on Human Rights

15. In general the functions of the Commission would be to assist the Council to carry out its responsibility under the Charter to promote human rights. The studies and recommendations of the Commission would encourage the acceptance of higher standards in this field and help to check and eliminate discrimination and other abuses.

<sup>3</sup> Published for the Preparatory Commission of the United Nations by His Majesty's Stationery Office, London, 1946.

16. In particular the work of the Commission might be directed towards the following objects:

- (a) formulation of an international bill of rights;
- (b) formulation of recommendations for an international declaration or convention on such matters as civil liberties, status of women, freedom of information;
- (c) protection of minorities;
- (d) prevention of discrimination on grounds of race, sex, language, or religion; and
- (e) any matters within the field of human rights considered likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations.

17. Studies and recommendations would be made and information and other service provided at the request of the General Assembly, or of the Economic and Social Council, whether on its own initiative or at the request of the Security Council or of the Trusteeship Council.

...

A/3

5 January 1946

Supplementary List of Items for Inclusion in the Agenda of the First Part of the First Session of the General Assembly<sup>4</sup>

Memorandum by the Executive Secretary

1. Before the expiry of the time-limit laid down in Supplementary Rule E of the Supplementary Provisional Rules of Procedure for the First Session of the General Assembly (midnight on Friday, 4 January), I received three communications: one from the United Kingdom Delegation, one from the Cuban Delegation and one from His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom acting on behalf of the Soviet Union, the United States, France, China and Canada.
2. The first communication enclosed a draft Resolution on the subject of UNRRA; the second, various amendments to the Report of the Preparatory Commission on the subject of the constitution of the General Committee together with a proposal for the discussion by the General Assembly of a Declaration on the international duties and rights of man and of nations respectively; and the third a draft Resolution for the establishment by the General Assembly of a Commission to deal with the problem raised by the discovery of atomic energy and other related matters.

<sup>4</sup> See also A/BUR/1 of 11 January 1946, whose content is similar to that of this document.

3. These four documents form parts A, B, C and D respectively of the attached "Supplementary List".

Gladwyn Jebb
Executive Secretary

...

[6]

Provisional Translation from the Spanish Text

The Cuban Delegation has the honour to propose to the General Assembly the inclusion, in its agenda, of the following two questions:

1. The Declaration of the International Duties and Rights of Man.
2. The Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Nations.

In the event of the inclusion in the Agenda of the subjects mentioned above, the Delegation of Cuba will, at the right time, present an appropriate draft text for each of these Declarations to serve as a basis for discussion by the Assembly.

...

A/BUR/6

14 January 1946

General Committee

Report to the General Assembly on the Supplementary List of Items to be Included on the Agenda of the First Part of the First Session

1. The General Committee met at 6 p.m. on Sunday, 13 January 1946, to consider the supplementary list of items which had been submitted for inclusion in the agenda of the first part of the first session of the General Assembly.

2. This supplementary list included the original four items circulated in document A/BUR/1, namely:

...

c) Resolution concerning a Declaration on the international duties and rights of man and a Declaration on the duties and rights of nations, presented by the delegation of Cuba.

...

[2]

...

4. After discussion the General Committee agreed:

...

[3]

(d) That the resolution by the Cuban delegation proposed in paragraph 2 (c) above, relating to the Declaration on the international duties and rights of man, and the Declaration on the duties and rights of nations respectively, while of great importance, could not appropriately be included in the supplementary list.

With regard to the first Declaration, there was ample provision for discussion of this matter in that part of chapter III of the Report of the Preparatory Commission which recommends the establishment of a Commission on Human Rights and outlines the functions and competence of that Commission (pages 28 and 36 of the Report).

...

A/PV.7<sup>5</sup>

14 January 1946<sup>6</sup>

Seventh Meeting [of the General Assembly]

Monday, 14 January 1946, at 3 p.m.

President: M. P.-H. SPAAK<sup>7</sup> (Belgium)

18. Supplementary List of Items for Inclusion in the Agenda of the First Part of the First Session of the General Assembly: Report of the General Committee to the General Assembly

THE PRESIDENT (Translation from the French): The first item on the agenda is the General Committee's report on the supplementary list of items to be included.

<sup>5</sup> The text of the document is taken from Official Records of the First Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Plenary Meetings of the General Assembly, Verbatim Record, 10 January-February 1946, pp. 100 ff.

<sup>6</sup> This is the date of the meeting, and not the date of publication of the document.

<sup>7</sup> Paul-Henri Spaak (1899–1972), a Belgian statesman, presided over the first session of the United Nations General Assembly. He served in a variety of important functions in his own country as well as in international institutions such as the Council of Europe and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The General Committee met on Sunday 13 January at 6 p.m. to consider the supplementary list of items, and its proposals are set out in paragraph 4 of A/BUR/6 distributed this morning.

...

[101]

...

THE PRESIDENT (Translation from the French): I now open the discussion on paragraph (d). It concerns the Cuban delegation's resolution regarding the declaration on the international duties and rights of man and the declaration on the duties and rights of nations. The General Committee considers that the subject of the rights and duties of man can be discussed in the course of the general debate, because it has a special bearing on certain matters connected with the Economic and Social Council. It is likewise of the opinion that the declaration on the duties and rights of nations can form the subject of a general debate, in view of the fact that the Charter itself is already an attempt to determine the rights and duties of nations.

I call upon Mr. Dihigo,<sup>8</sup> representative of Cuba.

MR. DIHIGO (Cuba): The Cuban delegation presented a motion in order that in due time the Assembly may adopt a declaration on the rights of man and a declaration on the rights and duties of nations. In the Charter, we find the following. In the preamble:

"We the peoples of the United Nations, determined . . . to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small. . ."

And in Article 13 we find that:

"1. The General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of:

- "a. promoting international cooperation in the political field and encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification;
- "b. promoting international cooperation in the economic, social, cultural, educational, and health fields, and assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental free- [102] doms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion."

Taking into consideration these articles, the Cuban delegation thought that, in order that these principles may become a reality, it was absolutely necessary for the General Assembly to initiate those studies, and to have adopted, in due time, as I said before, a declaration on fundamental human rights and a declaration on the rights and duties of nations. We thought that this was so obvious that it would not be necessary for us to take the floor to defend our motion, but the General Committee has recommended that these two new items need not be included in the agenda of this first part of the first session, and obliges me to take some of your time, a very short time, to defend our proposition.

<sup>8</sup> Ernesto Dihigo y Lopez Trigo (1896–1991) was a Cuban law professor who served as foreign minister and, following the overthrow of the Batista regime, as Ambassador to the United States.

...

As regards human rights, it is even more obvious in our view that, although the Charter establishes the general principles, it very wisely did not go into the details of what those rights are. It merely recognizes that human rights exist, and that these rights are likely to change in the course of time. It leaves to the Assembly the faculty of determining those rights, and that is what we have to do here. It has been said by the General Committee, regarding human rights, that there was ample provision for discussion of this matter in that part of chapter III of the Report of the Preparatory Commission which recommends the establishment of a Commission on human rights and outlines the functions and competence of that Commission.

We know that it is necessary to have a final draft of these two declarations and that careful consideration will be given to this subject, but we think that it is necessary to begin this task as soon as possible. All through the war that brought into existence the United Nations, it has been repeatedly said by our great leaders that victory would lead us into a new world organization based on justice and on law; and if that is true, now that victory has been won and the United Nations has come into existence, carrying the expectations of the whole world, we need to tell that world that we have not forgotten the promises that were made in San Francisco, and that though there are urgent matters that will require our attention in the days to come, from [103] the very beginning the United Nations stands by its obligations, and that we are going to establish those human rights and those rights of nations.

Why have we asked to have these matters included in the agenda at the very beginning of the General Assembly. We will not pretend that these declarations can be adopted today, tomorrow or next week, but if they are included in the agenda this will allow the Committees to take up the matter and begin their studies, and if these studies are ready by the end of this Assembly then the Assembly can deal with the matter and take a decision.

If these studies have not been finished by the time the first part of the first session of the Assembly comes to an end, then the matter will be taken up in the second part of the first session of the General Assembly; but this will show the peoples of the world, and especially the man in the street, whose faith we have to win if we wish to have a strong United Nations Organization, that from the very beginning the General Assembly has remembered the promises made to him in San Francisco, and that they are not simply beautiful words to be commented on by internationalists, but the basis of declarations that will encourage the peoples of the world to feel that we will try to fulfil those promises, and that we are going to begin to deal with the big problem of improving the conditions of the common man.

The great, deep meaning of this Charter that we were granted in San Francisco is that the United Nations is not an organization that deals only with States as powerful allies; its deep, human meaning is that it has taken into consideration the man in the street, because we have realized that the happiness of the peoples of the nations ultimately depends on the happiness of all. We do not claim to take up time now, when we are faced with the consideration of more urgent problems, but we merely ask the Assembly to accept these two items in order to allow the Committee to begin its studies and to have the draft ready by the end of this Assembly, if possible; if not, in the second part of the first session of the Assembly.

It is true that the Economic and Social Council has to consider also the question of human rights, but I have read to you Article 13, which imposes on the Assembly itself the obligation of promoting international co-operation, and assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion. If the Cuban motion is accepted, it will mean this – a message for all men in the whole world that the General Assembly of this new Organization, in which so many hopes have been placed, from the very beginning has decided that, after the urgent problem of the atomic bomb, no more urgent problems will be taken into consideration before the Assembly has dealt with this matter in regard to which man expects so much from us. I will not take up more of your time, but will just ask you to accept the motion of the Cuban delegation to have inserted, in our agenda, these two new items.

[104]

THE PRESIDENT (Translation from the French): Does anyone wish to speak on this subject?

As there is no other speaker, I am obliged to explain the position myself. The General Committee had before it a proposal of the Cuban delegation which merely asks that the two items, a declaration on international rights and duties of man, and a declaration on the rights and duties of nations, be included in the agenda of the General Assembly and especially in the general discussion. The Cuban delegation also stated that it would submit in due course a fuller explanation of its point of view.

The matter being thus brought before the General Committee, the latter does not object to including these questions in the general discussion, but it points out that the subject of the rights and duties of man is already referred to in that part of the Preparatory Commission's Report which deals with the Economic and Social Council, and that there is therefore no need to make special provision for it in the general discussion.

...

The only divergence between the views of the Cuban delegation and those of the General Committee is not whether these questions should be discussed – there is complete agreement as to that – but whether there is any need to make special provision for them in the agenda. The General Committee feels there is no need, as this question can be dealt with in the discussion of the Report of the Preparatory Commission.

I call upon Mr. Dihigo, representative of Cuba.

MR. DIHIGO (Cuba): Mr. President, I wish to thank you kindly for your explanation, but before this question is put to a vote I wish to draw attention to the following. As you have seen from Article 13, which I had the pleasure of reading to you a few moments ago, it is the General Assembly which has the duty to adopt the declaration on human rights. The General Committee has said in its report that this can be dealt with in the discussion of chapter III and has referred this problem to the Economic and Social Council. The Economic and Social Council has to look after the question of human rights, but it is the General Assembly, the constitutional organ, which has to adopt the general principles that will guide the work of the Economic and Social Council. If everybody agrees that this problem is to be discussed and debated in this Assembly, why not insert it in the agenda? To insert it in the general agenda will have this advantage: That we shall tell the whole world that we are taking care of this fundamental problem.

I realize that if there were any serious objections to having this problem studied by the Gen- [105] eral Assembly, we should vote against the Cuban amendment; but if we all agree that this subject is within the scope and the functions of the General Assembly why not admit it and, jointly with the material help that we are going to send through UNRRA<sup>9</sup> to those peoples that are starving, send also the spiritual message that, at the same time that we are sending them food and clothes, we are trying to set up the rules that will define the rights of men everywhere in the world.

Again I thank the Chairman for his explanation, but it is for these reasons that the Cuban delegation respectfully insists on having this item included in the agenda of the General Assembly.

THE PRESIDENT (Translation from the French): I have explained the position to the Assembly. It is not for me to enter into a discussion with the delegate for Cuba on the merits of the arguments for or against his proposal.

If there are no other speakers on this subject, we will take a vote on the question. So far, no amendment to the report has been presented by the Cuban delegation. I think the best solution would be to take a vote on a text which might be worded as follows: “I suggest that the two questions regarding the declaration on the rights of man and the citizen and the declaration on the rights and duties of nations be placed as special items on the agenda of the General Assembly.”

<sup>9</sup> The United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (UNRRA) was established in 1943 and became part of the United Nations in 1945. It was engaged in various forms of relief for war victims.

I call upon Mr. Manuilsky,<sup>10</sup> representative of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic.

MR. MANUILSKY (Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic) (Translation from the French): I felt very strongly in sympathy with the proposal of the Cuban delegation; but, nevertheless, to facilitate the progress of our work, I should prefer that the discussions of this question be postponed to a later date. I fear we shall encounter many difficulties if we attempt to discuss the subject now. There are many historical documents dealing with the rights of man. There is, for instance, the Magna Carta of English liberties.<sup>11</sup> There is in France, the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen.<sup>12</sup> There is in the Soviet Union, the Declaration of the Rights of Nations of 1917,<sup>13</sup> written by the great Head of our State, Stalin.<sup>14</sup>

Unfortunately, when we seek to determine the rights of nations, no text is to be found; legislation is silent on this point. Our own Charter lays down that the nations shall have the right to self-determination. But difficulties arise as to what is meant by the right of nations to self-determination.

In Spain, the people expressed their right in perfectly legal elections, but subsequently a General came along who challenged their right to express their will in that way.<sup>15</sup> I do not know whether the Spanish question is ripe, but I foresee a good many difficulties. This question now is that of the right of nations. You are not unaware that, in 1848, another question, the right to work, was put forward at the time when Louis [106] Blanc was organizing the national workshops in order to provide work

<sup>10</sup> Dmytro Zakharovych Manuilsky (1883–1959) was a prominent Bolshevik.

<sup>11</sup> Adopted in 1215 by King John of England, the Magna Carta provides a “freeman” with protection against arbitrary action by the state. It is generally acknowledged as the first legal instrument securing the rule of law.

<sup>12</sup> The Déclaration des droits de l’homme et du citoyen (Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen) was adopted on 26 August 1789 by the Assemblée nationale constituante at the height of the French revolution. It was influenced by the ideas of the Enlightenment as well as fundamental freedoms developed under the English common law and subsequently entrenched in the American constitution. A revised version of the Déclaration was adopted in 1793. See: Stéphane Rials, La déclaration des droits de l’Homme et du citoyen, Paris: Hachette, 1988. The English historian Lord Acton described the Déclaration as “a single confused page. . . that outweighed libraries and was stronger than all of the armies of Napoleon”. Cited in A. H. Robertson and J. G. Merrills, Human Rights in the World, An Introduction to the Study of the International Protection of Human Rights, Manchester: Manchester University Press, 1996, at p. 4.

<sup>13</sup> The Declaration of the Rights of the Peoples of Russia was enacted on 15 November 1917 by the Bolshevik government. It recognized certain fundamental rights, including self-determination and secession for the peoples of Russia, the abolition of national and religious privileges and restrictions, and the rights of national minorities.

<sup>14</sup> Joseph Vissarionovich Stalin (1878–1953) led the Soviet Union from the mid-1920s, following the death of Lenin, until his own death in 1953. Abuses carried out by his regime were condemned by his successor, Nikita Khrushchev.

<sup>15</sup> The reference is to General Francisco Franco (1892–1975), a fascist autocrat who ruled Spain from the time of the 1936–1939 Civil War until his death.

for the workers.<sup>16</sup> Are we going to take up that question as well? I think that the Economic and Social Council should make a very serious study of it.

You are also aware that in certain countries, for instance, in my own, not only is the right to work recognized, but the right to education as well. There are also countries in which the question of old age pensions for workers is very acute, and this is the object of legitimate claims. Shall we, at the beginning of our work, include all that in the debate? If so, I am ready to take part in the discussion, but I think that it would be better to let the Economic and Social Council work on the matter for the time being.

I would also point out, regarding the rights of nations, that certain constitutions, for instance, that of 1793,<sup>17</sup> define the rights of peoples, and even recognize as sacred their right to overthrow the Government in the case of disagreement. There are possibilities of this kind which we should have to foresee and which we should be obliged to discuss. As you see, the question is a very complicated one. I greatly sympathize with the idea underlying the Cuban proposal and I am prepared to collaborate to the utmost of my power in seeking for a solution to these problems, but I think the question is not yet ripe. We are at the beginning of our organization. Let us get on with our work and, later, we shall find formulas upon which we can agree. For the time being, I think the Cuban proposal should be withdrawn.

THE PRESIDENT (Translation from the French): I call upon Mr. Dihigo, representative of Cuba.

MR. DIHIGO (Cuba) (Translation from the French): The Cuban delegation shares your view, Mr. President, that the Assembly should vote immediately, but it asks that the vote on the question of the rights of man should be taken by roll-call.

THE PRESIDENT (Translation from the French): A vote can only be taken if the Cuban delegation submits an amendment to the report of the General Committee. Otherwise, I am obliged to take a vote on that report.

I call upon Mr. Dihigo, representative of Cuba.

MR. DIHIGO (Cuba) (Translation from the French): The Cuban delegation merely asks that there should be a division, that is to say a vote, on the one hand, on the question of the rights of man, and, on the other hand, on the question of the rights and duties of nations.

THE PRESIDENT (Translation from the French): I request the Cuban delegation to read the text of its amendment.

<sup>16</sup> Louis Jean Joseph Charles Blanc (1811–1882) was a French socialist politician and ideologue. He participated in the revolutionary provisional government of 1848.

<sup>17</sup> The French Constitution of 24 June 1793, known as the “Montagnard Constitution”, was adopted by the National Convention and subsequently ratified by a referendum based on universal male suffrage, only to be set aside and eventually replaced by the 1795 Constitution. Strongly influenced by the Déclaration des droits de l’homme et du citoyen, it proclaimed economic and social rights, a right to rebel and the abolition of slavery.

MR. PÉREZ CISNEROS<sup>18</sup> (Cuba) (Translation from the French): The Cuban delegation presents as an amendment the draft proposal that appears in the supplementary list of items to be placed on the agenda. In other words, the Cuban delegation has the honour to propose that the General Assembly place on its agenda the two following items: a declaration of the interna- [107] tional rights and duties of man and a declaration of the rights and duties of nations. As my colleague has stated, the Cuban delegation requests that these two points be voted separately, the division being in accordance with the rules of procedure, and that on the first point the vote be taken by roll-call.

THE PRESIDENT (Translation from the French): The amendment of the Cuban delegation consists in replacing sub-paragraph (d) of the report of the General Committee by a text couched in the following terms: "That the resolution regarding the declaration on the international rights and duties of man and the declaration on the rights and duties of nations be placed on the agenda of the first session of the General Assembly."

Is this amendment supported? The amendment is supported by the delegation of Lebanon. We must take a vote on it. The division requested by the Cuban delegation is perfectly in order. Further, the Cuban delegation proposes that the first part of the amendment be voted on by roll call. We will therefore take a vote by roll call as to whether a declaration on the rights and duties of man shall be placed on the agenda of the present General Assembly. Those who consider that this declaration should be made the subject of a special point in the agenda are asked to vote "Yes"; those who think that this question is covered by the discussion of the Report on the Economic and Social Council are asked to vote "No". We will now take a vote by roll call.

(A vote was taken by roll call).

Voted in favour: Australia, Chile, Cuba, Ecuador, Honduras, Lebanon, Iran, Mexico, Nicaragua, Peru, Philippine Commonwealth, Uruguay.

Voted against: Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Greece, Guatemala, India, Liberia, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Union of South Africa, Syria, Turkey, Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, United Kingdom, United States of America, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Abstained: Argentina, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Iraq, Panama, Paraguay, Saudi Arabia.

Voted against: Costa Rica, Haiti.

<sup>18</sup> Guy Pérez Cisneros (1915–1953) was a Cuban diplomat attached to the Washington embassy. He served as Vice-Secretary-General of the Inter-America Caribbean Union and was Secretary-General of the Cuban Delegation to the San Francisco Conference.

THE PRESIDENT (Translation from the French): The result of the voting is as follows:

Number of States voting	49
Voted against	27
Voted in favour	12
Abstained	10
Absent	2

The amendment is not carried.

Under these circumstances, does the Cuban delegate insist that the second part of his amendment should be voted upon?

I note that he does not. Therefore, I take it that paragraph (d) of the General Committee's report is adopted by the Assembly.

MR. PÉREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) (Translation from the French): There is one abstention to paragraph (d).

[108]

THE PRESIDENT (Translation from the French): I will put to the vote paragraph (d), as drafted in the General Committee's report.

(A vote was taken by a show of hands on the adoption or rejection of paragraph (d) in the form proposed in the General Committee's report.)

THE PRESIDENT (Translation from the French): Paragraph (d) is adopted by 21 votes with 2 abstentions.

...

E/ORG/3

30 January 1946<sup>19</sup>

Committee on the Organization of the Council First Meeting

Held on Wednesday, 30 January 1946 at 5 p.m.

...

[5]

...

The Committee proceeded to discuss the terms of reference of the Commission on Human Rights.*

...

[7]

...

<sup>19</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 22 February 1946.

MR. NOEL-BAKER<sup>20</sup> (United Kingdom) thought the Preparatory Commission was right in calling attention to an international Bill of Rights. The Commission could be asked to make recommendations for a draft convention for submission to the General Assembly.

Decision: It was agreed that paragraph 16 should read:

“In particular the work of the Commission might be directed towards making proposals for the consideration of the Council on:

- (a) an international bill of rights;

...

[*] Chapter III, Section 4, paragraphs 15–17 of the Report of the Preparatory Commission.

E/ORG/1

2 February 1946

Committee on the Organization of the Economic and Social Council

Proposals Concerning Terms of Reference of Commissions to be Established by the Economic and Social Council for Consideration by the Drafting Sub-Committee

Commission on Human Rights: (Paragraphs 15–17, page 36)

Chairman’s proposal:

“Establishment of a subsidiary body on the status of women.”

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that when the Commission on Human Rights was established, the Committee’s recommendation should be communicated to it. The Commission could then propose terms of reference for the approval of the Council.

Representative of Czechoslovakia:

Paragraph 16 to read as follows:

“In particular, the work of the Commission might be directed towards formulating proposals to the Council on the following objects:

- (1) an international bill of rights

...

<sup>20</sup> Philip John Noel-Baker (1889–1982) was a British politician, diplomat and academic who received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1959 in recognition of his campaign for disarmament.

E/7

9 February 1946

Communications of Interest to the Economic and Social Council Received from Non-Governmental Organizations

Requests for Consultation under Article 71 of the Charter.

...

[4]

...

International League for the Rights of Man<sup>21</sup>

Letter expressing the hope that the International League for the Rights of Man may be permitted to collaborate with the Commission on Human Rights in the preparation of a Draft Declaration of the International Rights and Duties of Man.

...

E/HR/1

12 February 1946<sup>22</sup>

Original Text: Spanish

Draft Declaration on Human Rights and Letter of Transmittal

Cuban Legation Great Britain

London, 12th February 1946

To the President of the Economic and Social Council.

Dear Sir;

The Cuban Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations has the honour to present to the Economic and Social Council the attached draft <sup>21</sup> The International League for the Rights of Man (it changed its name to the International League for Human Rights in 1976) claimed to be the oldest human rights organization in the United States, tracing its origins to the French-based Ligue des droits de l'homme et du citoyen. Reconstituted in 1942 under the leadership of Roger Nash Baldwin, it obtained Category B consultative status as a non-governmental organization from the Economic and Social Council. See chapter 6, "An NGO Shifts Its Focus: The 'Pioneer' International League for Human Rights", in William Korey, NGOs and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, New York: St. Martin's Press, 1998, pp. 139–158. Also: Roger N. Baldwin, Human Rights: World Declaration and American Practice, New York: Public Affairs Committee, 1950.

<sup>22</sup> The document was issued on 22 April 1946.

“Declaration on Human Rights”, in order that it may be used as a working document by this body when it decides to discuss this matter.

My Delegation made the proposal that the question of Human Rights should be placed on the Agenda of the Assembly. In doing so, we did not intend that the contents thereof should be discussed in the course of this Session, as the question is one which requires careful study and wide discussion; but we merely had in mind that it should be decided to ask the Economic and Social Council to concern itself with this matter as soon as possible with a view to preparing the relative draft; thus the United Nations would have shown that at the very outset it was mindful of the affirmation in the Charter to defend the fundamental human rights, and the dignity and worth of men.

The motion was rejected as unnecessary in view of the fact that discussion of Chapter III of the Preparatory Commission’s Report offered ample opportunity for raising the problem. As this Chapter deals with the organization and duties of the Economic and Social Council and as the creation of a Commission on Human Rights is provided for therein, the Cuban Delegation, as a Member of the Council, has pleasure in offering the attached draft.

[2]

Much has already been written on this question and other Delegations will no doubt also put forward valuable drafts. The final work must be the product of a common effort and reflect the public opinion of the world; Cuba persuaded of the importance of this problem would like to make its modest contribution in the form of the enclosed draft which as already stated, is merely a working document which may come in useful for accomplishing the task which will shortly have to be begun.

I have the honour, etc. . . .

Felipe Pazos<sup>23</sup>

For the Cuban Delegation.

[3]

Translation from Spanish.

The Cuban Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

Draft Declaration on Human Rights

Every human being shall have the following rights:

1. The right to life, to liberty, to personal security and to respect of his dignity as a human being.

<sup>23</sup> Felipe Pazos (1912–2001) was a Cuban economist who worked as a diplomat during the 1940s, and was a member of the staff of the International Monetary Fund in its first years. He returned to Cuba in 1950 to head the National Bank of Cuba. He initially supported the revolution led by Fidel Castro, but later became disillusioned, leaving Cuba to work at the Alliance for Progress and the Inter-American Development Bank before retiring to Venezuela.

2. The right to shape his life according to his calling so as to enable him to develop his personality and to seek happiness within the limits of life in the community.
  3. The right to free investigation to enable him to form his opinions, and to express these opinions freely, subject to his being held responsible for his actions.
  4. The right to choose and profess freely his religion without any restriction other than that imposed by respect for morality and public order.
  5. The right to equality before the law without distinction as to race, religion, colour, class or sex.
  6. The right to protection from unjustified interferences with his person, family, home, reputation or private activities.
  7. The right to equal opportunity with others in shaping his life, raising the standard of living, and fulfilling a useful function in society.
  8. The right to education which will enable him to improve himself in every respect and will lead to his becoming a useful member of society and sharing in all the material and spiritual benefits of civilisation.
  9. The right to work under conditions fitting to his status as a human being and to receive, in return, a remuneration in proportion to the value of his contribution to the community.
- [4]
10. The right to receive adequate maintenance in the event of unemployment, sickness or chronic illness, to meet his own and his family's material and spiritual needs.
  11. The right to adequate food.
  12. The right to hygienic living conditions and to clothing suitable for the climate in which he lives.
  13. The right to live in surroundings free from avoidable diseases.
  14. The right to adequate medical assistance.
  15. The right to meeting and associating with his fellow men for fostering the pursuit of permissible aims.
  16. The right to immunity from expropriation other than in pursuance of legal proceedings or for the benefit of the community.
  17. The right to protection from competent courts free from all influence contrary to justice.
  18. The right to trial without undue delay, to self-defence, and to protection from sentences except in pursuance of laws in force prior to the act with which he is charged.
  19. The right to immunity from arbitrary arrest and to a review of the regularity of his arrest by ordinary tribunals.
  20. The right to resist any form of oppression.
  21. The right to sanctuary in a foreign country when escaping from persecution of a political, religious or racial nature.

22. The right to choose his ruler and to share in the government of his country.

London, 12th February 1946.

E/ORG/2

14 February 1946

Draft Report of the Committee on the Organization of the Economic and Social Council

1. The Economic and Social Council, in its second meeting of 29 January 1946, appointed a Committee on the Organization of the Council composed of representatives of all the members of the Council to consider and report to the Council on the establishment of the Commissions enumerated in Chapter III.

...

[2]

...

Commission on Human Rights

Section A

1. The Economic and Social Council, being charged [3] under the Charter with the responsibility of promoting universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, and requiring advice and assistance to enable it to discharge this responsibility,

Establishes a Commission on Human Rights.

2. The work of the Commission shall be directed towards submitting proposals, recommendations and reports to the Council regarding:

(a) an International bill of rights;

...

E/20***

15 February 1946

Report of the Committee on the Organization of the Economic and Social Council

...

[2]

...

Resolutions
Commission on Human Rights
Section A

1. The Economic and Social Council, being charged under the Charter with the responsibility of promoting universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all [3] without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, and requiring advice and assistance to enable it to discharge this responsibility,

Establishes a Commission on Human Rights.

2. The work of the Commission shall be directed towards submitting proposals, recommendations and reports to the Council regarding:

(a) an International bill of rights;

...

6. Initially, the Commission shall consist of a nucleus of nine members appointed in their individual capacity for a term of office expiring on 31 March 1947. They are eligible for re-appointment. In addition to exercising the functions enumerated in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4, the Commission thus constituted shall make recommendations on the definitive composition of the Commission to the Second Session of the Council.

7. The Council hereby appoints the following persons as initial [4] members of the Commission:

...

[*] This document has been copied exactly from the original issued in London.

E/27

22 February 1946

Commission on Human Rights and Sub-Commission on the Status of Women

Resolution of the Economic and Social Council of 16 February 1946 (Document E/20 of 15 February 1946), on the establishment of a Commission on Human Rights and a Sub-commission on the Status of Women, supplemented by the action taken by the Council on 18 February 1946, completing paragraphs 6 and 7 of Section A and paragraphs 4 and 5 of Section B concerning the initial composition of these bodies.

[Resolution 5(I) of the Economic and Social Council]Section A*

1. The Economic and Social Council, being charged under the Charter with the responsibility of promoting universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, and requiring advice and assistance to enable it to discharge this responsibility,

Establishes a Commission on Human Rights.

2. The work of the Commission shall be directed towards submitting proposals, recommendations and reports to the Council regarding:

(a) an International bill of rights;

...

[2]

...

6. Initially, the Commission shall consist of a nucleus of nine members appointed in their individual capacity for a term of office expiring on 31 March 1947. They are eligible for re-appointment. In addition to exercising the functions enumerated in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4, the Commission thus constituted shall make recommendations on the definitive composition of the Commission to the Second Session of the Council.

7. The Council hereby appoints the following persons as initial members of the Commission:

- (a) M. Paal Berg,<sup>24</sup> Norway
- (b) Professor René Cassin, France
- (c) M. Fernand Dehousse, Belgium
- (d) Mr. Victor Raúl Haya de la Torre,<sup>25</sup> Peru
- (e) Mr. K. C. Neogi,<sup>26</sup> India
- (f) Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, USA
- (g) Dr. C. H. John Wu,<sup>27</sup> China

<sup>24</sup> Paal Olav Berg (1873–1968) was Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Norway from 1929 to 1946. He was instrumental in the dismissal of the pro-Nazi puppet regime of Vidkun Quisling and its replacement by a council of Norwegian citizens that included himself.

<sup>25</sup> Victor Raúl Haya de la Torre (1895–1979) was a Peruvian political leader. He founded the Universidades Populares Gonzalez Prada, which were night schools for workers. Following a coup in Peru, he sought asylum in the Colombian embassy in Lima, where he remained for five years. His case was litigated before the International Court of Justice: Asylum Case (Colombia v. Peru), [1950] ICJ Reports 266.

<sup>26</sup> K. C. Neogi represented India on the Nuclear Commission. Neogi was a member of the Central Assembly from 1921–1934 and 1942–1945, Chairman of the Railway Enquiry Committee in 1947 and the first Chairman of the Finance Commission in 1952.

<sup>27</sup> John Ching Hsiung Wu (1899–1986) was a lawyer and translator who assumed a leading role in drafting the Constitution of the Republic of China. He was a prominent cultural figure in Taiwan.

and, in addition, persons whose names will be transmitted to the Secretary-General not later than 31 March 1946 by the members of the Council for the USSR and Yugoslavia.

...

E/HR/3<sup>28</sup>

26 April 1946

Statement of Essential Human Rights Presented by the Delegation of Panama

Preamble

Upon the freedom of the individual depends the welfare of the people, the safety of the state and the peace of the world.

In society complete freedom cannot be attained; the liberties of the one are limited by the liberties of others, and the preservation of freedom requires the fulfilment by individuals of their duties as members of society.

The function of the state is to promote conditions under which the individual can be most free.

To express those freedoms to which every human being is entitled and to assure that all shall live under a government of the people, by the people, for the people, this declaration is made.

Article 1. Freedom of Religion

Freedom of belief and of worship is the right of everyone.

The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

Comment

Provisions for establishing a right comparable to that in this Article are contained in the current or recent constitutions of fifty-two countries.

This Article on belief and worship covers not only organized religion but also individual religious opinions and philosophic systems.

<sup>28</sup> Also issued as A/148.

“Freedom of worship” covers religious services under the leadership of a minister or without it, and individual worship. It does not include all practices claimed to be of a religious nature – such, for example, as run counter to hygienic regulations. Article 5 expresses the right “to form with others associations [2] of a . . . religious . . . character.” Article 1 and 5 together, therefore, imply the right of the individual to join and leave religious organizations. Article 3 states the right to “freedom of expression.” Consequently, Articles 1 and 3 together imply the right of free communication among religious authorities, and between religious authorities and the faithful.

The duty of the State expressed in this Article and in succeeding articles involves some or all of the following steps:

- (1) to abstain from enacting laws which impair the right,
- (2) to prevent its governmental agencies and officials from performing acts which impair the right,
- (3) to enact laws and provide suitable procedures, if necessary, to prevent persons within its jurisdiction from impairing the right, and
- (4) to maintain such judicial, regulatory and operative agencies as may be necessary to give practical effect to the right.

With respect to this Article the duty of the state involves the protection, for example, of churches and other establishments devoted to religious purposes. It restrains the state from forcing the individual to participate in religious ceremonies or rites or to join any religious sect, communion, or organization.

Article 2. Freedom of Opinion

Freedom to form and hold opinions and to receive opinions and information is the right of everyone.

The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

Comment

Provisions for establishing freedom to hold opinions are contained in the current or recent constitutions of seven countries. Moreover this freedom is implied in the freedom of expression, for which see Article 3.

[3]

The term “opinion” is used in its widest sense. In order that the freedom to form and hold opinions may be enjoyed, the individual must be free to receive opinions expressed by others by any means of communication such as books, newspapers, pamphlets, or radio.

Article 3. Freedom of Speech

Freedom of expression is the right of everyone.

The state has a duty to refrain from arbitrary limitation of this freedom and to prevent denial of reasonable access to channels of communication.

Comment

Provisions for establishing a right comparable to that in this Article are contained in conjunction with the right to freedom of opinion in current or recent constitutions of fifty-five countries.

This Article protects freedom of expression, whatsoever may be the means employed. The term “expression” is used as of wider coverage than “speech.” It includes the freedom of the individual to speak, write, use the graphic arts, the theatre, or any other art form to present his ideas. In this sense freedom of expression embraces the basic “freedom of the press” in its classic meaning of the right of the individual to print and distribute his ideas.

In conjunction with Article 2, which protects the individual’s right to receive information and opinions, this Article protects the freedom of the press as an institution for gathering and disseminating information and opinions.

The duty of the state “to refrain from arbitrary limitation on this freedom” restrains the state from the use of arbitrary censorship on expression in any of the forms listed above. The duty of the state “to prevent denial of reasonable access to channels of communication” means that if, through physical limitations or other circumstances, the ordinary channels – such as the mails, the telephone, the telegraph, [4] the radio – are limited, the state where necessary must exercise its controlling or regulatory power to insure to the individual such opportunity of use as is practicable.

Article 4. Freedom of Assembly

Freedom to assemble peaceably with others is the right of everyone.

The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

Comment

Provisions for establishing a right comparable to that in this Article are contained in the current or recent constitutions of forty-seven countries.

This Article protects assemblies for political, economic, religious, social, cultural and other purposes. It includes indoor and outdoor private and public meetings, as well as parades and processions. In the interests of public safety and convenience, a state may make requirements as to time and place of meetings. In the fulfilment of its duty the state may have to make provisions for police at meetings and against the breaking up of public meetings.

Article 5. Freedom to Form Associations

Freedom to form with others associations of a political, economic, religious, social, cultural, or any other character for purposes not inconsistent with these articles is the right of everyone.

The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

Comment

Provisions for establishing a right comparable to that in this Article are contained in the current or recent constitutions of thirty-nine countries.

This Article recognizes man's fundamental instinct for and protects his vital need for group activity. It expresses the right to exercise in association with others the essential freedoms stated in the other [5] articles and such other rights as are recognized by law.

Only such association as does not infringe the essential rights of others is "not inconsistent with these articles." Thus, political association that involves the attainment of ends by free elections and by the democratic principle of majority rule is protected, but political association that aims at totalitarianism and the destruction of the political rights of others is prohibited.

The state may prescribe reasonable requirements governing the establishment and supervision of associations. Thus it may require associations to be registered, to declare their purposes, and to register the names of their members and responsible officers.

Article 6. Freedom from Wrongful Interference

Freedom from unreasonable interference with his person, home, reputation, privacy, activities, and property is the right of everyone.

The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

Comment

Provisions for establishing elements of the right defined in this Article are contained in the current or recent constitutions of forty-nine countries.

This Article imposes a duty upon the state to take measures to prevent the use of force and falsehoods by individuals or groups of individuals which would interfere with the safety, honour, and welfare of others. It sanctions and requires the state to organize such police force and to impose such criminal or civil liability or both, against the offenders, as may be necessary to give to the people within the borders of the state a reasonable degree of security against the aggressions and frauds of others. [6]

Article 7. Fair Trial

Everyone has the right to have his criminal and civil liabilities and his rights determined without undue delay by fair public trial by a competent tribunal before which he has had opportunity for a full hearing.

The state has a duty to maintain adequate tribunals and procedures to make this right effective.

Comment

Provisions, in varying degrees of fullness, for establishing a right comparable to that in this Article are contained in the current or recent constitutions of fifty countries.

The Article states the basic requirements for orderly and just procedure not only for the protection of individuals against arbitrary action by government or by public officials but also for the settlement of disputes among individuals themselves. It implies that in all matters which affect him, any human being is entitled to access to a competent tribunal and a procedure which will insure fairness of determination.

“Public trial” means that there shall be an opportunity for some members of the public to be present and that the proceedings can properly be reported by those who have witnessed them.

A “competent tribunal” is one which, whether a court or an administrative agency, is empowered by the law of the state to entertain an action.

The requirement of a “fair trial” provides protection against trial which, although public and before an otherwise competent tribunal, may proceed under such pressures that justice cannot be done. This would be true for example where public opinion is so hostile that a local tribunal would be unduly affected by the hostility, or where the tribunal itself, although competent, is unduly biased or has been corrupted. It also protects against improper methods of trial, as where rational [7] procedures are not used or where obvious errors have led to an improper result. Customary trial procedures of civilized communities must be used as a standard to discover whether, in view of all the circumstances of the particular case, a fair trial is accorded. No displacement of traditional methods of punishment for contempt is intended.

The requirement for a “full hearing” makes certain that the person whose rights or liabilities are being determined shall have a reasonable opportunity to present his side of the case. It does not mean that a hearing, formal or informal, must necessarily be had; it does mean that either party on demand may have one, the extent of which will depend upon the sound discretion of the tribunal. In a criminal proceeding, a “full hearing” implies that a person must be informed in advance of the charge against him, be permitted the assistance of counsel, and be given a reasonable time to prepare for the hearing.

Article 8. Freedom from Arbitrary Detention

Everyone who is detained has the right to immediate judicial determination of the legality of his detention.

The state has a duty to provide adequate procedures to make this right effective.

Comment

Provisions, in varying degrees of fullness, for establishing a right comparable to that in this Article are contained in the current or recent constitutions of thirty-four countries.

This Article implies that no one can be detained except pursuant to law, and provides a check on arbitrary arrest as well as a release from unlawful detention.

“Immediate” determination means not only that he shall have access without delay to a competent tribunal but also that the tribunal shall promptly decide the question. Whatever the character of the tribunal may be, it is indispensable that the determination be “judicial” in the [8] sense of the judicial tradition of responsibility, independence, and impartiality.

The statement of the right does not include a statement of the grounds on which a person may be taken into custody and held for trial; that will depend upon the laws and legal system in the particular state.

Article 9. Retroactive Laws

No one shall be convicted of crime except for violation of a law in effect at the time of the commission of the act charged as an offence, nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that applicable at the time of the commission of the offence.

Comment

Provisions, in varying degrees of fullness, for establishing a right comparable to that in this Article are contained in the current or recent constitutions of thirty countries.

This Article assumes that the law has defined certain acts of omissions to be crimes with sufficient particularity so that the definition can be used as a standard to determine guilt. The Article prohibits ex post facto or retroactive laws.

Article 10. Property Rights

Everyone has the right to own property under general law. The state shall not deprive anyone of his property except for a public purpose and with just compensation.

Comment

Provisions, in varying degrees of fullness, for establishing a right comparable to that in this article are contained in the current or recent constitutions of fifty countries.

This Article recognizes that to be free, man must have the right to acquire, use, and dispose of a large variety of things. It would violate the Article for the state to curtail unreasonably, in view of conditions [9] existing at any given time, the number and variety of things which could be the subject of private ownership.

The second sentence preserves the protections traditionally granted to rights in specific property in connection with the state's exercise of its power of eminent domain.

Article 11. Education

Everyone has the right to education.

The state has a duty to require that every child within its jurisdiction receive education of the primary standard; to maintain or insure that there are maintained facilities for such education which are adequate and free; and to promote the development of facilities for further education which are adequate and effectively available to all its residents.

Comment

Provisions, in varying degrees of fullness, for establishing a right comparable to that in this Article are contained in the current or recent constitutions of forty countries.

This Article makes primary education compulsory for "every child" within the jurisdiction of a state. The age limits within which the individual is to be considered a "child" are left to reasonable interpretation in the light of local physiological and other conditions. Existing constitutions usually fix the lower limits at six or seven, and the upper limits variously at twelve, fourteen, sixteen, and eighteen. The Article does not make attendance at school compulsory although the great majority of children will be able to meet the requirements only by attendance at a public or private school.

The phrase "to maintain or insure that there are maintained facilities for such (primary) education which are adequate and free" does not prohibit education at home and permits special arrangements necessary to meet special conditions, as for the mentally and physically [10] incapacitated. The expression “adequate and free” does not prohibit private schools from charging tuition or other fees. It does, however, impose upon the state the duty of insuring that there are maintained schools at which each child has the opportunity to receive a primary education free.

The Article does not prescribe the extent to which schools and other educational facilities for “further education” may be provided by the state or by churches, endowed institutions, or other voluntary bodies; the nature of the public control, if any, exercised over privately provided schools; the conditions under which privately provided schools may receive financial assistance from the state; or the status of universities. It does impose on the state the responsibility of insuring that adequate educational facilities are provided by either public or private action, a responsibility which would include the duty of providing such facilities itself whenever they are not effectively provided in some other manner. Thus the Article, while affirming the responsibility of the state, allows unlimited variety in the means by which the responsibility is discharged.

The phrase “to promote the development of facilities” recognizes the inevitability of gradualness in the implementation of the right to education; the interpretation of the phrase “adequate and effectively available” will vary with local conditions from either a quantitative or qualitative standpoint. Facilities adequate at one stage of social and economic development will cease to be adequate as further progress becomes possible.

Article 12. Work

Everyone has the right to work.

The state has a duty to take such measures as may be necessary to insure that all its residents have an opportunity for useful work.

Comment

Provisions for establishing this right are contained in current or [11] recent constitutions of nine countries.

This Article does not require the state to furnish work to the individual unless private enterprise fails to provide him the opportunity to work and unless he has no opportunity to earn a living as an independent worker, for example, an artisan, farmer, shopkeeper, or member of a profession.

The phrase “useful work” excludes mere relief work which has no positive social value from being regarded as an adequate fulfilment of the duty of the state.

Article 13. Conditions of Work

Everyone has the right to reasonable conditions of work.

The state has a duty to take such measures as may be necessary to insure reasonable wages, hours, and other conditions of work.

Comment

Provisions for establishing a right comparable to that in this Article are found in the current or recent constitutions of eighteen countries. Comprehensive international labour standards have been evolved by representatives of governments, management and labour at the annual meetings of the International Labour Conference<sup>29</sup> and are contained in the 67 international Conventions and 66 Recommendations embodied in the International Labour Code.<sup>30</sup>

This Article applies particularly, though not exclusively, to persons employed by others. Standards to determine what are “reasonable wages, hours, and other conditions” necessarily depend on prevailing economic conditions. Wages to an adult insufficient to maintain a family of average size at a level essential to health as determined by objective statistical studies are not reasonable.

The phrase “other conditions of work” includes such matters as rest periods, holidays, and protection against accident and disease incidental to the work.

[12]

Article 14. Food and Housing

Everyone has the right to adequate food and housing.

The state has a duty to take such measures as may be necessary to insure that all its residents have an opportunity to obtain these essentials.

Comment

Food has not been dealt with in constitutional instruments hitherto. Nutrition policies have developed very rapidly since 1936. The United Nations Conference on Food and <sup>29</sup> The annual International Labour Conference, held in Geneva, comprises delegates from Member States of the International Labour Organization. Each delegation consists of two government delegates, a worker delegate and an employer delegate. The main tasks of the Conference include the shaping of international labour standards through Conventions and Recommendations, supervision of their application, and examination of the Global Report of the International Labour Organization, current labour issues in the world and the general policy and activity of the International Labour Organization.

<sup>30</sup> The international labour standards set by the International Labour Organization through the mechanisms of Conventions and Recommendations have been referred to as the International Labour Code.

Nutrition [sic],<sup>31</sup> at which 44 States were represented, recommended that governments should recognize and embody in a formal declaration or agreement their obligation to their respective peoples and to one another to raise levels of nutrition and standards of living to improve the efficiency of agricultural production and distribution, and to co-operate, so far as may be possible, with other nations for the achievement of these ends. An Interim Commission of representatives of 44 nations,<sup>32</sup> meeting at Washington, D.C., has been entrusted with the preparation of a plan for a permanent international organization for the furtherance of these objects.

The current or recent constitutional instruments of eleven countries state or imply a right to adequate housing.

This Article insures the individual the “opportunity to obtain” food and housing. The state is not required to provide food or housing unless the individual cannot under existing conditions obtain them by his own efforts.

It may be sufficient for the state to protect its residents against diseased or unwholesome food and to insure a continuous flow of food at prices within his reach. With respect to housing, it may be sufficient for the state by the exercise of its regulatory power to insure that adequate housing shall be available at prices within the reach of all its residents.

[13]

What is “adequate food and housing” must be determined at any given time in the light of developing knowledge and of the material and technical resources within a country. Like Article 11 on education, this Article recognizes the inevitability of gradualness in the implementation of the right to adequate food and housing.

Should conditions make it physically impossible for the time being for an individual to be insured or supplied with adequate food and housing, he would be entitled only to what is reasonable under the circumstances.

<sup>31</sup> United States President Franklin D. Roosevelt convened the United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture, which took place on 18 May 1943 at the Homestead Hotel in Hot Springs, Virginia, to discuss possible solutions to the worldwide food shortage that had arisen during World War II. See: “United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture: Text of the Final Act”, (1943) 37 American Journal of International Law Supplement 159.

<sup>32</sup> On 15 July 1943, an Interim Commission on Food and Agriculture was created to carry out the recommendations decided on during the United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture. The Interim Commission was entrusted with drafting a constitution for the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, which had yet to be established, and determining the primary functions this organization would serve. Only nations with representation at the United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture were eligible to become original members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, contingent on their acceptance of the Constitution. Lester B. Pearson of Canada served as Chairman of the Interim Commission until the formal establishment of the Food and Agriculture Organization.

Article 15. Social Security

Everyone has the right to social security.

The state has a duty to maintain or insure that there are maintained comprehensive arrangements for the promotion of health, for the prevention of sickness and accident, and for the provision of medical care and of compensation for loss of livelihood.

Comment

Provisions concerning social security are contained, generally in the form of provisions concerning social insurance, in the current or recent constitutions of twenty-seven countries. A further precedent for the provisions of this Article is afforded by the Declaration of Santiago de Chile, 1942, adopted by representatives of the twenty-one American Republics and of Canada at an official conference organized by co-operation between the Chilean Government and the International Organization.<sup>33</sup>

The duties imposed upon the state by this Article are to see that resources of society are organized:

- (1) to raise standards of health
  - (2) to prevent sickness and accident
  - (3) to provide medical care wherever needed, including maternity cases
- [14]
- (4) to provide for the financial support of persons deprived of earnings who lack means of livelihood, including the involuntarily unemployed and their dependents, the aged, widows and orphans.

The wording of the Article leaves full scope to private initiative, in countries where this is considered desirable, to accept as much of the responsibility as it can and will. The Article allows diversity of types of organization and of standards of protection provided the essential right stated in the Article is reasonably secured.

Article 16. Participation in Government

Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his state.

The state has a duty to conform to the will of the people as manifested by democratic elections.

<sup>33</sup> The Declaration of Santiago de Chile was adopted during the first Inter-American Conference on Social Security on 10–16 September 1942. The Declaration “affirms the continental solidarity of the Americas in pursuit of social security, fourteen technical resolutions regarding social insurance questions and that Statute of the Inter-American Conference on Social Security, a newly created agency which is to act in concert with the International Labour Office”. See: Wilfred C. Jenks, “The First Inter-American Conference on Social Security”, (1943) 37 American Journal of International Law 120.

Comment

The right stated in this Article is embodied in the constitutions of all countries having a democratic constitutional form of government. All such constitutions provide for an elected representative body to determine national policies.

This Article requires the government of the state to be a government of the people, by the people, for the people. It defines one procedure as indispensable to secure such government, namely “democratic elections.” Except for requiring this procedure, the Article leaves the state free to mould its political order in conformity with such standards, techniques, or institutions as may correspond with its national traditions and requirements. Every known variety of democratic government satisfies the requirements of this Article. No authoritarian or dictatorial form of government does satisfy them.

“The right to take part in the government” includes specifically the right to vote in “democratic elections” and by implication the right [15] to be a candidate for and to hold office. The exercise of the right is, therefore, limited to “his state” – the state of which the individual is a citizen. However, the experience of all organized communities and particularly of free self-governing communities shows that the right to take part in government includes the right to express support of and opposition to office holders and policies, and to form political associations. These rights are guaranteed by Articles 3 and 5 to everyone, alien as well as citizen. The use of the word “his” state in this Article does not by implication deny these rights to anyone.

“Democratic elections” means electoral procedures and practices that guarantee the honest translation of “the will of the people” into representative institutions. Since the will of the people changes and evolves, elections must be recurrent. The specification of elections does not exclude the use of supplementary means of determining the will of the people such as the initiative, recall and referendum, town meetings, and popular polls.

Article 17. Equal Protection

Everyone has the right to protection against arbitrary discrimination in the provisions and application of the law because of race, religion, sex, or any other reason.

Comment

Provisions for establishing a right comparable to that in this Article are contained in the current or recent constitutions of forty-seven countries. This Article protects the right of everyone to equal treatment by the state. The protection from “arbitrary discrimination” applies to the substantive provisions of the law and also to their administration by executive or judicial authority. The Article accomplishes what is partially achieved in the United States<sup>34</sup> by the statement that no person shall be denied “the equal protection of the laws.”

[16]

The determination of what is “arbitrary discrimination” depends to some extent on the national traditions and the sense of justice of the public in the particular country. Barring an individual or group from the exercise of any right stated in the preceding articles on the grounds of who they are (e.g. women, negroes, Catholics) as distinguished from what they have done (e.g. criminals or mental incompetents), would constitute “arbitrary discrimination.”

Article 18. Limitations on Exercise of Rights

In the exercise of his rights everyone is limited by the rights of others and by the just requirements of the democratic state.

Comment

No general article in this form is contained in existing constitutions. Limitations on the exercise of rights are included in the statement of each right in practically all constitutions except that of the United States. The limitations on all rights granted in the preceding articles are expressed in this supplementary Article.

The Article forbids any person from abusing his rights, whether because of hereditary status, official position, economic power, or other condition.

The Article recognizes the general relativity of rights. Any right can be abused by so exercising it that it deprives another individual or the state of important rights. Thus, freedom of religion does not permit practices such as human sacrifice, nor in countries where the prevailing standards profoundly disapprove, of practices such as polygamy. Freedom of speech does not forbid the state from adopting reasonable laws forbidding libel and slander; nor does it permit blasphemy or utterances tending to promote panic, mob violence, insurrection, or war. The organization of parties seeking to establish a dictatorship is not consistent with freedom of assembly or association because it would tend to destroy the rights of others.

<sup>34</sup> The fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution was adopted on 9 July 1868. One of its components, the Equal Protection Clause, prohibits states from denying the right to equal protection under the law.

E/HR/5

26 April 1946

Provisional Agenda [of the “Nuclear” Commission on Human Rights]

1. Opening of the Session by the Assistant Secretary-General for Social Affairs.
2. Election of Chairman.
3. Adoption of Rules of Procedure.
4. Election of Vice-Chairman.
5. Adoption of the Provisional Agenda.
6. Appointment of three members to serve as ex-officio members of the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women<sup>35</sup> (Document E/27).
7. Review of terms of reference of the Commission (Document E/27).
8. Examination of documents submitted by members of the United Nations.
  - (a) Draft declaration on Human Rights submitted by the Cuban Delegation to the General Assembly – Doc. E/HR/1
  - (b) Communications concerning freedom of information and freedom of the press, submitted by the United States Delegation to the General Assembly – Doc. E/HR/2
  - (c) Statement on essential human rights submitted by the Delegation of Panama to the General Assembly – Doc. E/HR/3
9. Definitive composition of the Commission: type of membership (Governmental representatives or individual experts), number of members, term of office, re-eligibility, frequency of meetings, corresponding members, reciprocal representation between Commissions. (Report of the Preparatory Commission, Chapter III, Section 4, paragraphs 36–41; Summary Records of the Committee on the Organization of the Council; Documents E/ORG 3,4,5,6,7,8,9)
10. Suggestions concerning the establishment of Sub-Commissions.
- [2]
11. Consideration of the Report of the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women.
12. Programme of future work.
13. Adoption of the Report of the Commission to the Economic and Social Council.

<sup>35</sup> The Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, subordinate to the Commission on Human Rights, was established in February 1946 by the Economic and Social Council. On 21 June 1946, the Economic and Social Council transformed it into the Commission on the Status of Women (ECOSOC resolution 11(II)). The Commission met for the first time in February 1947.

E/HR/6
29 April 1946

Summary Record of Meetings [of the “Nuclear” Commission on Human Rights]

First meeting held on Monday, 29 April 1946, at 3 p.m.

Members of the Commission on Human Rights

1. Mr. Paal Berg (Norway) Unable to attend first session; 2. Prof. René Cassin (France); 3. M. Fernand Dehousse (Belgium) Unable to attend first session; 4. Mr. Victor Raúl Haya de la Torre (Peru) Unable to attend first session; 5. Dr. C. L. Hsia<sup>36</sup> (China); 6. Mr. K. C. Neogi (India); 7. Mr. Dusan Brkish<sup>37</sup> (Yugoslavia); 8. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt (United States); 9. Mr. Nicolai Kriukov (USSR).

1. Mr. Henri Laugier, Assistant Secretary-General in charge of Social Affairs, opened the first meeting

M. LAUGIER: Ladies and gentlemen, it is a new thing and it is a great thing in the history of humanity that the international community organized after a war which destroyed material wealth and spiritual wealth accumulated by human effort during centuries has constituted an international mechanism to defend the human rights in the world. I will not take a long time to greet you here. You know that the United Nations organization is happy to see you here and you know also that all men of all the free peoples and of all the people liberated from slavery, put in you their confidence and their hope, so that everywhere the authority of these rights, respect of which is the essential condition of the dignity of the human person, be respected. And, if we close our eyes, we can also imagine a welcome, grave and serious, from the other side, where the shadows of all the soldiers, sailors, and aviators, all the fighters for the civilian resistance who died on all the battlefields of the [2] world, hoping that right and liberty be re-established all over the world. Do not measure the importance of your commission on the basis of its present dimensions. We are only at the starting point of a very great enterprise, the volume of which and the action of which will have to grow, day after day. You are the seed out of which great and beautiful harvests must come. When you will have elected your president and set up the rules for your work – you will first have to look for the methods to complete the commission and make proposals for the constitution of a final commission sufficiently numerous, so that all the views of the thought of free men will be represented, but small enough so that its work will be quick and truthful – and then you will also have to define and determine the study programme of the commission and start the action of the Organization of the United Nations on the road which the Charter has set for it.

<sup>36</sup> Chin-Lin Hsia, a Chinese scholar and diplomat, was the author of Studies in Chinese Diplomatic History. He chaired the committee on war criminals of the Far Eastern Commission, the inter-allied body responsible for oversight of the occupation of Japan.

<sup>37</sup> Dušan Brkić Duško (1913–2000) was a Yugoslav communist who was later punished for his support of the Soviet Union.

In the reconstruction of the world, the material tasks are most important, but the effort of all town planners, of architects, or doctors, will only assume its real significance if humanity starts again to have confidence in its destiny, if the human community gets together around a minimum of common principles.

You will have to study all the declarations of rights which were born in the spirit of man and people on the march toward their liberation. You will have to show that the political rights are the first condition of liberty but that today the progress of scientific and industrial civilization has created economic organizations which are inflicting on politically free men intolerable servitude, and that therefore, in the future, the declaration of the rights of man must be extended to the economic and social fields. You will have to look for a basis for a fundamental declaration on human rights, acceptable to all the United Nations, the acceptance of which will become the essential condition of the admission in the international [3] community. You will have before you the difficult but essential problem to define the violation of human rights within a nation, which would constitute a menace to the security and peace of the world and the existence of which is sufficient to put in movement the mechanism of the United Nations for the maintenance of peace and security. You will have to suggest the establishment of machinery of observation which will find and denounce the violations of the rights of man all over the world. Let us remember that if this machinery had existed a few years ago, if it had been powerful and if the universal support of public opinion had given it authority, international action would have been mobilized immediately against the first authors and supporters of fascism and nazism. The human community would have been able to stop those who started the war at the moment when they were still weak and the world catastrophe would have been avoided.

Ladies and gentlemen, I am sure that you will not hesitate before the tremendous scope of our task which the confidence of the people has put on our shoulders. I pray that your actions and work may be a permanent guide for men of good will, who are looking toward a better future, and that they will show them the way, like a guiding star.

2. Election of Chairman

DR. HSIA nominated Mrs. Roosevelt, who was elected Chairman by acclamation.

MRS. ROOSEVELT: Thank you very much. I shall do my best, although my knowledge of parliamentary law is somewhat limited. I know we are all conscious of the great responsibility which rests upon us. I know we are all confident that we shall be able to do much to help the United Nations achieve its primary objective of keeping the peace of the world by helping human beings to live together happily and contentedly.

...

E/HR/8

30 April 1946

Summary Record of Meetings [of the “Nuclear” Commission on Human Rights]

Second meeting held on Tuesday, 30 April 1946 at 10:30 a.m.

Chairman: MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

At its first meeting, the Commission on Human Rights considered items 1–6 of the Provisional Agenda (Document E/HR/5), which were adopted in toto.

MRS. ROOSEVELT opened the second meeting by pointing out that the work of the nuclear Commission could be divided into two parts:

1. The task that must be accomplished before the second session of the Economic and Social Council;
2. Reports and Recommendations which the Commission may wish to make.

Item 7 of the Agenda (Document E/HR/5)

Review of Terms of Reference of the Commission (Document E/27)

THE CHAIRMAN read the terms of reference and suggested that Section A, Paragraph 2 (a), (b), (c), (d), did not establish a priority for the study and recommendations of the Commission, but could be taken up in any order in which the Commission might wish to consider them. She also pointed out that in Section A, Paragraph 4, the Economic and Social Council left it open to the members of the Commission to change the terms of reference if they so wished.

Concerning Section A, Paragraph 5 (Document E/27), the Chairman stressed that the nuclear Commission has no authority to establish sub-commissions, but could recommend to the full Commission [2] that such sub-commissions should be established by the full Commission.

With regard to Section A, Paragraph 6, the Chairman suggested that the most immediate task for the Commission should be to work out recommendations on the definitive composition of the Commission for submission to the second session of the Economic and Social Council.

DR. HSIA asked the Chairman to elucidate the terms of reference of the Commission, as described in Section A, Paragraph 2 (E/27), as he did not understand whether the nuclear Commission has the right to submit a draft of an international bill of rights, or whether it should prepare proposals which might be incorporated into a bill of rights, or simply submit a report stating that such an international bill of rights is feasible.

THE CHAIRMAN explained that the Commission could decide to recommend to the full Commission the establishment of sub-commissions for the study of problems involved in the drafting of a bill of rights. These sub-commissions would report to the full Commission, which would then present its proposals to the Economic and Social Council. Such a bill of rights would have to cover all points mentioned under Section A, Paragraphs 2 (a), (b), (c), (d).

MR. NEOGI referred to the statement made by Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar<sup>38</sup> at the fourth meeting of the Committee on the Organization of the Council (E/ORG/6, Page 4), in which he says that the nuclear commissions would “take up any urgent problems of a substantive nature, and would also be invited to make proposals to the Council regarding the personnel of experts required to complete the composition of their Commissions”. Mr. Neogi wished for a clarification of the terms “report”, “recommendations”, and “proposals”. He suggested that not all the members of the Commission have probably had a chance to acquaint themselves with the contents of the literature concerning human rights and he mentioned in particular:

[3]

1. A document prepared by a committee of the London Daily Herald under the chairmanship of Lord Sankey.<sup>39</sup>

<sup>38</sup> Ramaswami Mudaliar (1887–1976) was an Indian lawyer and statesman associated with the Justice Party. Mudaliar was a delegate to the San Francisco Conference, chairing the committee on economic and social problems. He served as first president of the Economic and Social Council.

<sup>39</sup> John Sankey (1866–1948) was a prominent member of the Labour Party who, as a judge in the House of Lords, issued many seminal legal rulings.

2. The issue on essential human rights of the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science (January, 1946).<sup>40</sup>

It is his opinion that thorough study of these and other documents should be made before any international bill of rights could be drafted, or even recommendations for such a bill could be worked out.

M. LAUGIER stated that the nuclear Commission has no authority to draft an international bill of rights of man, but that the full Commission is expected to draft such a bill.

THE CHAIRMAN then defined “report” as a statement of facts without recommendations, made after certain ideas or problems have been studied. She defined “recommendation” as a statement submitted for consideration, but not necessarily for action, and “proposal” as a statement submitted after due study, with a request for action.

The Commission passed the following resolution proposed by Mr. Neogi:

Resolved that

The Secretariat is requested to make a collection – as full as possible – of the literature bearing upon the questions referred to in the terms of reference for the Commission on Human Rights, to circulate full texts where possible, or otherwise summaries of such literature, among members of the nuclear and of the full Commission, once it is constituted.

In answer to Mr. Neogi’s question, the Chairman stated that acceptance of the terms of reference would not mean that the Commission could not suggest changes later on.

...

E/HR/9

30 April 1946

Summary Record of Meetings [of the “Nuclear” Commission on Human Rights]

Third meeting held on Tuesday, 30 April 1946 at 3 p.m.

Chairman: MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

The Chairman opened the meeting by announcing that in considering Item 9 of the agenda (Document E/HR/5) the Commission would discuss each point separately and defer decisions until all points had been discussed.

<sup>40</sup> Issue 243(1) of the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, edited by William Draper Lewis and John R. Ellingston, was devoted to “Essential Human Rights”. It contained more than 20 articles on various aspects of the codification of human rights, including contributions by Carlos P. Romulo, Wilfred Jenks, Charles E. Merriam, William E. Rappard, Pablo de Azcarate and Georges S. Kaeckenbeek.

Item 9 of the Agenda (Document E/ER/5)Definitive Composition of the CommissionType of Membership (governmental or individual)

...

[3]

M. LAUGIER, Assistant Secretary-General, explained that the Commission on Human Rights would be expected to finish its job of writing an international bill of rights as quickly as possible, but that the Commission itself was to be a permanent commission, with perhaps two, three, or four sessions annually, with enough time between sessions to make it possible for members to do their study of problems and drafting work. The spacing of sessions would, in his opinion, make it possible for individual experts to serve.

THE CHAIRMAN added that it was her understanding that the Commission on Human Rights should not only draw up a full bill of rights, or any other documents, but should watch their observance by the United Nations, while the enforcement would not be within the province of the Commission. M. Laugier agreed, stressing, however, that the nuclear Commission should not draft a bill of rights, but that the complete Commission must draft such a bill and should ask the Economic and Social Council for authority to supervise its observance by the nations of the world. It should, in other words, be a “watch dog” over human rights.

...

E/HR/12*6 May 1946Summary Record of Meetings [of the “Nuclear” Commission on Human Rights]

Sixth meeting held on 6 May 1946 at 10:30 a.m.

Chairman: MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

...

[8]

...

M. CASSIN added that it might be most advisable to have an informal exchange of views among the members, in an effort to determine methods of drafting an international bill of rights.

The Commission decided to hold a closed drafting session for that purpose.

The meeting was adjourned at 12:30 p.m.

E/HR/13
6 May 1946

Summary Record of Meetings [of the “Nuclear” Commission on Human Rights]

First Drafting Session Held on 6 May 1946 at 3:00 p.m.

Chairman: M. CASSIN (in Mrs. Roosevelt’s absence)

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that the Commission had agreed at their previous meeting to discuss the Draft Declaration on Human Rights submitted by the Cuban Delegation (Document E/HR/1) and the Statement on Essential Human Rights submitted by the Delegation of Panama (Document E/HR/3). He emphasized that these documents would not be discussed in detail but rather in order to find methods by which the work of drafting an International Bill of Rights could proceed. Mr. Hsia agreed that the two documents would form a good basis for discussion, but suggested that the Commission should first decide whether it would recommend the drafting of an International Bill of Rights. He favoured such a recommendation. Mr. Neogi suggested that the nuclear Commission should not undertake to draft an International Bill of Rights but to study all available documents and to prepare the ground for the work of the full commission.

The Chairman proposed that the nuclear Commission might consider three specific recommendations.

1. It might ask the Economic and Social Council to instruct the Secretariat to publish each year a collection of texts pertaining to the Rights of Man – including the Constitutions of various countries – which contains provisions for Human Rights. While these texts exist they are too scattered to be available to the Members of the Commission.

2. He stressed particularly, that it was necessary for the [2] nuclear Commission to act quickly and not to leave all substantive work to the full Commission. One of its recommendations might be that a clause on the observance of Human Rights should be included in all peace treaties. Also it seemed important that a Declaration on Human Rights should be accepted by all who want to become members of the United Nations. As preliminary peace treaties might be agreed upon soon and as a number of countries will ask for admittance into the United Nations in the near future, the Commission will have to work fast. The Commission might want to consider whether an International Bill of Rights should be drafted or a Convention which would become an appendix to the Charter of the United Nations. The Commission might further consider whether it would not be necessary to create an Organ which would study violations of human rights and inform the Commission of those violations.

3. The Chairman stressed the fact that both documents before the Commission now had been produced in the Western Hemisphere where representatives of the American Nations had had a chance to meet at Mexico City.<sup>41</sup> He suggested that a Conference of European experts in London, Geneva or some other place in Europe might be arranged while a similar Conference could be held in Africa and Asia to discuss the basic documents concerning human rights. In August the nuclear Commission might meet again to receive their reports and to prepare a preliminary draft on human rights.

MR. NEOGI warned the Commission that it might be difficult to set up a controlling agency as the Member countries might feel that it would interfere with their sovereignty. He suggested that it might be wise to study existing constitutions many of whom have human rights provisions and to find out whether these provisions have been adhered to. He felt very strongly that it would be important to write a Declaration on Human Rights which any nation who might want to join the United Nations would have to accept. He questioned however, [3] the authority of the nuclear Commission to draft such a Declaration.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that the terms of reference for the nuclear Commission on Human Rights (E/27) established beyond a doubt the right of the Commission to discuss and draft a Declaration or Convention.

THE CHAIRMAN repeated that the first task before the Commission was to devise a method on how to proceed with the work.

MR. HSIA felt that the Commission could not draft any document at its present session and that therefore it might be best to appoint sub-commissions who would consider problems like a Bill of Rights or Freedom of the Press and make recommendations to the Commission at its next session.

THE CHAIRMAN agreed that the Commission could nominate sub-committees without reference to the Economic and Social Council and could, of course, decide to hold another session.

The Commission agreed that another session would be advisable.

MR. NEOGI questioned the wisdom of splitting up the six members of the nuclear Commission into sub-committees.

THE SECRETARY explained that the nuclear Commission had no authority to appoint permanent sub-commissions to study substantive matters but could name sub-committees for the organization of the work. Mr. Hsia then stated that he had meant to suggest that perhaps one member of the Commission might study and digest a number of documents available on human rights and make a preliminary draft which he would then discuss with two or three others. This draft signed by two or three members would then be presented to the nuclear Commission.

<sup>41</sup> The Inter-American Conference on the Problems of War and Peace, convened in Mexico City during February and March 1945, was held in order to discuss the post-war world order. The Inter-American Reciprocal Assistance and Solidarity Act (Act of Chapultepec) was produced, which dealt primarily with reciprocal assistance and American solidarity as mechanisms for achieving a lasting world peace. The Act entered into force on 8 March 1945.

THE CHAIRMAN felt that it was important to discuss further the problem of a control agency. He pointed out that the Charter provides for action on the part of the United Nations in “situations which menace peace”. There may be cases where the violation of human rights [4] principles may be so serious that the right of the United Nations to discuss them must be stressed. The control agency would naturally have to distinguish between problems which are of national competence and those which transcend national concern.

The Chairman stressed the importance of the International Trials at Nuremberg and Tokyo<sup>42</sup> in which the United Nations have created a precedent for putting on trial those who violate the rights of man. He recommended that the principles dealing with the rights of man which were developed by these international tribunals should be closely studied by the Commission.

The Chairman then suggested that the Secretariat should prepare a memorandum to aid the Commission in the further discussion of these problems.

The meeting adjourned at 4:20 p.m.

E/HR/15

8 May 1946

Summary Record of Meetings [of the “Nuclear” Commission on Human Rights]

Seventh meeting held on Wednesday, 8 May 1946 at 10:30 a.m.

Chairman: MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

[2]

...

Documentation

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that the Commission might recommend that the Economic and Social Council instruct the Secretariat to compile a yearbook including all declarations on human rights now in force in the various countries.

<sup>42</sup> The International Military Tribunal prosecuted 22 Nazi leaders at Nuremberg in 1945 and 1946. A similar institution, the International Military Tribunal for the Far East, conducted a trial of Japanese leaders in Tokyo from 1946 to 1948. The accused were charged with crimes against peace, war crimes and crimes against humanity. Each of these categories of crimes had affinities with concepts of human rights as they were evolving at the time.

M. LAUGIER suggested that the documentation collected by the Secretariat should include not only declarations of human rights which are in force now, but the history of human rights, declarations by non-governmental organizations and international societies, as well as all actions taken by the organs of the United Nations – the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, and the Commission on Human Rights itself. Mr. Brkish felt that while the Declarations by the Delegation of Cuba (E/HR/1) and the Delegation of Panama (E/HR/3) should prove very useful to the Commission in its effort to draft an international bill of rights, much more documentation would be necessary before such a tremendous task could be completed. He suggested, therefore, that all Member governments of the United Nations be asked to submit to the Commission on Human Rights those parts of their constitutions which deal with human rights.

...

[4]

...

Draft Declarations

The Commission then discussed the suggestion that the fifty-one Members of the United Nations might be asked to submit draft declarations of human rights.

DR. HSIA thought that such a request might cause difficulties, as governments might feel that by submitting such drafts, they committed themselves to put these declarations into effect in their own countries. While they might be entirely in favour of doing so, they might not be able to undertake such a step in the immediate future. He, therefore, suggested that it might be better for the full Commission to prepare a draft and then to circulate it among the governments.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that Mr. Brkish had suggested that the governments be asked only to send in provisions for human rights which were already part of their constitution or their national laws. She stressed, however, that governments must accept certain basic human rights, even if, for economic reasons, they may not as yet be able to put them into effect.

MR. NEOGI felt that the governments should not be asked for draft declarations, as the United Nations had, through the Economic and Social Council, created the Commission on Human Rights for the definite purpose of drafting an international bill of rights. This task should, therefore, not be turned back to the Member governments. He suggested that the [5] Cuban and Panamanian documents might be circulated to the national delegations with an invitation that their views on these documents would be welcomed.

M. CASSIN agreed and suggested that the Commission should, at the earliest opportunity, consult individual experts of international renown, as well as non-governmental organizations, who are deeply concerned with basic human rights. A draft Bill of Rights should be prepared by the Commission and then sent to all the United Nations. M. Cassin, however, supported the proposal by Mr. Brkish that the Member Nations be asked to submit those provisions of their constitution or legal system which deal with human rights.

DR. HSIA pointed out that the document submitted by Panama had been prepared by the American Law Institute<sup>43</sup> – a non-governmental organization – and the Chairman explained that the American Law Institute had collected the declarations on human rights now in force in various countries and had offered to put all its information at the disposal of the Commission.

Decision: The Commission agreed that, while the nuclear Commission has the right to draft a Bill of Rights, it is not as yet in a position to do so, but will proceed with the preparation for such a bill; that the full Commission itself should draft an international Bill of Rights, and should establish sub-commissions for that purpose, if necessary. This draft should be circulated among United Nations governments for their suggestions.

THE CHAIRMAN did not consider it necessary or advisable to circulate the Cuban or Panamanian declarations with the draft bill of the Commission.

Regional Conferences

The members then discussed the suggestion of recommending to the Economic and Social Council the organization of conferences to ascertain [6] the views of different regions, especially those regions which had suffered most from the war. M. CASSIN suggested that the Commission might recommend to the Economic and Social Council two conferences of experts – (1) representing the European and Mediterranean countries, and (2) Far Eastern regions. The views and recommendations of those experts should be transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights, thereby enabling it to proceed more quickly with the drafting of an international bill of rights.

As to the Cuban and Panamanian documents, M. Cassin felt that while the Commission might not want to circulate them itself, it should make sure that they are circulated.

DR. HSIA pointed out that those documents have been submitted to the General Assembly, and therefore, had, in all probability, been circulated among all Member Nations.

<sup>43</sup> The American Law Institute, established in 1923, is a professional organization composed of judges, lawyers and academics dedicated to clarification, modernization and improvement of the law.

MR. NEOGI agreed that the draft of an international Bill of Rights which was to be written by the Commission on Human Rights, should be circulated alone, and not with any other documents. The Chairman then asked the members whether it was their agreement that the Commission on Human Rights should recommend to the Economic and Social Council that two regional conferences of experts should be held similar to the conference which had been held in the Western Hemisphere.

M. CASSIN suggested that those conferences would be somewhat different from the Pan-American conference. As the Pan-American conference had been held before the Commission on Human Rights existed, their resolutions and recommendations were submitted to governments. Future conferences, however, should submit their recommendations to the Commission on Human Rights.

Answering Mr. Neogi's question as to who would take the initiative in setting up these conferences, THE CHAIRMAN explained that the Economic and Social Council would take the initiative.

[7]

DR. HSIA felt that it might not be easy to organize such conferences, as the expense would be extremely high and the conditions, especially in the Far East, are not favourable for such meetings. Moreover, the recommendations would only provide the Commission on Human Rights with reference material. He, therefore, felt that the proposal to set up conferences should not be pressed.

The Commission agreed that it would recommend to the Economic and Social Council that:

The organization of regional conferences of experts should be taken under consideration. If such conferences should prove impracticable, the advice and co-operation of individual experts from different regions should be sought.

DR. HSIA then referred to the terms of reference for the Commission on Human Rights (E/27) and noted that the terms of reference suggested by the Report of the Preparatory Commission (Page 36, Paragraph 16) had been changed by the Committee on the Organization of the Economic and Social Council, and that point (e) of Paragraph 16 had been left out. The Secretary pointed out that while point (c) had been left out, the general clause covering (e) had been included in Paragraph (b) (E/27, 2 (b)).

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that the Commission could, if desired, recommend to the Economic and Social Council changes in its terms of reference (Item 7, Agenda).

The meeting was adjourned at 12:20 p.m.

E/HR/16
8 May 1946

Summary Record of Meetings [of the “Nuclear” Commission on Human Rights]

Eighth meeting held on Wednesday, 8 May 1946 at 3:00 p.m.

Chairman: MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

The Commission continued the discussion of the points on the Agenda prepared by the Secretariat.

Human Rights in International Treaties

The question next raised was whether the nuclear Commission should recommend to the Council the acceptance of the general principle that basic human rights should be included in international treaties and should be accepted by all states who are members or who want to become members of the United Nations. Such a step might be advisable as the nuclear Commission would not be able to draft, in the very near future, an International Bill of Rights.

M. CASSIN strongly supported these recommendations.

MR. NEOGI asked whether the nuclear Commission might not be able to draw up a tentative International Bill of Rights, but the Chairman suggested that it might be more important to prepare the groundwork for the full Commission as a great deal of preliminary work needed to be done before the drafting of a Bill of Rights could begin. It was important however, that the nuclear Commission should not feel limited in its work and should carry on until the full Commission was constituted and could meet.

The Commission agreed to recommend to the Economic and Social Council that:

General provisions for basic human rights be included in international treaties and that similar provisions be accepted by [2] all States, Members of the United Nations.

Organ of Inquiry

The Commission then discussed the desirability of setting up an Agency for inquiring into the observance and violation of basic human rights in countries all over the world.

While all members agreed that some provisions for supervision would be necessary MR. NEOGI suggested that the first task of the Commission was to formulate basic human rights and that it might best be left to the full Commission to decide on ways of supervision.

M. CASSIN pointed out that a great many experts felt that it was more important to assure the observance of existing Bills of Rights than to draft immediately a world Bill of Rights. He pointed out that the Charter of the United Nations provided for control and supervision and that Mr. Stettinius<sup>44</sup> in commenting on the Commission on Human Rights had stated, "Through the work of this Commission the Human Rights provisions of the Charter can be implemented." As to questions of national or international concern Chapter 7 of the Charter clearly indicates which problems are to be left to the individual nations and which should be taken up by the United Nations.

In order to accomplish its task properly the Commission should therefore ask the Economic and Social Council to provide the necessary means for supervision and control. MR. BRKISH and MR. KRIUKOV agreed that the Commission should make such a recommendation to the Council.

MR. HSIA who also stated his agreement, further pointed out that all authorities who had discussed the work of the Commission on Human Rights had expressed themselves strongly in favour of some kind of enforcement agency, that one group of experts had suggested that the Commission should have the right to: "Inquiry, investigation and advice".

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that this question was closely connected with problems which the Commission would have to take up later on. If, for instance a sub-commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press were [3] established and the Commission succeeded in securing the adherence of all the United Nations to the principles of freedom of information and the press, freedom of inquiry and investigation would be assured.

M. CASSIN pointed out that it would not be possible to give an exact blueprint of the kind of agency that should be set up, but suggested that the Commission might recommend to the Economic and Social Council that – pending the establishment of such an agency the mission of the Commission on Human Rights should be: to aid qualified organs of the United Nations in the task defined for the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in Articles 13 and 62 of the Charter concerning the promotion and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all; and to aid the Security Council in the task entrusted to it by Article 39 of the Charter by pointing to cases where violations of human rights, committed, in one country may, by their gravity, their frequency and their systematic nature constitute a threat to the peace.

<sup>44</sup> Edward Reilly Stettinius, Jr. (1900–1949) was Secretary of State under Presidents Roosevelt and Truman, during 1944 and 1945. He played a central role in the establishment of the United Nations. Stettinius took up the post of United States Ambassador to the United Nations, from which he resigned in June 1946. He later became critical of what he saw as Truman's refusal to use the United Nations as a tool to resolve tensions with the Soviet Union.

THE CHAIRMAN agreed that the Commission should recommend to the Economic and Social Council that:

The purposes of the United Nations with regard to the promotion and observance of human rights as defined in the Charter of the United Nations would only be fulfilled if provisions were made for the implementation of an International Bill of Rights.

...

E/HR/19

15 May 1946

Draft Report of the Commission on Human Rights to the Second Session of the Economic and Social Council

Rapporteur: MR. K. C. NEOGI (India)

In accordance with the resolution of the Economic and Social Council of 16 February 1946 (E/27 of 22 February 1946) on the establishment of a Commission on Human Rights and a Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, the nuclear Commission on Human Rights met at Hunter College, New York City, from 29 April to May 1946, to consider its terms of reference, the definitive composition of the Commission, and various documents referred to the Commission concerning human rights, and to report thereon to the Second Session of the Economic and Social Council.

The Commission consisted of the following nine members: Mr. Paal Berg (Norway); Mr. Dusan Brkish (Yugoslavia)*; Mr. Alexander Borisov (USSR)*; Prof. René Cassin (France); M. Fernand Dehousse (Belgium); Mr. Victor Raúl Haya de la Torre; Dr. C. L. Hsia*; Mr. K. C. Neogi; Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt (United States).

Mr. Paal Berg (Norway), M. Fernand Dehousse (Belgium) and Mr. Victor Raúl Haya de la Torre (Peru) were unable to attend the first session of the Commission. The Commission held meetings and one drafting session. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt (USA) was elected Chairman, M. René Cassin (France), Vice-Chairman, and Mr. K. C. Neogi (India), Rapporteur.

After the adoption of the Rules of Procedure for the first session of the Commission of the Economic and Social Council (E/Commissions/1), Mrs. Roosevelt, Mr. Brkish, and M. Cassin were appointed ex-officio members of the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, in accordance with Section B, Paragraph 5, of the Council Resolution on the establishment of the Commission on Human Rights (E/27).

[*] Dr. C. L. Hsia had been nominated in place of Dr. John C. E. Wu, and Mr. Dusan Brkish in place of Dr. Jerko Radmilovic. Mr. Alexander Borisov was nominated in place of Mr. Nikolai Kriukov, who served on the Commission until 13 May.

[2]

Terms of Reference

The terms of reference contained in Paragraph 2 of the Council Resolution (E/27) were reviewed and accepted by the Commission. It was generally felt that Item (a), namely, an international bill of rights might be found to cover substantially Items (b), (c), and (d). Attention was drawn to the fact that Item (c) of the terms of reference recommended in the Report of the Preparatory Commission (Page 36, Paragraph 16) – “any matters within the field of human rights considered likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations” – was not included in the terms of reference drawn up by the Council. The Commission agreed to request the Council to consider the desirability of adding a clause substantially on the lines of the original Item (c), so as to be able to deal with any matter not covered by Items (a), (b), (c), and (d).

Programme of Work

The Commission discussed in detail Item 8 of the agenda (E/HR/3), concerning the scope of work of the Commission and the examination of documents submitted by Members of the United Nations (E/HR/1, E/HR/2, E/HR/3).

The members agreed that the fullest possible documentation and information concerning the whole field of human rights was of the utmost importance for the drafting of an international bill of rights, and the Secretariat was requested to collect all available material on the subject.

The Commission felt that while it was within its competence to draft a bill of human rights, it was not as yet in a position to do so, but it would proceed with the preparatory work. It was decided to recommend that the full Commission should draft an international bill of rights as soon as possible, and that this draft should be circulated [3] among the United Nations governments for their comment.

The importance of regional conferences of experts was emphasized, and in this connection, reference was made to the Inter-American Conference of War and Peace Problems at Mexico City (Act of Chapultepec) in March 1945. Some members pointed out that it might be difficult, at present, to arrange for similar conferences in other parts of the world, particularly in Europe and the Far East. The Commission decided to recommend that if such conferences should prove impracticable, the advice of individual experts from various regions should be sought.

As the drafting of a bill of rights might take considerable time, members unanimously stressed the importance of the acceptance of the principle of including provisions for basic human rights in international treaties, particularly peace treaties. It was also agreed that such provisions should be accepted by all States, Members of the United Nations, and by States seeking admission to the United Nations.

With regard to the promotion and observance of human rights, the Commission felt that the need for an “agency of implementation” should be emphasized. It was also pointed out that, pending the eventual establishment of such an agency, the Commission on Human Rights might assist the appropriate organs of the United Nations in the task defined for the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in Articles 13, 55, and 62 of the Charter, and that it might aid the Security Council in the task entrusted to it by Article 39 of the Charter, by pointing to cases where violation of human rights may constitute a threat to peace.

The Commission recognized that when the Economic and Social Council comes to consider the question of how to implement an international bill of human rights or how to afford protection to national minorities, it may find that political actions are necessary. The Commission, therefore, requests the Economic and Social Council to take this problem into consideration in determining the status and powers of the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commissions.

[4]

The Commission considered that the number of sub-commissions, for the time being, should be limited, and that in addition to the existing Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, a Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information should be established.

It was agreed that the Secretariat should be instructed to collect all documentation concerning Items (c) and (d) of the terms of reference – protection of minorities and prevention of discrimination on grounds of race, sex, language, or religion – as a preliminary step to future consideration of the question of establishment of the Sub-Commission on this subject.

Finally, the Commission agreed to express the view that public discussion of human rights should be stimulated and encouraged throughout the world.

The recommendations to the Economic and Social Council with regard to the programme of work of the Commission on Human Rights were unanimously formulated as follows:

...
[5]

II. Draft Declarations

The Commission recommends that:

1. The full Commission should draft an international bill of rights as soon as possible. The nuclear Commission should proceed with the preparations for such a bill. The draft of the international bill of rights, as completed by the full Commission, should be circulated among the United Nations governments for their suggestions.

2. The detailed examinations of the documents submitted by the Delegation of Cuba and Panama (Documents E/HR/1 and E/HR/3) should be left to the full Commission or to a later session of the nuclear Commission.
3. The organization of regional conferences of experts should be taken under consideration. If such conferences should prove impracticable, the advice of individual experts from different regions should be sought.

III. Human Rights in International Treaties

The Commission recommends that:

without waiting for an international bill of rights to be written, the general principle should be accepted that provision for basic human rights be included in international treaties, particularly peace treaties, that similar provisions be accepted by all States, Members of the United Nations, and by States seeking admission to the United Nations.

IV. Agency of Implementation

The Commission recommends that:

1. It shall be considered that the purpose of the United Nations with regard to the promotion and observance of human rights, as defined in the Charter of the United Nations, could only be fulfilled if provisions were made for the implementation of the observance of human rights and of an international bill of rights.
2. Pending the eventual establishment of an agency of implementation, the Commission on Human Rights might be recognized as qualified to aid the appropriate organs of the United Nations in the task defined for the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in Articles 13, 55, and 62 of the Charter, concerning the protection and observance of human rights and fundamental freedom for all, and to aid the Security Council in the task entrusted to it by Article 62 of the Charter, by pointing to the cases where violation of human rights committed in one country may, by its gravity, its frequency, or its systematic nature, constitute a threat to peace.

...

E/38<sup>45</sup>

17 May 1946

Report of the Commission on Human Rights to the Second Session of the Economic and Social Council

In accordance with the resolution of the Economic and Social Council of 16 February 1946 (E/27 of 22 February 1946) on the establishment of a Commission on Human Rights and a Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, the nuclear Commission on Human Rights met at Hunter College, New York City, from 29 April to 20 May 1946, to consider its terms of reference, the definitive composition of the Commission, and various documents referred to the Commission concerning human rights, and to report thereon to the Second Session of the Economic and Social Council.

The Commission consisted of the following nine members: Mr. Paal Berg (Norway); Mr. Alexander Borisov (USSR)*; Mr. Dusan Brkish (Yugoslavia)*; Prof. René Cassin (France); M. Fernand Dehousse (Belgium); Mr. Victor Raúl Haya de la Torre (Peru); Dr. C. L. Hsia (China)*; Mr. K. C. Neogi (India); Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt (United States).

Mr. Paal Berg (Norway), M. Fernand Dehousse (Belgium) and Mr. Victor Raúl Haya de la Torre (Peru) were unable to attend the first session of the Commission. The Commission held 18 meetings and one drafting session. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt (USA) was elected Chairman, M. René Cassin (France), Vice-Chairman, and Mr. K. C. Neogi (India), Rapporteur.

[*] Dr. C. L. Hsia had been nominated in place of Dr. C. H. John Wu, and Mr. Dusan Brkish in place of Dr. Jerko Radmilovic. Mr. Alexander Borisov replaced Mr. Nikolai Kriukov. Mr. Borisov took part in the meetings of the Commission from 13 May 1946. On his arrival Mr. Borisov stated that the former representative had been only an observer. Owing to a misapprehension on the part of the Commission as well as on the part of the Member from the USSR first attending the Commission meetings this representative took part in all of the discussions and in the votes of the Commission up to the time Mr. Borisov arrived on 13 May 1946. As a result, Mr. Borisov took exception to certain agreements that had been reached, and in this report and in the Summary Records of the meetings of the Commission, his objections and dissents are recorded.

[2]

After the adoption of the Rules of Procedure for the first session of the Commissions of the Economic and Social Council (E/Commissions/1), Mrs. Roosevelt, Mr. Brkish, and M. Cassin were appointed ex-officio members of the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, in accordance with Section B, Paragraph 5, of the Council Resolution on the establishment of the Commission on Human Rights (E/27).

<sup>45</sup> E/38/Rev.1 was issued on 21 May 1946. In addition to the draft report itself, which is not changed, the revised document contains as Appendices the Report from the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, a Memorandum to the Commission from the Sub-Commission and a list of documents distributed.

1. Terms of Reference

The terms of reference contained in Paragraph 2 of the Council Resolution (E/27) were reviewed and accepted by the Commission. It was generally felt that item (a), namely, an international bill of rights, might be found to cover substantially items (b), (c) and (d). Attention was drawn to the fact that item (e) of the terms of reference recommended in the Report of the Preparatory Commission (Page 36, Paragraph 16) – “any matters within the field of human rights considered likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations” – was not included in the terms of reference drawn up by the Council. The Commission agreed to request the Council to consider the desirability of adding a clause substantially on the lines of the original item (e), so as to be able to deal with any matter not covered by items (a), (b), (c), and (d), such as the eventual punishment of certain crimes which must be considered as international, as they constitute an offence against all mankind.

I. Programme of Work

The Commission discussed in detail Item 8 of the agenda (E/HR/5), concerning the scope of work of the Commission and the examination of documents submitted by Members of the United Nations (E/HR/1, E/HR/2, E/HR/3).

[3]

The Commission proceeded with this examination in full realization of the grave importance of the task entrusted to it by the Charter of the United Nations. It fully realized the importance of achieving and promoting the recognition and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, in the hope of drawing from the last world war which demanded the sacrifice of so many lives, the lessons which will aid us to achieve the highest aspirations of mankind. In addition, the Commission paid particular attention to well-considered plans and suggestions which were presented to it through hearings by qualified representatives of national and international organizations, well known for the importance of their work.

The members agreed that the fullest possible documentation and information concerning the whole field of human rights was of the utmost importance first for the drafting of an international bill of rights, and the Secretariat was requested to collect all available material on the subject, and to publish periodically the most important information. But the Commission is confident that the Member countries will make regularly and on their own initiative, either themselves or by an organ entrusted with this task, contributions for the information of the Commission, as they primarily will have to bear the responsibility for developing human rights and for assuring their observance.

The Commission felt that while it was within its competence to draft a bill of human rights, it was not as yet in a position to do so, but it would proceed with the preparatory work.

The Commission agreed that the full Commission should determine the character of the bill which is to be drafted, as well as the content and the form of the bill (for instance, should it be a resolution by the Assembly of the United Nations or an appendix to the Charter, having to be integrated into the constitution of each Member Nation, or a convention [4] between the States, or in any other form). Therefore, it was decided to recommend that the full Commission should draft an international bill of rights as soon as possible, and that this draft should be circulated among the United Nations governments for their comment.

The importance of regional conferences of experts was emphasized, and in this connection, reference was made to the Inter-American Conference of War and Peace Problems at Mexico City (Act of Chapultepec) in March 1945. Some members pointed out that it might be difficult, at present, to arrange for similar conferences in other parts of the world, such as the Far East.*

The Commission decided to recommend that if such conferences should prove impracticable in the very near future or before the convening of the full Commission, the advice of individual experts from various regions should be sought. It was considered most important that within the next weeks, the procedure for initial consultations should be started, in accordance with the decisions of the Economic and Social Council, so that their results may immediately aid the Commission in its work.

As the drafting of a bill of rights might take a certain time in spite of every effort at speed in its preparation, members of the Commission unanimously stressed the importance of the acceptance of the principle of including provisions for basic human rights in international treaties, particularly peace treaties. It was also agreed that such provisions should be accepted by all States, Members of the United Nations, and by States seeking admission to the United Nations.

With regard to the promotion and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, the Commission felt that practical and effective measures must be taken. Each Member State must feel bound to adopt, in accordance, with its system of government, measures to safeguard the observance and to provide against the violation of those rights and freedoms that are proclaimed in an international bill. But the Commission also felt the need for an international agency of implementation, entrusted with the task of watching over the general observance of human rights, in order to prevent the recurrence of acts as monstrous as those which formed the prelude of the Second World War.*

[*] Mr. Borisov (USSR) wished it to be recorded that he had not yet been able to study sufficiently the records of the meetings of the Commission and the various documents and preferred, therefore, to abstain from voting on the question of regional conferences.

[5]

It was also pointed out that, pending the eventual establishment of such an agency, the Commission on Human Rights might assist the appropriate organs of the United Nations in the task defined for the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in Articles 13, 55, and 62 of the Charter, and that it might aid the Security Council in the task entrusted to it by Article 39 of the Charter, by pointing to cases where violation of human rights may constitute a threat to the peace.

The Commission recognized that when the Economic and Social Council comes to consider the question of how to implement an international bill of rights, it may find that political actions are necessary. This may also be the case where protection of national minorities is concerned. The Commission, therefore, requests the Economic and Social Council to take this problem into consideration in determining the status and power of the Commission on Human Rights, of its Sub-Commissions, or of any other agency established to safeguard the observance of human rights.

The Commission considered that the number of sub-commissions, for the time being, should be limited, and that in addition to the existing Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, a Sub-Commission on Freedom [sic] Information should be established.

It was agreed that the Secretariat should be instructed to collect all documentation concerning items (c) and (d) of the terms of reference [sic] protection of minorities and prevention of discrimination on grounds of

[*] Mr. Borisov (USSR) wished it to be recorded that he had not yet been able to study sufficiently the records of the meetings of the Commission and the various documents and preferred, therefore, to abstain from voting on the question of the provisions for implementation.

[6] race, sex, language, or religion – as a preliminary step to future consideration of the question of establishment of Sub-Commissions on these subjects.

Finally, the Commission agreed to express the view that public discussion of human rights should be stimulated and encouraged throughout the world.

The recommendations to the Economic and Social Council with regard to the programme of work of the Commission on Human Rights were unanimously formulated as follows:

...

B. Draft Declarations

The Commission recommends that:

1. The full Commission should draft an international bill of rights as soon as possible. The nuclear Commission should proceed with the preparations for such a bill. The draft of the international bill of rights, as completed by the full Commission should be circulated among the United Nations governments for their suggestions.

2. The detailed examination of the documents submitted by the delegations of Cuba and Panama (Documents E/HR/2 and E/HR/3) should be left to the full Commission or to a later session of the nuclear Commission.

[7]

3. The organization of regional conferences of experts should be taken under consideration. If such conferences should prove impracticable before the full Commission is convened, the advice of individual experts from different regions should be sought.*

C. Human Human Rights in International Treaties

The Commission recommends that:

without waiting for an international bill of rights to be written, the general principle should be accepted that provisions for basic human rights be included in international treaties, particularly peace treaties, that similar provisions be accepted by all States, Members of the United Nations, and by States seeking admission to the United Nations.

D. Provisions for Implementation

The Commission recommends that:

1. It shall be considered that the purpose of the United Nations with regard to the promotion and observance of human rights, as defined in the Charter of the United Nations, could only be fulfilled if provisions were made for the implementation of the observance of human rights and of an international bill of rights.
2. Pending the eventual establishment of an agency of implementation the Commission on Human Rights might be recognized as qualified to aid the appropriate organs of the United Nations in the task defined for the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in Articles 13, 55, and 62 of the Charter, concerning the promotion and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and to aid the Security Council in the task entrusted to it by Article 39 of the Charter, by pointing to cases where violation of human rights committed in one country may, by its gravity, its frequency, or its systematic nature, constitute a threat to the peace.**

...

[*] Mr. Borisov (USSR) wished it to be recorded that he had not yet been able to study sufficiently the records of the meetings of the Commission and the various documents and preferred, therefore, to abstain from voting on the question of regional conferences.

[**] Mr. Borisov (USSR) wished it to be recorded that he had not yet been able to study sufficiently the records of the meetings of the Commission and the various documents and preferred, therefore, to abstain from voting on the question of the provisions for implementation.

E/SR.18<sup>46</sup>

28 May 1946

Summary Record of the Fourth Meeting, Second Session [of the Economic and Social Council]

Tuesday, 28 May 1946 at 10:30 a.m.

President: SIR RAMASWAMI MUDALIAR (India).

12. Presentation of the Report of the Commission on Human Rights (document E/38)

THE PRESIDENT invited Mrs. Roosevelt to present the report of the Commission on Human Rights.

MRS. ROOSEVELT (United States of America), Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, pointed out that the Commission had been handicapped by the absence of three of its nine members, but had nevertheless been able to proceed with its important work and to formulate [28] recommendations to the Economic and Social Council which would make it possible for the Council to decide on the future tasks of the Commission. The Commission had decided to limit itself to recommendations concerning the immediate problems which would have to be undertaken to prepare the work of the full Commission. She pointed out that the nuclear Commission recommended the establishment of the full Commission at the earliest date, if possible before the one-year term of the members of the nuclear Commission ended, in which case the members of the nuclear Commission would be willing to resign to facilitate the Council's task of nominating the full Commission.

Mrs. Roosevelt explained that the representative of the USSR had only attended the last meetings of the Commission. He had reserved his vote on several recommendations, and had stated that the representative of the Soviet Union who had taken part and voted in the early meetings was to be considered only as an observer.

With regard to the type of membership of the full Commission, Mrs. Roosevelt stated that there had been two different opinions, one advocating Government representatives as members, and the other advocating individual experts who would not only represent their own countries but people all over the world. The Commission felt that its recommendation to the Economic and Social Council represented a reasonable compromise: namely that Member countries of the United Nations should each nominate two people, one of them not necessarily of their own nationality, and that the Economic and Social Council should appoint, from this panel, the members of the Commission, with due regard to geographic distribution and the ability of the individual.

<sup>46</sup> The text of this document is taken from Official Records of the Economic and Social Council, First Year, Second Session, 25 May 1946–21 June 1946, pp. 27–34.

Mrs. Roosevelt particularly stressed that the Secretariat had been instructed by the Commission to collect material primarily in preparation for an international bill of human rights and also concerning other problems within the terms of reference of the Commission. As this work had to be done immediately, it was important to provide the necessary expert staff at the earliest possible moment.

Mrs. Roosevelt explained that the Commission recommended the creation of only one additional sub-commission, a Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press. It had felt that the work of this Sub-Commission would be absolutely necessary in the preparation of an international bill of rights, as free information formed the basis for public opinion and any bill of human rights could be enforced only by informed public opinion and would be worthless without such enforcement.

Mrs. Roosevelt stated that the Commission had realized that political questions might arise [29] in connexion with its work, and expressed the hope that the Economic and Social Council would keep these problems in view.

Concerning the report of the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, presented to the Economic and Social Council through the Commission on Human Rights, Mrs. Roosevelt pointed out that the Commission had chosen the most important recommendations of the Sub-Commission's report and incorporated them in its own report.

THE PRESIDENT thanked Mrs. Roosevelt and stated that the Economic and Social Council realized that the problem concerning the type of membership of the commissions would have to be solved by the Council and that the different views would be taken into consideration. He expressed the hope that most of the members of the nuclear Commission on Human Rights would continue to serve whatever type of membership the Council decided to establish. He stated that the problem of freedom of information and of the press had been considered in San Francisco, and the Council fully realized its importance.

...

E/SR.19<sup>47</sup>

31 May 1946

Summary Record of the Fifth Meeting, Second Session [of the Economic and Social Council]

Friday, 31 May 1946 at 10:30 a.m.

President: SIR RAMASWAMI MUDALIAR (India).

<sup>47</sup> The text of this document is taken from Official Records of the Economic and Social Council, First Year, Second Session, 25 May 1946–21 June 1946, pp. 34–41.

...

[35]

...

18. Consideration of the Report of the Commission on Human Rights (document E/38)

THE PRESIDENT opened the discussion on the report of the Commission on Human Rights (annex 4, page 224).

MR. FEONOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) stated that the establishment and observance of human rights was, with justification, placed first in the Charter among the objectives of the United Nations. He pointed out that in the Soviet Union human rights were not only provided for in the Constitution, but that violation against the observance of human rights was punishable by law. All citizens of the Soviet Union enjoyed all the basic freedoms of citizenship, regardless of race, sex or nationality. He then read the articles of the Soviet Constitution dealing with basic human rights: article 118 dealing with the right to work; article 119 on the right to rest and leisure; article 120 on the right to old age and sickness insurance; article 121 on the right to education; article 122 on equal rights of women and the protection of mother and child; article 123 on equal rights of all citizens, regardless of race and nationality.

Mr. Feonov pointed out that the Economic and Social Council, in determining the terms of reference of the Commission on Human Rights, had established four large fields in which the Commission should work:

(a) Preparation of an international bill of rights;

[36]

(b) Freedom of information;

(c) Protection of minorities;

(d) Elimination of discrimination based on race, sex, language or religion.

While the nuclear Commission had, in its report, touched upon all four of these, it had recommended the creation of only one sub-commission, namely, a Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press. Where protection of minorities and elimination of discrimination were concerned, it had simply directed the Secretariat to collect material preliminary to the creation of a sub-commission in the future. Mr. Feonov felt that these fields were as important as others, as, even in some of the most highly developed countries, rights of minorities were not respected, and elimination of discrimination was a very important problem.

Regarding the composition of the full Commission, Mr. Feonov agreed as to the number of members, but advocated that they should all be representatives of their Governments as they would be more qualified to develop practical solutions of the problems with which they had to deal.

As to regional conferences of experts, which the Commission had recommended, Mr. Feonov saw certain financial and organizational difficulties and suggested that the Commission might instead invite from time to time individual experts or ask them for their written advice.

He felt that too little was known about the character of the proposed international agency of implementation and further explanation would be necessary before a decision could be taken. The same was true of provisions for human rights in international agreements and, in particular, in peace treaties.

MR. WINANT<sup>48</sup> (United States of America) announced that the United States delegation agreed with the recommendations made by all nuclear commissions concerning the composition of the full commissions, with the exception of the Temporary Social Commission and the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women. It did, however, agree with the recommendations of the Commission on Human Rights regarding the membership of the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women. As to the Temporary Social Commission, the United States delegation preferred the suggestion which had been discussed, but not accepted, by the Commission that members should be appointed by the Economic and Social Council. If the recommendations of the Temporary Social Commission were followed, it would be the only commission in which a part of the members would be appointed directly by Governments.

The United States delegation had hoped that the nuclear commissions would present panels [37] of candidates for the full commissions. As this had not been the case, Mr. Winant suggested that the Economic and Social Council should decide, at its present session, which countries should be represented on the commissions, so that at its next session it could establish them from the nominations offered by the countries which were to be represented. He proposed that any member of the nuclear Commission who might not be elected to the full Commission should continue to serve until 31 March 1947, but that this should not count against the total number of members decided upon by the Economic and Social Council. Members of commissions should not be appointed only from among the countries represented on the Economic and Social Council.

Mr. Winant reported that the United States Government attached special importance to the creation of a Sub-Commission on freedom of information and the press, and recommended that this Sub-Commission should co-operate closely with UNESCO. He questioned the practicability or desirability of establishing information groups or local human rights committees, as the information they might provide could more easily be provided by the Member Governments of the United Nations themselves, and pointed out that the Member nations had pledged themselves to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all. Mr. Winant stressed that the problems of implementation were much broader than the establishment of an agency of implementation, but would call for the development of procedures which would involve different organs of the United Nations and would require action by the Member States.

<sup>48</sup> John Gilbert Winant (1889–1947) was an American politician associated with the Republican Party. He served as United States Ambassador to the United Kingdom from 1941 to 1946 and was United States representative to UNESCO.

He then expressed the appreciation of the United States delegation for the report of the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, and stated that his delegation endorsed the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights concerning the Sub-Commission.

MR. DEHOUSSE (Belgium) compared the provisions for respect of and observance of human rights in the Covenant of the League<sup>49</sup> with those of the Charter of the United Nations. He pointed out that the League had provided for the protection of minorities, a protection which had territorial limitations and which could be watched only in specific countries, while the Charter was valid all over the world. This provision in the League Covenant had created discontent and made any real protection impossible. On the other hand, the League Covenant provided for a system of control and guarantees, while the Charter did not include methods of supervision.

Mr. Dehousse stated that his Government would at the appropriate time ask for consideration of this grave omission in the Charter. The Belgian Government, therefore, felt that the recommendation for “provisions for implement- [38] tation” contained in the report of the Commission on Human Rights was of capital importance. He pointed out that an organ of implementation would not be enough and that, in all probability, the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council would have to cooperate to secure respect for human rights. He considered the yearbook provided for in the recommendations of the Commission as an important contribution towards the implementation of a bill of rights.

Mr. Dehousse suggested that the Commission would have to take up other problems later on, and stated that his Government would, at a later stage, recommend that the right to work should be included in an international bill of human rights and should also be incorporated in the constitutions of Member countries. He suggested that the Commission on Human Rights, or its Sub-Commission, should prepare an international convention concerning freedom of information and the press, as this freedom had been abused too often. Decisions of the League had been systematically distorted, and the proposed convention would ensure that the press and radio published and disseminated correct information about the United Nations. Such a convention should, naturally, not interfere with national freedom of the press.

<sup>49</sup> The Covenant of the League of Nations was adopted in 1919 at the Paris Peace Conference and entered into force in January 1920. It made no explicit reference either to human rights or to minorities. Dehousse was referring to the system of protection of minorities that developed under the aegis of the League through a variety of multilateral and bilateral agreements and unilateral declarations.

Mr. Dehousse recalled that his Government had made reservations concerning government representation on the commissions of the Economic and Social Council, and felt strongly that the members of the commissions should be non-governmental experts.

MR. NOEL-BAKER (United Kingdom) agreed with Mr. Feonov that the Soviet Union had made great progress in social legislation; he emphasized, however, that there was still much to be done and that the Charter of the United Nations provided a good foundation for further progress. He stressed that the establishment of human rights all over the world was essential to democracy in all its forms if peace were to be maintained. He hoped that the statement of fundamental freedoms could be contained in an international bill of rights to be drawn up before the next session of the General Assembly.

Mr. Noel-Baker stated that the Government of the United Kingdom agreed with Mr. Winant's suggestion concerning the establishment of the commissions, and proposed that a sub-committee of the Council be set up to consider their composition. He felt that the members, especially the Commission on Human Rights, must feel free to raise questions which might embarrass Governments, and they could hardly do so if they represented Governments.

Concerning the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press, he recalled that the delegation of the Philippines had proposed an international press conference to the General Assembly and that the proposal had been ruled [39] out of order at that time. He suggested that such a conference was of vital importance. Mr. Noel-Baker agreed with Mr. Dehousse that provisions must be found to prevent distortion of the truth and irresponsibility in the use of information. He suggested that the idea of regional conferences and ad hoc working committees could be worked out in greater detail by the Commission on Human Rights and should be presented to the next session of the Economic and Social Council. The Council should not, however, reject the idea, as such groups might ultimately be valuable to the Commission and might make it possible for the Commission to help different countries.

He agreed that basic provisions for the basic principles of human rights and fundamental freedoms should be contained in treaties and that, therefore, the Commission should draw up such basic principles before the next session of the General Assembly.

Mr. Noel-Baker felt that the provisions for implementation should be carefully considered and worked out. Ultimately, action by the Member Governments themselves would be required. The Commission on Human Rights might, by its world prestige, itself become an agency of implementation. He suggested that the yearbook which was to be published would contribute towards implementation and proposed that a clause might be included in the terms of reference for the International Court of Justice, concerning the implementation of human rights. The most important step, however, would be if each nation considered such a bill of rights as part of its own national law.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) pointed out that his country was deeply interested in the fight for freedom of thought and conscience, and had always been a haven for persecuted minorities. He, therefore, welcomed the creation and effective implementation of an international bill of rights. He suggested that such a bill must provide not only for freedom of thought and conscience, but for the freedom of being and of becoming what one's conscience required one to become, that is to say, freedom to change.

While he felt that provisions for basic human freedoms in peace treaties were important, he pointed out that not all countries were signatories to peace treaties. All countries should, therefore, be bound by treaties to accept an international bill of rights, and no country should be admitted to membership of the United Nations without accepting it. Provisions for implementation would have to be found, as without them all discussions of human rights would be futile. He favoured individuals as members of the Commission on Human Rights.

[40]

MR. ARCA PARRÓ (Peru) felt that the Commission on Human Rights should have provided for corresponding members as they would be invaluable in its work and especially for contributions to the yearbook. He suggested that a decision about information groups or local human rights committees should be postponed until the full Commission was established and it was known what additional sub-commissions would have to be created. He expressed his sympathy with the recommendations of the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, but felt that the Sub-Commission should not be given independent status.

MR. ARGYROPOULOS<sup>50</sup> (Greece) pointed out that the Greek people had always fought for human rights at all times and had made their contribution to the development of those rights. He agreed that it was absolutely necessary to find practical means to influence the attitude of the peoples towards the United Nations, but he questioned the desirability of adopting a step which would force the press to publish information emanating from the United Nations and which might mean a revision of the constitutions of many countries. He did not think it would be possible to insert such a restriction in the Greek Constitution. He therefore suggested that other means be found to reach the same goal without limiting freedom of the press in the different countries.

<sup>50</sup> Alexandre J. Argyropoulos was born in Athens in 1894 and served in various posts for the Greek Ministry of Foreign Affairs from 1919–1932. In 1932, he was appointed head of the Economic and Commercial Division of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Athens and served on the Economic and Social Council in 1946.

The continuation of the discussion was adjourned to the next meeting.

...

E/SR.20<sup>51</sup>

31 May 1946

Summary Record of the Sixth Meeting, Second Session [of the Economic and Social Council]

Friday, 31 May 1946 at 2:45 p.m.

President: SIR RAMASWAMI MUDALIAR (India).

20. Consideration of the Report of the Commission on Human Rights (continuation) (document E/38, annex A, page 224)

MR. COLBJOERNSEN (Norway) supported the proposal of the Soviet Union that members of all the Commissions should be government representatives, as, in his view, they could work more efficiently and would be in a better position to get decisions accepted by their respective Governments. He drew attention to the Report of the Preparatory Commission (chapter III, section 4, paragraph 37) which suggested that “most commissions should contain a majority of responsible highly qualified governmental representatives.” He felt that Governments should appoint the most qualified people and that the responsibility ought to be placed directly on the Governments. He considered it premature to approve en bloc the recommendations of the commissions concerning membership and felt that the question should be left open and a compromise reached later. He agreed with Mr. Noel-Baker that a sub-committee on the membership of the commissions would be useful.

MR. CHANG (China) congratulated the Commission on Human Rights on behalf of the Chinese delegation, and especially its Chairman, for the results achieved. He suggested that it was important, during the discussion on human rights, not only to consider details of immediate work, but to keep in mind the larger issues which were involved. He pointed out that human rights were too large a concept for one [42] commission and that all other organs of the United Nations were concerned with the carrying out of this concept. He recalled the development of human rights during the last one hundred and fifty years and felt that there existed now a new humanism, as otherwise there would be no incentive for the efforts that were made. Those incentives must be the ideals of human freedom and human dignity.

<sup>51</sup> The text of this document is taken from Official Records of the Economic and Social Council, First Year, Second Session, 25 May 1946–21 June 1946, pp. 41–49.

MR. MATTES (Yugoslavia) announced that the Government of Yugoslavia approved the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights concerning an international bill of rights. He pointed out that provisions for human rights were contained in many constitutions, but that different countries were at different stages of development and therefore had varying provisions for human rights and different measures for implementation. Every bill represented a crystallization of existing achievement in legal form. He, therefore, felt that those who would be responsible for an international bill of rights should be representatives of their Governments and speak in the name of their respective countries. He suggested that item (e) of paragraph 16 in chapter III, section 4, of the Report of the Preparatory Commission, which had been left out of the terms of reference given to the Commission by the Economic and Social Council, should be included again. As the achievements were not the same in all countries, it would be necessary for the Commission to agree on basic principles which were common to all. One of the principles which the Yugoslav Government considered basic was the principle of social and economic security.

He pointed out that the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press would have to develop safeguards against misuse of information, as those safeguards were necessary to provide organized implementation. As to the agency of implementation suggested by the Commission, he felt that further information would be necessary before that question could be decided.

THE PRESIDENT pronounced closed the discussion on the report of the Commission on Human Rights.

...

E/56

5 June 1946

Draft Resolution of the Economic and Social Council

Commission on Human Rights

(Working draft prepared by the Secretariat on the basis of the Report of the nuclear Commission)

The Economic and Social Council, having considered the Report of the nuclear Commission on Human Rights of 21 May 1946 (E/38/Rev.1)

Decides as Follows:

1. Functions

The functions of the Commission on Human Rights shall be those set forth in the terms of reference of the Commission approved by the Economic and Social Council in its Resolution of 16 February 1946, with the addition to paragraph 2 of that Resolution of a new sub-paragraph (e) as follows:

“(e) any other matter concerning human rights not covered by items (a), (b), (c), and (d).”.

...

[3]

...

6. Declarations

The Commission is requested to draft an international bill of rights as soon as possible. The draft of this bill shall be circulated to the Members of the United Nations for their suggestions.

(No adequate draft on the following two points can be proposed until there has been further discussion and clarification).

7. Human Rights in International Treaties

Pending the writing of an international bill of rights, the general principle shall be accepted that provisions for basic human rights be included in international treaties, particularly peace treaties, and that similar provisions be accepted by all States, Members of the United Nations, and by States seeking admission to the United Nations.

8. Provisions for Implementation

Considering that the purpose of the United Nations with regard to the promotion and observance of human rights, as defined in the Charter of the United Nations, can only be fulfilled if provisions are made for the implementation of the observance of human rights and of an international bill of rights, the Council decides that, pending the eventual establishment of an agency of implementation, the Commission of Human Rights shall be recognized as qualified to aid the appropriate organs of the United Nations in the task defined for the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in Articles 13, 55, and 62 of the Charter, concerning the promotion and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and to aid the Security Council in the task entrusted to it by Article 39 of the Charter, by pointing to cases where violation of human rights committed in one country may, by its gravity, its frequency, or its systematic nature, constitute a threat to the peace.

...

E/56/Rev.1*19 June 1946

Draft Resolution Concerning the Report of the Commission on Human Rights

Submitted by the Drafting Committee on the Social Commissions

The Economic and Social Council, having considered the Report of the nuclear Commission on Human Rights of 21 May 1946 (E/38/Rev.1)

Decides as Follows:

1. Functions

The functions of the Commission on Human Rights shall be those set forth in the terms of reference of the Commission approved by the Economic and Social Council in its Resolution of 16 February 1946, with the addition to paragraph 2 of that Resolution of a new sub-paragraph (e) as follows:

“(e) any other matter concerning human rights not covered by items (a), (b), (c), and (d).”.

...

[2]

...

[Paragraph 5 of E/38 entitled “Declarations” does not appear in E/38/Rev.1].

...

6. Human Rights in International Treaties

Pending the adoption of an international bill of rights, the general principle shall be accepted that international treaties involving basic human rights, including to the fullest extent practicable treaties of peace, shall conform to the fundamental standards relative to such rights set forth in the Charter.

7. Provisions for Implementation

Considering that the purpose of the United Nations with regard to the promotion and observance of human rights, as defined in the Charter of the United Nations, can only be fulfilled if provisions are made for the implementation of human rights and of an international bill of rights, the Council requests the Commission of Human Rights to submit at an early date suggestions regarding the ways and means for the effective implementation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, with a view to assisting the Economic and Social Council in working out arrangements for such implementation with other appropriate organs of the United Nations.

...

E/SR.29<sup>52</sup>

21 June 1946

Summary Record of the Twenty-Ninth Meeting
[of the Economic and Social Council]

Friday, 21 June 1946, at 3 p.m.

...

[133]

...

46. Draft Resolution concerning the Report of the Commission on Human Rights: Text proposed by the Drafting Committee (document E/56/Rev.1)<sup>2</sup>

MR. FEONOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) referred to the discussions in Committee on article 6 regarding the recognition in the peace treaties of the principle of human rights, and repeated his reasons for wishing the article to be suppressed.

After some discussion, in which several members of the Council spoke in favour of retaining the text, Mr. Feonov said that he would not press his objections.

MR. WINANT (United States of America), in thanking his Soviet colleague for this action, said that the United States delegation had tried to find a formula satisfactory to all, as it felt it most necessary to make some provision for the respect of human rights in the interim period before the international bill of rights could be drawn up. He believed that nothing but good would come from the inclusion of this paragraph.

THE PRESIDENT said that when the resolution had been adopted, clause 8 on the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women would form a separate resolution.

Decision: The Resolution was adopted unanimously.

...

<sup>[2]</sup> Ibid., page 400.

[134]

...

<sup>52</sup> The text of the document is taken from Official Records of the Economic and Social Council, First Year, Second Session, pp. 115–139.

E/RES/9(II)<sup>53</sup>

21 June 1946

Commission on Human Rights
Resolution Adopted 21 June 1946
[Resolution 9(II) of the Economic and Social Council]

The Economic and Social Council, having considered the Report of the nuclear Commission on Human Rights of 21 May 1946 (E/38/Rev.1)

Decides as Follows:

1. Functions

The functions of the Commission on Human Rights shall be those set forth in the terms of reference of the Commission approved by the Economic and Social Council in its Resolution of 16 February 1946, with the addition to paragraph 2 of that Resolution of a new sub-paragraph (e) as follows:

“(e) any other matter concerning human rights not covered by items (a), (b), (c), and (d).”.

...

[2]

...

6. Human Rights in International Treaties

Pending the adoption of an international bill of rights, the general principle shall be accepted that international treaties involving basic human rights, including to the fullest extent practicable treaties of peace, shall conform to the fundamental standards relative to such rights set forth in the Charter.

[3]

7. Provisions for Implementation

Considering that the purpose of the United Nations with regard to the promotion and observance of human rights, as defined in the Charter of the United Nations, can only be fulfilled if provisions are made for the implementation of human rights and of an international bill of rights, the Council requests the Commission on Human Rights to submit at an early date suggestions regarding the ways and means for the effective implementation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, with a view to assisting the Economic and Social Council in working out arrangements for such implementation with other appropriate organs of the United Nations.

...

<sup>53</sup> Also issued as E/56/Rev.2.

A/65

30 June 1946

Report of the Secretary-General on the Work of the Organization

...

[18]

4. Commission on Human Rights

In setting up the Commission on Human Rights, the Council decided, at its first session in February 1946, that in view of its responsibilities under the Charter for promoting universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms, the work of the Commission should consist of the preparation of proposals, reports and recommendations on an international bill of rights, international declarations or conventions on civil liberties, the status of women, freedom of information, the protection of minorities and the prevention of discrimination on grounds of race, sex, language, or religion.

...

The Council further decided that pending the adoption of an international bill of rights, the general principle shall be accepted that international treaties involving basic human rights, including to the fullest extent practicable treaties of peace, shall conform to the fundamental standards relative to such rights set forth in the Charter.

E/CT.2/2

20 August 1946

Committee on Arrangements for Consultation with Non-Governmental Organizations

Letter from Mr. Matthew Woll<sup>54</sup> and Mr. David Dubinsky,<sup>55</sup> Consultants representing the American Federation of Labor<sup>56</sup> to Mr. Trygve Lie, Secretary-General of the United Nations.

(Circulated for the information of the Members of the Council in accordance with Part IV, paragraph 2 of the Report of the Committee on Arrangements for

<sup>54</sup> Matthew Woll (1880–1956) was a vice president of the American Federation of Labor from 1919 to 1955.

<sup>55</sup> David Dubinsky (1892–1982) was president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union from 1932 to 1966.

<sup>56</sup> The American Federation of Labor was established in 1886 as an association of craft unions. In 1955, it amalgamated with industrial unions to form the AFL-CIO.

Consultation with Non-Governmental Organizations (E/43/Rev.2 of 1 July 1946).

American Federation of Labor

New York, New York
August 9, 1946

Hon. Trygve Lie, Secretary-General
United Nations Organization
Box #63 Hunter College, New York

Dear Mr. Lie:

Acting under principles approved and as noted in the Revised Report of the Committee on Arrangements and as applied to organizations in Category A, the undersigned are the consultants selected by and representative of the American Federation of Labor for consideration and approval by the appropriate committee having this subject in hand.

We are prompted in submitting this statement of an International Bill of Rights under Section 4, Paragraph 2, entitled – “Arrangements for Consultation With the Council”, and will appreciate your circulating this statement and suggestion to members of the Council in addition to its reference to a committee competent to deal with the subject embraced.

We will likewise appreciate being advised to which Committee this proposed International Bill of Rights may be submitted, and we do hope an opportunity will be accorded the undersigned to consult, with regard to subjects in this proposed International Bill of Rights, with the committee to which this statement has been referred.

Appreciative of your early and favourable response,

Respectfully yours,

Matthew Woll
David Dubinsky
Consultants representing the American Federation of Labor

[2]

International Bill of Rights Proposal Submitted by American Federation of Labor

For consideration and action by United Nations – Social and Economic Council.

[3]

I Preamble

Although first responsibility for the maintenance of human rights and freedom rests with the local community of the nation, we now live in an interdependent world in which these basic rights and freedoms can be effectively guaranteed and expanded only on an international scale. We must not only make nations safe for freedom, but we must also make freedom safe for the individuals who constitute the various nations. Otherwise, the peoples will be helpless and unable to prevent aggressor governments from launching wars. A nation under the heel of a despotic government inevitably tends to be despotic in its relations with other nations. Despotism in any nation menaces the peace of every nation.

The dynamic motive of a truly democratic society is to foster and enhance the worth and dignity of the individual human being – the basic unit of human society. Hence, the first pre-occupation of every democratic and progressive state is the welfare of the individual. The state has no good other than the good of its individual members, present and prospective – its supreme test is the way in which it provides for the full and free development of each individual. The more rights enjoyed by individuals and the more individuals for whom these rights of free development are safeguarded, the more democratic will any society be.

II War and Peace

Mankind is developing towards an international order. That order can be one of two kinds. There can be a community of nations in which military power is completely subordinated to the public welfare. In such an order, military preparedness and armaments are systematically reduced as instruments of national defence or offence in international relations. But there can also be an international order in which the economic welfare of the people is subordinated to military order and to the preparations for waging warfare.

To help avoid the renewal of an international armament race which would absorb the best energies, devour the greatest wealth of the contestants, and [4] inevitably lead to another global war is the paramount task of the United Nations. This task is urgent. It cannot be postponed to some future indefinite date. The time to reduce the staggering and crushing burden of armaments is now. The United Nations should, therefore, do everything in its power to have particularly the leading countries jointly adopt a policy of positive, gradual, and systematic reduction of armaments of all categories, descriptions and services.

Total preparedness and total war are incompatible with the welfare and liberties of the people of all countries. Total preparedness and total war doom freedom and genuine prosperity and breed poverty and tyranny. Hence, without an effective system of international security to prevent economic aggrandizement and preclude territorial and military aggression the possibility for protecting human rights and expanding human welfare on a firm foundation is doomed to failure.

Humanity has reached a stage of development in which the efforts, actions and struggles of all peoples against poverty and tyranny must be coordinated – if progress and prosperity are to be assured. Only a world peace settlement in which the preservation and promotion of the human rights and welfare of all peoples are primary objectives can be just and enduring.

III Democracy and Dictatorship<sup>57</sup>

Mankind's paramount need is the preservation and expansion of human rights through the strengthening of democracy everywhere. Although the military struggle against Nazi-Fascist aggression has been victoriously concluded, the people in many parts of the world – in the victorious as well as the defeated lands – are still denied those basic rights which are the essence of freedom and the web and woof of the democratic way of life.

Every victorious nation – no less than the vanquished – must, within its own borders, place in the forefront of its tasks the advancement of democracy and the standards of social wellbeing.

[5]

No peaceful, democratic, world order can be built on a foundation of fear and famine, on a basis of poverty and pestilence. The introduction and expansion of democratic rights for the people of every nation are, therefore, imperative in the interest of international security. Equally vital to world peace and prosperity is the energetic resistance to all encroachments on the existing democratic liberties and social economic rights of the people.

Democracy may vary in particulars in one country from another. But certain conditions must exist for its realization or democracy becomes a sham and disappears altogether. There must be a certain minimum of civil liberties, the rule of law, freedom from arbitrary arrest, detention, search and seizure, prompt judicial determination of arrest and charges against the individual detained, a fair public trial by jury or competent and unprejudiced court constituted in accordance with normal judicial procedure, the right of habeas corpus, freedom from arbitrary imposition of penalties, freedom of access to information and freedom of association and organization – cultural, political, religious, economic. There must be universal and secret balloting. There must be no one-party system or any compulsory combination of parties or merging of election lists under terroristic coercion or indirect duress. There must be unrestricted participation by all parties in public life.

<sup>57</sup> This is listed erroneously as 'II' in the original.

In a truly democratic society certain rights are sacred and inalienable and should not be abrogated by decree of law. Such rights must be recognized as the rights of all men. They transcend even the strongest strategic frontiers and boundaries fixed by states. Democracy is the antithesis of dictatorship or totalitarianism one-party rule in any guise. Democracy and dictatorship are incompatible. Democracy is conducive to peaceful international relations, while dictatorship breeds war. Nor is there any such thing as dictatorial democracy. Democracy is representative; dictatorship is repressive. The fact that one dictatorship may be less barbarous in certain [6] respects than another totalitarian regime does not make it democratic.

IV Basic Human Rights

Without freedom from fear of tyranny by abolitionist bureaucrats or dictators and without freedom from want, there can be no political or industrial democracy within nations or just relations and enduring peace between nations.

Only by removing the political, economic, and social ills and maladjustments afflicting humanity, will mankind be able to reach that long hoped for stage of civilization in which peace and plenty shall truly prevail.

In this spirit, the American Federation of Labor proposes to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations that it draft an International Bill of Rights which shall be part of the general peace treaty and be binding on all its signatories. We propose that this International Bill of Rights shall include the following provisions:

1. Every human being – irrespective of race, colour, creed, sex or national origin – has the right to pursue his or her work and spiritual development in conditions of freedom and dignity.
2. Freedom of expression and association is vital to the preservation of the basic liberties and the enhancement of the spiritual and material progress of the human race. These rights must be inviolate for those who oppose, no less than for those who support, a ruling party or a regime at any specific moment.

Genuine freedom means the right of association and organization into various, into differing, educational, religious, economic, political and trade union organizations, without fear of the threat of direct or indirect control and compulsion by governmental or any other agencies.

3. The right to organize and work for a constantly more equitable distribution of the national income and wealth and the right to strive for the enhancement of the moral and material wellbeing of the people [7] for better health and security against the ravages of unemployment, accidents, sickness and old age – are to be considered inalienable.

The conditions of work under modern large-scale industry make it especially necessary for the working people to have an effective system of social legislation which will provide minimum wages; maximum working hours; guarantee against the employment of child labour; adequate medical care; accident, unemployment and old-age insurance and other such vital measures making for effective social security of the population.

4. Raise labour standards throughout the world. There is no more effective way of stimulating the revival of production and the international expansion of markets than by increasing the purchasing power of the great mass of people in every country.
5. Freedom of religion and right to religious worship are indispensable to a truly democratic society.
6. The right of asylum is to be guaranteed by all nations. No human being who is a refugee from any political regime he disapproves is to be forced to return to territory under the sovereignty of that regime.
7. The right to migrate or leave temporarily or permanently a country in which a citizen does not want to remain must be assured, limited only by the laws of immigration of the country which he may wish to visit.
8. There must be freedom of opinion and expression and full access to the opinions of others.
9. The more full and complete knowledge of the world is extended and realized by the peoples of all nations, the less will be the distance and misunderstandings between nations and people. Therefore, the right of the free access to, and exchange of information, scientific, economic, social, religious and political, the promotion of knowledge and of cultural relations, the full and free dissemination of news by radio and press must be assured.

[8]

10. Involuntary servitude in any shape, manner or form or under any guise shall be outlawed and discontinued by all nations and all peoples.
11. Freedom from arbitrary arrest, detention, search and seizure; proper judicial determination of arrest and charges; a fair public trial by jury or competent and unprejudiced court constituted in accordance with normal judicial procedure, right of habeas corpus and freedom from arbitrary imposition of penalties.
12. The key to the entire approach of human rights must be the placing of respect for human personality and welfare above all else. In this spirit, the above rights can have tangible meaning and practical application only if -
  - a. All human beings have real security and are free from discrimination on account of race, colour, creed or difference of political belief from the government in control or the party in power.
  - b. There is to be no peacetime conscription or militarization of workers protesting or striking against conditions of labour which they consider as unfair or unsatisfactory.
  - c. All economic or political discrimination and punishment for differences of political opinion or religious belief and practices are to be eliminated.

The threat of being sent to concentration or labour camps as a punishment for difference of opinion with any government authority or dominant political party must be completely removed.

- d. Freedom from censorship of books, press, radio and art, having due regard to the requirements of morals and decency.
- e. Freedom from the terror of secret police surveillance, arrest or torture. This can be assured only through the abolition of all political police and concentration camps in every country.

[9]

V Conclusion

The foregoing shall constitute our International Bill of Rights which shall be fully observed and safeguarded in every country. Toward the attainment of these ends, there should be established an International Commission charged with the task of facilitation and coordinating the promotion and protection of the basic provisions of the International Bill of Rights.

A/101

10 October 1946

Draft Declarations on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms and on Rights and Duties of States

The following cable has been received by the Secretary-General from His Excellency Mr. R. J. Alfaro,<sup>58</sup> Minister of Foreign Affairs of Panama:

ON BEHALF OF THE GOVERNMENT OF PANAMA, I HAVE THE HONOUR TO REQUEST THAT THE PROVISIONAL AGENDA OF THE SECOND PART OF THE FIRST SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY TO COMMENCE ON 23 SEPTEMBER NEXT SHOULD INCLUDE CONSIDERATION OF THE DRAFTS SUBMITTED BY THE DELEGATION OF PANAMA AT THE FIRST PART OF THE FIRST SESSION HELD IN LONDON, NAMELY; A DECLARATION ON FUNDAMENTAL HUMAN RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS, AND A DECLARATION ON THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF STATES.

<sup>58</sup> Ricardo Joaquín Alfaro Jované (1882–1971) was President of Panama from 1931–1932. He led the United Nations Relief and Recovery Administration in Latin America in 1945. He served on the International Law Commission from 1949 to 1953.

A/118*16 October 1946

Provisional Agenda for the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly

Supplementary List of Items

...

6. Draft declaration on fundamental human rights and freedoms and on the rights and duties of states. (Item proposed by Panama)

...

[2]

...

12. Matters referred to the General Assembly by the Economic and Social Council at its third session:

(a) Report of the Economic and Social Council

...

A/125*21 October 1946

Report by the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly
Covering period 23 January 1946 – 3 October 1946

...

[42]

Commission on Human Rights

46. At its first Session, the Council established a commission on Human Rights in “nuclear” form, to report on the functions and scope of work of the Permanent Commission on Human Rights. The “nuclear” Commission fully realized the great importance of the task entrusted to it under the Charter of the United Nations. The examination of documents submitted by Members of the United Nations led to a general discussion on the necessity of achieving and promoting the recognition of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, in the hope of drawing from the last World War the lessons which would aid the peoples to achieve the highest aspirations of mankind. Moreover, the Commission paid special attention to plans and suggestions presented to it through hearings by qualified representatives of national and international organizations. The Commission recommended that the full Commission should draft an international bill of rights and that the draft, as completed by the full Commission, should be circulated among the Governments of the United Nations for their suggestions.

47. The Council considered the recommendations of the “nuclear” Commission during its Second Session, and adopted for the Permanent Commission the terms of reference of the “nuclear” Commission with the addition of paragraph (e) below, as follows:

“The work of the Commission shall be directed towards submitting proposals, recommendations and reports to the Council regarding:

(a) an international bill of rights;

...”

[43]

48. ...

Human Rights in International Treaties. The Council decided as follows:

“Pending the adoption of an international bill of rights, the general principle shall be accepted that international treaties involving basic human rights, including to the fullest extent practicable treaties of peace, shall conform to the fundamental standards relative to such rights set forth in the Charter”.

Provisions for Implementation. The “nuclear” Commission felt that the [44] promotion and observance of human rights, as defined in the Charter of the United Nations, could only be fulfilled if provisions were made for the implementation of the observance of human rights and of an international bill of rights.

...

A/148

24 October 1946

Statement of Essential Human Rights Presented by the Delegation of Panama
(Provisional Agenda for the Second Part of the First Session)
Item 6 of the Supplementary List

[The text is identical to that of E/HR/3, reproduced above.]

A/C.3/W.2

26 October 1946

Data Paper Prepared by the Secretariat on Draft Declarations Submitted by the Government of Panama on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms and on the Rights and Duties of States

Two draft declarations on Fundamental Rights and Freedoms and on the Rights and Duties of States (Document 2.G/7(g)2)) were brought before the San Francisco Conference on International organization by the Government of Panama, as suggested amendments to Chapter I of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. They were considered in Committee I, Commission I, which dealt with general provisions. This Committee also considered two draft declarations on the same subjects that had been submitted by the Government of Cuba (Document 2.G/14/g), as suggested amendments to Chapter II of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

The Government of Cuba proposed that these latter drafts be given first consideration in the discussions of the Committee; but this proposal was ruled out by the Chairman (Document 382, J/1/9). As a result, the Committee took no action in respect of either the Cuban or the Panamanian drafts.

The Government of Cuba asked that a resolution concerning the two Cuban drafts be included on the agenda of the First Part of the First Session of the Assembly in London; but the General Committee of the Assembly decided that this was not appropriate. "With regard to the Declaration of International Duties and Rights of Man", the General Committee said, "there was ample provision for discussion of this matter in that part of Chapter III of the Report of the Preparatory Commission which recommends the establishment of a Commission of Human Rights and outlines the functions and competence of that Commission" (A/BUR/6, p. 3). The proposal was later brought to the floor of the Assembly but was again defeated (Journal of the General Assembly, First Session, No. 5, pp. 95–100).

[2]

At the same First Part of the First Session of the Assembly, the Government of Panama submitted the draft declaration on the Essential Rights of Man that had already been submitted to the San Francisco Conference and a revised draft of its Declaration of Rights and Duties of States (A§19); but the General Assembly did not discuss the drafts.

The Cuban and Panamanian drafts were mentioned on the agenda of the Nuclear Commission on Human Rights (E/HR/5) and were distributed to the members of the Commission (E/HR/1) and (E/HR/3).

In its report to the Second Session of the Economic and Social Council, the Nuclear Commission recommended that “the detailed examination of the documents submitted by the delegations of Cuba and Panama (Documents E/HR/1 and E/HR/3) should be left to the full Commission or to a later session of the Nuclear Commission.” (Journal of the Economic and Social Council, No. 14, pp. 163–4)

The Nuclear Commission also agreed “that, while the Nuclear Commission has the right to draft a Bill of Rights, it is not as yet in a position to do so but will proceed with the preparation for such a bill; that the full Commission itself should draft an international Bill of Rights, and should establish sub-commissions for that purpose, if necessary. This draft should be circulated among United Nations governments for their suggestions.”

“The Chairman did not consider it necessary or advisable to circulate the Cuban or Panamanian declarations with the draft bill of the Commission.” (E/HR/15)

Reference must also be made to the fact that, on 9 August 1946, the American Federation of Labor, which is a non-governmental organization possessing consultative status, category A, transmitted to the Secretary-General a draft International Bill of Rights (Document E/CT.2/2).

A/140

29 October 1946

Draft Agenda for the Second Part of the First Session Report of the General Committee to the General Assembly

The General Committee, in accordance with Rule 33 of the Provisional Rules of Procedure, considered at its 19th and 20th meetings on 24 and 25 October 1946 the Provisional Agenda and the Supplementary List, and reports thereon to the General Assembly as follows:

1. The General Committee recommends that the items which appear on the Provisional Agenda (document A/46) and the Supplementary List (document A/118) be placed on the Agenda of the General Assembly.

...

4. The Agenda recommended by the General Committee for adoption by the General Assembly is, therefore, as follows:

Agenda for the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly

...

[4]

...

40. Draft declaration on fundamental human rights and freedoms and on the rights and duties of states. (Item proposed by Panama)

...

A/PV.46<sup>59</sup>

31 October 1946

Forty-Fifth Meeting [of the General Assembly]

Held on Wednesday, 31 October 1946, 4 p.m.

...

[931]

THE PRESIDENT (translated from French): The second matter concerns item 40 on the agenda, the draft declaration on fundamental human rights and freedoms and on the rights and duties of States, concerning which the Panamanian delegation has submitted a proposal (documents A/19, A/101 and A/148).

The General Committee recommends that this proposal be sent simultaneously to the First and Third Committees for general discussion; the Chairmen of these Committees will have to arrange the procedure for joint discussion of that part of the proposal.

Adopted.

...

A/BUR/40

2 November 1946

Report on consultation between the Secretary-General and the Chairman of the First and Third Committees concerning item 6 on the supplementary list

Draft Declaration on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms and on the Rights and Duties of States
(Item Proposed by Panama)

At the twentieth meeting of the General Committee the Secretary-General was requested to consult with the Chairmen of the First and the Third Committees with regard to item 6 on the supplementary list entitled “Draft declaration on fundamental rights and freedoms and on the rights and duties of States” (item proposed by Panama). The Secretary-General held consultations with the Chairmen of the two Committees on 28 October and it was agreed that that part of the item concerning the rights and duties of States (Draft declaration of the rights of duties of States, document A/19) should be referred to the First Committee. It was further agreed that that part of the item concerning fundamental human rights and freedoms (Statement of essential human rights presented by the delegation of Panama, document A/148) should be referred to both the First and Third Committees for general discussion, the Chairmen of the Committee determining the method of joint consideration of that part of the item.

<sup>59</sup> The text of this document is taken from Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Plenary Meetings of the General Assembly, Verbatim Record, 23 October-16 December 1946, pp. 924 ff.

A/C.1/38

6 November 1946

Original Text: Spanish

Letter from the Representative of Chile to the Secretary-General
Dated 3 November 1946

Chilean Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly

No 166/16

New York, 3 November 1946

Sir,

The Chilean Delegation to the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations has the honour to request that the ‘Draft Declaration on human rights and duties and accompanying report’ drawn up by the Inter-American Juridical Committee be taken into account when item 10<sup>60</sup> of the First Committee’s agenda (Document A/C.1/21, draft declaration on fundamental human rights and freedoms) is being considered. The Draft Declaration in question was drawn up in accordance with resolution XL of the Inter-American Conference on Problems of Peace and War held at Mexico City, and was published by the Inter-American Juridical Committee on 31 December 1945.

In order that delegations may take note of the said Draft Declaration and accompanying report,<sup>61</sup> I have the honour to attach one copy in English and one in Spanish and should be glad if you would arrange to have mimeographed copies distributed.*

<sup>60</sup> In the original, “10” is crossed out and the number “11” written in manuscript.

<sup>61</sup> The Declaration itself was issued on 8 January 1947 under document number E/CN.4/2.

<sup>[*]</sup> Note: The Draft Declaration and accompanying report are available for consultation in the United Nations Library. Copies may be obtained from the Pan American Union in Washington, D.C.

[2]

The examination of the attached document will undoubtedly facilitate the work of the First Committee when it comes to consider the proposal of the Panamanian Delegation.

I have the honour to be, etc.

F. Nieto del Rio
Head of the Chilean Delegation

Mr. Trygve Lie,
Secretary-General of the United Nations

A/C.3/SR.33<sup>62</sup>

26 November 1946

Summary Record of the Thirty-Third Meeting
[of the Third Committee]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Tuesday 26 November 1946 at 3:15 p.m.

Chairman: SIR CARL BERENDSEN (New Zealand).

[A/C.3/101]

51. Statement of essential human rights presented by the delegation of Panama (document A/148)

THE CHAIRMAN announced that the draft submitted by the delegation of Panama had been referred to the Commission on Human Rights after having been studied at the San Francisco Conference and in London without positive results.

The Third Committee now had to decide whether the matter should be referred to the Economic and Social Council or to a sub-committee of the Third Committee.

The Chairman also recalled that drafts had been submitted by the Cuban delegation and by the American Federation of Labor, a non-governmental organization belonging to category A.

<sup>62</sup> The text of A/C.3/SR.33 is taken from Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the Third Committee of General Assembly; Summary Record of Meetings, 24 October-12 December 1946, pp. 189 ff. It is also available in Journal No. 44: Supplement No. 3 – A/C.3/101.

MR. ALFARO (Panama) gave an historical account of the draft submitted to the Committee, and pointed out the evolution of the principle of human rights. He recalled that the various declarations concerned first individual rights and then constitutional rights of human beings.

The principle of international human rights was first expressed in 1917 in the “Declaration of Fundamental Notions and Basic Principles of International Law” by Alejandro Alvarez.<sup>63</sup>

Thereafter, the concept of international human rights was universally developed; it was recognized that the rights of an individual were not based upon his citizenship of a given State, but upon his membership in the human family.

Mr. Alfaro went on to discuss the draft declaration composed of eighteen articles submitted by the delegation of Panama, and pointed out that this draft actually offered the only basis of discussion for elaborating an international convention as technically perfect as possible.

MRS. ROOSEVELT (United States of America), after having paid tribute to Mr. Alfaro, proposed that this vast and complicated problem should be referred to the Economic and Social Council. Mrs. Roosevelt specified that her proposal had been presented as a formal motion.

MR. ALFARO (Panama) stated that he could not agree with the representative of the United States, and quoted a letter from Mr. Spaak dated 31 October 1946, which instructed the Chairmen of the First and Third Committees jointly to study the question of a declaration of human rights. The General Assembly had referred the matter to the Third Committee which was therefore the only competent body to undertake that study. Consequently, Mr. Alfaro requested that a joint sub-committee of the First and Third Committees should be established to examine the Panamanian draft declaration.

THE CHAIRMAN proposed to put to the vote first the proposal of the United States to refer the question to the Economic and Social Council. If that first motion were defeated, a vote would be taken on the proposal of Panama to establish a joint sub-committee. If both proposals were rejected, the Committee would then proceed to study the question.

Decision: The United States Proposal to recommend to the General Assembly to refer the question to the Economic and Social Council was adopted by twenty-seven votes to ten.

...

<sup>63</sup> Alejandro Álvarez Jofré (1868–1960) of Chile was one of Latin America’s greatest international legal scholars. He served as a judge at the International Court of Justice from 1946 to 1955. A special issue of the Leiden Journal of International Law (Vol. 19(4), 2006) is devoted to his work.

A/C.3/126

3 December 1946

Draft Report Concerning a Draft Declaration on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedom

Rapporteur: Mrs. Aase Lionaes (Norway)

1. The Delegations of Cuba and Panama submitted draft declarations concerning fundamental human rights to the San Francisco Conference and to the first part of the first session of the General Assembly. These were later distributed to members of the nuclear Commission on Human Rights. (Documents A/148, E/HR/1, E/HR/3, E/HR/5)
2. In its report to the second session of the Economic and Social Council, the nuclear Commission recommended that the detailed examination of the documents submitted by the delegations of Cuba and Panama should be left to a later session of the nuclear Commission or to the full Commission.
3. The General Assembly, at its forty-sixth plenary meeting on 31 October 1946, referred the Panamanian draft resolution to the First and Third Committees, the Chairmen to determine the method of joint consideration; the Chairman of the Third Committee wrote therefore to the Chairman of the First Committee on this matter.
4. At its meeting on 15 November the Third Committee discussed the draft declaration.

The representative of Panama emphasized the necessity of an international bill of human rights which would guarantee rights to all individuals throughout the world.

A discussion followed as to whether the draft declaration should be referred to a Sub-Committee of the Third Committee or to a joint Sub-Committee of the First and Third Committees or whether a recommendation [2] be made to the General Assembly that it be referred to the Economic and Social Council. By twenty-seven votes to ten it was decided to recommend that it be referred to the Economic and Social Council for submission to the Commission on Human Rights.

The Chairman duly informed the Chairman of the First Committee of this decision:

Whereas

The Economic and Social Council has established a Commission on Human Rights and resolved that the work of the Commission shall be directed towards submitting proposals, recommendations and reports to the Council concerning an international bill of rights,

The General Assembly

Resolves, therefore, to refer the draft declaration on fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms to the Economic and Social Council for reference to the Commission on Human Rights for consideration by the Commission in its preparation of an international bill of rights.

A/C.3/SR.42<sup>64</sup>

5 December 1946

Summary Record of the Forty-Second Meeting [of the Third Committee of the General Assembly]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Thursday 5 December 1946, at 3.15 p.m.

...
[257]
...

64. Approval of four draft reports

MRS. LIONAES (Rapporteur) submitted for the approval of the members of the Committee draft reports on:

...
(b) Draft declaration on fundamental human rights and freedom (document A/C.3/126);
...
[259]
...

67. Discussion of the draft report concerning a draft declaration on fundamental human rights and freedoms (document A/C.3/126)

MR. SAPRU (India), although he approved the proposals made by the delegations of Cuba and Panama, remarked on the difficulty of specifying the aims which were to be attained. He considered that a simple declaration would not suffice. He stressed that it was necessary not only to make a declaration, but to ensure that the countries which had adopted it would put it into practice. The Charter of the United Nations affirmed this principle of human rights and freedom, but it seemed that certain countries did not yet conform to it.

<sup>64</sup> The text of A/C.3/SR.42 is taken from Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the Third Committee of General Assembly, Summary Record of Meetings, 24 October-12 December 1946, pp. 255 ff.

THE CHAIRMAN submitted to the approval of the Committee the draft report concerning a draft declaration on fundamental human rights and freedoms.

Decision: The report was accepted.

...

E/248

5 December 1946

Consolidated Terms of Reference of the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commissions

1. The Economic and Social Council, being charged under the Charter with the responsibility of promoting universal respect for and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, and requiring advice and assistance to enable it to discharge this responsibility,

Establishes a Commission on Human Rights.

2. The work of the Commission shall be directed towards submitting proposals, recommendations and reports to the Council regarding:

(a) an international bill of rights;

...

A/C.1/SR.41<sup>65</sup>

6 December 1946

Summary Record of the Forty-First Meeting [of the First Committee of the General Assembly]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Friday, 6 December 1946 at 3 p.m.

...

[279]

...

<sup>65</sup> The text of A/C.1/SR.41 is taken from Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, First Committee, Political and Security Questions, including Regulation of Armaments, Summary Record of Meetings, 2 November-13 December 1946, pp. 278 ff.

37. Discussion of the draft declaration on fundamental rights and freedoms (documents A/148, A/BUR/40 and A/C.1/38)

MR. PROTITCH (Secretary of the Committee) read a letter from Sir Carl Berendsen.

THE CHAIRMAN asked the Committee whether it agreed to take a vote on a resolution similar to that of the Third Committee.

MR. ALFARO (Panama) thought that the Third Committee had acted rather hastily in referring the matter to the Commission on Human Rights without a time limit and without instructions. Panama had opposed that decision, Since there were already many proposals, it was inadvisable for the Committee to draw up a new text to be referred to Governments and not to the United Nations; this would lead to a deadlock. The First Committee should avoid the course of inaction followed by the Third Committee and should draw up a proposal on the rights and duties of States similar to that submitted by the United States delegation.

MR. GROMYKO<sup>66</sup> (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) thought that the proposal of Panama deserved full attention, but that it could not be conveniently considered at the present session.

The Commission on Human Rights of the Economic and Social Council was the proper organ to undertake the necessary preparatory work and therefore the Third Committee's decision was acceptable.

SIR HARTLEY SHAWCROSS<sup>67</sup> (United Kingdom) once again stressed the very great importance of this question to which reference is made in seven passages of the Charter. True, the Charter also forbade any interference in the internal affairs of a State. By drawing up a declaration of rights, they would have some standards to go by. The Economic and Social Council's Commission on Human Rights was the proper organ. It should extract the best part of each proposal and submit a draft to the next session of the Assembly.

MR. CUENCO (Philippine Republic) outlined the slow stages by which the rights of man had come to be recognized since the beginning of the Christian era. Most democratic constitutions contained a Bill of Rights; nevertheless the United Nations should formulate a declaration of rights to counteract the doctrine that the State was omnipotent.

A decision had to be taken on the proposal of Panama, either by the First Committee or by the Third Committee.

[280]

<sup>66</sup> Andrei Andreyevich Gromyko (1909–1989) was Permanent Representative of the Soviet Union in 1946. He served as Minister of Foreign Affairs for much of the Cold War, ending his career as Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet in 1987.

<sup>67</sup> Hartley Shawcross (1902–2003) was the British Prosecutor before the International Military Tribunal. He served as the country's Attorney-General from 1945 to 1951 and represented the United Kingdom at the United Nations during that period.

MR. HARRY<sup>68</sup> (Australia) hoped that Mr. Alfaro would one day see his work crowned by the establishment of a Court of the Rights of Man.

MR. ALFARO (Panama) did not wish to link the definition to its practical application.

The Charter mentioned human rights in seven different passages: Preamble; Article 1, paragraph 3; Article 13(b); Article 55(c); Article 62, paragraph 2; Articles 68 and 76(c).

Panama's proposal contained eighteen articles. The human race had been fighting for seven centuries to secure the rights specified in the first articles. The last five were social rights without which man could not be truly free. The following three points were of paramount importance:

- (1) Essential rights had to be defined.
- (2) Their application or execution was not involved.
- (3) Only the minimum was asked for.

MR. SANDERS (United States of America) supported the proposal of Panama since those rights formed the very basis of life in the United States.

However, would not the Committee be prejudging the decision of the Commission on Human Rights and of the Economic and Social Council by singling out one text for special treatment, however excellent its technical and intrinsic merits? The Committee should be careful to avoid partiality.

MR. LAFRONTE (Ecuador) drew attention to the contrast between the slow evolution of human rights and the speed with which these rights had been violated at various times in history, particularly during the last few years. He recalled that France had been one of the first to promulgate a declaration of the rights of man and citizen; its influence had been felt throughout the world, especially in America.

In view of the onslaughts against the rights of man launched by the fascist-totalitarian regimes, the United Nations ought to take an active and practical interest in defining human rights so as to include all the rights recognized in the present-day world. But such a charter of human rights should not be of a restrictive nature for the life of peoples was constantly evolving. The charter would merely be a factual statement of the present position and would be subject to later improvements.

The representative of Ecuador was prepared to agree to whatever decision the Committee might take regarding the procedure to be adopted for considering this question.

<sup>68</sup> Ralph Lindsay Harry (1917–2002) represented Australia at the San Francisco Conference and took part in negotiating the United Nations Charter. He later represented William Hodgson as the Australian delegate at several meetings of the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights.

SIR HARTLEY SHAWCROSS (United Kingdom) suggested that the matter be referred for examination to the Commission on Human Rights together with the summary records of the First Committee's discussions. These documents would provide the groundwork for the proposal to be drawn up by that Commission, and it would decide whether the proposals submitted to it should be communicated to the Member States.

[281]

The Commission on Human Rights might be requested to report to the First Committee next year and to submit a draft declaration of human rights.

MR. SARA (Egypt) heartily joined in the tribute which many delegates had paid to Mr. Alfaro, the author of the proposal under consideration. He recalled that at the San Francisco Conference, Egypt had asked for the inclusion of a declaration of human rights in the Charter; he approved of the draft proposal submitted by the representative of Panama.

THE CHAIRMAN said that the Committee had two alternatives:

- (1) to adopt a resolution identical with that adopted by the Third Committee, referring the matter to the Commission on Human Rights;
- (2) to adopt the draft resolution submitted by the representatives of Panama.

He drew Mr. Alfaro's attention to the fact that the second paragraph of his proposal would have to be redrafted, since the Commission on Human Rights could not be asked to report directly to the Assembly; therefore, it should first be decided to which organ the Commission should make its report.

MR. PEZET (France) pointed out that France had just adopted a new constitution which was preceded by a preamble confirming, renewing and modernizing the Declaration of the rights of man and of the citizen.

The Assembly which had adopted that constitution comprised not only citizens of metropolitan France but also the citizens of the French Union. Thus a declaration of the rights of man amplified to the scale of continents had been proclaimed. It was imperative for the United Nations to concern themselves with human rights. Actually, when a modern people became conscious of its personality and organized its society, it established the standards of its new life. The United Nations had taken the first step towards a new life which embraced the whole world. Therefore the United Nations had to declare to the knowledge of all men what would be the standards of their future civil, social and economic life.

There was another compelling reason for the United Nations to take action in this matter. The human person and human rights had been the first victims of the fascist regimes. The triumph over nazi totalitarianism would not be complete without a declaration that fundamental human rights would be codified and carried into effect, first under the moral protection of the United Nations and at a later stage of their evolution, under their effective guarantee.

As regards the procedure to be followed, Mr. Pezet agreed that this question should be referred to the Commission on Human Rights, with instructions to report to the organ to be determined later.

[281]

SIR HARTLEY SHAWCROSS (United Kingdom) pointed out that the declaration of human rights had primarily a political aspect, whatever might be its social and economic aspects. He was inclined to think that it might be possible for the First Committee to co-operate to some extent with the Commission on Human Rights.

MR. MIRANDA (Chile) said that his country's constitution recognized all the rights specified in the declaration submitted by Mr. Alfaro and was based on the principles of an equalitarian democracy. He supported Mr. Alfaro's draft declaration and said that the Inter-Parliamentary Union would accept the Committee's decision regarding the procedure to be adopted.

MR. CASSELL (Liberia) thought that it was not enough to draw up a declaration of human rights; the action to be taken to give effect to these rights should also be considered. He suggested that once the declaration had been formulated, Member States should be obliged to conform to it within a certain time limit; in the event of their failure to do so, they should be excluded from the Organization.

MR. FRISCH (Denmark) drew the Committee's and the Secretariat's attention to the forthcoming meeting of the Inter-Parliamentary Union<sup>69</sup> in Cairo in 1947. That conference would undoubtedly be very glad to be apprised of the various draft declarations of human rights now being considered by the United Nations.

THE CHAIRMAN asked the Committee whether it wished first to vote on the adoption of a declaration identical with that of the Third Committee, and then, if necessary, on the draft resolution submitted by the representative of Panama.

MR. ALFARO (Panama) said that what most concerned him was that the question should not be allowed to remain before the Commission on Human Rights indefinitely. It should also be made quite clear that the Commission would merely report on the proposals submitted by the representatives of Cuba and Panama as those were the only ones which, strictly speaking, were being legally referred to it. It would, of course, be open to the Commission to take into account any other proposals, studies, or memoranda that might be drawn up on this matter.

<sup>69</sup> Established in 1889, the Inter-Parliamentary Union was initially a body of parliamentarians devoted to the promotion of peace and international arbitration. It has since become a body composed of parliaments from around the world.

As to the procedural point made by the Chairman, Mr. Alfaro was quite willing to give him a free hand to modify the text. He also added that he did not, in principle, object to the adoption of a resolution identical with that of the Third Committee provided a time limit was stipulated for the submission of the report.

THE CHAIRMAN thought that normally the Commission on Human Rights should report to the Economic and Social Council of which it was a subsidiary organ; the Council in turn should report to the General Assembly. The First Committee should therefore add the following sentence to the text of the Third Committee's resolution: "The First Committee expresses the hope that the question will be referred back to it for inclusion in the agenda of the second session of the Assembly."

Decision: In the absence of any objection, a resolution identical with that approved by the Third Committee was unanimously adopted with the above-mentioned addition suggested by the Chairman.

A/C.3/135

7 December 1946

Addendum to Report on Draft Declaration on Human Rights and Freedoms

In order to present a common text to the General Assembly to which the Third and the First Committees are reporting on item 40, the approval of the Third Committee is requested for the following amendment unanimously adopted by the First Committee on 6 December 1946.

Amendment:

After the last paragraph of the Resolution ending with the words "preparation of an international bill of rights",

Add

"and expresses the hope that the question will be referred back to it in order that it may be included in the Agenda of the Second Session of the General Assembly".

A/C.3/SR.45<sup>70</sup>

9 December 1946

Forty-Fifth Meeting* [of the Third Committee of the General Assembly]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Monday, 9 December 1946, at 3:30 p.m.

[257]

74. Continuation of the discussion of the draft report concerning a draft declaration on fundamental human rights and freedoms

THE CHAIRMAN stated that the Third Committee should now consider the addition of an amendment to the report on the draft declaration on human rights and freedoms.

The amendment, contained in document A/C.3/135, had been unanimously adopted by [282] the First Committee on 6 December 1946. It proposed, that after the last paragraph of the resolution, ending with the words “preparation of an international bill of rights”, the following text should be added: “and expresses the hope that the question will be referred back to it in order that it may be included in the agenda of the second session of the General Assembly”.

Decision: The amendment was unanimously adopted.

In reply to an observation made by the representative of France concerning a discrepancy in the French text at the end of the last paragraph preceding the resolution, the Chairman suggested that the Rapporteur, with the assistance of the Secretariat, should correct the text appropriately, and add the amendment which the Committee had just adopted.

This procedure was adopted by the Committee.

...

A/234

10 December 1946

Draft declaration on fundamental human rights and freedoms
Report of the First and Third Committees

Rapporteurs: Mr. H. VITERE LAFRONTE (Ecuador); Mrs. A. LIONAES (Norway).

<sup>70</sup> The text of A/C.3/SR.42 is taken from Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the Third Committee of General Assembly, Summary Record of Meetings, 24 October-12 December 1946, pp. 281–282. It is also available at Journal No. 57: Supplement No. 3 – A/C.3/141.

1. The General Assembly, at its forty-sixth plenary meeting, held on 31 October 1946, referred simultaneously to the First and Third Committees the draft declaration submitted by the delegation of Panama on fundamental human rights and freedoms (documents A/148 and A/BUR/40). In a letter addressed to the chairmen of the two Committees, the President of the General Assembly suggested that they determine the procedure for the examination of the question by the Committees.
2. At its meeting on 25 November the Third Committee discussed the draft declaration.
3. It was recalled that the delegations of Cuba and Panama had submitted draft declarations concerning fundamental human rights to the San Francisco Conference and to the first part of the first session of the General Assembly. These were later distributed to the members of the nuclear Commission on Human Rights (documents E/HR/1, E/HR/3, E/HR/5).

In its report to the second session of the Economic and Social Council, the nuclear Commission recommended that the detailed examination of the documents submitted by the delegations of Cuba and Panama should be left to a later session of the nuclear Commission or to the full Commission.

[2]

4. The representative of Panama emphasized, in the Third Committee, the necessity of an international bill of human rights which would guarantee rights to all individuals throughout the world.

A discussion followed on the question whether the draft declaration should be referred to a sub-committee of the Third Committee or to a joint sub-committee of the First and Third Committees or whether a recommendation should be made to the General Assembly that the matter be referred to the Economic and Social Council. By twenty-seven votes to ten the Third Committee decided to recommend that it be referred to the Economic and Social Council for submission to the Commission on Human Rights.

The Chairman duly informed the Chairman of the First Committee of this decision.

5. At its forty-first meeting, in 6 December 1946, the First Committee discussed the report of the Third Committee (document A/C.3/126).

The delegation of Panama proposed that there should be added to this recommendation of the Third Committee an expression of the hope that the question would be referred back to the General Assembly for inclusion in the agenda of its second regular session. With this addition, the recommendation proposed by the Third Committee was unanimously adopted by the First Committee.

6. The Third Committee, at its meeting on 9 December, agreed to make an addition to the last paragraph of the resolution in order that its recommendation to the General Assembly might conform to that of the First Committee.
7. The First and Third Committees therefore recommend to the General Assembly the adoption of the following resolution:

[3]

[For the text of the resolution, which is omitted here, see A/RES/43(I).]

A/PV.55<sup>71</sup>

11 December 1946

Fifty-fifth Plenary Meeting [of the General Assembly]

Held on Wednesday, 11 December 1946, at 4 p.m.

...

[1139]

159. Draft Declaration on fundamental human rights and freedoms: report of the Joint First and Third Committee: resolution (document A/234)

THE PRESIDENT (translated from French): The next item is the report of the Joint First and Third Committee concerning a draft Declaration on fundamental human rights and freedoms.

[1140]

I call upon Mr. Viteri Lafronte, Rapporteur.

MR. VITERI LAFRONTE (Ecuador), Rapporteur : At the very beginning of the San Francisco Conference, the delegations of Panama and Cuba submitted draft resolutions concerning fundamental human rights. The same was done at the first part of the first session of the General Assembly in London.

At the present second part of the first session, the General Assembly referred simultaneously to the Joint First and Third Committee, the draft Declaration submitted by the delegation of Panama on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms.

<sup>71</sup> The text of A/PV.55 is taken from Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Plenary Meetings of the General Assembly, Verbatim Record, 23 October-16 December 1946, pp. 1118 ff.

It was decided that the question should be discussed by the two Committees separately. After several discussions, and an interchange of agreements, the First and Third Committees recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of the following resolution:

“The General Assembly,

“Whereas the Economic and Social Council has established a Commission on Human Rights and has resolved that the work of the Commission shall be directed towards submitting proposals, recommendations and reports to the Council concerning an international bill of rights,

“Resolves therefore to refer the draft Declaration on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms to the Economic and Social Council for reference to the Commission on Human Rights for consideration by the Commission in its preparation of an international bill of rights; and

“Expresses the hope that the question will be referred back to it in order that it may be included in the agenda of the second regular session of the General Assembly.”

THE PRESIDENT (translated from French): If no one wishes to speak, I shall consider the resolution as adopted unanimously.

Decision: The resolution was adopted unanimously.

A/RES/43(I)

11 December 1946

Draft Declaration on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms

The General Assembly,

Whereas the Economic and Social Council has established a Commission on Human Rights and has resolved that the work of the Commission shall be directed towards submitting proposals, recommendations and reports to the Council concerning an international bill of rights,

Resolves therefore to refer the draft Declaration on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms<sup>1</sup> to the Economic and Social Council for reference to the Commission on Human Rights for consideration by the Commission in its preparation of an international bill of rights; and

Expresses the hope that the question will be referred back to it in order that it may be included in the agenda of the second regular session of the General Assembly.

[1] Document A/234.

E/CN.4/2

8 January 1947

Draft Declaration of the International Rights and Duties of Man

Formulated by the Inter-American Juridical Committee

In accordance with Resolutions IX and XL of the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace held at Mexico City, February 21-March 8, 1945, and submitted by the Delegation of Chile to the second part of the First Session of the General Assembly (cf. Document A/C.1/38).

[2]

Article 1 Right to Life

Every person has the right to life. This right extends to the right to life from the moment of conception; to the right to life of incurables, imbeciles and the insane. It includes the right to sustenance and support in the case of those unable to support themselves by their own efforts; and it implies a duty of the state to see to it that such support is made available.

The right to life may be denied by the state only on the ground of conviction of the gravest of crimes, to which the death penalty has been attached.

Article 2 Right to Personal Liberty

Every person has the right to personal liberty.

The right to personal liberty includes the right to freedom of movement from one part of the territory of the state to another, and the right to leave the state itself. It includes also freedom to establish a residence in any part of the territory, subject only to the restrictions that may be imposed by general laws looking to the public order and security of the state.

The right to personal liberty includes the inviolability of the domicile of the individual and of his personal correspondence.

The state may restrict this right only to the extent necessary to protect the public health, safety, morals and general welfare, in accordance with subsequent provisions of this Declaration.

The right of the state to call upon the services of the individual in time of emergency or to meet the necessities of national defence shall not be regarded as a limitation upon the fundamental right to personal liberty, but merely as a temporary restriction operating during the existence of the national need.

[3]

No person shall be imprisoned or held in servitude in consequence of the mere breach of contractual obligations.

Article 3

Right to Freedom of Speech and of Expression

Every person has the right to freedom of speech and of expression.

This right includes freedom to form and to hold opinions and to give expression to them in private and in public, and to publish them in written or printed form.

The right to freedom of speech and of expression extends to the use of whatever means of communication are available: freedom to use the postal service, the public utilities of telegraph, telephone and radio communication; freedom to use the graphic arts, the theatre, the cinema and other agencies for the dissemination of ideas.

The right to freedom of speech and of expression includes freedom of access to the sources of information, both domestic and foreign.

The right to freedom of speech and of expression includes the special and highly privileged right to freedom of the press.

The only limitations which the state may impose upon this freedom are those prescribed by general laws looking to the protection of the public peace against slanderous or libellous defamation of others, and against indecent language or publications, and language or publications directly provocative of violence among the people.

Censorship of the press is prohibited, whether by direct or indirect means, and all limitations imposed in the interest of public order shall only be applied subsequently to the publication of the material alleged to be of the offensive character described in the law. Censorship of the cinema may be in advance of publication, taking into account the particular form of publication and the necessity of protecting the public against matters offensive to accepted standards of conduct. The state may not retain a monopoly of radio broadcasting so as to deny [4] to the individual the opportunity for the free expression of opinion through that instrumentality of communication.

Article 4

Right to Freedom of Religious Worship

Every person has the right to freedom of religious belief and worship.

This right includes freedom of religious worship in public as well as in private; freedom of religious worship by groups as well as by individuals; freedom to maintain churches and other places of public worship and to assemble in them without restraint; freedom of parents to educate children in their particular religious belief; freedom of religious propaganda in spoken or written form.

The only restrictions which the state may place upon the right of freedom of religious worship are those called for by the requirements of public health, safety and good morals; and all such restrictions must be in accordance with general laws and administered without discrimination.

A distinction is recognized between strictly religious activities and other activities of an economic or financial character associated with the maintenance of religious worship but not forming an essential part of it. These economic or financial activities may be regulated by the state in accordance with the general laws governing such activities.

Article 5

Right to Freedom of Assembly

Every person has the right to assemble peaceably with others as a means of giving expression to views upon matters of common interest.

The state has the duty to permit the use of public places for purposes of general assembly. It has the right to be informed of meetings to be held in public places, to designate convenient localities, and to impose conditions upon the use of such places in the interest of the public order and safety. Similar conditions may be imposed upon [5] assemblies in public and in private buildings. But the conditions imposed by the state upon the holding of public meetings must not be such as to impair substantially the right itself to hold such meetings; and no conditions shall be required for the assembly of small groups of persons whether in public or in private places.

The right of assembly includes the right to hold public parades, subject to the same restrictions to which assemblies are subject.

Article 6

Right to Freedom of Association

Every person has the right to associate with other persons for the protection and promotion of legitimate interests.

The state has the right to adopt regulations governing the activities of associations, provided they are applied without discrimination against a particular group, and provided they do not impair substantially the right of association.

Article 7Right to Petition the Government

Every person has the right, whether exercised by individual action or in conjunction with others, to petition the government for redress of grievances or to petition in respect to any other matter of public or private interest.

The publication of such petitions shall not be made a ground for penalizing in any way, directly or indirectly, the person or persons making the petition.

Article 8Right to Own Property

Every person has the right to own property.

The state has the duty to cooperate in assisting the individual to attain a minimum standard of private ownership of property based upon the essential material needs of a decent life, looking to the [6] maintenance of the dignity of the human person and the sanctity of home life.

The state may determine by general laws the limitations which may be placed upon the ownership of property, looking to the maintenance of social justice and to the promotion of the common interest of the community.

The right of private property includes the right to the free disposal of property, subject, however, to limitations imposed by the state in the interest of maintaining the family patrimony.

The right of private property is subject to the right of the state to expropriate property in pursuance of public policy, just compensation being made to the owner.

Article 9Right to a Nationality

Every person has the right to a nationality.

No state may refuse to grant its nationality to persons born upon its soil of parents who are legitimately present in the country.

No person may be deprived of his nationality of birth unless by his free choice he acquires another nationality.

Every person has the right to renounce the nationality of his birth, or a previously acquired nationality, upon acquiring the nationality of another state.

Article 10Right to Freedom of Family Relations

Every person has the right to be free from interference in his family relations.

It is the duty of the state to respect and to protect the reciprocal rights of husband and wife in their mutual relations.

Parents have a primary right of control over their children during minority, and they have a primary obligation to maintain and support them.

[7]

It is the duty of the state to assist parents in the maintenance of adequate standards of child welfare within the family circle, and to promote as far as possible the ownership of individual homes as a means of fostering better family relations.

The state may restrict the control of parents over their children only to the extent that the parents themselves are unable to perform their duties towards their children or actually fail to do so. Where necessary, the state must itself provide for their protection and support.

Article 11

Right to be Free from Arbitrary Arrest

Every person accused of crime shall have the right not to be arrested except upon warrant duly issued in accordance with the law, unless the person is arrested flagrante delicto. He shall have the right to a prompt trial and to proper treatment during the time he is in custody.

Article 12

Right to a Fair Trial

Every person accused of crime shall have the right to a fair public hearing of the case, to be confronted with witnesses, and to be judged by established tribunals and according to the law in force at the time the act was committed. No fines shall be imposed except in accordance with the provisions of general laws; and no cruel or unusual punishments.

Article 13

Right to Participate in Elections

Every person, national of the state, has the right to participate in the election of the legislative and executive officers of the government in accordance with the provisions of the national constitution. The practical exercise of this right may, however, be conditioned by the duty of the person to show that he is competent to understand the principles upon which the constitution is based. The constitution of [8] the state shall provide for a government of the people, by the people and for the people.

This right presupposes the right to form political parties.

No person shall be denied the right to hold public office, or to be appointed to any of the public services of the state of which he is a national, upon grounds of race or religion or sex or any other arbitrary discrimination; and the administration of the public services of the state shall, in respect to appointments and terms and conditions of service, be without favour or discrimination.

Article 14
Right to Work

Every person has the right to work as a means of supporting himself and of contributing to the support of his family.

This right includes the right to choose freely a vocation, in so far as the opportunities of work available make this possible, as well as the right to transfer from one employment to another and to move from one place of employment to another. Associated with the right to work is the right to form labour and professional unions.

Every person has the duty to work as a contribution to the general welfare of the state.

The state has the duty to assist the individual in the exercise of his right to work when his own efforts are not adequate to secure employment; it must make every effort to promote stability of employment and to insure proper conditions of labour, and it must fix minimum standards of just compensation.

The state has the right, in time of emergency, to call upon the services of the individual in cases where such services are necessary to meet an urgent public need.
[9]

Article 15
Right to Share in Benefits of Science

Every person has the right to share in the benefits accruing from the discoveries and inventions of science, under conditions which permit a fair return to the industry and skill of those responsible for the discovery or invention.

The state has the duty to encourage the development of the arts and sciences, but it must see to it that the laws for the protection of trademarks, patents and copyrights are not used for the establishment of monopolies which might prevent all persons from sharing in the benefits of science. It is the duty of the state to protect the citizen against the use of scientific discoveries in a manner to create fear and unrest among the people.

Article 16
Right to Social Security

Every person has the right to social security.

The state has the duty to assist all persons to attain social security. To this end the state must promote measures of public health and safety and must establish systems of social insurance and agencies of social cooperation in accordance with which all persons may be assured an adequate standard of living and may be protected against the contingencies of unemployment, accident, disability and ill-health and the eventuality of old age.

Every person has the duty to cooperate with the state according to his powers in the maintenance and administration of the measures taken to promote his own social security.

Article 17
Right to Education

Every person has the right to education.

The right of children to education is paramount.

The state has the duty to assist the individual in the exercise of [10] the right to education, in accordance with the resources of the state. The opportunities of education must be open to all upon equal terms in accordance with their natural capacities and their desires to take advantage of the facilities available.

The state has the right to fix general standards to which educational institutions must conform, provided that these standards are in accord with other fundamental rights and are the same for public and for private schools.

The right to education involves the right to teach, subject to the restrictions which accompany the right to education.

Article 18
Right to Equality before the Law

All persons shall be equal before the law in respect to the enjoyment of their fundamental rights. There shall be no privileged classes of any kind whatsoever.

It is the duty of the state to respect the fundamental rights of all persons within its jurisdiction and to protect them in the enjoyment of their rights against interference by other persons.

In all proceedings in relation to fundamental rights the state must act in accordance with due process of law and must assure to every person the equal protection of the law.

All restrictions imposed upon fundamental rights must be such only as are required by the maintenance of public order; and they must be general in character and applicable to all persons within the same class.

Article 19
Rights and Duties Correlative

Rights and duties are correlative; and the duty to respect the rights of others operates at all times as a restriction upon the arbitrary [11] exercise of rights.

Article 20
Incorporation of Declaration into Municipal Law

The provisions of this Declaration shall be a part of the law of each individual state, to be respected and enforced by the administrative and judicial authorities in the same manner as all other laws of the state.

The provisions of this Declaration shall not be abrogated or modified except in accordance with the terms of an inter-American agreement or an agreement of the United Nations binding upon the American States.

Article 21
Procedure in Cases Involving Aliens

In the case of aliens alleging violation of the foregoing fundamental rights by the state in which they are resident, the complaint shall be decided first by the courts of the state itself; and in cases in which a denial of justice is alleged by the state of which the alien is a national, the case, failing diplomatic settlement, shall be submitted to an International Court, the statute of which shall be included as an integral part of the instrument in which the present Declaration is to be adopted.

Rio de Janeiro, December 31, 1945

S) Francisco Campos

S) F. Nieto del Rio<sup>72</sup>

S) Charles G. Fenwick<sup>73</sup>

S) A. Gomez Robledo

<sup>72</sup> Félix Nieto del Rio (1888–1953) was a Chilean diplomat who served as Ambassador to Brazil and his country's representative on the Inter-American Juridical Committee.

<sup>73</sup> Charles G. Fenwick (1880–1973) was Director of Legal Affairs for the Organization of American States.

E/CN.4/W.4

13 January 1947

Working Paper on an International Bill of Rights

According to its terms of reference, the Commission on Human Rights is to submit proposals, recommendations and reports to the Economic and Social Council regarding, inter alia, “an International Bill of Rights”. This question was considered by the Nuclear Commission during its meetings in May 1946. The Nuclear Commission felt, however, that it was not yet in a position to draft a Bill and recommended that this be done by the full Commission (E/HR/15).

The question was also considered by the second part of the first session of the General Assembly which had before it a draft Statement of Essential Human Rights, presented by the delegation of Panama (A/148). The General Assembly, after referring to the establishment of the Commission on Human Rights and its terms of reference, decided to refer this draft to the Economic and Social Council “for reference to the Commission on Human Rights for consideration by the Commission in its preparation of an international bill of rights” (A/234, page 3). At the same time, the General Assembly expressed the hope that the question would be referred back to it “in order that it might be included in the Agenda of the second regular session of the General Assembly”.

In addition to the Panamanian draft, three other draft international bills of rights are before the United Nations: viz, a draft submitted by the delegation of Cuba (E/HR/1), a draft prepared by the Inter-American Juridical Committee and submitted by the delegation of Chile (A/C.1/38) and a draft submitted by the American Federation of Labor (E/CT.2/2). A number of other drafts prepared by various organizations and individuals have been collected by the [2] Secretariat. These drafts have been tabulated and analysed by the Secretariat.

In the course of discussions in the General Assembly on the Panamanian draft, the hope was expressed by certain delegates that the next session of the General Assembly would be in a position to take definite action on an International Bill of Rights. A similar hope was expressed during discussions on the Egyptian resolution on “religious and so-called racial persecution and discrimination” and during the discussions of the resolution on the treatment of Indians in South Africa.

Provisions Relating to Human Rights in the Charter of the United Nations

The first reference will be found in the preamble which states:

“We, the peoples of the United Nations, determined...to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women...have resolved to combine our efforts to accomplish these aims.

Chapter I, dealing with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, declares, in Article 1, paragraph 3, one of the purposes of the United Nations to be:

“to achieve international cooperation. . .in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion”.

Chapter IX, Article 55, provides that:

“With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations. . .the United Nations shall promote:

(c) universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.”

It may be noted that, according to Article 60, “responsibility for the discharge of the functions of the Organization set forth in this Chapter shall [3] be vested in the General Assembly and, under the authority of the General Assembly, in the Economic and Social Council, which shall have for this purpose the powers set forth in Chapter X.” In partial implementation of the responsibilities assigned to it by this Article, the Economic and Social Council has established, in accordance with Article 68, a Commission on Human Rights.

The powers of the various organs mentioned above are stated first in Article 13 which provides that:

“The General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of:

(b) . . .assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.”

On the other hand, the Economic and Social Council may, according to Article 62, paragraph 2, “. . .make recommendations for the purpose of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all”. Under the same Article, paragraph 3, the Economic and Social Council may “prepare draft conventions for submission to the General Assembly, with respect to matters falling within its competence”. It may also, according to paragraph 4, “call, in accordance with the rules prescribed by the United Nations, international conferences on matters falling within its competence”.

The Charter also stipulates the obligations of Member States in the matter by stating, in Article 56, that:

“All Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in cooperation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55.”

In addition, Article 2, paragraph 2, provides as follows:

“All Members. . .shall fulfill in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.”

Reference should also be made to Article 76 which states:

The basic objectives of the trusteeship system. . .shall be:

...

(c) to encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion. . .

Provisions Relating to Human Rights in Recent International Agreements

The five draft peace treaties with the ex-enemy States all contain provisions relating to human rights. The following texts are taken from the Roumanian draft treaty:

Art. 3: “Roumania shall take all measures necessary to secure to all persons under Roumanian jurisdiction, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, the enjoyment of human rights and of the fundamental freedoms including freedom of expression, of press and publication, of religious worship, of political opinion and of public meeting.”

Art. 4: “Roumania, which in accordance with the Armistice Agreement has taken measures to set free, irrespective of citizenship and nationality, all persons held in confinement on account of their activities in favour of<sup>74</sup> the United Nations, or because of their racial origin, and to repeal discriminatory legislation and restrictions imposed hereunder, undertakes to complete these measures and in future not to take any measures or enact any laws which would be incompatible with the objects and purposes mentioned in this Article.”<sup>75</sup>

Art. 5. “Roumania, which in accordance with the Armistice Agreement has taken measures for dissolving all organizations of a Fascist type on Roumanian territory, whether political, military or paramilitary, as well as other organizations conducting propaganda hostile to the Soviet Union or to any of the other United Nations, undertakes not to permit<sup>76</sup> in future the existence and activities of organizations of that nature which have as their aim denial to the people of their democratic rights”.

<sup>74</sup> The working paper was prepared prior to the publication of the official text of the peace treaty with Romania on 18 January 1947. In the official text, the phrase “, or because of their sympathies with,” is added after “in favour of”. See E/CN.4/W.4/Corr.2 of 21 January 1947, which cites the texts published in the New York Times of 18 January 1947.

<sup>75</sup> Beginning with the word “hereunder”, the remainder of the official text of article 4 reads: “thereunder, shall complete these measures and shall in future not take any measures or enact any laws which would be incompatible with the purposes set forth in this Article”. See E/CN.4/W.4/Corr.2 of 21 January 1947.

<sup>76</sup> The words “undertakes not to permit” are replaced by “shall not permit” in the official text. See E/CN.4/W.4/Corr.2 of 21 January 1947.

Identical provisions will be found in the draft peace treaties with Italy, Hungary, Bulgaria and Finland.

The draft treaties with Roumania and Hungary also contain the following additional provision on the status of equality:

“Roumania (Hungary) further undertakes that the laws in force in Roumania (Hungary) shall not, either in their content or in their application discriminate or entail any discrimination between persons of Roumanian (Hungarian) nationality on the ground of their race, sex, language or religion, whether in reference to their persons, property, business, professional or financial interests, status, political or civic rights or any other matters.”<sup>77</sup> (Art. 3bis in the Roumanian treaty and Article 2bis in the Hungarian treaty.)

These provisions refer to the territories only of the ex-enemy States; but the Italian treaty contains a special provision relating to human rights and freedoms in ceded territories.

[5]

Reference should also be made to the recently concluded treaty between the Netherlands and the Indonesian Republic which contains provisions safeguarding in both parts of the Netherlands Indonesian Union “the fundamental human rights and liberties referred to in the Charter of the United Nations Organization”.

References to Human Rights in Constitutions of Specialized Agencies

International Labour Organization

On 17 May 1944, the International Labour Organization restated its aims and purposes in the so-called Declaration of Philadelphia. This Declaration contains various references to the status of security and also to the status of liberty. Chapters I, II and III of the Declaration read as follows:

I

“The Conference reaffirms the fundamental principles on which the Organization is based and, in particular, that:

- a) labour is not a commodity;
- b) freedom of expression and of association are essential to sustained progress;
- c) poverty anywhere constitutes a danger to prosperity everywhere;
- d) the war against want requires to be carried on with unrelenting vigour within each nation, and by continuous and concerted international effort in which the representatives of workers and employers, enjoying equal status with those of governments, join with them in free discussion and democratic decision with a view to the promotion of the common welfare.

<sup>77</sup> The words “political or civic rights or any other matters” are replaced by “political or civil rights or any other matter” in the official text. See E/CN.4/W.4/Corr.2 of 21 January 1947.

II

“Believing that experience has fully demonstrated the truth of the statement in the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation that lasting peace can be established only if it is based on social justice, the Conference affirms that:

- a) all human beings, irrespective of race, creed or sex, have the right to pursue both their material well-being and their spiritual development in conditions of freedom and dignity, of economic security and equal opportunity;
- [6]
- b) the attainment of the conditions in which this shall be possible must constitute the central aim of national and international policy;
  - c) all national and international policies and measures, in particular those of an economic and financial character, should be judged in this light and accepted only in so far as they may be held to promote and not to hinder the achievement of this fundamental objective;
  - d) it is a responsibility of the International Labour Organization to examine and consider all international economic and financial policies and measures in the light of this fundamental objective;
  - e) in discharging the tasks entrusted to it the International Labour Organization, having considered all relevant economic and financial factors, may include in its decisions and recommendations any provisions which it considers appropriate.

III

“The Conference recognizes the solemn obligation of the International Labour Organization to further among the nations of the world programmes which will achieve:

- a) full employment and the raising of standards of living;
- b) the employment of workers in the occupations in which they can have the satisfaction of giving the fullest measure of their skill and attainments and make their greatest contribution to the common well-being;
- c) the provision, as a means to the attainment of this end and under adequate guarantees for all concerned, of facilities for training and the transfer of labour, including migration for employment and settlement;
- d) policies in regard to wages and earnings, hours and other conditions of work calculated to ensure a just share of the fruits of progress to all, and a minimum living wage to all employed and in need of such protection;
- e) the effective recognition of the right of collective bargaining, the cooperation of management and labour in the continuous improvement of productive efficiency, and the collaboration of workers and employers in the preparation and application of social and economic measures;
- f) the extension of social security measures to provide a basic income to all in need of such protection and comprehensive medical care;
- g) adequate protection for the life and health of workers in all occupations;
- h) provision for child welfare and maternity protection;
- i) the provision of adequate nutrition, housing and facilities for recreation and culture;
- j) the assurance of equality of educational and vocational opportunity.”

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization

The preamble to the Constitution of UNESCO states:

“That since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defences of peace must be constructed; . . . that the great and terrible war which has now ended was a war made possible by the denial of the [7] democratic principles of the dignity, equality and mutual respect of men, and by the propagation, in their place, through ignorance and prejudice, of the doctrine of the inequality of men and races; that the wide diffusion of culture, and the education of humanity for justice and liberty and peace are indispensable to the dignity of man and constitute a sacred duty which all the nations must fulfil in a spirit of mutual assistance and concern; . . .”

It was for these reasons, the preamble says, that “the States Parties to this Constitution, believing in full and equal opportunities for education for all, in the unrestricted pursuit of objective truth, and in the free exchange of ideas and knowledge, are agreed and determined to develop and to increase the means of communication between their peoples and to employ these means for the purposes of mutual understanding and a truer and more perfect knowledge of each other’s lives”.

Article I of the Constitution, which deals with the purposes and functions of the Organization, provides:

“The purpose of the Organization is to contribute to peace and security by promoting collaboration among the nations through education, science and culture in order to further universal respect for justice, for the rule of law and for the human rights and fundamental freedoms which are affirmed for the peoples of the world, without distinction of race, sex, language or religion, by the Charter of the United Nations.

“To realize this purpose the Organization will:

- a) Collaborate in the work of advancing the mutual knowledge and understanding of peoples, through all means of mass communication and to that end recommend such international agreements as may be necessary to promote the free flow of ideas by word and image;
- b) Give fresh impulse to popular education and to the spread of culture: by collaborating with Members, at their request, in the development of educational activities; by instituting collaboration among the nations to advance the ideal of equality of educational opportunity without regard to race, sex or any distinctions, economic or social; by suggesting educational methods best suited to prepare the children of the world for the responsibilities of freedom.”

The International Refugee Organization

The Constitution of this organization reaffirms the right of asylum for political dissidents and victims of racial persecution. Part I, Section C of Annex 7 (Definitions) declares:

“The following shall be considered as valid objections (to repatriation):

[8]

1. persecution, or fear, based on reasonable grounds, or persecution because of race, religion, nationality or political opinions, provided these opinions are not in conflict with the principles of the United Nations as laid down in the preamble of the Charter of the United Nations”.

The World Health Organization

The Constitution of this organization states in the preamble that:

“The enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health is one of the fundamental rights of every human being without distinction of race, religion, political belief, economic or social condition.”

Resolutions of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly

The General Assembly adopted certain resolutions having a bearing on human rights, to wit:

- the resolution on “religious and so-called racial persecution and discrimination (A/187)”
- the resolution on genocide (A/231)
- the resolution on the treatment of Indians (A/205)

The resolution on “religious and so-called racial persecution and discrimination” reads as follows:

“The General Assembly of the United Nations declares that it is in the higher interests of Humanity to put an immediate end to religious and so-called racial persecution and discrimination, and calls on the Governments and responsible authorities to conform both to the letter and to the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations, and to take the most prompt and energetic steps to that end.”

Provisions in Trusteeship Agreements Relating to Human Rights

The seven<sup>78</sup> Trusteeship Agreements adopted in the second part of the first session of the General Assembly contain specific provisions relating to human rights.

[9]

<sup>78</sup> The word “seven” is changed to “eight” by E/CN.4/W.4/Corr.1 of 22 January 1947.

Definition of Human Rights

It will be noted that, while the expression “human rights and fundamental freedoms” is used in the Charter, no attempt is made to define what is meant by the expression. It might be suggested that no such definition is necessary, that the purpose of the Charter was merely to establish equal treatment; whatever human rights and fundamental freedoms may exist in a particular country, these rights and freedoms should be respected without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion. In view, however, of the attitudes already adopted by Member Governments, it seems that such a restricted interpretation of the Charter is unlikely to be adopted. The purpose of the proposed International Bill of Rights should be to give meaning to the general terms of the Charter and to establish minimum international standards of human freedoms and security. This does not, however, necessarily involve the formulation of a definition that will hold in all places and for all times. What is needed at the present time is rather the cataloguing in an international instrument of those human rights and freedoms which are of international concern and the establishment of an appropriate machinery for their international supervision and enforcement. Some of these rights and freedoms have already been catalogued in the peace treaties with Italy and the European satellites of the Axis where, as it has been indicated above, the following freedoms are enunciated: freedom of expression, of the press and of publication, of religious worship, of political opinion and of public meeting. These treaties also make detailed provision for equality of treatment.

Relation of an International Bill of Rights to National Law

It is conceivable, but hardly probable, that the international community as manifested in the international legal order might be given [10] exclusive jurisdiction in the matter of human rights and freedoms. This would involve the creation of a direct relationship between individual men and women and the international order in the matter but the rupture of existing legal relationships between individuals and their national orders. Because it would involve the abandonment of age-old guarantees and traditions in favour of a new and untested system, such a rupture would be fraught with danger. It is, therefore, unlikely, to say the least, that States will abandon jurisdiction in the matter of human rights and freedoms to the exclusive competence of the international community. The only possible alternative, if the international community is to have some competence in the matter, is to recognize the existence of concurrent jurisdiction, that is to say, both in the international community and in the various State orders. There are many examples of such parallelism in modern government. Thus, many federal unions have both federal and state or provision bills of rights that are not necessarily identical. In more concrete terms, it is suggested that the Commission on Human Rights should formulate an International Bill of Rights which will supplement, but not replace, existing national Bills of Rights. In this way, the Commission will contribute towards the achievement of one of the purposes of the United Nations which is:

“To achieve international cooperation. . .in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.”

Form of the International Bill of Rights

The International Bill of Rights might take one of three forms, viz. a declaration or other act of the General Assembly, a multilateral convention, or an amendment to the Charter.

While it would undoubtedly be easier to achieve adoption of a Bill of Rights in the form of a resolution or other act of the General Assembly, the [11] question arises whether such an act would have the binding character desirable for an International Bill of Rights. If the bill takes the form of a multilateral convention, there would be no doubt regarding its binding character. Such a procedure, however, might involve delays and there is the problem of ratification. On the other hand, this procedure has the advantage that the convention should be left open for subsequent accession by States that are not ready to accept it immediately. This would also give Governments an opportunity to adjust their national legislation to the requirements of the Bill of Rights before accepting the convention. This procedure would also make it possible to extend the International Bill of Rights to non-member States.

The advantage of an amendment to the Charter as a means of enacting the Bill of Rights is that this would integrate the Bill of Rights into the fundamental law of the United Nations. It would also mean that Members of the United Nations could not denounce the Bill and retain membership in the United Nations which might be possible if the Bill took the form of a convention. The disadvantage is, of course, the complicated nature of the amendment procedure. It may be noted that there are two methods provided in the Charter for its amendment, viz. the normal method under Article 108 and the method provided by Article 109.

The three forms that the Bill of Rights might take are not necessarily mutually exclusive. Indeed, it is suggested that the Bill might first take the form of an act of the General Assembly pending the adoption and ratification of a convention and that, later, the Bill might be incorporated into the Charter as an integral part of the fundamental law of the United Nations.

Geographical Area of the Bill of Rights

The Commission will have to decide whether the Bill should apply in the metropolitan areas of Member States only or whether it should also apply to non-self-governing territories and trust areas. It may [12] be noted that the various trusteeship agreements approved at the second part of the first session of the General Assembly contain provisions regarding the application of United Nations conventions and recommendations in trust territories.

The Contents of the Bill

It is obviously impossible in a paper of this nature to enter into any detailed discussion regarding the contents of the International Bill of Rights. It may be suggested, however, that the Bill should include a preamble propounding the philosophy on which the Bill is based. Copies of various draft Bills of Rights, including the four drafts now before the United Nations, are available for distribution to Members of the Commission.

It is also suggested that the catalogue of rights might be divided into three parts: one dealing with the status of liberty, another with the status of equality and another with the status of security. In the first part would be included such rights as the right of personal freedom, freedom of worship, freedom of opinion, freedom of expression, freedom of assembly and association, etc. This part might also contain provisions regarding the right of individuals to petition the United Nations and the right to communicate with the United Nations without danger of reprisal. The part dealing with the status of equality would elaborate the principles already contained in the Charter concerning non-discrimination for reasons of race, sex, language or religion. The Commission may wish to consider the advisability of extending the criteria of discrimination beyond those enumerated in the Charter. Other possible criteria are, for example, nationality and political belief. The part dealing with the status of security would include the right to work, the right to education, the right to social security, etc.

The Commission will also have to consider the problem of admissible restrictions, both general and particular, to rights established by the Bill. It is a general recognized principle of law that, in the exercise [13] of rights, everyone is limited by the rights of others and by the just requirements of the State.

The Commission may also want to discuss the question whether the Bill should establish duties of the individual in addition to rights. Recent developments indicate a trend towards the establishment of duties of the individual not only towards his own State but also towards the international community.

The Commission may also want to consider the problem of the suspension of the International Bill of Rights, in whole or in part, by national governments and possibly by the United Nations.

Implementation of the International Bill of Rights

In its resolution of 21 June 1946, the Economic and Social Council stated that “the purpose of the United Nations, with regard to the promotion and observance of human rights as defined in the Charter of the United Nations, can only be fulfilled if provisions are made for the implementation of human rights and of an International Bill of Rights”; and the Council requested the Commission “to submit at an early date suggestions regarding the ways and means for the effective implementation of human rights and fundamental freedoms with a view to assisting the Economic and Social Council in working out arrangements for such implementation with other appropriate organs of the United Nations”. Consideration has been given to the problem in Professor Lauterpacht’s book An International Bill of the Rights of Man.

The Secretariat feels that consideration might be given to the following questions:

- a) whether or not the Bill should contain a provision to the effect that it cannot be unilaterally abrogated or modified;
  - b) whether or not the Bill should include an express statement to the effect that the matters dealt with in it are of international concern;
  - c) whether or not the Bill should become part of the fundamental law of States accepting it; and
- [14]
- d) whether or not the provisions of the Bill should be declared to be directly applicable in the various countries without further implementation by national legislation or transformation into national law.

It would seem that provisions of the nature mentioned in c) and d) are necessary if the Bill is to be enforceable as part of the national law of the various countries accepting it. In so far as implementation on the international plane is concerned, it is suggested that the Commission might consider the possibility of providing in successive stages for international supervision and enforcement. The following stages are suggested:

- a) the establishment of the right of the General Assembly and other organs of the United Nations, including possibly the Commission on Human Rights, to discuss and make recommendations in regard to violations of the Bill;
- b) the establishment of the right of individuals to petition the United Nations, as a means of initiating procedure for enforcement of human rights;

- c) the establishment of a special organ of the United Nations with jurisdiction and the duty to supervise and enforce human rights motu proprio;
- d) the establishment of jurisdiction in this organ to consider cases of suspension of the Bill of Rights, either in whole or in part;
- e) the establishment of local agencies of the United Nations in the various countries with jurisdiction to supervise and enforce human rights therein. The Commission might find it useful, in this connection, to study the precedents established, for example, by the Convention between Germany and Poland on Upper Silesia of 15 May 1922.

The Commission may want also to discuss the role that the Security Council might play in the implementation of the Bill. According to Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter, the exception of domestic jurisdiction cannot be invoked in cases where enforcement measures are being taken by the Security Council under Chapter VII. The Commission may want to consider the question whether the Security Council should not be given a more extended jurisdiction in the matter.

[15]

The Drafting and Acceptance of the International Bill of Rights

The Commission may not want to attempt to draft the International Bill of Rights itself. In that event, it is suggested that it might confine itself to a discussion of general principles. Thus, it would discuss the form of the Bill, the general areas of its application and, in broad outline, the rights and freedoms to be defined and, finally, methods of implementation. Responsibility for the actual drafting of the Bill might then be assigned to a drafting committee. If this procedure is adopted, the Commission will have not only to set up the drafting committee but to fix its terms of reference. It should be recalled in this connection that, by its resolution of 21 June 1946, the Economic and Social Council authorized the Commission "to call in ad hoc working groups of non-governmental experts in specialized fields or individual experts without further reference to the Council, but with the approval of the President of the Council and the Secretary-General". The drafting committee might be instructed to bring in a report before the second session of the Commission. At its second session, the Commission would consider the draft Bill, as prepared by the drafting committee, and, after such modifications as might be thought advisable, submit its recommendations to the fifth regular session of the Economic and Social Council. It would thus be possible for the General Assembly to consider the recommendations of the Council at the next regular session of the Assembly in September 1947.

E/CN.4/W.4/Add.1

20 January 1947

Addendum to Working Paper on an International Bill of Rights (Item 8 on Provisional Agenda)

(Addendum 1: Dealing with Provisions in the Permanent Statute for the free Territory of Trieste Concerning Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms)

The Permanent Statute for the free Territory of Trieste sets a precedent in conferring upon the Security Council responsibility to “ensure. . . the protection of the basic human rights of the inhabitants”. (Article 2a)

The Governor of the Free Territory, as the representative of the Security Council in Trieste, is responsible, according to Article 17 of the Statute “for supervising the observance of the Statute including the protection of the basic human rights of the inhabitants. . .”

The Statute also provides by Article 4:

“The Constitution of the Free Territory shall ensure to all persons under the jurisdiction of the Free Territory, without distinction as to ethnic origin, sex, language or religion, the enjoyment of human rights and of the fundamental freedoms, including freedom of religious worship, language, speech and publication, education, assembly and association. Citizens of the Free Territory shall be assured of equality of eligibility for public office.”

Article 7 of the Statute provides that:

“The official languages of the Free Territory shall be Italian and Slovene”,
and leaves it to the Constitution to “determine in what circumstances Croat may be used as a third official language.”

Finally, it is provided by Article 5 that:

“no person who has acquired the citizenship of the Free Territory shall be deprived of his civil or political rights except as judicial punishment for the infraction of the penal laws of the Free Territory.”

E/CN.4/W.8

20 January 1947

Textual Comparison of the Proposed Drafts of an International Bill of Rights (Item 8 on Provisional Agenda)

(Prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

---

[2]	Draft Submitted by the Delegation of Panama (Prepared by the American Law Institute) E/HR/3	Draft Submitted by the Delegation of Cuba E/HR/1	Draft Submitted by the Delegation of Chile (Prepared by the Inter-American Juridical Committee) E/CN.4/2	Draft Submitted by the American Federation of Labor (E/CT.2/2)
-----	---	--	---	--

---

1. Preamble    Upon the freedom of the individual depends the welfare of the people, the safety of the state and the peace of the world.

In society complete freedom cannot be attained; the liberties of the one are limited by the liberties of others, and the preservation of freedom requires the fulfilment by individuals of their duties as members of society.

The function of the state is to promote conditions under which the individual can be most free.

To express those freedoms to which every

Every human being shall have the following rights:

Although first responsibility for the maintenance of human rights and freedom rests with the local community of the nation, we now live in an interdependent world in which these basic rights and freedoms can be effectively guaranteed and expanded only on an international scale. We must not only make nations safe for freedom, but we must also make freedom safe for the individuals who constitute the various nations. Otherwise, the peoples will be helpless and unable to prevent aggressor governments from launching wars. A nation under the heel of a despotic government inevitably tends to be despotic in its relations with other nations. Despotism in any nation menaces the peace of every nation.

The dynamic motive of a truly democratic society is to foster and enhance the worth and dignity of the individual human being – the basic unit of human society. Hence, the first pre-occupation of every democratic and

---

1. Preamble (Cont.) human being is entitled and to assure that all shall live under a government of the people, by the people, for the people, this declaration is made.

progressive state is the welfare of the individual. The state has no good other than the good of its individual members, present and prospective – its supreme test [3] is the way in which it provides for the full and free development of each individual. The more rights enjoyed by individuals and the more individuals for whom these rights of free development are safeguarded, the more democratic will any society be.

...

Without freedom from fear of tyranny by abolitionist bureaucrats or dictators and without freedom from want, there can be no political or industrial democracy within nations or just relations and enduring peace between nations.

Only by removing the political, economic, and social ills and maladjustments afflicting humanity, will mankind be able to reach that long hoped for stage of civilization in which peace and plenty shall truly prevail.

In this spirit, the American Federation of Labor proposes to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations that it draft an International Bill of Rights which shall be part of the general peace [4] treaty and be binding on all its signatories. We propose that this International Bill of Rights shall include the following provisions:

---

2. Life and Liberty (including asylum)

1. The right to life, to liberty, to personal security and to respect of his dignity as a human being.

2. The right to shape his life according to his calling so as to enable him to develop his personality and to seek happiness within the limits of life in the community.

21. The right to sanctuary in a foreign country when escaping from persecution of a political, religious or racial nature.

*Article 1
Right to Life*

Every person has the right to life. This right extends to the right to life from the moment of conception; to the right to life of incurables, imbeciles and the insane. It includes the right to sustenance and support in the case of those unable to support themselves by their own efforts; and it implies a duty of the state to see to it that such support is made available.

The right to life may be denied by the state only on the ground of conviction of the gravest of crimes, to which the death penalty has been attached.

1. Every human being – irrespective of race, colour, creed, sex or national origin – has the right to pursue his or her work and spiritual development in conditions of freedom and dignity.

10. Involuntary servitude in any shape, manner or form or under any guise shall be outlawed and discontinued by all nations and all peoples.

6. The right of asylum is to be guaranteed by all nations. No human being who is a refugee from any political regime he disapproves is to be forced to return to territory under the sovereignty of that regime.

---

[5]
2. Life and Liberty (including asylum)
(Cont.)

Article II

Right to Personal Liberty

Every person has the right to personal liberty.

The right to personal liberty includes the right to freedom of movement from one part of the territory of the state to another, and the right to leave the state itself. It includes also freedom to establish a residence in any part of the territory, subject only to the restrictions that may be imposed by general laws looking to the public order and security of the state.

The right to personal liberty includes the inviolability of the domicile of the individual and of his personal correspondence.

The state may restrict this right only to the extent necessary to protect the public health, safety, morals and general welfare, in accordance with subsequent provisions of this Declaration.

The right of the state to call upon the services of the individual in time of emergency or to meet the necessities of national defence shall not be regarded as a limitation upon the fundamental right to personal liberty, [6] but merely as a temporary restriction operating during the existence of the national need.

No person shall be imprisoned or held in servitude in consequence of the mere breach of contractual obligations.

---

3. Family
Relations

Article X

Right to Freedom of Family Relations

Every person has the right to be free from interference in his family relations.

It is the duty of the state to respect and to protect the reciprocal rights of husband and wife in their mutual relations.

Parents have a primary right of control over their children during minority, and they have a primary obligation to maintain and support them.

It is the duty of the [7] state to assist parents in the maintenance of adequate standards of child welfare within the family circle, and to promote as far as possible the ownership of individual homes as a means of fostering better family relations.

The state may restrict the control of parents over their children only to the extent that the parents themselves are unable to perform their duties towards their children or actually fail to do so. Where necessary, the state must itself provide for their protection and support.

---

4. Freedom from Wrong Interference

Article 6.

Freedom from Wrongful Interference

Freedom from unreasonable interference with his person, home, reputation, privacy, activities, and property is the right of everyone.[8]
The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

6. The right to protection from unjustified interferences with his person, family, home, reputation or private activities.

e. Freedom from the terror of secret police surveillance, arrest or torture. This can be assured only through the abolition of all political police and concentration camps in every country.

---

5. Right to Resist Oppression

20. The right to resist any form of oppression.

---

---

6. Freedom of Religion

Article 1.

Freedom of Religion

Freedom of belief and of worship is the right of everyone. [8] The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

4. The right to choose and profess freely his religion without any restriction other than that imposed by respect for morality and public order.

Article 4

Right to Freedom of Religious Worship

Every person has the right to freedom of religious belief and worship.

This right includes freedom of religious worship in public as well as in private; freedom of religious worship by groups as well as by individuals; freedom to maintain churches and other places of public worship and to assemble in them without restraint; freedom of parents to educate children in their particular religious belief; freedom of religious propaganda in spoken or written form. [9]

The only restrictions which the state may place upon the right of freedom of religious worship are those called for by the requirements of public health, safety and good morals; and all such restrictions must be in accordance with general laws and administered without discrimination.

5. Freedom of religion and right to religious worship are indispensable to a truly democratic society.

A distinction is recognized between strictly religious activities and other activities of an economic or financial character associated with the maintenance of religious worship but not forming an essential part of it. These economic or financial activities may be regulated by the state in accordance with the general laws governing such activities. [10]

7. Freedom of Opinion and Speech	Article 2. Freedom of Opinion Freedom to form and hold opinions and to receive opinions and information is the right of everyone.	3. The right to free investigation to enable him to form his opinions, and to express these opinions freely, subject to his being held responsible for his actions.	Article III Right to Freedom of Speech and of Expression Every person has the right to freedom of	8. There must be freedom of opinion and expression and full access to the opinions of others. 9. The more full and complete knowledge of the world is extended and realized by the peoples of all nations, the less will be the distance and misunderstandings between nations and people. Therefore, the right of the
----------------------------------	---	--	--	--

7. Freedom
of Opinion
and Speech
(Cont.)

The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

Article 3.

Freedom of Speech

Freedom of expression is the right of everyone.

The state has a duty to refrain from arbitrary limitation of this freedom and to prevent denial of reasonable access to channels of communication.

speech and of expression.

This right includes freedom to form and to hold opinions and to give expression to them in private and in public, and to publish them in written or printed form.

The right to freedom of speech and of expression extends to the use of whatever means of communication are available: freedom to use the postal service, the public utilities of telegraph, telephone and radio communication; freedom to use the graphic arts, the theatre, the cinema and other agencies for the dissemination of ideas.

The right to freedom of speech and of expression includes freedom of access to the sources of information, both domestic and foreign. [11] free access to, and exchange of information, scientific, economic, social, religious and political, the promotion of knowledge and of cultural relations, the full and free dissemination of news by radio and press must be assured.

12. (d) Freedom from censorship of books, press, radio and art, having due regard to the requirements of morals and decency.

The right to freedom of speech and of expression includes the special and highly privileged right to freedom of the press.

The only limitations which the state may impose upon this freedom are those prescribed by general laws looking to the protection of the public peace against slanderous or libellous defamation of others, and against indecent language or publications, provocative of violence among the people.

Censorship of the press is prohibited, whether by direct or indirect means, and all limitations imposed in the interest of public order shall only be applied subsequently to the publication of the material alleged to be of the offensive character

---

7. Freedom
of Opinion
and Speech
(Cont.)

described in the law.
Censorship of the cinema may be in advance of publication, taking into account the particular form of publication and the necessity of protecting the public against matters offensive to accepted standards of conduct. The state may not retain a monopoly of radio broadcasting so [12] as to deny to the individual the opportunity for the free expression of opinion through that instrumentality of communication.

---

8. Freedom of Assembly
and Association

Article 4.
Freedom of Assembly
Freedom to assemble peaceably with others is the right of everyone.
The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

15. The right to meeting and associating with his fellow men for fostering the pursuit of permissible aims.

Article V
Right to Freedom of Assembly
Every person has the right to assemble peaceably with others as a means of giving expression to views

2. Freedom of expression and association is vital to the preservation of the basic liberties and the enhancement of the spiritual and material progress of the human race. These rights must be inviolate for those who oppose, no less than for those who support, a ruling party or a regime at any specific moment.
Genuine freedom means the right of association and organization into various, into

Article 5.

Freedom to Form Associations

Freedom to form with others associations of a political, economic, religious, social, cultural, or any other character for purposes not inconsistent with these articles is the right of everyone.

The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

upon matters of common interest.

The state has the duty to permit the use of public places for purposes of general assembly. It has the right to be informed of meetings to be held in public places, to designate convenient localities, and to impose conditions upon the use of such places in the interest of the public order and safety. Similar conditions may be imposed upon assemblies in public and in private buildings. But the conditions imposed by the state upon the holding of public meetings must not be such as to impair substantially the right itself [13] to hold such meetings; and no conditions shall be required for the assembly of small groups of persons whether in public or in private places.

differing, educational, religious, economic, political and trade union organizations, without fear of the threat of direct or indirect control and compulsion by governmental or any other agencies.

---

8. Freedom of Assembly
and Association
(Cont.)

The right of assembly includes the right to hold public parades, subject to the same restrictions to which assemblies are subject.

Article VI

Right to Freedom of Association

Every person has the right to associate with other persons for the protection and promotion of legitimate interests.

The state has the right to adopt regulations governing the activities of associations,
provided they are applied without discrimination against a particular group, and provided they do not impair substantially the right of association. [14]

---

9. Fair Trial and Nonretroactivity of Laws

Article 7.
Fair Trial

Everyone has the right to have his criminal and civil liabilities and his rights determined without undue

17. The right to protection from competent courts free from all influence
contrary to justice.

Article XII
Right to a Fair Trial

Every person accused of crime shall have the right to a fair public hearing of the case, to be

11. Freedom from arbitrary arrest, detention, search and seizure; proper judicial determination of arrest and charges; a fair public trial by jury or competent and unprejudiced court constituted in accordance with normal judicial procedure, right of delay by fair public trial by a competent tribunal before which he has had opportunity for a full hearing.

The state has a duty to maintain adequate tribunals and procedures to make this right effective.

Article 9.

Retroactive Laws

No one shall be convicted of crime except for violation of a law in effect at the time of the commission of the act charged as an offence, nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that applicable at the time of the commission of the offence. [15]

18. The right to trial without undue delay, to self-defence, and to protection from sentences except in pursuance of laws in force prior to the act with which he is charged.

confronted with witnesses, and to be judged by established tribunals and according to the law in force at the time the act was committed. No fines shall be imposed except in accordance with the provisions of general laws; and no cruel or unusual punishments.

habeas corpus and freedom from arbitrary imposition of penalties.

10. Freedom from Arbitrary Detention

Article 8.

Freedom from Arbitrary Detention

Everyone who is detained has the right to immediate judicial

19. The right to immunity from arbitrary arrest and to a review of the regularity of his arrest by ordinary tribunals.

Article XI

Right to be Free from Arbitrary Arrest

Every person accused of crime shall have the right not to be arrested except upon warrant

See 11 Column above

---

10.
Freedom from Arbitrary Detention
(Cont.)

determination of the legality of his detention.

The state has a duty to provide adequate procedures to make this right effective.

duly issued in accordance with the law,
unless the person is arrested flagrante delicto. He shall have the right to a prompt trial and to proper treatment during the time he is in custody.

---

11.
Property Rights

Article 10.
Property Rights

Everyone has the right to own property under general law. The state shall not deprive anyone of his property except for a public purpose and with just compensation.

16. The right to immunity from expropriation other than in pursuance of legal proceedings or for the benefit of the community.

Article XIII
Right to Own Property

Every person has the right to own property.
The state has the duty to cooperate in assisting the individual to attain in minimum standard of private ownership of property based upon the essential material needs of a decent life, looking to the maintenance of the dignity of [16]
the human person and the sanctity of home life.

The state may determine by general
laws the limitations

3. The right to organize and work for a constantly more equitable distribution of the national income and wealth.

which may be placed upon the ownership of property, looking to the maintenance of social justice and to the promotion of the common interest of the community.

The right of private property includes the right to the free disposal of property, subject, however, to limitations imposed by the state in the interest of maintaining the family patrimony.

The right of private property is subject to the right of the state to expropriate property in pursuance of public policy, just compensation being made to the owner.

---

12.
Education

Article 11.
Education

Everyone has the right to education.

8. The right to education which will enable him to improve himself in every respect and will lead to his becoming a useful member of [17]

Article XVII
Right to Education

Every person has the right to education.

---

---

12.
Education
(Cont.)

The state has a duty to require that every child within its jurisdiction receive education of the primary standard; to maintain or insure that there are maintained facilities for such education which are adequate and free; and to promote the development of facilities for further education which are adequate and effectively available to all its residents.

society and sharing in all the material and spiritual benefits of civilisation.

The right of children to education is paramount.

The state has the duty to assist the individual in the exercise of the right to education, in accordance with the resources of the state. The opportunities of education must be open to all upon equal terms in accordance with their natural capacities and their desires to take advantage of the facilities available.

The state has the right to fix general standards to which educational institutions must conform, provided that these standards are in accord with other fundamental rights and are the same for public and for private schools.

The right to education involves the right to teach, subject to the restrictions which accompany the right to education. [18]

---

13. Work
and Conditions
of Work

Article 12.
Work

Everyone has the right to work.

The state has a duty to take such measures as may be necessary to insure that all its residents have an opportunity for useful work.

Article 13.

Conditions of Work

Everyone has the right to reasonable conditions of work.

The state has a duty to take such measures as may be necessary to insure reasonable wages, hours, and other conditions of work.

9. The right to work under conditions fitting to his status as a human being and to receive, in return, a remuneration in proportion to the value of his contribution to the community.

Article XIV
Right to Work

Every person has the right to work as a means of supporting himself and of contributing to the support of his family.

This right includes the right to choose freely a vocation, in so far as the opportunities of work available make this possible, as well as the right to transfer from one employment to another and to move from one place of employment to another. Associated with the right to work is the right to form labour and professional unions.

Every person has the duty to work as a contribution to the general welfare of the state.

The state has the duty to assist the individual in the exercise of his right to work when his own efforts are not adequate to secure [19]

4. Raise labour standards throughout the world. There is no more effective way of stimulating the revival of production and the international expansion of markets than by increasing the purchasing power of the great mass of people in every country.

12. (b) There is to be no peacetime conscription or militarization of workers protesting or striking against conditions of labour which they consider as unfair or unsatisfactory.

---

13. Work
and Conditions
of Work
(Cont.)

employment; it must make every effort to promote stability of employment and to insure proper conditions of labour, and it must fix minimum standards of just compensation.

The state has the right, in time of emergency, to call upon the services of the individual in cases where such services are necessary to meet an urgent public need.

---

14. Food
and Housing

Article 14.

Food and Housing

Everyone has the right to adequate food and housing.

The state has a duty to take such measures as may be necessary to insure that all its residents have an opportunity to obtain these essentials. [20]

11. The right to adequate food.

12. The right to hygienic living conditions and to clothing suitable for the climate in which he lives.

13. The right to live in surroundings free from avoidable diseases.

---

15. Social Security

Article 15.

Social Security

Everyone has the right to social security.

10. The right to receive adequate maintenance in the event of unemployment, sickness or chronic illness, to meet his own

Article XVI

Right to Social Security

Every person has the right to social security.

3. . . . and the right to strive for the enhancement of the moral and material wellbeing of the people for better health and security against the ravages of unemployment, accidents, sickness and old age – are to be considered inalienable.

The state has a duty to maintain or insure that there are maintained comprehensive arrangements for the promotion of health, for the prevention of sickness and accident, and for the provision of medical care and of compensation for loss of livelihood.

and his family's material and spiritual needs.

14. The right to adequate medical assistance.

The state has the duty to assist all persons to attain social security. To this end the state must promote measures of public health and safety and must establish systems of social insurance and agencies of social cooperation in accordance with which all persons may be assured an adequate standard of living and may be protected against the contingencies of unemployment, accident, disability and ill-health and the eventuality of old age.

Every person has the duty to cooperate with the state according to his powers in the maintenance and administration of the measures taken to promote his own social security. [21]

The conditions of work under modern large-scale industry make it especially necessary for the working people to have an effective system of social legislation which will provide minimum wages; maximum working hours; guarantee against the employment of child labour; adequate medical care; accident, unemployment and old-age insurance and other such vital measures making for effective social security of the population.

---

16. Right to Nationality

Article IX

Right to a Nationality

Every person has the right to a nationality.

---

16. Right to Nationality
(Cont.)

No state may refuse to grant its nationality to persons born upon its soil of parents who are legitimately present in the country.

No person may be deprived of his nationality of birth unless by his free choice he acquires another nationality.

Every person has the right to renounce the nationality of his birth, or a previously acquired nationality, upon acquiring the nationality of another state.

Every person has the duty to cooperate with the state according to his powers in the maintenance and administration of the measures taken to promote his own social security.

---

17.
Participation in Government

Article 16.
Participation in Government

22. The right to choose his ruler and to share in the government of his country.

Article XIII
Right to Participate in Elections

Every person,
national of the state, has

Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his state.

The state has a duty to conform to the will of the people as manifested by democratic elections.

the right to participate in the election of the legislative [22] and executive officers of the government in accordance with the provisions of the national constitution. The practical exercise of this right may, however, be conditioned by the duty of the person to show that he is competent to understand the principles upon which the constitution is based. The constitution of the state shall provide for a government of the people, by the people and for the people.

This right presupposes the right to form political parties.

No person shall be denied the right to hold public office, or to be appointed to any of the public services of the state of which he is a national, upon grounds of race or religion or sex or any other arbitrary discrimination; and the

---

17.
Participation in Government
(Cont.)

administration of the public services of the state shall, in respect to appointments and terms and conditions of service, be [23] without favour or discrimination.

---

18. Right to Petition Government

Article VII

Right to Petition the Government

Every person has the right, whether exercised by individual action or in conjunction with others, to petition the government for redress of grievances or to petition in respect to any other matter of public or private interest.

The publication of such petitions shall not be made a ground for penalizing in any way, directly or indirectly, the person or persons
making the petition.

---

19. Equal Protection and Equal Opportunity

Article 17.

Equal Protection

Everyone has the right to protection against arbitrary discrimination

5. The right to equality before the law without distinction as to race, religion, colour, class or sex.

Article XV

Right to Share in Benefits of Science

Every person has the right to share in the benefits [24]

a. All human beings have real security and are free from discrimination on account of race, colour, creed or difference of political belief from the government in control or the party in power.

in the provisions and application of the law because of race, religion, sex, or any other reason.

7. The right to equal opportunity with others in shaping his life, raising the standard of living, and fulfilling a useful function in society.

accruing from the discoveries and inventions of science, under conditions which permit a fair return to the industry and skill of those responsible for the discovery or invention.

c. All economic or political discrimination and punishment for differences of political opinion or religious belief and practices are to be eliminated. The threat of being sent to concentration or labour camps as a punishment for difference of opinion with any government authority or dominant political party must be completely removed.

The state has the duty to encourage the development of the arts and sciences, but it must see to it that the laws for the protection of trademarks, patents and copyrights are not used for the establishment of monopolies which might prevent all persons from sharing in the benefits of science. It is the duty of the state to protect the citizen against the use of scientific discoveries in a manner to create fear and unrest among the people.

Article XVIII

Right to Equality before the Law

All persons shall be equal before the law in respect to the enjoyment

---

19. Equal Protection
and Equal Opportunity
(Cont.)

of their fundamental rights. There shall be no [25] privileged classes of any kind whatsoever.

It is the duty of the state to respect the fundamental rights of all persons within its jurisdiction and to protect them in the enjoyment of their rights against interference by other persons.

In all proceedings in relation to fundamental rights the state must act in accordance with due process of law and must assure to every person the equal protection of the law.

All restrictions imposed upon fundamental rights must be such only as are required by the maintenance of public order; and they must be general in character and applicable to all persons within the same class.

---

20. Right to Migrate

7. The right to migrate or leave temporarily or permanently a country in which a citizen does not [26] want to remain must be assured, limited only by the laws of immigration of the country which he may wish to visit.

---

21. Limitation of Exercise of Right

Article 18.
Limitations on Exercise of Rights
In the exercise of his rights everyone is limited by the rights of others and by the just requirements of the democratic state.

Article XIX
Rights and Duties Correlative
Rights and duties are correlative; and the duty to respect the rights of others operates at all times as a restriction upon the arbitrary exercise of rights.

---

22. Implementation (a) General (b) In regard to Aliens

(a) Article 20
Incorporation of Declaration into Municipal Law
The provisions of this Declaration shall be a part of the law of each individual state, to be respected and enforced by the administrative and judicial authorities in the same manner as all other laws of the state.
The provisions of this [27] Declaration shall not be abrogated or modified

V
Conclusion
The foregoing shall constitute our International Bill of Rights which shall be fully observed and safeguarded in every country. Toward the attainment of these ends, there should be established an International Commission charged with the task of facilitation and coordinating the promotion and protection of the basic provisions of the International Bill of Rights.

---

22.
Implementation
(Cont.)

except in accordance with the terms of an inter-American agreement or an agreement of the United Nations binding upon the American States.

(b)

Article XXI

Procedure in Cases Involving Aliens

In the case of aliens alleging violation of the foregoing fundamental rights by the state in which they are resident, the complaint shall be decided first by the courts of the state itself; and in cases in which a denial of justice is alleged by the state of which the alien is a national, the case, failing diplomatic settlement, shall be submitted to an International Court, the statute of which shall be included as an integral part of the instrument in which the present Declaration is to be adopted.

E/CN.4/W.16
23 January 1947

Analysis of Various Draft International Bills of Rights (Item 8 on the Agenda)

(Memorandum by the Division of Human Rights)

The present paper deals with eighteen draft International Bills of Rights and comments thereon that have come to the attention of the Division of Human Rights. These drafts are listed in the chronological order of their publication in the Annex which also provides bibliographical details.

The paper is divided into three parts:

general observations (Section 1); a discussion of those elements of an International Bill of Rights which are substantially the same as those of national Bill (Sections II – III); and, finally, a more elaborate discussion of those elements which are special or particular to an International Bill of Rights (Sections IV – VI).

I. General Observations

The various drafts differ in many respects. The great majority of them were written during World War II and in the period following the war; but some of them date back to the pre-war era. Two of the Bills were written in the United Kingdom, fifteen in the Western Hemisphere and one was adopted by the Institut de Droit International at its session of October 1929 in New York.<sup>79</sup> One of them originated with a Government (Cuba), one with an inter-governmental organization (the Inter-American Juridical Committee), some with private international or national organizations, some were drafted by [2] international lawyers, and some by internationally-minded writers. The draft prepared by the American Law Institute was sponsored, at the last meeting of the General Assembly, by the Government of Panama; and the draft prepared by the Inter-American Juridical Committee has been brought to the attention of the United Nations by the Government of Chile.

Some of the drafts are very short, others, including commentaries, cover many pages. Dr. Alvarez' draft contains only two articles whereas the draft prepared by the Commission to Study the Organization of Peace contains twenty-two articles.

<sup>79</sup> The Institut de droit international (Institute of International Law), founded on 8 September 1873, is an organization committed to the development of international law. The Institut is comprised of the world's leading public international lawyers, and holds biannual congresses to study international law and pass resolutions proposing modifications to the law as it currently exists. It received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1904 for its work with respect to human rights law and peaceful conflict resolution.

As already indicated, some of the drafts are accompanied by commentaries whereas others are limited to texts of proposed articles. Some of the drafts also include elaborate introductory notes and explanations. Some of the drafts include preambles outlining the philosophy on which the draft is based whereas others do not. Some contain lists of rights only while others describe these rights in a variety of different ways.

The scope of the drafts naturally reflects the philosophy and general approach of the authors. All of them contain provisions defining the status of equality and certain elements of the status of liberty; but only the drafts written during and after World War II deal with the problem of social security.

For the most part, the drafts are formulated as catalogues of the rights of individuals but a few also enunciate the duties of the State towards individuals. Some also stress the duty of the State to protect the rights of individuals. Some of them are formulated in absolute terms, without restriction or reservation of the rights enunciated, whereas others contain general qualifications in favour of the State and the rights of others, and still others contain specific restrictions with or without reference to national law. Only two of the drafts deal with the duties of individuals as distinguished from their rights. In Professor Lauterpacht's draft,<sup>80</sup> the substantive provisions are divided into two categories; one [3] of which is to be enforced by both national and international law and the other by national law only. The other drafts make no such distinctions. None of the drafts contain provisions relating to the possible suspension of the Bill. Finally, the great majority of the drafts do not attempt to deal with the problem of implementation.

II. The Preamble of the Bill

Some of the drafts open with preambles. The principal elements of these preambles are as follows:

1. Metaphysical: In the preamble to the draft of the late Mr. H. G. Wells,<sup>81</sup> it is stated that "a man comes into this world through no fault of his own" and also that "he is manifestly a joint inheritor of the accumulations of the past".

<sup>80</sup> Hersch Lauterpacht's An International Bill of the Rights of Man provides a survey of the legal and philosophical discourse on the history of human rights, argues that respect for human rights is essential to achieving world peace and presents arguments for enforcing adherence to human rights under an International Bill of Human Rights at national and international levels. Commissioned by the American Jewish Committee, it was published by Columbia University Press in New York in 1945. See "Chapter 8. Human Rights", in Elihu Lauterpacht, The Life of Sir Hersch Lauterpacht, QC, FBA, LL.D., Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2010, pp. 251–264. Lauterpacht (1897–1960) later served as a member of the International Law Commission from 1952 to 1954 and as a judge at the International Court of Justice from 1955 to 1960.

<sup>81</sup> Herbert George Wells (1866–1946) was a British historian, journalist, teacher and novelist who supported the formation of a "World State" and led the collaborative publication of The Idea of the League of Nations. The League of Free Nations Association was subsequently founded under his Chairmanship. In 1940, Wells published The Rights of Man or What We Are Fighting For, Harmondsworth, UK: Penguin, 1940.

2. Legal-philosophical: The draft of the Institut de Droit International states that “the juridical conscience of the civilized world demands the recognition for the individual of rights preserved from all infringement on the part of the State”.
3. Political-philosophical: The draft of the American Law Institute refers to democracy as a means of reconciling the interests of society and the individual.

References to national and international precedents.

4. Professor Lauterpacht’s draft refers to the peace aims of the United Nations.
5. Professor Lauterpacht’s draft also states that the denial of the rights of man has proved to be a danger to the peace of the world.
6. The draft of the World Government Association contains quotations from Abraham Lincoln, Woodrow Wilson and Franklin D. Roosevelt.

III. The Substantive Provisions of the Bill

1. The Status of Equality

Practically all the drafts define the status of equality either in a clause dealing with the persons to whom the Bill shall apply, as a specific right, or as a combination of both. Some of the drafts deal with the status of equality by prohibiting discrimination, but in most [4] cases the right is defined in positive terms. While some of the drafts only proclaim the principle, others prohibit in elaborate terms the practice of discrimination in specific fields of human activity, e.g. education. Some of them, in an effort to make the principle effective, also deal with indirect discrimination.

Grounds for discrimination are usually listed as race, sex, language and religion, but some of the drafts also list nationality, national origin, professed belief, colour, class, citizenship, civil status, wealth, birth, and culture. Some also refer to “other reasons”. Some state the principle that all nationals of a State shall enjoy equality before the law and equal treatment in all respects by the authorities of the State, but none contain any reference to the duty of private persons or corporations to refrain from discrimination. However, one of the drafts stresses the principle of equality of opportunity in various activities and provides for national sanctions in the event of violations of this principle.

2. The Status of Liberty

The major part of the various drafts deals with the status of liberty. The rights listed are: life, personal liberty and its corollaries (prohibition of slavery and compulsory labour, sanctity of the home and secrecy of correspondence), freedom from wrongful interference, freedom of association and of assembly, freedom of speech and of opinion, freedom of information and of the press (sometimes qualified in the interests of responsibility), religious worship and nationality. Certain drafts also provide for a right to petition national authorities for redress of grievances. Three of the drafts mention a right of petition to the United Nations. Special mention is often made of such corollaries of personal liberty as fair trial, freedom from arbitrary detention and the principle of the non-retroactivity of penal laws. A few of the drafts mention the right of asylum either generally or in foreign legations. The draft of the Inter-American Juridical Committee refers to the freedom of [5] family relations. Many of the drafts stress, in various ways, the right of individuals to choose their rulers and to participate in Government. A majority of the drafts refer to the right to property, either in positive language or by prohibiting unlawful expropriation. Three drafts mention freedom of commerce, navigation and industry, while some also refer to the freedom of migration. Two drafts mention the duty to resist oppression. Finally, the draft of the American Bar Association mentions “freedom to teach and to receive instruction without governmental censorship, control of propaganda.”

3. The Status of Social Security

Many of the drafts prepared during and after World War II devote considerable attention to the question of social security. The catalogue is a large one and mentions such rights as those to food and housing, work under suitable conditions (sometimes coupled with the duty to work), security against unemployment, disease and old age, the right to medical care, to education, to recreation and rest, and to share in the benefits of science.

IV. Implementation and Enforcement of the International Bill of Rights

The great majority of the drafts fail to deal, probably intentionally, with the problem of implementation and enforcement. The draft of the Commission to Study the Organization of Peace says that the provisions of the International Bill of Rights “shall be deemed fundamental principles of international law and of national law of each of the signatory States to be realized by appropriate action of international and national agencies”. The same draft also provides that “every State has the duty to provide effective measures for the enforcement within its jurisdiction of the rights and freedoms herein declared, and the United Nations shall take measures to carry out the provisions of the Charter to safeguard these rights and freedoms throughout the world”. Similar provisions will be found in the draft of the American Association for the United Nations.<sup>82</sup> The draft of the American Jewish Committee<sup>83</sup> includes a clause to the effect that “no plea of sovereignty shall [6] ever again be allowed to permit any nation to deprive those within its borders of these fundamental rights on the claim that those are matters of national concern”; but the draft says nothing about the supervision or enforcement of the Bill. Article 20 of the draft of the Inter-American Juridical Committee states that the Bill is to be respected and enforced as part of national law by the administrative and judicial authorities in the same manner as all other laws of the State. In Article 15 of Professor Lauterpacht’s draft, it is provided that “every State shall, by appropriate and constitutional means, adopt Part I of this International Bill of Rights as part of its domestic law and constitution”. Two of the drafts expressly state that signatories shall not have the right unilaterally to abrogate or modify the International Bill of Rights.

The American Federation of Labor advocates the creation of an “International Commission charged with the task of facilitation and co-ordinating the promotion and protection of the basic provisions of the International Bill of Rights.” Free World, on the other hand, favours the creation of a permanent Committee on the Rights of Every Man which would be established by the General Assembly and instructed to draft an International Bill of Rights and also to assume responsibility for the supervision and enforcement of the Bill.

Professor Lauterpacht suggests that the International Bill of Rights be made “an integral part of the law of nations”. The International Bill of Rights would be “placed under the guarantee of the United Nations” and its observance should “be a matter of concern to all the United Nations”. He also suggests the creation of an organ to be called the High Commission for the Supervision of the International Bill of Rights. This organ would consist of “independent persons of the highest distinction”. Enforcement of the Bill would, however, be a responsibility of the Council of the United Nations. It is to be noted that [7] Professor Lauterpacht’s book was written before the adoption of the Charter. The American Association for the United Nations, on the other hand, suggests that the International Court of Justice be given jurisdiction in cases of violations of the International Bill of Rights.

<sup>82</sup> Founded in 1943, the United Nations Association was established to create awareness among Americans about the functions and purpose of the United Nations and encourage public involvement. Renamed the American Association for the United Nations in 1945, the organization is now known as the United Nations Association of the United States of America after having merged with the U.S. Committee for the United Nations in 1964.

<sup>83</sup> Established in 1906, the American Jewish Committee is an advocacy organization whose mission is to “enhance the well-being of Israel and the Jewish people worldwide, and to advance human rights and democratic values in the United States and around the World”. Its key areas of focus are “combating anti-Semitism and all forms of bigotry; promoting pluralism and shared democratic values; supporting Israel’s quest for peace and security; advocating for energy independence; [and] strengthening Jewish life”.

V. The International Bill of Rights and the Protection of Minorities

Only four of the drafts studied contain express provisions for the protection of minorities. Parson's draft<sup>84</sup> refers briefly to "the right of ethnic and religious minorities to enjoy equal opportunity for the development of their common humanity". A similar provision will be found in the draft of the American Association for the United Nations. The declaration of the Institut de Droit International states that "it is the duty of every State to recognize the right of every individual both to the free use of the language of his choice and to the teaching of such language". Professor Lauterpacht goes further. Article 12 (Part II) of his draft reads as follows:

"In States inhabited by a substantial number of persons of a race, language or religion other than those of the majority of the population, persons belonging to such ethnic, linguistic or religious minorities shall have the right to establish and maintain, out of an equitable proportion of the available public funds, their schools and cultural and religious institutions and to use their own language before the courts and other authorities and organs of the State."

The avowed purpose of the declaration of the Institut de Droit International was to replace the then existing Minorities Treaties by an instrument of general application. In this connection, reference may also be made to Professor Lauterpacht's remark that "the abandonment of the present system of protection of minorities, without an alternative and compensating international arrangement, would mean a disservice to the minorities, to the cause of the international protection of human rights and to international peace and progress."

[8]

VI. International Bill of Rights and the Diplomatic Protection of Citizens Abroad

Not all the drafts make it clear how far their provisions apply to aliens as well as to nationals. Professor Lauterpacht provides for the protection of aliens as follows:

"Aliens shall not be denied the full and equal protection of the preceding articles of this Bill of Rights and of other rights granted to them by the law of the State in which they reside. No alien legally admitted may be expelled except in pursuance of a judicial decision or recommendation as a punishment for offences laid down by law as warranting expulsion." (Article 7, paragraph 2).

None of the drafts attempt to deal with the problem of statelessness, but four of them forbid the arbitrary withdrawal of nationality. The fact that all the drafts use the expression “man”, “individual”, or “person”, (and not “national” or “citizen”) would suggest that, in principle, all the rights and freedoms listed therein apply both to nationals and foreigners. It is interesting to note, however, that certain Latin American authors and also the Inter-American Juridical Committee emphasize the principle that an alien enjoys the same civil rights as nationals. This is obviously a reflection of the Calvo doctrine.<sup>85</sup> Alvarez suggests that, in no case, should a non-national “seek to obtain rights differing from those granted to nationals, or to exercise them in a manner other than that provided for by the Constitution and the law”. As a reaction to the misuse of diplomatic protection, Gutiérrez suggests that “every individual has the right to be assisted and protected by the State to which he belongs in forms established by treaties and International Law. A person making claims against a State of which he is deemed to be a member according to its laws shall not have this protection.” In addition, Gutiérrez says that aliens should not interfere in the political life of the countries of their residence. The draft of the Inter-American Juridical Committee is also concerned with the same problem. Any violation of the International Bill of Rights, affecting a resident alien, shall, it says, first be “decided by the courts of the State itself”. Diplomatic intervention is admitted only in cases “in which a denial of justice is alleged by the States of which the alien is a national”.

<sup>84</sup> Reverend Wilfred Parsons (1887–1958) was a Jesuit professor of political science who taught at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., from 1938. He served the Catholic Association for International Peace from 1945 to 1946.

[9]

Annex

Chronological List of International Bill of Rights

1. Dr. Alejandro Alvarez: Sixth Section of a Draft on the “Fundamental Bases of Future International Laws” entitled “International Rights of the Individual and of International Associations”, submitted to the Second Session of the American Institute of International Law in Havana, January 1917. (Source: Jose Matos: La segunda session del Instituto Americano de Derecho International, Habana, p. 25 ff; English translation by the Secretariat.)

2. Declaration of the International Rights of Man, adopted by the Institut de Droit International at its session of 12 October 1921, Briarcliff Lodge, Briarcliff Manor, New York. (Source: Annuaire de Droit International, Session de New-York 1929, pp. 298–300; English version in The American Journal of International Law 1941 – vol. 35 – pp. 663–664.)

This Declaration was incorporated by Dr. Alejandro Alvarez (see No. 1) in Section VI of his “Projèt de Déclaration sur les données fondamentales et les grands principes du droit international”, being a report submitted to the Institut de Droit

<sup>85</sup> Named for the Argentinian jurist Carlos Calvo, the doctrine maintains that non-nationals must exhaust domestic remedies before the courts of the territorial state before their own governments may resort to international remedies.

International, International Law Association, Union Juridique Internationale, and Academie Diplomatique Internationale, and published in Paris 1931.

3. Declaration of the Rights of Man by H. G. Wells (Source: The New World Order, London 1940, pp. 139–145.)

4. An International Bill of Rights by the Reverend Wilfred Parsons S. J., presented at the Fifteenth Annual Conference of the Catholic Association for International Peace, 14 April 1941. (Source: America's Peace Aims, A Committee Report. The Catholic Association for International Peace, 1312 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W., Washington D.C., p. 23.)

5. International Bill of Rights suggested by Rollin McNitt, Dean Emeritus of the School of Law of Southwestern University, Los Angeles, vice-president and member of the board of governors of the Lawyers Club. (Source: The Los Angeles Daily Journal, 3 June 1942.)

[10]

6. International Bill of Rights. Principles of the Rights and Duties of Individuals by Irving A. Issacs. (Source: The International Bill of Rights and Permanent Peace Concordance by Irving A. Issacs, Boston 1943.)

7. Statement of Essential Human Rights by the American Law Institute. This draft has been submitted to the United Nations by the Government of Panama. (Source: The American Law Institute. Report to the Council of the Institute and Statement of Essential Human Rights by a Committee of Advisers, Representing the Principal Cultures of the World, February 1944. See also doc. 20/7(2) of the San Francisco Conference, and doc. E/HR/3.)

8. Declaration of Human Rights submitted by the American Jewish Committee, January 1945. (Source: The Committee Reporter, January 1945.)

9. An International Bill of the Rights of Man by H. Lauterpacht, New York, Columbia University Press, 1945, pp. 67–214.

10. Declaration of the International Rights and Duties of the Individual by Gustavo Gutiérrez. (Source: Gustavo Gutiérrez, La Carta Magna de la Comunidad de las Naciones, Editorial Lex, La Habana, 1945, pp. 484–489 : English translation by the Secretariat.)

11. A Charter for the United Nations. Chapter I – The Rights of Every Man, recommended by Free World. (Source: Free World, May 1945, pp. 78–80.)

12. Draft Declaration of the International Rights and Duties of Man and accompanying Report, formulated by the Inter-American Juridical Committee in accordance with Resolutions IX and XL of the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace held at Mexico City, 21 February – 8 March 1945, dated 31 December 1945 (published by the Committee to Study the Organization of Peace, New York 21, N. Y.). This draft has been drawn to the attention of the United Nations by the Government of Chile.

13. Draft Declaration of Human Rights submitted by the Delegation of Cuba to the General Assembly of the United Nations with covering letter of 12 February 1946, addressed to the President of the Economic and Social Council (E/HR/1, 22 April 1946). (This is a different version from that submitted by the Delegation of Cuba on 2 May 1945 to the San Francisco Conference. doc 2G/14/(g) – pp. 2–10.) [11]

14. Enumeration of subjects for Consideration as to an International Bill of Rights by the American Bar Association (Chicago, Summer, 1945).

15. Bill of Rights submitted to the United Nations by World Government Association (July 1946).

16. Draft of an International Bill of Rights by the American Association for the United Nations and the American Jewish Conference (1946).

17. International Bill of Rights. Proposal submitted by the American Federation of Labor to the Secretary-General of the United Nations on 9 August 1946 (E/CT.2/2).

18. Bill of Human Rights. Text prepared by the Executive Committee of the Committee on Human Rights of the Commission to Study the Organization of Peace (published by International Conciliation, December 1946, No. 426, pp. 562–564 and Introduction, pp. 558–561). (In the same issue (pp. 551–557), an article by James T. Shotwell: “The Idea of Human Rights” reprinted from the Survey Graphic of December 1946. Cf. also two earlier studies published by the same Commission: “Human Rights and the World Order” by Quincy Wright, 1943, and Fourth Report of the Commission, Part III: International Safeguard of Human Rights, May 1944.)

E/CN.4/SR.1***

27 January 1947

Summary Record of the First Meeting [of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Monday,
27 January 1947 at 11:00 a.m.

Present: Mr. J. C. Moore (Australia); Mr. Roland Lebeau<sup>86</sup> (Belgium); Mr. L. Kaminsky<sup>87</sup> (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic); Mr. P. C. Chang (China); Mr. Osman Ebeid<sup>88</sup>

<sup>86</sup> Roland Lebeau (1887–1965) of Belgium attended the Commission’s first and third sessions as an observer.

<sup>87</sup> Born in Moghilev in 1907, Leonid Kaminsky represented the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic on the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

<sup>88</sup> Osman Ebeid (born 1901) represented Egypt on a number of international bodies including the Committee on the Progressive Development of International Law and its Codification.

(Egypt); Mrs. Hansa Mehta<sup>89</sup> (India); Dr. Ghassame Ghani<sup>90</sup> (Iran); Mr. Charles Malik (Lebanon); General Carlos P. Romulo (Philippine Republic); Mr. Charles Dukes (United Kingdom); Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States of America); Mr. V. F. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. José A. Mora (Uruguay); Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. Eric W. Hutchison (International Labour Organization); Mr. Valère Darchambeau (UNESCO); Representatives of Non-governmental Agencies: Miss Lena Spiegel (WFTU<sup>91</sup>); Mr. Wallace Campbell (International Cooperative Alliance); Secretariat: Mr. Henri Laugier; Mr. J. P. Humphrey.

1. Opening Remarks

The meeting was called to order by MR. LAUGIER who, in emphasizing the significance of this first session of the full Human Rights Commission, stated that no one part of the action undertaken by the United Nations to make peace secure had more power or a wider scope than this. The task of the Human Rights Commission amounted to following up in the field of peace the fight which free humanity had waged in the fields of war, defending against all offensive attacks the rights and dignity of man, and establishing, upon the principles of the United Nations Charter a powerful international recognition of rights. The General Assembly of the United Nations had never lost sight of these principles, as witness the strongly worded resolution which proclaimed genocide to be an international crime; the resolution calling upon Member States to put an end to religious and racial persecution and discrimination; and the resolution dealing with the treatment of Indians in the Union of South Africa. The action taken in the case of South Africa established a precedent of fundamental significance in the field of international action. The General Assembly had also passed the Danish resolution calling upon Member States to grant equal political rights to women, a resolution the moral force of which would be of inestimable value to the Commission on the Status of Women. A further resolution instructed the Economic and Social Council to call a conference of all members of the United Nations on Freedom of Information which, the resolution stated, was “an essential factor in any serious effort to promote the peace and progress of the world.” It should be remembered, moreover, that out of these debates the general impression had arisen that no violation of human rights should be covered up by the principle of national sovereignty, and that violations of the Charter in one State constituted a threat to all, and should set in motion the defence mechanisms of the international community.

<sup>[*]</sup> Cancel and destroy Document E/CN.4/SR.1–18 (7 January 1947) concerning number of meetings.

[2]

<sup>89</sup> Hansa Manubhai Mehta (1897–1995) served on the Commission of Human Rights and Sub-Commission on the Status of Women and United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization as a representative of India and actively campaigned for the inclusion of equal rights for men and women. She was previously a member of the Bombay Legislative Council as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Education and Health and the Constituent Assembly of India.

<sup>90</sup> Ghassame Ghani (born 1895) was a professor of medicine and Iranian parliamentarian.

<sup>91</sup> The World Federation of Trade Unions, established in 1945, was an international body that comprised mainly pro-Soviet or pro-communist labour unions.

Included on the Commission’s agenda were the tasks of drafting an International Bill of Rights, and establishing Sub-Commissions on Freedom of Information, on Prevention of Discrimination, and on Protection of Minorities. The Commission would be faced also with the problem of considering a large number of appeals and communications addressed to the United Nations from groups and individuals who considered themselves to be victims of violations of their rights. Whether this right of appeal did actually exist in the texts or not (and he himself inclined [3] to doubt it), it was important to acknowledge that the right was alive in the hearts and minds of men and that these appeals established a direct link between the United Nations and men in quest of justice. The problem for the Commission lay in discovering and defining its competence, its procedure, its means of action and its peaceful weapons for the defence of justice. If the Commission decided, as seemed likely, that it was not competent to conduct inquiries and hold hearings concerning violations of human rights, it could still, however, submit proposals as to the setting up of machinery for the hearing of such appeals.

Mr. Laugier added that, owing to transport difficulties, the Representative of Chile would arrive in New York on 1 February, and the Representative of Yugoslavia, Mr. Ribnikar,<sup>92</sup> was also delayed. Colonel Hodgson,<sup>93</sup> the Representative of Australia, had also been delayed and would be replaced temporarily by Mr. Moore. Professor Cassin of France hoped to arrive in New York on 30 January. Mr. Neogi of India had resigned and would be replaced by Mrs. Hansa Mehta who would have full powers pending the confirmation of her nomination by the Economic and Social Council at its next meeting. The same applied to the Representative of Iran, Dr. Ghani, and to the Representative of Egypt, Mr. Ebeid, who is replacing Mr. Saad Kamel. The Belgian <sup>93</sup> Col. William Roy Hodgson (1892–1958), an Australian diplomat and war veteran, strongly supported the development of a convention on human rights and the establishment of an international court to enforce compliance with the convention.

<sup>92</sup> Vladislav Ribnikar was a partisan during the Second World War. He was the son of the owners of the important Yugoslav newspaper Politika. John Humphrey described him as “one of the most interesting people on the commission” (John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 24). Ribnikar’s friend C.L. Sulzberger of the New York Times described him as being “as far left as an editor of a moderately liberal newspaper in the United States” (Mary Ann Glendon, A World Made New, Eleanor Roosevelt and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, New York: Random House, 2001, p. 39).

Government had informed the Secretary-General that Mr. Dehousse was unable to attend, and would be replaced by Mr. Roland Lebeau who would act as a temporary deputy without the right to vote, until the Economic and Social Council had examined this question of deputies at its next meeting. This also applied to Mr. Ribnikar, the Yugoslav Representative replacing Dr. Stilinovic. The International Labour Office would be represented by Mr. Eric Hutchison, and the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization by Mr. Valère Darchambeau. Non-governmental Organizations would participate in an advisory capacity. They were the American Federation of Labor,<sup>94</sup> the International Cooperative Alliance,<sup>95</sup> the International Chamber of Commerce,<sup>96</sup> World Federation of Trade Unions, and the International Labour Organization.<sup>97</sup>

[4]

2. Election of Chairman

MRS. HANSA MEHTA (India) proposed Mrs. Roosevelt as Chairman, paying tribute to her work as Chairman of the nuclear Commission on Human Rights.

GENERAL ROMULO (Philippine Republic) moved that nominations be closed and Mrs. Roosevelt was unanimously elected Chairman.

MR. LAUGIER, in handing over the chairmanship, also paid tribute to Mrs. Roosevelt.

THE CHAIRMAN referred to the high standards of achievement which had been set by Mr. Laugier and emphasized the importance of the work which faced the Commission. It had a mandate to write a Bill of Human Rights and had not as yet any way of enforcing its decision. She felt, however, that the Commission was so constituted that it would meet the problems adequately.

3. Election of Vice-Chairman

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) proposed Dr. P. C. Chang, mentioning the quality of his work in the field of Human Rights. Dr. Chang was unanimously elected.

<sup>94</sup> The American Federation of Labor, founded in 1886, was one of the first federations of labour unions in the United States. The Federation works to provide guidance and funding to ensure that unions can form, as well as advocating for fair and equal working conditions for labourers.

<sup>95</sup> The International Cooperative Alliance, founded in 1895, is a non-governmental organization devoted to representing co-operatives worldwide. Its activities include raising awareness about cooperatives, advocating for policy changes with regard to cooperatives, and providing information and support for its members.

<sup>96</sup> The International Chamber of Commerce is a global business organization which works with governments to set economic rules and standards, promote growth in trade and increased communication between entities worldwide, and advocate for world business in questions of policy.

<sup>97</sup> Pursuant to Document E/CN.4/SR.1/Corr.1, the words "and the International Labour Organization" on the bottom of page 3 should be deleted.

4. Election of the Rapporteur

GENERAL ROMULO (Philippine Republic) nominated Dr. Charles Malik, as Rapporteur, referring to his participation in the work of the United Nations at San Francisco, London, and in the General Assembly of 1946. Dr. Malik was unanimously elected.

...

[6]

...

7. Review of Terms of Reference

THE CHAIRMAN read document E/248 "The Consolidated Terms of Reference of the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commissions". She drew members' attention to paragraph 2, sub-paragraph (b) which mentioned the Commission's interest in the status of women. The Chairman thought that, in view of the fact that there was now a Commission on the Status of Women, there might be some duplication.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) said the question was pertinent but explained that the document had been drawn up when the organ concerned with the status of women was a Sub-Commission of the Commission on Human Rights. The position was different now. He considered the Commission on the Status of Women should report directly to the Economic and Social Council, and not to the Commission on Human Rights.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (USSR) said he was against striking out the words "status of women". When it came to discussion on the International Bill of Rights, the Commission was entitled to deal with all questions within the field of Human Rights.

MRS. HANSA MEHTA (India) agreed with Mr. Tepliakov. When discussing the Bill of Rights, the status of women would have to be considered in co-operation with the Commission on the Status of Women.

GENERAL ROMULO (Philippine Republic) also agreed with the Soviet Representative that the status of women was an integral part of whatever Bill of Rights would be discussed.

[7]

THE CHAIRMAN, in summing up the opinions expressed, observed that the Commission would have to evolve a basis of co-operation with the Commission on the Status of Women lest they find themselves at odds with that Commission's recommendations.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) said the Commission could not approve or disapprove the Terms of Reference, which were formal instructions from the Economic and Social Council. The Commission could later, if necessary, present observations to the Economic and Social Council.

THE CHAIRMAN drew Members' attention to paragraph 4 of the document which stated that the Commission might propose to the Council any changes in its Terms of Reference. She suggested that Members might like to study the document during the luncheon adjournment.

The meeting adjourned at 1:00 p.m.

E/CN.4/SR.2

27 January 1947

Summary Record of the Second Meeting [of the Commission
on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Monday,
27 January 1947 at 3:00 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Roosevelt (United States of America); Vice-Chairman: Mr. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Mr. Malik (Lebanon). Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. Hutchison (International Labour Organization); Mr. Darchambeau (UNESCO); Representatives of Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Spiegel (WFTU); Miss Sender (AF of L); Mr. Campbell (International Cooperative Alliance); Secretariat: Mr. Humphrey (Secretariat); Col. Hodgson (Australia); Mr. Lebeau (Belgium); Mr. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic) Mr. Ebeid (Egypt); Mrs. Mehta (India); Mr. Ghani (Iran); General Romulo (Philippine Republic); Mr. Dukes (United Kingdom); Mr. Teplakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Mora (Uruguay).<sup>98</sup>

THE CHAIRMAN called the meeting to order.

THE RAPPOREUR moved that verbatim records of all meetings of the Commission be provided by the Secretariat, owing to the highly important nature of the problems to be discussed by the Commission. This was supported by MRS. MEHTA (India) and agreed to unanimously.

...

[3]

<sup>98</sup> The list of members present should have appeared before the Representatives of Specialized Agencies. This was corrected by Document E/CN.4/SR.2/Corr.1.

2. General Discussion of Item 8: International Bill of Rights

Order of the Agenda with Reference to that Item

MRS. MEHTA (India) declared that the Government and people of India attached the greatest importance to the Human Rights Commission and considered that its work would profoundly influence the future of the United Nations. She recalled that the Government of South Africa had maintained the position during recent discussions that there had been no violation of human rights in South Africa since there existed no written definition of human rights as such within the framework of the United Nations. The Government of the United Kingdom had taken a similar attitude by suggesting that the dispute between India and South Africa might be referred to the International Court of Justice. Mrs. Mehta considered it the justification of the Commission that pleas of this nature should not be allowed to be advanced within the forum of the United Nations in the future.

She considered, however, that the bill should be a simple and forthright document which could be easily understood, with the assurance that there would be adequate machinery for its enforcement whenever human rights were violated in States Members of the United Nations.

Mrs. Mehta went on to suggest that the work of the drafting committee and sub-commissions to be appointed by the Commission on Human Rights should be planned with a view to preventing any confusion and rush; she hoped that all members would have sufficient opportunity to refer to their respective Government on the highly important and intricate questions involved. This was a vital point of procedure involving a certain consumption of time.

The Representative of India pointed out that her country faced a problem of exceptional magnitude for reasons beyond its control: during the past one hundred years, four million Indians had been transplanted to various parts of the world under the aegis of the colonial governments concerned, and were now residing abroad in special communities, created at the request and for the benefit of those governments. As a result of this transplantation, numerous cases of denials of rights in law and equality and complicated questions of nationality and citizenship had arisen, due to certain administrative practices on the part of the governments concerned. Such problems had to be solved within the meaning of the terms of reference of the Commission on Human Rights and the principles of the Charter.

[4]

The representative of India considered that an effort should be made to define in precise legal terminology the terms "discrimination" and "minority". It was also necessary to define what specific safeguards should be incorporated in the proposed bill of rights against the dangers of assimilation. Moreover, the Commission on Human Rights should compile a list from every country in the world of legal and administrative measures tending to decrease human rights within the meaning of the principles of the Charter. The most important consideration before the Commission should not be merely the enunciation of principles in terms of a bill of human rights, but the improvisation of adequate machinery to implement those principles. In fact, the proposed bill of human rights would be meaningless unless an unequivocal definition were given of the relationship which ought to exist between the individual, the community, the state, and the international organization.

THE CHAIRMAN recalled that certain reservations had been made by the Australian delegation at the previous meeting with reference to the order of the agenda.

COL. HODGSON (Australia) explained that he did not desire an alteration of the order of the agenda as adopted during the first meeting of the Commission, but wished to propose an amalgamation of certain items to be considered together as part of one topic. He recalled that, during the Paris Conference, the Australian Government had tried to implement with adequate machinery that portion of the Charter referring to human rights and fundamental freedoms. The efforts of the Australian Government in that respect had failed, and a special legal committee, to which the question had been referred, had taken the view that this was not a matter for incorporation in individual peace treaties, but for the United Nations.

The representative of Australia considered that questions of minority, nationality, statelessness, rights of option, rights of property, and discrimination, were all integrally related to the general problem of human rights. He suggested, therefore, that the Commission should not consider Items 11, 12 and 15 separately but together in connection with Item No. 8, and should submit one single report covering all related problems.

[5]

THE CHAIRMAN announced that the Secretariat had suggested that the Commission should begin with discussion of item 9, since it constituted an entirely separate topic, and should then continue with items 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15 in that order.

In reply to a question from Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), regarding the exact meaning of the Australian suggestion COL. HODGSON (Australia) explained that the problems raised by items 11, 12, and 15, were so closely related to item 8 that they could not be discussed separately. The suggestion to amalgamate them had been made with a view to facilitating the debate. Col. Hodgson agreed that items 9 and 10 could be discussed separately, inasmuch as the latter was the object of a special conference to be held later during the year.

GEN. ROMULO (Philippine Republic) felt that the Commission, before discussing the contemplated bill of rights, should first consider its component parts. He suggested that the Commission could begin with items 10, 11 and 12, then turn to item 8, and finally discuss item 15 which implemented the previous item.

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) considered that the Commission should discuss item 8 separately. However, greater progress could be made in the subsequent discussion if the Commission defined the meaning of individual rights, before proceeding to deal with the other subjects.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) pointed out that items 10, 11 and 12 involved technical and organizational problems and not questions of substance. He suggested that the Commission could first examine item 9, then turn to items 10, 11 and 12, and deal with items 8 and 15 after disposing of item 19.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) considered that the Commission was dealing with three different problems. It was required to draw up an international bill of rights, a process which belonged to the theoretical order. It also had to determine ways and means for the effective implementation of that particular bill. In addition, the Commission faced distinct problems of practical organization raised by items 10, 11 and 12. All those questions were inter-related in a general sense, but were quite distinct in function and priority.

[6]

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) concluded by proposing that the Commission should dispose of item 9, then deal with items 10, 11 and 12 together, item 8, and finally item 15, in that order.

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that, in the absence of other formal proposals, the proposal of Mr. Malik should be put to the vote. He emphasized that the Commission was empowered to set up the sub-commissions contemplated in items 10, 11, and 12, and state their terms of reference, and should consider the form in which to present its recommendations on items 8 and 15 to the Economic and Social Council, before attempting to enter into the substance of the question.

COL. HODGSON (Australia) stated that he would vote in favour of this proposal with the understanding that members of the Commission would have the opportunity of discussing the general principles of the establishment of the sub-commissions contemplated under items 10, 11 and 12.

Decision: The Commission unanimously adopted the proposal of Mr. Malik.

...
[7]

...

MISS SENDER (AF of L) introduced a request, addressed to the Commission by the American Federation of Labor, that the latter organization should be given the opportunity of defending its views on the question of an international bill of rights.

[8]

THE SECRETARY explained that the communication received from the AF of L could be considered either under items 8 or 16, rather than in connection with item 9.

The Commission agreed to meet from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., and from 2.30 p.m. to 5 p.m.
The meeting rose at 5:30 p.m.

E/CN.4/4

28 January 1947

United States Proposals Regarding an International Bill of Rights

I. Proposals

The United States proposes:

1. That the Commission on Human Rights should consider the following questions at its present session before proceeding with the drafting of an international bill of rights:
  - (a) the legal form of the bill;
  - (b) the subject matter to be dealt with in the bill;
  - (c) the implementation of the bill;
2. That the Commission should, before adjourning,
  - (a) appoint a working group to draft an international bill of rights for submission to the Commission at its next session, following closely the Commission's decisions on the points listed in paragraph 1 above;
  - (b) suggest methods of consulting with interested agencies, commissions, and sub-commissions in the drafting of an international bill of rights.

II. Specific Suggestions

1. With regard to the legal form of an international bill of rights, the United States suggests that the Commission should first prepare it in the form of a Declaration on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms to be adopted as a General Assembly Resolution. This Declaration should be of such a character as to command the respect of people throughout the world and should be framed with a view to speedy adoption by the General [2] Assembly. The resolution containing this Declaration should make provision for the subsequent preparation by the Commission on Human Rights of one or more conventions on human rights and fundamental freedoms. This course, it is thought, would permit prompt adoption of a broad statement of human rights and allow time for the working out of detailed treaty provisions on specific matters.

2. Among the categories of rights which, the United States suggests should be considered are the following:

- (a) personal rights, such as freedom of speech, information, religion and rights of property;
- (b) procedural rights, such as safeguards for persons accused of crime;
- (c) social rights such as the right to employment and social security and the right to enjoy minimum standards of economic, social and cultural wellbeing.
- (d) political rights, such as the right to citizenship and the right of citizens to participate in their government.

It is recognized that the definition of rights within these categories is a task of great difficulty, which cannot be performed by the Commission at its present session, but it is submitted that these categories taken together include the rights which persons of differing national, legal, economic, and social systems would regard as the human rights and fundamental freedoms to be promoted and respected by the United Nations.

3. With regard to implementation, the United States suggests that the General Assembly resolution setting forth the Declaration on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms should recommend the Declaration as a standard to be observed by Members. It might also recommend that these rights be incorporated in constitutions and in legislation, to be observed and enforced by administrative and judicial authorities.

The conventions suggested earlier might contain provisions for reporting by the signatories on the application of the convention and on [3] the position of their law and practice regarding the rights stipulated in the convention. They might also, if feasible, empower the Commission on Human Rights to recommend to states measures to give effect to the convention.

4. The United States proposes the appointment of a working group to draft the Declaration since the Commission's agenda for the forthcoming meeting is long and the decisions to be reached with respect to the foregoing questions will require more extended consideration than will be possible at the present session of the Commission. The decisions with regard to subject matter to be included would furnish leads to the drafting group to guide it in formulating specific provisions or in evaluating proposals which may be made or referred to it.

All bills which have been submitted to the Commission should be referred to the working group for study in the light of the decisions of principle reached by the Commission.

The subsequent drafting of conventions for submission by the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly and adoption by Members might be performed by the same working group, or one or more new ones might be formed.

5. The Commission may consider it desirable to consult with organs, commissions, or specialized agencies of the United Nations with regard to the drafting of certain provisions. It might, therefore, suggest to the Working group methods of consultation with these bodies.

6. In order to submit the Declaration on Human Rights, if possible, to the Second Session of the General Assembly, it is suggested that the working group complete its work in time for consideration by the Commission (possibly in June) and the Fifth Session of the Economic and Social Council (Summer 1947).

A/CN.4/W.18

31 January 1947

List of Types of Rights Contained in Drafts of Proposed International Bills of Rights

(Memorandum by the Division of Human Rights)

The types of rights that have been used in the draft bills of rights that have come to the attention of the Division of Human Rights to date are as follows:

1. Status of equality without distinction as to:
  - (a) race,
  - (b) sex,
  - (c) language,
  - (d) religion,
  - (e) professed belief,
  - (f) colour,
  - (g) class,

- (h) citizenship,
  - (i) civil status,
  - (j) wealth,
  - (k) birth,
  - (l) culture,
  - (m) other reasons
- and prohibition of discrimination on the above-mentioned grounds.

2. Status of Liberty:

- (a) life,
- (b) personal liberty,

[2]

- (c) prohibition of slavery and compulsory labour,
- (d) sanctity of home,
- (e) secrecy of correspondence,
- (f) freedom from wrongful interference,
- (g) freedom of association and assembly,
- (h) freedom of speech and opinion,
- (i) freedom of information and the press,
- (j) freedom of religious worship,
- (k) right to a nationality,
- (l) right to petition national governments and the United Nations,
- (m) fair trial,
- (n) freedom from arbitrary detention,
- (o) non-retroactivity of penal laws,
- (p) rights of asylum,
- (q) freedom of family relations,
- (r) right to participate in Government,
- (s) right of property and prohibition of unlawful expropriation,
- (t) freedom of movement (migration),
- (u) freedom to resist oppression.

3. Status of Social Security:

- (a) food,
- (b) housing,
- (c) work under suitable conditions,
- (d) security against unemployment disease and old age,
- (e) right to medical care,
- (f) right to, and freedom of, education,
- (g) right to recreation and rest,
- (h) right to share in the benefits of science.

E/CN.4/SR.7

31 January 1947

Summary Record of the Seventh Meeting [of the Commission
on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Friday,
31 January 1947, at 11:00 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States of America); Vice-Chairman: Dr. P. C. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon); Members: Col. William Roy Hodgson (Australia); Mr. L. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic); Dr. P. C. Chang (China); Mr. Osman Ebeid (Egypt); Mr. Cassin (France); Mrs. Hansa Mehta (India); Mr. Ghassame Ghani (Iran); Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon); General Carlos P. Romulo (Philippine Republic); Mr. Charles Dukes (United Kingdom); Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States of America); Mr. V. F. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. José A. Mora (Uruguay); Mr. Ribnikar (Yugoslavia); Substitutes: Mr. Lebeau (Belgium); Mr. Guardia<sup>99</sup> (Panama); Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. Eric W. Hutchison (International Labour Organization); Mr. Valère Darchambeau (UNESCO); Consultants: Non-governmental Organizations: Miss Sender (AF of L); Miss Lena Spiegel (WFTU); Mr. Wallace Campbell (International Cooperative Alliance); Secretary of the Commission: Prof. J. P. Humphrey (Director, Human Rights Division); Mr. Jan Stanczyk.

[2]

Discussion of Item 2 of the Agenda: International Bill of Rights
(E/CN.4/4, E/CN.4/W.4)

THE CHAIRMAN called the attention of the Commission to the working paper on an International Bill of Rights prepared by the Secretariat (E/CN.4/W.4) and to the United States proposals contained in document E/CN.4/4. Both papers brought up the same points, except that the Secretariat document suggested a third alternative whereby the bill might take the form of an amendment to the Charter.

MRS. ROOSEVELT, speaking as United States representative, considered that the Charter should be kept flexible and general in order to meet new problems and situations. She hoped that the Commission would first discuss the other two alternatives (a declaration or other act of the General Assembly, or a multilateral convention), and that it might not be necessary to consider the third suggestion.

THE CHAIRMAN proposed that the Commission should examine the form of the proposed bill before going into its substance, and called the attention of the <sup>99</sup> German Gil Guardia represented Panama as an observer during the first session of the Commission on Human Rights. Ricardo Alfaro was the official representative of Panama but he apparently never attended meetings of the Commission.

Commission to paragraph II(1) of the United States proposals, which expressed the views of the United States delegation in that respect.

MRS. MEHTA (India) supported the United States proposal to prepare the bill in the form of a declaration on human rights and fundamental freedoms to be adopted as a General Assembly resolution. She considered, moreover, that this bill should eventually become an integral part of the Charter and a fundamental law of the United Nations.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) believed that the Commission should not vote on any definite points until all aspects of the bill had been examined. A decision as to the legal form of the bill would be premature at the present stage of discussion.

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) felt that the Commission should first proceed with a general ad hoc discussion covering the entire bill and then deal with specific points, with a view to reaching an agreement on those questions before the end of the present session. He doubted, however, that the Commission could take a decision on the legal form of the bill during this session.

[3]

GENERAL ROMULO (Philippine Republic) agreed with the representative of the United Kingdom that the Commission should begin with a general debate and decide subsequently on specific points.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium), supported by MRS. MEHTA (India), considered that the legal form of the bill would determine to a large degree its substance. The representative of Belgium agreed with the view taken by Mrs. Roosevelt that the Commission should not proceed with a general debate until an agreement had been reached on the legal form of the bill.

MR. CASSIN (France) suggested that the Commission should proceed with a general debate based on the proposals submitted by the United States, and then discuss in greater detail the contents of the bill, taking no vote until all aspects of the question had been examined.

MR. CHANG (China) considered that the Commission should take no vote at the present stage of discussion; he suggested, however, that it should proceed on the assumption that the bill would be drafted as a General Assembly resolution, and discuss the substance of the bill on that basis.

The Commission agreed to follow the procedure proposed by the representative of China.

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that the Commission should proceed to examine paragraph II(2) of the United States proposals, which listed different categories of rights to be taken into consideration. She remarked the paper prepared by the Secretariat also contained suggestions as to the contents of the bill, but proposed that the Commission should be guided by the United States document which gave a brief description of the matter. In reply to a question from the representative of the United Kingdom whether the United States document should be regarded as a form of agenda, Mrs. Roosevelt explained that this document has been prepared purely for convenience of discussion.

MR. CHANG (China) pointed out that the preamble suggested in the document prepared by the Secretariat appeared to have been omitted from [4] the United States proposals. He emphasized that the bill should include a preamble propounding the philosophy on which the bill was based.

At the present time it was necessary to affirm and enlarge the difference existing between man and animal. A standard should be established with a view to elevating the concept of man's dignity and emphasizing the respect of man: that principle should be embodied in a preamble to the International Bill of Rights.

In reply to a question from the representative of Australia regarding the nature of the standard envisaged for the application of human rights, Mr. Chang went on to explain that the principle of human rights should be given universal application regardless of human level. He had referred to a minimum standard as a means of increasing the stature of man as opposed to animal.

In conclusion, the representative of China urged the Commission to bear in mind the historical background of human rights, particularly the emphasis placed on human values by the 16th century thinkers, in elaborating a preamble propounding the philosophy on which the future International Bill of Rights would be based.

MR. CASSIN (France) pointed out that two general ideas emanated from the statement made by the Chinese representative: the bill should include a preamble emphasizing the permanency of the qualities common to mankind. Moreover, that bill was bound to create a certain influence upon our time.

Mr. Cassin considered that the preambles to the Charter of the United Nations and other international organizations such as UNESCO constituted a useful basis and form of universal philosophy from which to seek inspiration.

The representative of France stated that the concepts of man as a community and man as an individual should become fused, and that human rights should be respected by every State in the world. A significant example in that respect was the meeting of the ideas of France and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: the philosophical conception of the [5] Union of Soviet Socialist Republics showed, indeed, that there was no incompatibility between the rights of man within the framework of the State and the possibility to assert himself outside the State.

In conclusion, Mr. Cassin stated that the Commission was bound to emphasize in the proposed preamble the rights of man as an individual as opposed to the universal rights of nations.

THE CHAIRMAN stated the general opinion of the Commission that a preamble should be included in the International Bill of Rights, containing the ideas expressed during the previous discussion.

GENERAL ROMULO (Philippine Republic) pointed out that the power of might to rule over weaker nations had succeeded the divine right of kings to rule over individuals; he called upon the Commission to take that factor into consideration during the discussion of the universal standards to be written into the Preamble.

MRS. MEHTA (India) thought that the Commission should define human rights before attempting to discuss the preamble.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that the question of a preamble had been brought up as part of the general discussion, but would be given final consideration after the other clauses of the bill had been discussed.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) believed that the Commission should first discuss the preamble thoroughly, in order to determine the objectives of the bill, and then proceed to examine and formulate particular points with the guidance of the Preamble.

COLONEL HODGSON (Australia) pointed out that the preamble would indicate and govern the substance of the bill. The Commission might discuss the preamble from a general point of view, but was not in a position to vote on its terms before determining the contents of the bill itself.

During the ensuing discussion, the Commission agreed to consider the preamble from a general point of view, and examine the separate points to be included in the bill before voting on the contents of the bill itself.

The meeting rose at 1:10 p.m.

E/CN.4/SR.8

31 January 1947

Original Text: French

Summary Record of the Eighth Meeting [of the Commission
on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Friday,
31 January 1947 at 2:45 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Roosevelt (United States of America); Vice-Chairman: Mr. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Mr. Malik (Lebanon); Members: Colonel Hodgson (Australia); Mr. Ebeid (Egypt); Professor Cassin (France); Mrs. Mehta (India); Mr. Ghani (Iran); General Romulo (Philippine Republic); Mr. Dukes (United Kingdom); Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Mora (Uruguay); Mr. Ribnikar (Yugoslavia); Observers: Mr. Lebeau (Belgium); Mr. Guardia (Panama); Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. Hutchison (ILO); Mr. Carnes (UNESCO) Consultants: Non-governmental Organizations; Adviser: Miss Sender (AF of L).

General Discussion on Drafting the Draft International Bill of Human Rights (continued)

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) said that the United Kingdom attached the utmost importance to the principles of the rights and dignity of the human person which were mentioned in the preamble to the Charter and in eight other places in that document, and was prepared to work for the application of those principles throughout the world.

[2]

The United Kingdom had always been in the forefront of the fight for human rights. The British Government had always, everywhere, fostered the emancipation of the human person, along with the promotion of education and of social and economic progress. The United Kingdom which, in 1940, had been the sole champion of freedom against tyranny, would remain faithful to that ideal. Amongst the values to which the Government of the United Kingdom attached the greatest importance was tolerance, which was the essence of democracy and civilization. Each individual ought to be in a position to form opinions, to express his views and to communicate freely. This ideal implied the recognition of the freedom of information, which was the touchstone of all the freedoms to which the United Nations was consecrated.

Mr. Dukes then stressed the fact that many years of hard work would be required to achieve the universal application of a Bill of Human Rights. The drafting of such a bill would constitute only the first step. The Commission's task was to define fundamental rights and set up machinery for their universal application. Each State was, at present, free to interpret for itself the principles to which it had subscribed in acceding to the Charter of the United Nations. The United Kingdom hoped that an international body would be set up to which appeals could be made in the event of any violation of human rights.

The Commission should not take upon itself to examine measures to ensure freedom from want, as that question was within the competence of other organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies such as the ILO and FAO.

MR. GHANI (Iran) suggested that the Commission should begin by examining the draft bill submitted by the representative of Panama. He hoped however, that the Commission would bear in mind the difficulties with which certain countries would have to cope in giving such a bill [3] effective application. In certain cases, it would be necessary for that to be done gradually, in the interest of social peace. He declared, in conclusion, that any attempt to set up a Court of Appeal to pass judgment on violations of human rights would constitute an infringement of the sovereignty of States.

MR. EBEID (Egypt) recalled the disillusionments and conflicts which had followed the proclamation of President Wilson's fourteen points,<sup>100</sup> after the first world war. The principles of human rights should be set forth in clear terms. The peoples of the world would greet with enthusiasm the first action taken by the United Nations to enforce redressment of wrongs.

MR. GUARDIA (Panama) submitted his country's draft, which contained the minimum essential stipulations and would, by practical measures, promote true respect for human rights.

MR. MORA (Uruguay) stressed the international character of the proposed bill. Hitherto, only States had been subject to international law, but now the individual should have access to international tribunals which would pass judgment on individuals as well as States. Freedom of movement ought to be included among the fundamental freedoms of the individual. Each person should be free to move about within a country and to leave that country, subject to the limitations imposed by the immigration laws of other countries.

MRS. MEHTA (India) asked that the general debate be brought to a close and that the Commission undertake, without further delay, consideration of the draft resolution which she had submitted.

MR. HUTCHISON (ILO) then drew attention to the work of the ILO in the field of economic freedom for the individual and especially to the Declaration of Philadelphia,<sup>101</sup> which had been drawn up by the ILO after a quarter of a century's experience of work in the social field, and which had been approved of by the Governments [4] and representatives of forty States. He gave a rapid analysis of that document to show its scope. In conclusion, he proposed that the Commission should consider the possibility of recommending the Declaration of Philadelphia to the sub-committee drafting the Bill of Human Rights, as a basis for its work in the economic and social field.

<sup>100</sup> In an address to Congress on 8 January 1918, United States President Woodrow Wilson outlined Fourteen Points that were to provide the basis for the post-war world order. They included freedom of the seas, and a reduction in armaments, as well as guarantees for minorities.

<sup>101</sup> Adopted at the 26th conference of the International Labour Organization in Philadelphia on 10 May 1944 under the Direction of Director Edward J. Phelan and C. Wilfred Jenks, the Declaration of Philadelphia reaffirmed the leading principles of the International Labour Organization and underscores the need for integrating human rights into social policy and strategic financial planning nationally and internationally.

MR. RIBNIKAR (Yugoslavia) stressed the far-reaching effects which the Bill of Human Rights would have throughout the world: it would establish new bonds of solidarity, and would be an expression of the social realities of our time, defining the relations between the individual and society.

He outlined the history of liberalism. New economic conditions in the twentieth century had given birth to a collective spirit, a consciousness of solidarity. Personal freedom could only be attained through perfect harmony between the individual and the community. The social ideal lay in the interests of society and of the individual being identical.

We were at present in a transitional period. The Commission should regard the social and political ideals of the middle classes as those of another age, and not look on certain principles as eternal. That was the mistake in the draft submitted by Panama and Cuba, and, more especially, in that of the American Federation of Labor. The International Bill of Human Rights should be in conformity with the aspirations of the popular masses of the world.

As for the form which the bill should take, he advocated a General Assembly Resolution of a universal nature rather than a Convention or an annex to the Charter formulating obligations for all Member States.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) referring to a point he had made in the morning, explained that the text itself, as well as the [5] preamble to the Bill of Human Rights, ought to take account of present conditions, and of the political and social evolution undergone in the course of two centuries.

He approved of the attempts which had been made to classify the rights according to their nature, or according to the ideas of liberty, equality and security to which they correspond. He wished to see the Commission draw up an international Bill which would be the counterpart of the present national declarations, rather than a detailed code.

The drafting sub-committee should also bear in mind this duty of the community of nations to safeguard the individual's right to belong to a national or territorial group.

MISS SENDER (AF of L) felt it her duty to reply to the Yugoslav representative's accusation against the draft bill submitted by the American Federation of Labor. He placed greater importance upon common interest than upon that of the individual and considered the idea of individual liberty obsolete. The American Federation of Labor was convinced, on the contrary, that the idea of individual liberty was not outmoded and that it was perfectly compatible with the interests of the community.

The meeting rose at 5 p.m.

E/CN.4/11

31 January 1947

Draft of a Resolution for the General Assembly Submitted by the Representative of India

The General Assembly

Recognizing the fact that the United Nations has been established for the specific purpose of enthroning the natural rights of man to freedom and equality before the law, and for upholding the worth and dignity of human personality;

Having taken note of the Preamble and the relevant clauses of the United Nations Charter; the resolutions of the Economic and Social Council; the Human Rights Clauses of the Trusteeship Agreements as approved by the First Assembly of the United Nations; and the Human Rights Clauses of the European Treaties

Resolves that the following be incorporated into a General Act of the United Nations Assembly:

- I. (a) Every human being is entitled to the right of liberty, including the right to personal freedom; freedom of worship; freedom of opinion; freedom of assembly and association; and the right to access to the United Nations, without risk of reprisal, whenever there is an actual or threatened infringement of human rights.
  - (b) Every human being has the right of equality, without distinction of race, sex, language, religion, nationality or political belief.
  - (c) Every human being has the right of security, including the right to work, the right to education, the right to health, the [2] right to participate in government, and the right to property, subject only to the over-riding consideration of public weal when the State or its appropriate organs acquire it after paying equitable compensation.
- II. (a) This General Act is an obligation undertaken by Member States of the United Nations, and comes into force within twelve calendar months from the date on which it is passed by the United Nations Assembly.
  - (b) Non-self-governing areas and areas under the trusteeship of the United Nations automatically come under the regime of this Act.
  - (c) Non-member States are eligible to adhere to this Act.
- III. Nothing mentioned in this Act shall be construed as not obligating the individual to his corresponding duties to his own State and to the international community under the United Nations.
- IV. No state Member of the United Nations, non-self-governing territory, trusteeship area or non-member of the United Nations which has adhered to this Act, shall have the right to suspend it in whole or in part once it was adhered to in due form.

- V. The Security Council of the United Nations shall be seized of all alleged violations of human rights, investigate them and enforce redress within the framework of the United Nations.

E/CN.4/12

1 February 1947

Draft Resolution Regarding Composition of a Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights Submitted by the Representative of India

Resolution:

“The Representatives of the following countries be appointed to the Drafting Committee:

USA (Chairman) Ex. Officio

China

Egypt

France

India

Iran

Lebanon

Panama

Philippine Republic

United Kingdom

USSR

Uruguay

E/CN.4/13

1 February 1947

Draft Proposal Regarding the Composition of a Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights Submitted by the Representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

United States of America

China

Egypt

India
 France
 USSR
 Panama
 Philippine Republic
 United Kingdom
 Yugoslavia
 Lebanon

E/CN.4/SR.9

1 February 1947

Original Text: French

Summary Record of the Ninth Meeting [of the Commission
 on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Saturday,
 1 February 1947 at 11:00 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Roosevelt (United States of America); Rapporteur: Mr. Malik (Lebanon). Members: Colonel Hodgson (Australia); Mr. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic); Mr. Ebeid (Egypt); Mr. Cassin (France); Mrs. Mehta (India); Mr. Ghani (Iran); General Romulo (Philippine Republic); Mr. Dukes (United Kingdom); Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Mora (Uruguay); Mr. Ribnikar (Yugoslavia); Alternates: Mr. Lebeau (Belgium); Mr. Wu (China); Mr. Guardia (Panama); Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. Hutchison (International Labour Organization); Mr. Carnes (UNESCO); Non-governmental Organizations: Consultant: Miss Sender (AF of L); Secretariat: Mr. Stanczyk (Director of the Department of Social Affairs); Mr. Humphrey (Director of the Division of Human Rights, Secretary of the Commission).

[2]

I. General Discussion

THE CHAIRMAN announced that Mr. Ribnikar, the representative of Yugoslavia, had received his credentials that day, and could in the future take part in the voting.

GENERAL ROMULO (Philippine Republic) stated that the Commission had to draw up an international bill of human rights which could be accepted by all Members of the United Nations and which should also be binding on all these States. This declaration should take the different cultural systems of the world into account.

The United Nations Charter, speaking of the fundamental human rights and freedoms, indicated what these were. The international bill of human rights should establish a balance between political and economic rights, thus creating a system of government which would not only be a government of the people by the people, but also for the people.

The Commission could limit itself to following the counsels of practical wisdom and demanding only that which was attainable, rather than ideal solutions. It could also reject solutions dictated by practical necessity and visualize the hypothesis of a world government from which the international bill of human rights would result and of which it would be the corner-stone.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) stated that the Secretary of the Commission had submitted a list of the different rights included in the draft declaration. This list contained the statutes of equality, liberty and security; an excellent presentation, perhaps, but difficult to accept as it was. The members of the Commission should not be restricted by a division of rights among these different statutes.

[3]

It was not sufficient to include the freedom of thought and conscience in a list; a way must be found to enable men to acquire these freedoms.

The representatives of the United Kingdom and of Yugoslavia had made statements on the different conceptions of human freedoms, the first defending Liberalism, the second Marxism. He could find no answer to the question before the Commission in the advice tendered by the representative of Yugoslavia.

In his opinion moreover, it was not politicians and diplomats alone who were concerned with this question; the advice of poets, prophets and philosophers should be asked.

Today, men had no need for protection against kings or dictators, but rather against a new form of tyranny: that exercised by the masses and by the State. Mention must therefore be made in the international bill of human rights of this tyranny of the State over the individual, whom it was the duty of the Commission to protect.

If the international bill of human rights did not stipulate the existence of the individual and his need for protection in his struggle against the State, the Commission would never achieve its intended purpose.

MRS. MEHTA (India) recalled that she had been promised that she could submit her draft resolution after the general discussion. She wished to make a formal motion.

COLONEL HODGSON (Australia) considered that the general discussion showed that members of the Commission had not yet defined their objective nor the exact plan they wished to follow. All the Commission's work would remain valueless so long as the machinery for applying the principles set forth had not been considered.

[4]

He emphasized that no right was absolute in itself and that every right entailed a corresponding duty. There was also the question of the interest of the State as against the interest of the individual or of the community. Various peace treaties were to be signed this month. Some of them contained territorial claims, the consequence of which would be the displacement of hundreds of thousands of persons who had, for example, their right of nationality. Application of the rights under discussion had to be considered with regard to them. No machinery existed. The International Court of Justice concerned itself only with disputes between governments. The Security Council had no jurisdiction in this matter. The immediate problem therefore was to consider machinery for practical application.

MR. WU (China) said that it was a question of establishing the rights of the human being and at the same time demanding his acceptance of the corresponding obligations.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium), replying first to the Australian representative, pointed out that the territorial claims put forward by Belgium concerned a very small number of people who already had relatives in Belgium and to whom freedom of choice would be allowed.

He said that the right of every human being to participate in social and economic life fully and completely, without having to suffer the shocks and consequences of economic upheavals and unemployment, must be affirmed. As opposed to the representative of Yugoslavia, however, he considered that the basis of a bill of rights was not the community and the mass, but simply the human person, that is to say the human person participating in social life.

The human person today was threatened by two great dangers: The [5] first was the ascendancy of the mass, the community and the State; the second lay in the excessive overdevelopment of industrial life itself, which crushed the human person. It must be protected against these two dangers, which should be mentioned in a bill of its rights.

THE CHAIRMAN, replying to a remark by MR. CASSIN (France), stated that when general statements had been made she proposed to begin consideration of the agenda point by point, and of any resolutions which might be submitted. This procedure would thus assume the form of a general discussion, but would deal with specific points.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) considered that on the closure of the discussion the Commission should take up the question of the Drafting Committee. The establishment of this Committee had to be decided first, and then its membership.

MRS. MEHTA (India) wished to submit her resolution on the bill of human rights before taking up the question of the Drafting Committee.

COLONEL HODGSON (Australia) asked if the Drafting Committee to be set up would be permanent or whether it would merely be a body which would have to submit a draft to the Commission during this session.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) explained that the bill of rights comprised two stages: (1) the summary record of the work of the Commission, drafted after the general discussion; (2) the discussion of the proposals submitted by India, which served as a basis for discussion. The decision taken by the Commission at the conclusion of its work would be liable to alteration in the years to come. In his opinion, the Commission should avoid all haste. Members of the Commission should be given sufficient time to consult their respective governments.

MRS. ROOSEVELT, Chairman, (speaking in her capacity as representative of the United States) pointed out to the representative of Australia that the Government of the United States considered that a Drafting Committee should be appointed during the first session of the Commission, and that the report of this Committee could not be submitted to the Commission before the next session.

[6]

MRS. MEHTA (India) asked for a discussion on the resolution which she submitted, in order to bring the debate back to specific points.

The meeting rose at 1:15 p.m.

E/CN.4/SR.10

1 February 1947

Summary Record of the Tenth Meeting [of the Commission
on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Saturday
1 February 1947 at 3:00 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Roosevelt (United States of America); Rapporteur: Mr. Malik (Lebanon); Members: Colonel Hodgson (Australia); Mr. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic); Mr. Wu (China); Mr. Ebeid (Egypt); Mr. Cassin (France); Mrs. Mehta (India); Mr. Ghani (Iran); Mr. Malik (Lebanon); Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Dukes (United Kingdom); Mr. Mora (Uruguay); Mr. Ribnikar (Yugoslavia); Observer: Mr. Guardia (Panama); Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. Hutchison (ILO); Mr. Darchambeau (UNESCO). Secretary of the Commission: Prof. John Humphrey (Director, Human Rights Division).

Discussion of item 8 of the agenda: International Bill of Rights (continued)

Draft Resolution Submitted by the Representative of India (E/CN.4/11)

MRS. MEHTA proposed that the draft resolution contained in document E/CN.4/11 should be used by the Commission as a basis to discuss [2] the form, contents, application and implementation of an international bill of rights.

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) supported the proposal made by the representative of India. He considered that the Indian draft resolution constituted an excellent basis for groundwork, and suggested that it might be discussed in connection with the memorandum prepared by the Secretariat, listing the different types of rights contained in the drafts previously submitted (E/CN.4/W.18).

MR. MORA (Uruguay) agreed that the Indian draft resolution deserved careful attention, but felt that it should be referred to a drafting committee for study in connection with the other projects submitted.

COL. HODGSON (Australia) proposed that the Commission should examine immediately the desirability of appointing a drafting committee.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon), supporting the view taken by the Australian representative, remarked that the Uruguayan proposal was invalid, since it referred to a body which had not yet been established.

MRS. MEHTA (India) reiterated her proposal that the Commission should first proceed to examine the Indian draft resolution as the basis of the discussion.

In reply to a question from Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), Mrs. Mehta emphasized that the Indian draft resolution was not to be considered as a substitute for other documents, but should be discussed along with the other drafts submitted. She had proposed that it should serve as a basis for discussion because it appeared to be more comprehensive and raised four separate issues, namely the form, contents, application, and implementation of the proposed bill.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) moved that the Commission should consider the Indian draft resolution as the basis of discussion after deciding on the creation and composition of a drafting committee.

[3]

MR. CASSIN (France) remarked that the document presented by the Indian representative should be submitted to preliminary discussion, if it were to be considered as a draft for a bill of rights. If, on the contrary, that proposal were to be regarded as a basis for the instructions to be given to the drafting body, the Commission would simply revert to the discussion held during the previous meeting. He believed that the Commission should follow the order of the previous debate, and should proceed to examine the third question raised in the United States proposals, considering the Indian document as basically complementary to the present discussion.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) moved that the Commission should postpone examination of the Indian draft resolution and the question of a drafting committee, and should proceed to discuss the particular points of the bill.

THE CHAIRMAN put to the vote the amendments to the Indian proposal, submitted by the representatives of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Lebanon.

- Decision:* (1) The USSR amendment was defeated by seven votes to three.
 (2) The Lebanese amendment was adopted by six votes with no opposition.

B. Machinery for Drafting an International Bill of Rights

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) moved that the Commission should establish a drafting committee to examine the various draft resolutions submitted with reference to an international bill of rights.

COL. HODGSON (Australia) considered that appointment of a drafting group was necessary, but submitted that a drafting committee was not the appropriate organ for that purpose. No concrete results could be achieved by a drafting committee composed of government representatives expressing different points of view. Indeed, the drafting group should act as the servant of the Commission. Col. Hodgson suggested that the Secretariat [4] was the most competent body to draft an international bill of rights. The Human Rights Division included experts in that particular field, international civil servants who had already accomplished excellent work on related problems. It could continue that task in a more competent manner and at a lesser cost than a new body of experts created by the Commission.

Col. Hodgson therefore moved that the Lebanese proposal should be amended to instruct the Secretariat to draft an international bill of rights for the consideration of the Commission.

In reply to a question from Mr. Ebeid (Egypt), Col. Hodgson explained that his proposal was motivated by the consideration that a drafting committee could not function adequately, if it were composed of members expressing their views as individual experts as well as government representatives, in accordance with the different suggestions made to the Commission.

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) stated that he would support the proposals of the Australian representative if the latter were prepared to add to his motion a provision allowing the Secretariat to call in such experts as it deemed necessary. Col. Hodgson agreed to this.

THE CHAIRMAN, speaking as representative of the United States of America, stated that she would support the Australian proposal. If that proposal were accepted, the Commission could proceed to discuss the substance of the problem at its next meeting. In reply to a question from Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), the Chairman expressed the opinion that the Secretariat should receive directions from the Commission and report back to it for final decision, but should be allowed a certain latitude in accomplishing its task.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) considered that the Secretariat might draft the bill with the help of members of the Commission. However, the technical task of drafting the bill could only [5] be accomplished in accordance with instructions received from the Commission, after the Commission had completed its deliberations on particular points of the bill and had determined the principles to be enunciated therein.

The representative of the USSR therefore moved that the Australian proposal should be amended so as to postpone a decision regarding the drafting question until all points of the bill had been discussed.

THE CHAIRMAN ruled that this motion was out of order, since it had already been voted upon during the previous debate.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) replied that this was a new motion, submitted as an amendment to the Australian proposal, and should therefore be voted upon.

Decision: The ruling of the Chair was sustained by six votes to two.

MR. CASSIN (France) accepted the Australian proposal that the Secretariat should draft the bill. However, he wished to make it clear that the work undertaken by the Secretariat should be accomplished under the direct responsibility of the Commission and under the supervision of the Chairman. Moreover, the Secretariat should be invited to consult with experts from other continents.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) moved that the meeting should be adjourned, in order that the question might be given further examination.

Decision: The motion for adjournment was defeated by six votes to four.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) pointed out that the only difference between his proposal and that of the Australian representative concerned the question whether the assistance of experts would be enlisted by the Secretariat alone, or in consultation with the Commission. He was willing that both proposals should be amalgamated, if Col. Hodgson agreed to incorporate the latter alternative into his motion.

COL. HODGSON (Australia) stated that he could not accept the Lebanese [6] suggestion, since he had already agreed to the suggestion of the United Kingdom representative that the Secretariat should have the right, if necessary, to call on experts to accomplish a particular task. The alternative suggested by Mr. Malik appeared to involve rather unnecessary machinery. Moreover, Col. Hodgson preferred to accept the implication of the French representative that the Secretariat would work under the direct responsibility of the Commission and under the general supervision of the Chairman.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) stated that he was not in a position to decide on the suggestion now before the Commission. He reserved the position of the Soviet Government to submit a draft bill of rights.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) asked the representatives of Australia and the United Kingdom whether they would agree to the wording:

“The Secretariat shall draft an international bill of rights in accordance with the instructions and conclusions of the Commission, and shall call in any experts to help them in this task, entertaining nominations of such experts from the members of the Commission”.

MR. CASSIN (France) suggested that the following proposal might meet with the approval of the Commission:

“The Commission on Human Rights entrusts the Secretariat with setting up the first draft of an International Bill of Rights, to be submitted to the Commission at its next meeting, and taking into account in this respect the directions given by the Commission during its present session. This drafting task will be carried out under the authority of the Chairman of the Commission with the assistance of experts designated with the approval of the Chairman”.

COL. HODGSON (Australia) stated that he was prepared to accept the text submitted by the representative of Lebanon with the addition of the words: “. . . they may, if necessary consult. . .”. That wording would be less mandatory. Moreover, if a provision were added that the work of the Secretariat should be accomplished under the supervision of the Chairman, as suggested by the French representative, the resulting text might meet the different points of view expressed.

[7]

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) observed that the only difference between his text and that of the French representative concerned the responsibility of the Secretariat for calling in experts. He stated, however, that he was willing to accept that difference in order to conform to the wording submitted by Mr. Cassin.

THE SECRETARY called the attention of the Commission to paragraph 3 of the resolution of the Economic and Social Council, concerning consultation with working groups of experts (Journal of the Economic and Social Council, No. 29, page 521). He pointed out that the Lebanese and French proposals might not be entirely within the authorizations contained in that resolution. Were either proposal adopted, the matter would have to be referred back to the Economic and Social Council, since the Commission would go beyond its authorization by instructing the Secretariat to call in experts. However, the Australian proposal, with the added suggestion of the United Kingdom, did not raise that difficulty.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) stated that a vote in this matter involved a very important decision, whether the Commission should entrust the Secretariat with drafting the bill and allow it to call in experts at its own discretion, or continue to assume responsibility for the draft. He moved that the meeting should be adjourned, in order that members might examine the various proposals submitted in that respect.

Decision: The motion to adjourn was carried by nine votes to one.

The meeting rose at 4:55 p.m.

E/CN.4/SR.11

3 February 1947

Summary Record of the Eleventh Meeting [of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Monday,
3 February 1947 at 11:00 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States of America); Vice-Chairman: Mr. P. C. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Mr. Charles Malik (Lebanon). Members: Col. W. R. Hodgson (Australia); Mr. L. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic); Mr. F. Nieto Del Rio (Chile); Mr. O. Ebeid (Egypt); Mr. R. Cassin (France); Mrs. Hansa Mehta (India); Mr. G. Ghani (Iran); Mr. C. Malik (Lebanon); Mr. V. Teplakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. C. Dukes (United Kingdom); Mrs. E. Roosevelt (United States of America); Mr. J. A. Mora (Uruguay); Mr. V. Ribnikar (Yugoslavia). Substitutes: Mr. R. Lebeau (Belgium); Mr. G. G. Guardia (Panama). Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. E. Hutchison (ILO); Mr. G. L. Carnes (UNESCO). Consultant of Non-Governmental Organization: Mr. L. Teper (AF of L). Secretary of the Commission: Prof. J. P. Humphrey (Director, Human Rights Division).

Introductory Remarks

THE CHAIRMAN welcomed the Member for Chile, Mr. F. Nieto Del Rio.

[2]

2. Discussion of procedure to be followed in the drafting of an International Bill of Rights (documents E/CN.4/12 and 13).

THE CHAIRMAN said that Mr. Malik, the Rapporteur, wished to present a formula which might help solve the problem of the composition of the group which would prepare the first draft of the Bill of Rights.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon), the Rapporteur, said that his proposal was based on five ideas. Firstly, the drafting should be closely supervised by the Commission itself. Secondly, the expert knowledge of the Secretariat should be fully utilized. Thirdly, the utilization of experts from outside the Commission should be left open.

Fourthly, the drafting must be in accordance with instructions elaborated at the present session. Lastly, the draft should be submitted to the next Session of the Commission.

He read the following text:

“That the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights undertake, in co-operation with the Secretariat and any Member of the Commission, or any expert outside the Commission she may wish to co-opt, the task of formulating a draft Bill of Human Rights, in accordance with the instructions and conclusions of the first session of the Commission, to be submitted to the second session of the Commission for thorough examination.”

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) thought that the best procedure would be for a Sub-Commission composed of Members of the Commission to work out the draft. It would be difficult for outside experts to do the work satisfactorily under the present circumstances. He had full confidence in the Secretariat, but could not agree that the Commission had the right to transfer its duties to the Secretariat. The Members of the Commission were supposed to be experts; they also represented their Governments, which were ultimately responsible for the protection and furthering of human rights. He wished therefore to second the Indian proposal (document E/CN.4/12).

[3]

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) supported Mr. Malik's proposal. He thought, however, that the word “consult” should be substituted for “co-opt”, since experts should not receive the rights of representatives. It should be clear that the Commission's authority would not be delegated; the Commission would make the final decision regarding every clause of the proposed Bill of Rights. If a Committee of the Commission prepared the draft, that Committee's Members would, to some extent, be obligated to support that draft. No such difficulty would occur if the draft were prepared by the Secretariat under the Chairman's supervision.

THE CHAIRMAN, speaking as the member for her Government, expressed the view that persons of differing national, legal, economic, and social systems, with a broad international outlook and experience in various fields of human rights, should be available to the Secretariat in the drafting work. Consultation should be carried on with persons thoroughly familiar with various legal and religious systems.

MRS. MEHTA (India) stressed that neither the Secretariat nor a Committee could prepare an acceptable draft unless the Commission gave full instructions. Unless it were decided that such instructions would be forthcoming, she could not vote in favour of any of the resolutions.

THE CHAIRMAN said that after the solution of the present procedural problem, three days would be devoted to the discussion of the directives for the drafting group.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) thought that the Indian proposal would be voted on first. He wished to point out that the Members of the Commission could utilize the services of experts. Special experts could be invited too, but they should not be charged with the task of drafting the document.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon), the Rapporteur, accepted the suggestion of the Member for the United Kingdom as regards the substitution of the word "consult" for "co-opt". He observed that the Chairman would be responsible for the utilization of experts.

[4]

THE CHAIRMAN said that the draft would be based on the Commission's instructions. The Members of the Secretariat, however, and any other person who might participate in the work, would be available for questioning as regards their work.

COL. HODGSON (Australia) supported Mr. Malik's proposal, as amended, which brought in the concept that, through its Chairman, the Commission would remain responsible for the drafting work.

MR. CASSIN (France) pointed out that it was manifestly impossible for the Commission itself to do the drafting work; neither could the Secretariat do that work, since that would imply a derogation of the Commission's mandate. He favoured, therefore, the Rapporteur's proposal, since the Commission could carry out its duties through its Chairman. In view of the fact that Mrs. Roosevelt would not be available during some of the time between the sessions, two or four other members of the Commission should be designated to assist her, and to form a small Committee.

He stressed the point made by the Member for the USSR as regards experts. Some of those would be appointed by the individual Members; others would be called upon by the Drafting Group. Furthermore, the Drafting Group should be aware of the fact that wherever the Commission's instructions were not explicit, alternative texts should be prepared for submission to the Commission itself. Lastly, the draft should be prepared as rapidly as possible in order to enable the Members, the Governments, and the numerous groups of jurists and associations interested in human rights to study the document and make observations.

MR. CHANG (China) thought that the difficulty might be solved by the Commission sitting as a whole as a Committee, to draft the International Bill of Human Rights. The Chairman could call a meeting every two weeks, at which those members or their deputies who were in New York could be present. No formal voting would be done, but the Committee would give its views on the drafts prepared by the Secretariat with the assistance of experts.

[5]

He considered it was more desirable to arrive at a practical compromise such as that than to take a vote which would give the impression of a difference of opinion on a matter of such vital importance.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) shared the views of the Representatives of USSR and France that the Commission could not delegate to any other body the task of drafting a Bill of Human Rights.

He supported the suggestion of the Representative of the Lebanon that the work of formulating a draft International Bill of Human Rights should be the responsibility of the Chairman in co-operation with the Secretariat, and proposed that, in view of the Chairman's statement that she might be absent from New York a considerable time, two other members, such as the Vice-Chairman and the Rapporteur, should share the responsibility. The Commission would of course have to give its opinion on the draft Bill and would in no way be delegating its powers.

A discussion ensued as to the order in which the various motions and amendments before the Commission should be voted upon, and it was finally agreed to regard the motion presented by MRS. MEHTA (India) as an amendment to the formula presented by MR. MALIK (Lebanon) and to vote upon the former first.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (USSR) maintained that the first question to be settled was whether the Commission wished to set up a Drafting Sub-Committee, and with that in view he proposed an amendment to the amendment of the Representative of India to read as follows: "The Commission on Human Rights decides to set up a Drafting Sub-Committee composed of members of the Commission to prepare the initial draft of an International Bill of Human Rights".

A vote was taken on the amendment proposed by the Representative of USSR.

Decision: The amendment was defeated by 8 votes to 4.

[6]

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that the decision disposed of the amendment of the Representative of India.

MR. RIBNIKAR (Yugoslavia) moved an amendment to the proposal of the Representative of the Lebanon. He proposed the addition of the words: "Experts designated by the members of the Commission, each member being allowed to propose not more than three experts".

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that if that amendment were adopted, it would mean that experts would have to be named during the present session of the Commission. It would tie the hands of those engaged upon the drafting of the Bill, who might require the services of a particular expert between the two sessions.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (USSR) asked that the motion of the Lebanese Representative and the amendment of the Representative of Yugoslavia should be submitted in writing before a vote was taken.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) requested the Lebanese Representative to include in his motion a provision that if the Chairman were not able to assume responsibility for the drafting of an International Bill of Human Rights, that responsibility should be relegated to other officers of the Commission.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) agreed.

MR. MORA (Uruguay) moved the adjournment of the meeting until 2:30 p.m. to allow time for the motion and amendment to be prepared and circulated.

A vote was taken, and adjournment was approved by eight votes to two.

The meeting rose at 12:40 p.m.

E/CN.4/SR.12

3 February 1947

Summary Record of the Twelfth Meeting [of the Commission
on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Monday,
3 February 1947 at 11:00 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Roosevelt (United States of America); Vice-Chairman: Dr. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Mr. Malik (Lebanon). Members: Colonel Hodgson (Australia); Mr. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic); Mr. Del Rio (Chile); Mr. Ebeid (Egypt); Professor Cassin (France); Mrs. Mehta (India); Mr. Ghani (Iran); Mr. Teplakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Major Dukes (United Kingdom); Mr. Mora (Uruguay); Mr. Ribnikar (Yugoslavia). Alternates: Mr. Lebeau (Belgium); Mr. Guardia (Panama). Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. Hutchison (ILO); Mr. Carnes (UNESCO). Non-Governmental Organizations: Consultants: Miss Spiegel (World Federation of Trade Unions); Mr. Teper (American Federation of Labor). Secretariat: Professor Humphrey (Secretary of the Commission).

Discussion and Vote on the Resolution of the Commission on Human Rights, the Subject of Formulating a Preliminary Draft International Bill of Human Rights

[2]

THE CHAIRMAN recalled that at the end of the morning meeting a Committee, composed of the representatives of France, Yugoslavia and Lebanon, had been formed to draft a resolution on the drawing up of an International Bill of Human Rights.

THE CHAIRMAN then called on MR. MALIK (Rapporteur).

THE RAPPORTEUR stated that the Committee had been unanimous in its conclusions. Its draft resolution read as follows:

“That the Commission on Human Rights decide that the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur shall constitute a Committee to undertake, in co-operation with the Secretariat, the task of formulating a preliminary draft International Bill of Human Rights, in accordance with the instructions and decisions of the first session of the Commission, to be submitted to the second session of the Commission for thorough examination.

“In the course of its work, this Committee may enlist the co-operation of, and shall receive any observations and suggestions from, any member of the Commission. It may also consult experts with the consent of their Governments, Members of the United Nations.”

First Paragraph

DR. CHANG (China) and PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) requested that the phrase “in co-operation with the Secretariat” be changed to “with the Co-operation of the Secretariat”.

MRS. MEHTA (India) asked whether the draft resolution submitted was not contrary to the decision taken during the morning meeting, not to set up a committee composed of Members of the Commission.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that it was the idea of a Committee composed exclusively of Members of the Commission which had been rejected. The resolution, however, provided for participation by the Secretariat in the work of the Committee.

[3]

COLONEL HODGSON (Australia) shared the opinion expressed by the representative of India. He thought the draft resolution merely reintroduced the idea which had been voted down that morning, for the Secretariat would co-operate as a matter of course. He would vote against the resolution.

In reply to the question from the Chairman, he added that he would propose the original motion submitted at the morning meeting.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) considered that the draft resolution did not contradict the decision of the previous meeting.

MAJOR DUKES (United Kingdom) proposed the following amendment to the draft resolution: “That the Secretariat, under the supervision of the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur, undertake the task of formulating a preliminary draft International Bill of Human Rights. . .”

COLONEL HODGSON (Australia) withdrew his amendment in favour of that of the United Kingdom representative, who agreed to the omission of the term “Committee” in the second paragraph.

THE RAPPORTEUR explained that the word “Committee” had been used in the text of the resolution only in order to avoid the repetition of the words “Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur”, as the English language had no equivalent for the French word “bureau”. He was opposed to the United Kingdom representative’s amendment, which would place the main responsibility for drafting the declaration on the Secretariat rather than on the Commission itself, and proposed that the first sentence of the resolution be worded as follows: “That the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, together with the Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur, undertake, with the assistance of the Secretariat, the task of formulating a preliminary draft International Bill of Human Rights.”

At the request of DR. CHANG (China), the Commission decided to take a vote by paragraphs.

Decision: The United Kingdom representative’s amendment, which was put to the vote first, was rejected.

[4]

Decision: The Lebanese representative’s amendment was adopted.

Second Paragraph

MR. TEPER (American Federation of Labor) drew the Commission’s attention to the fact that the second paragraph of the resolution, in its present wording, seemed to exclude any participation in the work by the organizations classified in Category A.<sup>102</sup>

MISS SPIEGEL (World Federation of Trade Unions) supported the opinion expressed by the American Federation of Labor representative, and requested that co-operation with the non-governmental organizations be provided for in the second paragraph of the resolution.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) stated that the question of co-operation with those organizations was on the Commission’s agenda and would come up for discussion in due course.

Supported by DR. CHANG (China), he stated that the members of the Commission should have the right to express their opinion at any stage in the drafting of the declaration.

He suggested amending the second paragraph as follows: “The Chairman of the Commission may consult with experts chosen with the consent of their Governments, Members of the United Nations.”

He also proposed inserting, before the words “any observations and suggestions”, the words “orally or in writing”.

<sup>102</sup> Non-government organizations (NGOs) are accredited to the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) pursuant to article 71 of the Charter of the United Nations. At the time the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was being adopted, large international NGOs whose area of work comprised most of the issues on the agenda of ECOSOC and its subsidiary bodies were listed in “Category A”. Smaller, more specialized NGOs were deemed “Category B”.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon), in order to facilitate the proceedings, asked for a vote to be taken on the first sentence of the second paragraph as thus amended.

Decision: The first sentence of the second paragraph, as amended, was adopted.

The Commission then voted on the drafting proposed by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics representative for the second sentence of the second paragraph.

Decision: The amendment proposed by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics representative was adopted.

[5]

The Rapporteur read the full text of the resolution, as adopted:

“That the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, together with the Vice-Chairman and the Rapporteur, undertake, with the assistance of the Secretariat, the task of formulating a preliminary draft international bill of human rights, in accordance with the instructions and decisions of the first session of the Commission, to be submitted to the second session of the Commission for thorough examination.”

“In the course of this work, the Chairman may enlist the co-operation of, and shall receive, orally or in writing, any observations and suggestions from, any member of the Commission. The Chairman of the Commission may consult experts chosen with the consent of their governments, Members of the United Nations.”

The meeting rose at 4:00 p.m.

E/CN.4/SR.13

4 February 1947

Original Text: French

Summary Record of the Thirteenth Meeting [of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, 4 February 1947
at 11:00 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Roosevelt (United States of America); Vice-Chairman: Dr. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Mr. Malik (Lebanon). Members: Colonel Hodgson (Australia); Mr. Nieto Del Rio (Chile); Mr. Ebeid (Egypt); Professor Cassin (France); Mr. Ghani (Iran); Mrs. Mehta (India); General Romulo (Philippine Republic); Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Major Dukes (United Kingdom); Mr. Mora (Uruguay). Alternates: Mr. Lebeau (Belgium); Mr. Guardia (Panama). Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. Carnes (UNESCO); Mr. Hutchison (ILO). Representatives of Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Spiegel (World Federation of Trade Unions); Miss Sender (American Federation of Labor); Mr. Teper (American Federation of Labor); Secretariat: Professor Humphrey.

Consideration of Document E/CN.4/W.18

THE CHAIRMAN informed the Commission that the Secretariat had received a draft declaration of human rights from the Catholic Welfare Association [2] and that that draft would be examined.

She suggested the adoption of the following procedure in discussing the drafts: In studying document E/CN.4/W.18, the Commission would

1. Decide whether to include or reject the various rights enumerated;
2. Make a theoretical study of the said rights;
3. Discuss their possible application.

MRS. MEHTA (India) pointed out that her draft resolution had been submitted in time and had been seconded by the Representative of the United Kingdom, and that it should therefore serve as a basis of discussion.

THE CHAIRMAN considered that it was preferable to examine document E/CN.4/W.18 first.

COLONEL HODGSON (Australia) considered in the first place that the classification of the freedoms contained in that document was questionable. If the Commission adopted that procedure, it would be jumping from one point to another. He considered that it would be preferable to adopt a logical order.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) did not consider it appropriate to raise the question of classification at the present juncture. He considered it better to wait until the concrete rights had been examined.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) likewise considered it unnecessary to divide the rights into groups. The Commission's task was to discuss rights and not a statute.

THE CHAIRMAN asked the Commission to return to the subject under discussion, namely the status of equality without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) considered that the question was a very ambiguous one.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that the Charter contained a very broad statement on this subject. It was the task of the Commission at the present juncture to determine what it wished to investigate, and to postpone the subject of drafting until later.

GENERAL ROMULO (Philippine Republic) considered that the procedure [3] being followed was complicated. The subject was of an abstract nature and it was impossible when speaking of the various rights not to deal with their application. He therefore expressed himself in favour of discussing a concrete draft, for example, that of India.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) considered, for his own part, that the principle of the equality of rights was very clear. It had been defined for centuries.

The right of equality was illustrated by the fact that every person was a citizen of the United Nations. That should be recognized and incorporated in the Bill of Human Rights.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) endorsed the ideas expressed by Mr. Tepliakov. He recalled Article 1 of the French Declaration of the Rights of Man of 1789 to the effect that "Men are born and remain free and equal before the law". The definition was a broad one and justified the belief that it was not necessary to specify in too much detail what the principle of equality was.

MR. NIETO DEL RIO (Chile) was in agreement with the Representative of France on this question.

The right of equality before the law implied the enjoyment of the other rights mentioned in document E/CN.4/W.18. The Representative of Chile was inclined to vote in favour of the inclusion of a text of the principle of equality of men before the law, together with certain definitions contained in the aforementioned document subject to simplification of the text.

COLONEL HODGSON (Australia) was in agreement with the Representative of Chile.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) considered that the best procedure would be to define rights in relation to the principle of liberty.

THE CHAIRMAN then proposed proceeding to Point 2.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) said that it was impossible to leave Point 1 without a declaration that the Commission unanimously accepted the principle of equality; that principle would be included in the Commission's resolution.

DR. CHANG (China) considered that the principle of equality should be [4] examined, bearing in mind the concept of human dignity.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) was opposed to immediate acceptance of the principle of equality. He wanted first to define the concrete rights attaching to the concept of equality, the interpretation of which was difficult.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) stated that he agreed to postponing discussion on the concept of equality, but that he wished to insist on the assertion of the fundamental principle of the unity of the human race in the Commission's resolution.

GENERAL ROMULO (Philippine Republic) supported the statement of the representative of France. He asked that the Commission accept that principle henceforward, and that instructions be given to the Drafting Committee to include it in the Bill of Human Rights.

THE CHAIRMAN summed up the discussion, and asked whether the Commission agreed to the Drafting Committee being entrusted with the definition of the principle of equality in the Bill of Human Rights.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) agreed that the principle of the fundamental solidarity of all men should be mentioned in the Declaration, but he considered that the essential thing was to define the rights deriving from the concept of equality.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) considered it essential that the principle of equality be defined from the outset. He recalled that Hitler started by asserting the inequality of men before attacking men's liberties. The principles of the unity of the human race and of the equality of men before the law should appear in one of the fundamental articles of the Declaration.

THE CHAIRMAN considered that all the members were in agreement on the substance of the question.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) proposed that voting on the questions which had just been discussed should be postponed until the next meeting. He read a statement which he would like to see included in the draft which the Commission would examine at its next meeting. That statement contained the definition of the principle of the equality of men in all fields.

[5]

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that that matter was the province of the Drafting Committee.

MAJOR DUKES (United Kingdom) considered that the discussion was missing the principal point. Personally, he understood very well the principles of equality of race, equality before the law, etc., but he could not make out what was meant by equality of condition. He considered that in order to achieve more clarity on the subject, it would be better to allow the discussion to continue a little while longer so as to permit ideas to emerge which the Drafting Committee for the Bill of Human Rights could employ to advantage.

MRS. MEHTA (India) remarked that it was not necessary to proceed to the vote at the present discussion, but to arrive at some conclusion. She reminded those present that her draft resolution dealt with the right of equality.

DR. CHANG (China) considered that, in order to comply with the wishes of the Representatives of France and the Philippine Republic, a sentence might be included in the summary record to the effect that the Commission considered it necessary to emphasize this idea of the solidarity or unity of the human race.

It would thereby be ensured that the Declaration of Human Rights would always be correctly understood, and that it would be possible at all times to see what had been formulated on the morrow of a war waged by the enemy in the name of racial inequality.

MR. NIETO DEL RIO (Chile) asked if the first paragraph would be recommended to the Drafting Committee in its present form.

THE CHAIRMAN said that only the summary record of the discussion would be communicated to the Drafting Committee and would serve as a basis for drafting the Bill of Human Rights. Proceeding to examination of paragraph 2, Mrs. Roosevelt, after reading the rights enumerated in that paragraph, suggested that the Commission might decide whether or not it wished one or the other of those rights to appear in the Declaration.

DR. CHANG (China) emphasized that his country's Constitution already [6] contained the majority of the rights enumerated in paragraph 2, and he added that he would have copies of the Chinese Constitution distributed among the members of the Commission.

MRS. MEHTA (India) considered that the right of political liberty should be added to this list of rights.

MR. GUARDIA (Panama) desired that passage (a) should be amended. If he understood it correctly, it referred not only to a right to existence but also to the right to protection and respect for existence.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) desired to submit certain general observations. The rights of the human being were concerned here, and the list in question applied much more to the rights of the individual than to those of the human being generally. There was a gap here, which he considered was filled in the document presented to the Commission by the Catholic Welfare Association of the United States. Section 2 of that document dealt with the rights of the family which were four in number: the right to contract marriage, to make a home and to have children; the right to an economic security adequate to ensure the independence of the family; the right of the mother to protection; and the right of the children to education. If it was desired to consider the rights of the human being here, it was also necessary to take into account those rights enumerated in the document referred to. It was also necessary to consider ensuring the protection of the human being against the over-industrialization of this modern age.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) did not understand very well what was meant by the right to existence. It went without saying that that right existed, and it was therefore unnecessary to mention it. He pointed out that the right to personal liberty was defined by the subsequent paragraphs in the list. Furthermore, the mention of the United Nations in paragraph 1 did not seem very clear to him. He considered, moreover, that certain rights contained in the list were matters for national legislations, and that wherever they fell within the international field they were covered by international agreements or by conventions and should not appear [7] in an international Bill of Human Rights. That applied for example to points (o), (p), (s), (t) and (u). He therefore suggested that those points should be left out of the Bill of Human Rights. If they were allowed to appear, that would not be in conformity with the Charter.

DR. CHANG (China) drew the Commission's attention to Article 18 of the Chinese Constitution which prescribed the system of public examinations for the admission to public office. He considered that that right should exist in all countries, and suggested that it be mentioned in the Bill of Human Rights.

COLONEL HODGSON (Australia) pointed out that the rights of the family, of which the Representative of Belgium had spoken, would be found in paragraph 3 of the document. In his opinion certain rights enumerated in the list of paragraph 2 were quite obvious, and already guaranteed. That applied, for example, to the right to existence which was, so to speak, a sine qua non. It was a right which was already assured by the laws of all countries. Certain other rights contained in the list appeared to him too vague, and he considered that this list should in any case be restricted, and that before going any further it should be decided on which of the rights the Commission was in agreement.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) desired that the matter should be more precisely formulated. Certain rights had been treated as obvious, but that was not always the case. As regards the right to existence, for example, the fundamental consideration was to assure the protection of human life. That certainly was not as elementary a right as one might believe for in 1933, when Germany violated those principles, there were many countries in the world who asked themselves whether they had the right to intervene. He considered that it was of fundamental importance to affirm the right of human beings to existence. Similarly, it was a fundamental duty to assert that slavery was a shame to humanity. The most elementary rights must be re-affirmed as experience has proved that they could be violated.

[8]

Replying to the Representative of Belgium, he acknowledged that man could in fact be considered either as an individual, or in respect of his relations with other human groups. The document submitted by the Catholic Welfare Association considered man and the various human groups. But this Commission must make man, the human person, the centre of the Declaration.

Replying to the remarks made by the Representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on matters belonging to national legislation, he pointed out that certain national laws were very badly co-ordinated in the international field, and thus today large masses of humanity were obliged to live without properly defined rules. Somebody must take care of these masses of humanity. Rights of asylum, immigration and rights of nationality were so closely intertwined that millions of human beings could not be left without any statute. It was the duty of the community in the International Field to settle these three questions.

THE CHAIRMAN stated that she had just received a proposal from the Representative of Chile requesting the Drafting Committee to take into account the various Constitutions of Member States in the matter of human rights and liberties in the various countries.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) endorsed that proposal.

The meeting rose at 1:10 p.m.

E/CN.4/SR.14*4 February 1947*Original Text: French

Summary Record of the Fourteenth Meeting
[of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Tuesday,
 4 February 1947 at 2:00 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Roosevelt (United States of America); Vice-Chairman: Dr. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Mr. Malik (Lebanon). Members: Mr. Hodgson (Australia); Mr. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic); Mr. del Rio (Chile); Mr. Ebeid (Egypt); Prof. Cassin (France); Mrs. Mehta (India); Mr. Ghani (Iran); General Romulo (Philippine Republic); Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Mora (Uruguay); Mr. Ribnikar (Yugoslavia). Alternates: Mr. Lebeau (Belgium); Mr. Guardia (Panama). Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. Hutchison (ILO); Mr. Carnes (UNESCO). Non-Governmental Organizations: Consultant: Mr. Teper (American Federation of Labor). Secretariat: Mr. Humphrey (Secretary of the Commission).

Continuation of the Debate on the Contents of the Draft International Bill of Rights (Documents E/CN.4/W.18 and E/CN.4/11)

THE CHAIRMAN called the meeting to order. At the previous meeting the representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics had asked that [2] certain items on the list of rights drawn up by the Secretariat (document E/CN.4/W.18) be excluded from the Bill of Rights, and she now asked the Commission for its opinion on this subject.

MR. MORA (Uruguay) felt that the right of citizenship should be extended in such a way as to grant human beings a certain degree of world citizenship, and to offer the individual the possibility of participating personally in the international organization of the Community of Nations. The proposed right to petition the United Nations was insufficient. The right to freedom of movement ought also to include the freedom to change one's nationality.

MR. EBEID (Egypt) noted that in the course of the debate no mention had been made of the duties of the individual, which were a corollary to his rights. Moreover, the Commission ought merely to define the rights in a general way, without going into details; thus controversy would be avoided.

THE CHAIRMAN thought that freedom of movement, a right inherent in the human person, ought to be understood only as the ability to leave a country freely. This right would be limited by the immigration laws of the receiving country.

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) noted that it was difficult to implement the right to work without making it compulsory for unemployed members of the community to work. Freedom of movement ought also to be defined with the utmost care, and a nation's right to claim the extradition of its criminals ought to be preserved. Moreover, freedom of movement was naturally limited by the absorptive capacity of receiving countries, which had first to find employment for their own nationals.

In regard to the rights of the individual, it was quite legitimate to list certain obligations, without which the ratification of the International Bill would give rise to serious difficulties.

MRS. MEHTA (India) drew the Commission's attention to the draft resolution she had submitted in which none of the rights granted released the individual from his obligations towards the State. By freedom of movement she understood [3] not only the freedom to emigrate, but also the freedom to move from one place to another within the boundaries of the State, a right not at present respected in all countries of the world.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), speaking on the right to work, said that the moral and material conditions necessary to assure it ought to be provided. There could be no right to work without a corresponding duty to the community. In this respect, he cited Article 12 of the Soviet Constitution, which stipulated that in the Soviet Union work was a "duty and an honour for every able-bodied citizen, in accordance with the principle: no work, no food." He asked that the Bill include the individual's obligation to work for the community, by which he meant his country as well as the United Nations.

Passing on then to the rights listed in Section 3 (food, housing), he observed that the implementation of these rights depended on factual circumstances.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) was interested chiefly in the problem of personal liberty. He considered the Yugoslav representative's statement that the social principle ought to take first place as inconsistent with his other statement that freedom was to be found in harmony between the individual and the community. He urged the Commission to adopt the following four principles, which were in danger of being repudiated:

1. The human person is more important than the racial, national, or other group to which he may belong;
  2. The human person's most sacred and inviolable possessions are his mind and his conscience, enabling him to perceive the truth, to choose freely, and to exist;
  3. Any social pressure on the part of the State, religion or race, involving the automatic consent of the human person is reprehensible;
- [4]
4. The social group to which the individual belongs, may, like the human person himself, be wrong or right: the person alone is the judge.

The Bill of Rights, he concluded, could not without prejudice to itself, disregard these four principles.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) opposed these principles. He was against the Commission's considering the principles stated and reserved the right to comment on them after studying them.

MRS. MEHTA (India) did not think these principles should give rise to any controversy; the point was to study measures likely to uphold the dignity of the human person.

MR. GHANI (Iran) felt that freedom of expression and of opinion were possible only in countries where the standard of education was high enough to allow the masses to form a sound opinion, and so he wished the United Nations to take steps first of all to eliminate illiteracy and promote education, by such means as granting financial assistance to backward countries.

THE CHAIRMAN felt that the authors of the Bill had the duty to guarantee the fundamental liberties of the individual, and on these grounds, she considered the Lebanese representative's statement of particular importance.

She then asked the Commission to discuss more fully, Section 3 of the list of rights drawn up by the Secretariat (Social Security), since any observations might be useful to the group appointed to draw up the preliminary draft Bill.

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) disagreed with Mr. Malik, for he did not think that there could be unrestricted individual liberty in any modern community.

As to Mr. Malik's fears, Mr. Dukes did not think it wholly possible, in an organized society, to prevent groups from exercising a certain pressure upon individuals. That was the price which had to be paid for freedom of association, the necessity of which no one would contest.

[5]

Considering all the items in Category 3 (Social Security) of the list of the various types of rights to be included in the draft International Bill of Rights, he said it would be useless to try to define the liberties of the individual without taking account of his obligations towards the State or benevolent organizations. On the other hand, it was, he presumed, clear in the minds of all that individual liberties included the liberty to exercise pressure upon Governments in order to achieve the application of the various items in the third category. He presumed also that all the members of the Commission thought individuals ought to have the right to replace these governments if they failed to respect what might be called the collective will and collective obligations.

In conclusion, he stressed the co-existence and closely knit interdependence of the State and of the individual. It was the combination of these two elements, their reciprocal effects and influences which could produce the highest civilization.

MR. CASSIN (France) shared Mr. Duke's views and propounded the principle that the human being was above all, a social being. Parallel with the list of the rights of the individual, they ought, no doubt, to draw up a list of the rights of the community.

He warned against the danger of placing too little importance upon social rights. With regard to Item (f) of Category 3, he wished to see a distinction made between freedom of instruction and right to education.

MRS. MEHTA (India) considered the expression "right to health care" would be the right one in Section 3, as corresponding to the State's duties towards the individual.

MR. HODGSON (Australia) thought, that in spite of the slight differences in the opinions expressed, it could be inferred from the present debate that the members of the Commission all recognized that the individual's rights ought to be subordinated to those of the national community and of the international community. This principle could serve as a guide for the [6] Drafting Committee.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) noted, with reference to Mrs. Mehta's remarks, that the expression "right to health care", was not, perhaps, entirely felicitous inasmuch as this right had never been disputed. Concerning Item (e), he personally wished to suggest the expression "right to maintenance in case of old age, sickness, or other incapacity to work". Item (d) would read only: "protection against unemployment."

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) wished to stress the fact that he had not used the word "individual" but the expression "human person" in his previous intervention.

Coming back to the Charter's reference to the dignity and worth of the human person, he explained that he wished to give greater meaning to this expression. It would indeed be a dead letter if they refused to admit that the human person had the right to choose in full liberty, that is, without being exposed to reprisals or persecutions.

He was in complete agreement with Mr. Dukes' remarks about the price which had to be paid for the advantages derived from the State.

In conclusion, he laid down the principle that the human person had not been created for the sake of the State, but that the State existed rather for the sake of the human person. The Bill of Rights ought, therefore, to subordinate everything to the interest of the human person, even the State.

MR. CHANG (China) warned against the danger of producing a document which would ill accord with the times owing to its being out of time with the spirit and atmosphere of the post war era; he would like to see the expression "freedom from want" appear somewhere, either in the preamble or in the text itself.

MR. CASSIN (France) noted that there was one right which was absolutely unconditional, namely, the right to freedom of conscience. He stressed this [7] point, on which he thought the Lebanese representative was absolutely right, because it was this right to the freedom of conscience which gave the human person his worth and dignity.

THE CHAIRMAN thought the members of the Commission were now ready to study the form in which the Bill should be presented. She had observed in the course of the discussion that everyone seemed in favour of a general bill or declaration incorporated in a draft resolution to be submitted to the Assembly.

MRS. MEHTA (India) thought a mere declaration would not be sufficient and that provision would have to be made for means of implementation. What was required was an Act of the General Assembly which would place upon the Assembly the main responsibility for applying the rights.

THE CHAIRMAN drew the Commission's attention to the United States proposal that the Commission should prepare an International Bill of Rights which the Assembly could adopt in the form of a resolution providing that the Commission on Human Rights would prepare one or more "Conventions on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms".

MR. HODGSON (Australia) noted that the Assembly had the power to pass resolutions but not Acts, and that it was for the various Governments to implement those resolutions.

THE CHAIRMAN thought that the provisions of the Commission's draft resolution could be of a general nature and that it would be sufficient if they were adopted. It would not be necessary to specify each nation's attitude in regard to every one of the points adopted.

MR. CHANG (China), supported by Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), thought the Commission ought, first of all, with the assistance of the Drafting Committee, to draw up a Bill of Rights incorporated in a draft resolution.

MR. CASSIN (France) shared this view and suggested that the resolution [8] might contain an invitation to the States to incorporate in their Constitutions or in their national law such items of the Bill as were not already included therein.

He also advocated adopting the principle of an organic act which could be amended by a two-thirds majority and which would be a more or less independent instrument, capable of being amended by the General Assembly at future sessions.

He appealed to the members of the Commission not to follow the old conventional school of thought, or on the other hand, merely to pass an enthusiastic bill lacking concrete value.

THE CHAIRMAN noted that the Commission was unanimous in its decision to instruct the Drafting Committee to draw up the Bill and to incorporate it in a draft resolution to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council.

The next day's meeting would be devoted to a study of the means of implementation.

The meeting rose at 5:00 p.m.

E/CN.4/15

5 February 1947

Draft Resolution for an International Court of Human Rights Submitted by the Representative from Australia

1. There is hereby established an International Court of Human Rights. The Court shall be constituted and shall function in accordance with the Articles contained in this Part and in the Statute of the Court.

2. The Court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all disputes concerning the rights of citizenship and enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms provided for in the Declaration of Human Rights. Subject to such conditions as shall be contained in the Statute of the Court, the Jurisdiction of the Court shall be both original and appellate, and shall extend to questions of interpretation arising in such disputes as are brought before administrative tribunals or administrative authorities.

3. The appellate jurisdiction shall extend to appeals from all decisions of the courts of the States bound by the obligations contained in the Declaration of Human Rights, in which any question arises as to the rights of citizenship or the enjoyment of human rights, or fundamental freedoms.

4. The Court shall be open to any person or group of persons. It shall also be open to any of the States acceptors of the Declaration.

5. Each of the States accepting the Declaration shall comply with the judgment of the Court in any case to which the State is a party and with any order which the Court may make against it.

[2]

6. Any judgment or order made by the Court in favour of any person or group of persons within the jurisdiction of any of such States shall be fully effective according to its terms and shall be enforced in and by the State affected by the judgment or order.

7. Each of such States undertakes that the provisions contained in the declaration shall be recognized as fundamental laws and that no law, regulation or official action shall conflict or interfere with these provisions, nor shall any law, regulations or official action prevail over them.

8. The Court shall also have jurisdiction, both original and appellate, to hear and determine disputes concerning such rights of citizenship and enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms as shall be provided for in the treaties of peace which will be made by any of the Allied and Associated Powers with Romania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Finland, Austria, Germany or Japan.

9. The Court shall be composed of a body of independent judges, selected according to the standards laid down by the Charter of the United Nations for the election of judges of the International Court of Justice.

10. The Court shall consist of not less than three members appointed in the manner set out in the Statute of the Court.

11. The Court shall make an annual report to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations on the working of the Court in relation to the rights and freedoms within its jurisdiction. The Court may also make other reports to that Council if and when it thinks proper to do so.

E/CN.4/SR.15

5 February 1947

Original Text: French

Summary Record of the Fifteenth Meeting [of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, 5 February 1947
at 11:00 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Roosevelt (United States of America); Vice-Chairman: Mr. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Mr. Ch. Malik (Lebanon). Members: Colonel Hodgson (Australia); Mr. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic); Mr. Nieto del Rio (Chile); Mr. Ebeid (Egypt); Mr. Cassin (France); Mrs. Mehta (India); Mr. Ghani (Iran); General Romulo (Philippine Republic); Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Dukes (United Kingdom). Alternates: Mr. Lebeau (Belgium); Mr. Guardia (Panama). Representatives of the Specialized Agencies: Mr. Carnes (UNESCO); Mr. E. Hutchison (International Labour Organization). Non-Governmental Organizations: Consultant: Miss Sender (American Federation of Labor). Secretariat: Mr. J. Humphrey.

Before proceeding to Item 15 of the agenda, THE CHAIRMAN called upon the representative of India.

[2]

MRS. MEHTA (India) pointed out that the form of the Bill of Human Rights was of great importance to her government. It could either be in the nature of a vague resolution, including mystic and psychological principles, or it could be an instrument binding on all the Member States. She was in favour of the latter form as it would be in accordance with the Charter and the Resolutions of the last General Assembly. She stressed the necessity of this Bill having an imperative character.

THE CHAIRMAN called on the representative of Australia to speak on Item 15 of the agenda, regarding the implementation of the Bill of Human Rights.

COLONEL HODGSON (Australia) explained his Government's position on the Bill of Human Rights. His Government considered that the Resolution of the General Assembly Committee regarding this Bill should not be a simple recommendation, but a multilateral Convention binding Member States. These States should incorporate the principles laid down in this Bill in their own legislation.

He recalled that similar principles were incorporated in the Peace Treaties following the 1914–1918 war. In view of the negative results of these different declarations, the Australian Government had proposed, at the Paris Peace Conference,<sup>103</sup> the setting up of definite machinery for the application of these principles: that is to say, an International Court of Human Rights. By this action, the Australian Government was only conforming with the terms of a letter of June 1946 from Mr. Trygve Lie to the various governments. The Members of the Paris Conference, however, rejected this proposal on the grounds that the United Nations had at its disposal a body competent to settle the question; the Security Council. The objection was, in fact, unjustifiable as the Council could only intervene if peace were in danger. In view of the great number of Stateless persons whose future could only be settled on the international plane, the question was now even more acute.

The Australian Government therefore proposed that the Commission on Human Rights should recommend to the Economic and Social Council and to the General Assembly, the creation of an International Court of Human Rights. This Court would be the Central Appeal Court to which States, groups of individuals and even single individuals could appeal when all domestic possibilities of appeal had been exhausted.

He read the text of his proposal, which would be distributed later, and asked the Commission to express its views.

GENERAL ROMULO (Philippine Republic) reverted to the principles which should appear in the Bill of Human Rights. The task of the Commission was to prepare the way for a general Bill of Rights for all conditions of men. This Bill would prescribe rights and freedoms; it would also establish their inviolability from tyranny. In addition, it would determine the objectives to be attained on behalf of backward populations. He was in favour of a Bill on a sufficiently broad basis to cover the needs of free men and of men still to be freed.

He admitted, moreover, that the principles of this Bill would sometimes be violated, but was convinced that they would, nevertheless, be effective. He stated that the Government of the Philippine Republic was prepared to include all the provisions of the Bill in its Constitution, thus amplifying those it already contained.

<sup>103</sup> Held from 29 July to 15 October 1946 at the Palais du Luxembourg, the Paris Peace Conference led to the adoption of treaties with Italy, Romania, Hungary, Bulgaria and Finland.

As to Colonel Hodgson's proposal for the creation of an International Court of Human Rights, he stated that he was in entire agreement with the Australian representative. Nevertheless, he reserved the right of his Government to submit comments on this matter.

THE CHAIRMAN stated that no resolution would be put to the vote. So far as the question of the implementation of the Bill of Rights was concerned, the Commission would confine itself to making recommendations and suggestions to the Drafting Committee. The latter would proceed to the drafting and the Commission could then vote on the proposals in order [4] to refer them to the Economic and Social Council in the form of recommendations.

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) stated that his government considered that discussion of the enforcement of the Bill of Rights was premature so long as its principles were not clearly defined.

He considered that the Commission should first of all endeavour to clarify its views on the rights to be implemented. He stated that if a vote were to be taken on proposals for the creation of machinery to ensure respect of the rights mentioned in the Bill, in order to refer them to the Drafting Committee, he would be forced to vote against them.

MR. DEL RIO (Chile) and MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) were of the same opinion. Mr. Tepliakov would also be opposed to the Commission giving the Drafting Committee authority to examine the different systems for putting the principles of the Bill into practice before the Bill itself had been prepared.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) considered that in so far as the form of the Bill was concerned, the discussion was somewhat confused. The Indian representative had spoken of an "instrument" of the General Assembly; the Assembly would adopt the text of a Bill containing precise juridical obligations for each State. But the General Assembly could not make such provisions. It could either adopt a resolution which each State would be free to approve, or adopt the text of an international convention which would have to be signed and ratified. They had to decide which solution the Commission would seek. He was in favour of a resolution submitted in the form of a General Assembly resolution, containing the text of the Bill of Rights.

As for the body which would have to enforce the Bill, this was an entirely new question for the Commission. He declared that he must reserve his opinion on this matter, in order to consult his government.

THE CHAIRMAN, speaking as representative of the United States of [5] America, stated that her government considered that the General Assembly should recommend in its resolution that the Bill of Rights be incorporated in the respective constitutions of Member States. The United States Government did not think it advisable to go any further than that for the moment. The Commission on Human Rights could later prepare conventions, the details of which could be formulated gradually. It could suggest the creation by the Economic and Social Council of special machinery; but this would require long and exhaustive study. The convention could, for example, provide for reports on the manner in which the Bill was being applied, The Economic and Social Council could study means of submitting all information regarding human rights to the General Assembly, in conformity with Articles 10, 11 and 14 of the Charter. Finally, means of ensuring the collaboration of the Security and Trusteeship Councils as well as that of the Secretary-General, as provided for in Articles 65, 91 and 98 of the Charter, could also be considered.

MRS. MEHTA (India) wondered whether the Commission should be satisfied with an academic discussion of a Bill of Rights or whether it wished to implement such a Bill. Agreement must be reached on the principle upon which the Bill would be applied, otherwise the existence of the Commission could not be justified.

MR. HUTCHISON (International Labour Organization), having recalled the part played by the International Labour Office in the economic and social fields during the last twenty-five years, suggested that the potentialities of possible action by the specialized agencies in the implementation of the Bill of Human Rights should be carefully considered.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) thought it necessary to point out that he had not opposed the implementation of the Bill of Rights. He merely thought that the formulation of a precise plan would be premature and he was still of that opinion, particularly after hearing the statement of the representative of the International [6] Labour Organization. He urged that the Commission should not delegate to the Drafting Committee any powers which would allow it to consider measures for implementation.

MISS SENDER (American Federation of Labor) on behalf of the organization which she represented, wished to emphasize that the peoples must have faith in the United Nations and consequently, if it was decided to draft an International Bill of Rights, it must be shown that it was not merely a matter of empty words, but that decisions taken would be applied and enforced.

MR. CASSIN (France) wished to dispel a misunderstanding: the Commission was not on the horns of a dilemma; it was not forced to choose between the drafting of a theoretical Bill that could not be implemented and the preparation of an International Convention entailing juridical obligations for the States, which would have to be ratified by them.

From the beginning, the United Nations itself, as well as the Economic and Social Council, had given this Commission its terms of reference: to see that the obligations undertaken by the United Nations were respected. The Commission therefore had not only to draft a Bill recognizing certain internationally accepted rights, but it had also to study means of implementing this Bill. He considered that the Drafting Committee could prepare a provisional draft incorporating as much information and documentation as possible on the establishment of Human Rights. This method of procedure, avoiding specific directives, would doubtless have the advantage of meeting the objections put forward by certain members of the Commission, and would accelerate its work.

THE CHAIRMAN noted that the procedure recommended by Mr. Cassin was entirely consistent with the proposals put forward by the United States Delegation. To meet the desires of the representative of the Soviet Union, she added that the Drafting Committee would only prepare a Bill of Rights to be submitted at the next session.

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) feared that he had given the impression that his government was not anxious to apply the Bill of Human Rights. [7] He therefore wished to make it quite clear that this was not so. It was simply a matter of avoiding commitments which governments would later hesitate to accept. He drew the attention of the Commission to paragraph 7 of Article 2 of the Charter, and emphasized that the question of implementing the Bill of Rights again raised the problem of the relationship between the organ of implementation and domestic jurisdiction. The first thing, it seemed to him, was to draft a Bill of Rights containing no ambiguities, then to weigh its consequences, to refer it to governments and finally, to work out a system of implementation which would be clearer and more precise than anything which could be drawn up at that moment.

The meeting rose at 1:10 p.m.

E/CN.4/SR.16

5 February 1947

Summary Record of the Sixteenth Meeting [of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Wednesday,
5 February 1947 at 2:45 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Roosevelt (United States); Vice-Chairman: Mr. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Mr. Malik (Lebanon); Members: Col. Hodgson (Australia); Mr. Ebeid (Egypt); Mr. Cassin (France); Mrs. Mehta (India); Mr. Ghani (Iran); Mr. Malik (Lebanon); Mr. Tepliakov (USSR); Mr. Dukes (United Kingdom); Mrs. Roosevelt (United States); Substitutes: Mr. Lebeau (Belgium); Mr. Guardia (Panama); Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. Hutchison (ILO); Mr. Darchambeau (UNESCO); Consultant: Miss Sender (AF of L); Non-Governmental Organizations: Secretary of the Commission: Mr. Humphrey (Director, Human Rights Division).

Draft Resolution for an International Court of Human Rights, Submitted by the Representative of Australia (document E/CN.4/15)

COL. HODGSON (Australia), commenting on the Australian draft resolution, recalled that the objection had been raised that the Commission could not [2] consider implementing an international bill of rights before deciding its contents. He believed, however, that the Commission had an obligation under Article 56 to implement those rights and freedoms already laid down in the Charter. It was necessary to establish effective machinery to make those human rights and fundamental freedoms a reality.

Moreover, it was not premature to consider machinery for implementation of the bill, since the definitive rights to be enforced would be known at the time the bill was submitted to the General Assembly. The variety of principles enunciated therein would subsequently be incorporated into international convention for ratification by States members. There the elaboration and implementation of the bill constituted parallel processes.

Col. Hodgson also recalled that it had been suggested that the rights and fundamental freedoms embodied in the bill should first be implemented by governments through national legislation. He considered, however, that this function belonged to an international tribunal, to which there could be appeal over and beyond national courts.

In conclusion, the representative of Australia stated that the Commission should not confine itself to abstractions but was bound to consider immediately effective machinery for implementing human rights and fundamental freedoms, in accordance with its solemn obligations. He moved, therefore, that the Australian proposal for the establishment of an International Bill of Human Rights should be referred to the drafting group for consideration with a view to reporting on the implementation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, as contained in the proposed bill of human rights, to the next session of the Commission.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) supported the motion of the Australian representative.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (USSR) considered that the drafting group had been established to make a preliminary draft of the bill of rights on the basis of [3] the instructions of the Commission, and the body as such had no authority to consider the question of documents, or drafting of documents, for implementation of the bill, at the present stage of the work of the Commission.

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) moved as an amendment to the Australian motion that the question of referring the implementation of the bill to the drafting group should be deferred for consideration to the second session of the Commission.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) recalled the resolution of the Economic and Social Council adopted on 21 June 1946, which stated that the aims of the United Nations could only be implemented if provisions were taken to ensure respect for the rights of man and requested the Commission on Human rights to elaborate the means of ensuring such rights.

He considered that the Commission should not express its opinion on the substance of the Australian proposal, but was absolutely empowered to submit it to the drafting body for study and exploration, together with proposals introduced by other representatives.

MR. CASSIN (France) supported the view taken by the Belgian representative, and stated that he would vote for the Australian motion. He suggested the addition of certain amendments allowing the commission to submit to the drafting body not only the Australian resolution but all other documents concerning the same subject, and stating that, since the Commission was not in a position to give precise instructions, the drafting group should not prepare a positive draft but only undertake a task of exploration.

MRS. MEHTA (India) maintained that the question of implementation of an international bill of rights had been placed on the agenda, in accordance with the instructions of the Economic and Social Council, and the Commission was required to take appropriate action.

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) explained that his amendment was motivated by [4] the fact that he was not in possession of sufficient instructions regarding the question of implementation. The fact that only one such a proposal had been received was an indication of the unpreparedness of more than one country in that respect. The United Kingdom Government supported the principle of implementation and would later submit its own concrete proposals.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) pointed out that the drafting group could consider at the present time the various points of view expressed. There was nothing to prevent the United Kingdom representative from submitting to the drafting group his own draft regarding implementation at a later date. Therefore, Mr. Malik suggested that the United Kingdom amendment should be amended to allow the drafting group to explore and consider, in addition to the Australian document, any suggestions for implementation of the international bill of rights that might be submitted to it between now and the next session of the Commission by any Government Member of the United Nations.

COL. HODGSON (Australia) pointed out that the problem of implementation had been exhaustively examined during the Paris Conference, where it had finally been decided that the question should be dealt with by the Economic and Social Council. All Governments had received advance agenda and had known that the Australian proposal was being referred to the Commission. Moreover, the Commission would be in a better position to consider the Australian proposal during its second session, if in the meantime, the drafting group had examined its contents and implications.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (USSR) remarked that the Commission had authorized the drafting body to deal only with an international bill of rights. He therefore moved an amendment that the Commission should reverse its previous decision about the drafting body, and should appoint a new drafting Sub-Committee with powers to draft a preliminary international bill [5] of rights and explore methods of implementation.

MR. CHANG (China) agreed that the drafting group had been entrusted with the task of drafting a bill of rights. If suggestions concerning implementation were also to be referred to that group, that fact should be clearly stated. In order to meet the different points of view expressed, the Chinese representative suggested that the Lebanese amendment should also state that the drafting group should be allowed to explore all aspects of the problem, including implementation.

MR. GUARDIA (Panama) suggested that the membership of the drafting group should be increased, if it were instructed to fulfil additional functions in the field of implementation.

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) recognized the value of the Australian proposal. The United Kingdom Government was most anxious that any undertaking in connection with an international bill of rights should be effectively observed. He would support the Lebanese amendment, providing that it was clearly understood that the drafting group would only undertake a task of exploration, considering, in addition to the Australian document any other proposal that might be submitted.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) replied that his amendment was only intended to authorize the drafting body to consider and explore suggestions regarding implementation, in accordance with the instructions of the Economic and Social Council.

Decision: The USSR amendment, which was voted on in two parts, was defeated.

MR. CASSIN (France), with a view to reconciling divergent views, proposed the following amendment:

“The Commission on Human Rights, recognizing that it is not at present in a position to give precise directives with regard to the means of ensuring the observance of the rights to be embodied in the international declaration, invites the drafting group, in the [6] forthcoming months, with the assistance of the Secretariat, to explore this field and to study the Australian proposal and any other documents which may be submitted to it so that the Commission at its second session may be able to work out proposals on this subject in conformity with the duties assigned to it by the Economic and Social Council.”

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) and MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) accepted the French amendment.

MR. HODGSON (Australia) pointed out that according to his resolution the drafting group was to be asked not only to study the Australian amendment for the establishment of an International Court of Human Rights, but also to report upon it.

MR. CASSIN (France) replied that, any study by a subsidiary body should result in a report, which might be considered as a working document. He did not believe that the report should present any definite conclusions.

MR. HODGSON (Australia) felt that it would be desirable for the group to proceed as far as they could. Conclusions and to make recommendations, would be preferable to an abstract study. He therefore supported his original resolution.

Decision: The French amendment was adopted by seven votes to three, and the Australian resolution fell automatically.

MR TEPLIAKOV (USSR) said that, since the functions of the drafting group had been changed from a technical to a substantial one, he withdrew his support of the first part of the Commission's resolution of 4 February 1947 with respect to that group.

...

E/CN.4/17

6 February 1947

United States Proposals Regarding an International Bill of Rights

Proposals

The United States proposes:

1. that the Commission on Human Rights should consider the following questions at its forthcoming session before proceeding with the drafting of an international bill of rights:
  - (a) the legal form of the bill;
  - (b) the subject matter to be dealt with in the bill;
  - (c) the implementation of the bill;
2. that the Commission should, before adjourning,
  - (a) appoint a working group to draft an international bill of rights for submission to the Commission at its next session, following closely the Commission's decisions on the points listed in paragraph (1) above;
  - (b) suggest methods of consulting with interested agencies, commissions, and sub-commissions in the drafting of an international bill of rights.

II. Specific Suggestions

1. With regard to the legal form of an international bill of rights, the United States suggests that the Commission should first prepare it in the form of a Declaration on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms to be adopted as a General Assembly Resolution. This Declaration should be of such a character as to command the respect of people throughout the world and should be framed with a view to speedy adoption by the [2] General Assembly. The resolution containing this Declaration should make provision for the subsequent preparation by the Commission on Human Rights of one or more conventions on human rights and fundamental freedoms. This course, it is thought, would permit prompt adoption of a broad statement of human rights and allow time for the working out of detailed treaty provisions on specific matters.

2. Among the categories of rights which, the United States suggests should be considered are the following:

- (a) personal rights, such as freedom of speech, information, religion and rights of property;
- (b) procedural rights, such as safeguards for persons accused of crime;
- (c) social rights such as the right to employment and social security and the right to enjoy minimum standards of economic, social and cultural wellbeing;
- (d) political rights, such as the right to citizenship and the right of citizens to participate in their government.

It is recognized that the definition of rights within these categories is a task of great difficulty, which cannot be performed by the Commission at its forthcoming session, but it is submitted that these categories taken together include the rights which persons of differing national, legal, economic, and social systems would regard as the human rights and fundamental freedoms to be promoted and respected by the United Nations.

3. With regard to implementation, the United States suggests that the General Assembly resolution setting forth the Declaration on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms should recommend the Declaration as a standard to be observed by Members. It might also recommend that these rights be incorporated in constitutions and in legislation, to be observed and enforced by administrative and judicial authorities.

[3]

The conventions suggested earlier might contain provisions for reporting by the signatories on the application of the convention and on the position of their law and practice regarding the rights stipulated in the convention. They might also, if feasible, empower the Commission on Human Rights to recommend to states measures to give effect to the convention.

4. The United States proposes the appointment of a working group to draft the Declaration since the Commission's agenda for the forthcoming meeting is long and the decisions to be reached with respect to the foregoing questions will require more extended consideration than will be possible at the forthcoming session of the Commission. The decisions with regard to subject matter to be included would furnish leads to the drafting group to guide it in formulating specific provisions or in evaluating proposals which may be made or referred to it.

All bills which have been submitted to the Commission should be referred to the working group for study in the light of the decisions of principle reached by the Commission.

The subsequent drafting of conventions for submission by the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly and adoption by Members might be performed by the same working group, or one or more new ones might be formed.

5. The Commission may consider it desirable to consult with organs, commissions, or specialized agencies of the United Nations with regard to the drafting of certain provisions. It might, therefore, suggest to the working group methods of consultation with these bodies.

6. In order to submit the Declaration on Human Rights, if possible, to the Second Session of the General Assembly, it is suggested that the working group complete its work in time for consideration by the Commission (possibly in June) and the Fifth Session of the Economic and Social Council (Summer 1947).

E/CN.4/19

6 February 1947

Draft Report of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council

Chapter I Introduction

1. The Commission on Human Rights held its first session during the period 27 January to 8 February 1947 with the following Members in attendance:

Col. William R. Hodgson	Member from	Australia
Mr. T. Kaminsky	"	Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic
Mr. T. Felix Nieto Del Rio	"	Chile
Dr. P. C. Chang	"	China
Mr. Osman Ebeid	"	Egypt
Professor René Cassin	"	France

Mrs. Hansa Mehta	“	India
Dr. Ghassame Ghani	“	Iran
Dr. Charles Malik	“	Lebanon
General Carlos P. Romulo	“	Philippine Republic
Mr. Charles Dukes	“	United Kingdom
Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt	“	United States of America
Mr. V. F. Tepliakov	“	Union of Soviet Socialist Republics
Dr. Don José A. Mora	“	Uruguay
Mr. V. Ribnikar	“	Yugoslavia

2. Mr. Fernand Dehousse of Belgium and Mr. Ricardo J. Alfaro of Panama were unable to attend but were represented by substitutes: Mr. Roland Lebeau, and Dr. German Gil Guardia, respectively. The Member from the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic was not present. The Member from the Philippine Republic was forced to leave early and was replaced by Colonel Amado Bautista.<sup>104</sup>

3. The Specialized Agencies were represented at the Commission by: Mr. E. Hutchison, for the International Labour Organization; Dr. Archibald MacLeish,<sup>105</sup> Mr. Valère Darchambeau and [Mr.] Carnes for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

[2]

4. Consultants in attendance were:

Mr. L. Teper, and
Miss Toni Sender,<sup>106</sup> for the American Federation of Labor;
Mr. W. Campbell,<sup>107</sup> for the International Cooperative Alliance;
Miss Lena Spiegel, for the World Federation of Trade Unions.

5. Professor John P. Humphrey was Secretary of the Commission.

6. The Commission elected the following members as its officers:

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as Chairman
Dr. P. C. Chang as Vice-Chairman
Dr. Charles Malik as Rapporteur

<sup>104</sup> Colonel Amado Bautista replaced General Carlos P. Romulo as a representative of the Philippine Republic on the first session of the Commission on Human Rights.

<sup>105</sup> Archibald MacLeish (1892–1982) was an American writer who was appointed Librarian of Congress by President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

<sup>106</sup> Toni Sender (1888–1964), consultant for the American Federation of Labor on the Commission of Human Rights, was a member of the Social Democratic Party in Germany and was elected as a member of parliament for the Dresden-Bautzen constituency, holding this post from 1924 to 1933. Toni Sender participated in the Commission on the Status of Women and the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. John Humphrey said she “interpreted her consultative function rather widely” (John P. Humphrey, Human Rights & the United Nations: A Great Adventure, Dobbs Ferry, NY: Transnational Publishers, 1984, p. 25).

<sup>107</sup> Wallace Campbell (1911–1998), co-founder of Cooperative for Assistance and Relief Everywhere (CARE), represented the International Cooperative Alliance before the Economic and Social Council. In 1962, Mr. Campbell assisted Senator Hubert Humphrey in drafting the Humphrey Amendment to the United States Foreign Assistance Act.

7. The Commission adopted, after amendment, the Provisional Rules of Procedure (document E/33/Rev.1) as its Rules of Procedure.

Chapter II

International Bill of Human Rights

1. The Commission decided:

- (a) That the Chairman, together with the Vice-Chairman and the Rapporteur, undertake, with the assistance of the Secretariat, the task of formulating a preliminary draft International Bill of Human Rights, in accordance with the instructions and decisions of the Commission at its First Session, to be submitted to the Commission at its Second Session for thorough examination.
- (b) That the Chairman, in the course of this work, may enlist the co-operation of, and shall receive, orally or in writing, any observations and suggestions from, any Member of the Commission.
- (c) That the Chairman may consult experts chosen with the consent of their Governments, Members of the United Nations.
- (d) That the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur, in drawing up the preliminary draft of the International Bill of Human Rights, might consult any person or document deemed by them of relevance to their work.
- (e) That, while recognizing that it is not at present in a position to formulate precisely its views concerning the means of ensuring the observance of the rights to be included in the International Bill of Human Rights, to invite the drafting group to explore this field and to study the Australian Proposal (E/CN.4/15) and any other documents which may be submitted to it, so that the Commission at its Second Session may be able to work out proposals on this subject in fulfilment of the duties assigned to it by the Council. (Journal of the Economic and Social Council Number 29.)

2. As a guide to the drafting group in its work, the Members of the Commission stated their views concerning items they considered should be included in or excluded from the International Bill of Human Rights. [4] The expression of these views is embodied in the verbatim and summary records of the meetings of the Commission, which are available for use by the drafting group.

...

E/CN.4/SR.17

6 February 1947

Summary Record of the Seventeenth Meeting [of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Thursday,
6 February 1947 at 11:00 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States); Rapporteur: Mr. Malik (Lebanon). Col. W. R. Hodgson (Australia); Mr. F. Nieto Del Rio (Chile); Mr. O. Ebeid (Egypt); Mr. R. Cassin (France); Mrs. Hansa Mehta (India); Mr. G. Ghani (Iran); Mr. C. Malik (Lebanon); Col. A. Bautista (Philippine Republic); Mr. V. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. C. Dukes (United Kingdom); Mrs. E. Roosevelt (United States); Mr. J. A. Mora (Uruguay); Mr. V. Ribnikar (Yugoslavia). Alternates: Mr. R. Lebeau (Belgium); Mr. G. G. Guardia (Panama); Col. A. N. Bautista (Philippine Republic). Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. E. Hutchison (ILO); Mr. G. L. Carnes (UNESCO). Consultant of Non-Governmental Organization: Miss Toni Sender (AF of L). Secretary of the Commission: Prof. J. P. Humphrey (Director, Human Rights Division).

Consideration of Item 13 of Original Agenda (document E/CN.4/1)

THE CHAIRMAN said that Item 13 had been discussed thoroughly in earlier meetings, where it had been decided to establish a drafting group to prepare [2] a preliminary Draft International Bill of Human Rights for the consideration of the Commission at its next session. It had been agreed that the drafting group could ask and receive assistance from members of the Commission and from any others to whom they chose to apply.

MRS. MEHTA (India) drew attention to the last paragraph of document E/CN.4/W.17, and asked whether the Commission was to consider the point raised there with regard to the setting up of a panel of experts.

THE CHAIRMAN answered that the creation of a panel of experts would have to be approved by the Chairman of the Economic and Social Council and by the Secretary-General. She personally did not consider that such specific action would be of any use at the present time.

MRS. MEHTA explained that her idea was that members of the Commission could, in consultation with their governments, suggest names to be put on the panel.

THE CHAIRMAN said that it had already been agreed that anyone the drafting group wished to call upon could only be approached after consultation with his government.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) pointed out that the resolution whereby the drafting group had been set up had contained a clause to the effect that any members of the Commission had a right to submit names of experts. There was no need for further discussion.

COL. HODGSON (Australia) agreed with the representative from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics that there was no need for a panel, since the resolution establishing the drafting group allowed them a considerable amount of discretion in calling upon individual experts.

MRS. MEHTA said that, so long as the principle of the right of members to submit names of experts in consultation with their governments was accepted, she was satisfied to pass to the next item.

...

[3]

...

Item 16

THE CHAIRMAN, drawing attention to the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on the subject (document E/CN.4/W.1), said that for present purposes the discussion could be confined to consultations of the drafting group with non-governmental organizations. The Economic and Social Council had divided non-governmental organizations into Categories (a), (b) and (c). With regard to Category (a), she would suggest that the Commission should simply agree that such organizations should be encouraged to submit to the drafting group ideas for an International Bill of Human Rights.

With regard to categories (b) and (c), the Commission might consider it sufficient to say that it would be a good working arrangement for the drafting group to receive written communications and to hear representatives of those organizations.

THE SECRETARY drew the attention of members to the fact that the whole question of relations with non-governmental organizations was still before the Economic and Social Council and that a decision might be reached before the next session of the Commission. Machinery was being created to implement relations between the United Nations and Categories (a), (b) and (c), and the [4] question arose whether the Commission would have the right to consult any body not having that status.

THE CHAIRMAN thought that, pending the decision of the Economic and Social Council, the drafting group would not want to cut off any organizations which had not yet been granted status.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) considered that the question of relations with non-governmental organizations was a matter of great importance. He did not think, however, that there was any need for the Commission to make any kind of recommendation.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) reminded members that the Economic and Social Council had devoted much time and effort to deciding the status of non-governmental organizations in relation to the Council itself, and that there was therefore no need for the Commission to concern itself with that. The intention of the Economic and Social Council was that non-governmental organizations should have consultative status with Commissions, and it was the duty and the right of each Commission to decide whether or not to consult them.

MR. CASSIN (France) asked whether, pending the decision of the Economic and Social Council, the Commission was able to receive visits from non-governmental organizations. Communications in writing had been received, and the Commission might be asked later to receive someone in audience.

THE CHAIRMAN shared the views expressed by the representative from Belgium, and thought that the Commission could informally allow the drafting group to proceed on the assumption that non-governmental organizations in Category (a) could consult the group and that the group could invite any organization it wished to consult.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) emphasized that, as far as the drafting group was concerned, that group was to work solely under the instructions of the Commission.

With regard to relations with non-governmental organizations, it was the [5] duty of the Commission to observe the Charter and the decisions of the General Assembly and of the Economic and Social Council.

He drew attention to the resolution adopted by the Social Commission on the question (document E/CN.5/W.21/Rev.1, page 26), and thought the Commission on Human Rights might well follow the framework of that decision. If necessary, he would make a formal motion to that effect.

THE CHAIRMAN did not think such a motion would be needed, since the Commission had practically the same permission at the present time.

THE SECRETARY explained that he had not intended to suggest that the Commission should go beyond the decisions of the Economic and Social Council. It was possible that the drafting group might want to consult agencies to whom consultative status had not been granted. The Commission might consider it advisable to make recommendations to the Council before the latter took a decision on the matter.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) thought it was the duty of the Commission to suggest to the Economic and Social Council that consultative status should be granted to any organization offering assistance.

THE CHAIRMAN did not consider there was any need for formal action. Until the Economic and Social Council came to a decision, the Commission could continue to use the methods used hitherto. In reply to a question from Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) as to whether that would mean that the group would not be empowered to consult any organizations other than those authorized by the Economic and Social Council, she answered that it had authority to consult any non-governmental organizations under the present arrangements.

MR. CASSIN (France) thought it would be a serious matter if pending the decision of the Council, the drafting group were not allowed to receive communications from organizations whose status had not yet been established.

THE CHAIRMAN stressed that both the Commission and the drafting group had the right to consult organizations not as yet recognized, while [6] awaiting the final decision of the Economic and Social Council.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) referring to a remark by the representative of France, said that the Drafting Group had to carry out its task under the instructions of the Commission on Human Rights and the former should first bring to the notice of the Commission any paper or documents submitted to it by non-governmental organizations.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that the Drafting Group had to proceed on the basis of the Rapporteur's report. A number of papers had been submitted by non-governmental organizations and they were bound to read and consider them though that did not mean that these papers would be included in the draft Bill of Rights or that that draft would be accepted without a great deal of discussion.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) said that the question of non-governmental organizations was discussed in great detail by the Economic and Social Council. The Council had said that Commissions might consult those organizations placed in Category (a) or (b) either directly or through committees, and he felt that the Drafting Group should not be empowered to do any more. The Commission on Human Rights could suggest to the Economic and Social Council that certain organizations should be placed in Categories (a) and (b) because their advice was necessary for the work of the Commission.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon), Rapporteur, referring to the remarks of the representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics that the Drafting Group should have the right only to consult those papers or documents referred to it by the Commission, said that to his knowledge no such papers had been submitted to the Commission, though about twenty had been received by the Secretariat from various non-governmental organizations regarding the question of a Bill of Rights. The Drafting Group wished to know to what extent that material could be utilized in the elaboration of a draft Bill of Rights.

MR. HODGSON (Australia) referring to Items 13, 16, 17 and 18 of the [7] Agenda said that the discussion was circumscribed. The Economic and Social Council had laid down that certain bodies should be given consultative status, and he considered that the right of consultation did not mean the right to participate in the work of a Commission or Committee. The Commission should not request information direct from the non-governmental organizations as had been suggested in the last paragraph of document E/CN.4/17. If non-governmental organizations were given the right to participate in meetings, they might plead special cases and that might place governments in an embarrassing position.

THE SECRETARY drew the attention of the representative of Australia to the fact that document E/CN.4/W.17 referred to consultation with the Commission and not to participation.

Replying to Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council had referred documents to the Commission and it had had to consider documents which had been submitted by a Member Government.

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) felt that specific instructions regarding consultation with non-governmental organizations should not be given to the Drafting Group. It would only impede the free development of the Drafting Group.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon), Rapporteur, said the Commission should come to a decision as to whether the Drafting Group could only work in accordance with explicit instructions as to what documents they should refer to, or whether they should have the liberty of referring to any document which they deemed of interest to their work.

THE CHAIRMAN said that the Commission should decide what the particular field of the Drafting Group should be. Item 16 of the agenda of the Commission could be disposed of by saying that the Commission would await the decision of the Economic and Social Council and not make any recommendations at the present time.

[8]

Replying to Mr. Lebeau (Belgium) who referred to his proposal that the Commission should suggest to the Economic and Social Council that certain non-governmental organizations should be placed in Categories (a) and (b), the Chairman said that could be done and organizations could be advised to apply to the Economic and Social Council to be included in those categories.

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) suggested that the Commission should submit the following recommendation to the Economic and Social Council:

“The Commission recommends to the Economic and Social Council that at its fourth meeting the Council should place in Category (b) such non-governmental organizations which at present had consultative status namely . . . (and here would be inserted the three or four organizations connected with the work of the Commission) and which are of interest to the Commission.”

Replying to Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) who asked what organizations the representative of Belgium had in mind, Mr. Lebeau said that any organization of special interest to the Commission should be placed in Category (b). He did not think it necessary to name any special organization.

MR. CASSIN (France) wished to draw attention to the fact that the Secretariat had received a large number of draft Bills of Rights and the Drafting Group should be able to consider those documents in case they were of interest in drawing up the draft Bill of Human Rights. He felt that the Commission should not specify the number of organizations it wished to recommend for inclusion in Category (b).

MR. LEBEAU (Belgium) agreed with the recommendation made by the [9] Chairman and withdrew his proposal.

MR. DEL RIO (Chile) asked whether the non-governmental organizations to be suggested by members of the Commission were only for consultation in connection with the drafting of the Bill of Rights.

THE CHAIRMAN said that the Economic and Social Council had placed certain organizations in Category (a) and had given them consultative status. The organizations suggested by the members of the Commission on Human Rights would be placed in Categories (b) and (c).

MR. DEL RIO (Chile) suggested that a decision on the matter should not be taken at the present time.

THE CHAIRMAN said that the final decision as to which non-governmental organizations would be included in Categories (b) and (c) would be taken by the Economic and Social Council, and the Commission on Human Rights could only make recommendations to the Council.

MR. EBEID (Egypt) suggested that if the Drafting Group found that a certain non-governmental organization could be of use to them in their work they should ask the Commission for permission to consult that organization.

THE CHAIRMAN felt that Item 16 should be left to the Economic and Social Council for a decision.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon), Rapporteur, said the draft Report of the Commission would be ready for discussion sooner if the Commission approved of it being a brief one, embodying only the decisions arrived at and referring in general to the summary records for any elaboration that might be needed.

THE CHAIRMAN felt that the Report should be a brief one and should refer to the summary records. The drafting group should also use the verbatim records for information purposes.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon), Rapporteur, proposed the following:

“The Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur of the Commission, in drawing up the International Bill of Rights may consult any document or organization deemed by them of relevance to their work.”

[10]

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) seconded the proposal of the representative of the Lebanon.

THE CHAIRMAN said it should be understood that the Drafting Group, although governed by the rules of the Economic and Social Council, could still consult with organizations or with individuals if they so wished.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) supported the proposal of the representative of the Lebanon and suggested the following amendment:

“The Commission instructs the Drafting Group that in the course of its work of preparing a preliminary draft of the Bill of Rights it may consult any document received from non-governmental organizations in Category (a), and in particular the Commission desires that the Drafting Group should co-operate to the fullest possible extent with the WFTU which represents seventy-one million workers and fifty-six countries and is the most authentic body of the workers of the whole world and is very important in this particular field of work of the United Nations.”

MR. CHANG (China) said that the Drafting Group were only submitting a draft Bill of Rights and it could be left to their common sense to consider all documents submitted to them.

THE CHAIRMAN said that the motion and amendment before the Commission would be discussed at the afternoon meeting.

The meeting rose at 12:30 p.m.

E/CN.4/SR.18

6 February 1947

Summary Record of the Eighteenth Meeting [of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Thursday,
6 February 1947 at 12:45 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Roosevelt (United States). Vice-Chairman: Dr. Chang (China). Rapporteur: Mr. Malik (Lebanon). Members: Col. Moore (Australia); Mr. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic); Mr. Nieto Del Rio (Chile); Mr. Ebeid (Egypt); Prof. Cassin (France); Mrs. Mehta (India); Mr. Ghani (Iran); Gen. Romulo (Philippine Republic); Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Maj. Dukes (United Kingdom); Mr. Mora (Uruguay). Alternates: Mr. Lebeau (Belgium); Mr. Guardia (Panama). Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. Darchambeau (UNESCO); Mr. E. Hutchison (ILO). Non-Governmental Organization: Consultant: Miss Sender (American Federation of Labor). Secretariat: Prof. J. Humphrey.

I. Item 3 of the Agenda: Relations with Non-Governmental Organizations (continued)

THE CHAIRMAN announced that the discussion begun that morning would be resumed. Two texts were before the Commission, the Lebanese proposal and the Soviet amendment.

[2]

MR. MALIK (Lebanon), Rapporteur, read his proposal:

“That the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur, in drawing up the preliminary draft of the International Bill of Human Rights, may consult any document or person deemed by them of relevance to their work.”

PROFESSOR HUMPHREY (Secretariat) read the amendment submitted by the Soviet representative. It specified that the Drafting Committee might consult the non-governmental organizations in Category (a) and, in particular, the World Federation of Trade Unions.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) considered that the two proposals were not compatible. He thought that the Drafting Committee should be free to gather information from all useful sources and, more particularly, that it should be able to consult the organizations in Category (a) of which the World Federation of Trade Unions was the most important.

THE CHAIRMAN considered that if the World Federation of Trade Unions was mentioned, the other organizations in Category (a) would have to be mentioned too. The Soviet representative's amendment seemed to her inopportune.

MR. DUKES (United Kingdom) thought it was difficult to assign a special position to any particular organization, and the Drafting Committee should be left free to consult whomever it wished.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) pointed out that the object of his amendment was to give directions to the Drafting Committee in order to avoid confusion in the future.

MISS SENDER (American Federation of Labor) stated that the Soviet amendment drew an arbitrary distinction between the four non-governmental organizations. She regretted, moreover, that the Commission had not considered the draft Bill of Human Rights submitted by her organization.

MR. MOORE (Australia) thought the Lebanese motion was sufficient to guide the Drafting Committee in its work, and opposed the Soviet amendment.

[3]

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) thought that legal equality was not the only criterion, and that the moral importance of certain federations should also be taken into consideration. He recalled that, in the last war, thousands of workers, now represented by the World Federation of Trade Unions, had risen to fight the enemy, and that it was largely thanks to them that it was now possible to debate here in full freedom.

Nevertheless, he would prefer to adopt the Lebanese proposal as a working basis, with the reservation that special mention be made of the World Federation of Trade Unions, which represented par excellence those who had fought for the rights of man.

MR. MORA (Uruguay) preferred the Lebanese proposal, which did not give the impression of discriminating between the various organizations. He would therefore vote in favour of it.

THE CHAIRMAN put the Soviet amendment to the vote.

Decision: The amendment was rejected by six votes to two.

THE CHAIRMAN put the Lebanese proposal to the vote.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) stated that the terms of the Lebanese motion were in contradiction with the Charter of the United Nations.

Decision: The proposal was adopted by eight votes to one.

...

E/CN.4/SR.20

7 February 1947

Summary Record of the Twentieth Meeting [of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Friday,
7 February 1947 at 3:00 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Roosevelt (United States). Vice-Chairman: Mr. Chang (China). Rapporteur: Mr. Malik (Lebanon). Members: Colonel Hodgson (Australia); Mr. del Rio (Chile); Mr. Ebeid (Egypt); Professor Cassin (France); Mrs. Mehta (India); Mr. Ghani (Iran); Maj. Dukes (United Kingdom); Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Ribnikar (Yugoslavia). Alternates: Mr. Lebeau (Belgium); Mr. Guardia (Panama); Mr. Bautista (Philippine Republic). Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. Hutchison (ILO); Mr. Carnes (UNESCO). Secretariat: Mr. Pelt (Assistant Secretary-General); Mr. Cordier (Executive Assistant to the Secretary-General); Mr. Stanczyk (Director of the Department of Social Affairs); Professor Humphrey (Secretary of the Commission).

...

[6]

...

2. Discussion of the Draft Report of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council (document E/CN.4/19)

THE CHAIRMAN invited the members of the Commission to submit proposals for amendments as the Rapporteur, Mr. Malik (Lebanon) read through the text of the document.

In Chapter I, paragraph 2, the Commission decided, on the proposal of Mr. Chang (China), to delete the word “substitutes” in line 2 and to insert “represented” instead of “replaced” in the last line.

At the request of MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) it was decided that in lines 5 and 6 of the same paragraph, dealing with the absence of the representative of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republics, the latter’s name, Mr. Stadnik, be inserted, and the words “on account of illness” be added after the words “not present”.

[7]

THE CHAIRMAN, replying to a remark by COLONEL HODGSON (Australia), said that the representative of the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic was present only as an observer, and that no credentials establishing his quality as a member of the Commission had been received. So far as the representative of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic was concerned, a telegramme had been received from Mr. Manuilsky, Minister of Foreign Affairs, stating that he had appointed a provisional representative to replace Mr. Stadnik at the next session of the Commission on Human Rights. This nomination did not affect the present situation in any way.

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) stated that Mr. Stadnik who had been wounded by a shot during the General Assembly hoped to be able to resume his duties very shortly.

On the proposal of Mr. Lebeau (Belgium) the Commission decided that the erroneous reference to “document E/33/Rev.1”, whilst on the Rapporteur’s proposal, the word “provisional” was added in line 2 before the word “rules”.

The Commission unanimously adopted Chapter I as a whole.

...

E/259

11 February 1947

Report of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council

Chapter 1

Introduction

1. The Commission on Human Rights held its first session during the period 27 January to 10 February 1947, with the following members in attendance: Australia: Colonel W.R. Hodgson, OBE; Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic: Mr. L.I. Kaminsky; Chile: Mr. Felix Nieto del Rio; China: His Excellency Dr. P. C. Chang; Egypt: Mr. Osman Ebeid; France: Professor René Cassin; India: Mrs. Hansa Mehta; Iran: His Excellency Dr. Ghassame Ghani; Lebanon: His Excellency Dr. Charles Malik; Philippines: His Excellency Brigadier-General Carlos P. Romulo; Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Mr. Valentin F. Tepliakov; United Kingdom: The Honourable Charles Dukes; United States of America: The Honourable Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt; Uruguay: Dr. José A. Mora; Yugoslavia: Mr. V. Ribnikar.

2. Mr. Fernand Dehousse of Belgium and Dr. Ricardo J. Alfaro of Panama were unable to attend, but were represented by Mr. Roland Lebeau and Dr. German Gil Guardia, respectively. The member from the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Mr. G. L. Stadnik, was not present because of illness. The member from the Philippines was forced to leave early and was represented by Colonel Amado N. Bautista.

3. The specialized agencies were represented at the Commission by the following: International Labour Organization: Mr. E. Hutchison; [2] United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization: Mr. Archibald MacLeish, Mr. Valère Darchambeau, and Mr. G. L. Carnes.

4. Consultants in attendance were: American Federation of Labor: Mr. L. Teper; NS: Miss Toni Sender; International Cooperative Alliance: Mr. W. Campbell; World Federation of Trade Unions: Miss Lena Spiegel.

5. Professor John P. Humphrey was Secretary of the Commission.

6. The Commission elected the following members as its officers: Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt (United States of America), Chairman; Dr. P. C. Chang (China), Vice-Chairman; Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon), Rapporteur.

7. The Commission adopted, after amendment, the Provisional Rules of Procedure (document E/CN.4/W.7) as its Provisional Rules of Procedure.

8. The Commission authorized the Rapporteur to present this report to the Economic and Social Council.

9. The Commission voted that its second session convene in Geneva on 21 July 1947.

Chapter II

International Bill of Human Rights

10. The Commission decided:

- (a) That the Chairman, together with the Vice-Chairman and the Rapporteur, undertake, with the assistance of the Secretariat, the task of formulating a preliminary draft international bill of human rights, in accordance with the instructions and decisions of the Commission at its first session, to be submitted to the Commission at its second session for thorough examination.

- (b) That the Chairman, in the course of this work, might enlist the co-operation of, and should receive, orally or in writing, any observations and suggestions from any member of the Commission.

[3]

- (c) That the Chairman might consult experts chosen with the consent of their Governments, Members of the United Nations.
- (d) That the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur, in drawing up the preliminary draft of the international bill of human rights, might consult any person or document deemed by them of relevance to their work.
- (e) That, while recognizing that the Commission was not at present in a position to formulate precisely its views concerning the means of ensuring the observance of the rights to be included in the international bill of human rights, the drafting group be invited to explore this field and to study the Australian Proposal (E/CN.4/15) and any other documents which had been or might be submitted to it, so that the Commission at its second session might be able to work out proposals on this subject in fulfilment of the duties assigned to it by the Council (Journal of the Economic and Social Council, No. 29).<sup>1</sup>

11. As a guide to the drafting group in its work, the members of the Commission stated their views concerning items they considered should be included in the international bill of human rights. The expression of these views is embodied in the verbatim and summary records of the meetings of the Commission, which are available for use by the drafting group.

12. Concerning the form of the international bill of human rights, the consensus of the Commission was that it should be submitted to the Commission by the drafting group as a draft resolution for presentation to and approval by the General Assembly.

13. The Commission instructed the drafting group to report on its progress to the members of the Commission monthly, beginning 1 April, and to mail the final preliminary draft of the bill to the members of the Commission by 25 June 1947.

[The remainder of the report concerns the sub-commissions and communications concerning human rights.]

[1] See Official Records of the Economic and Social Council, First Year, Second Session, Annex 14, pages 400–402.

E/CN.6/SR.12

18 February 1947

Summary Record of the Twelfth Meeting [of the Commission
on the Status of Women]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Tuesday,
18 February 1947 at 11:00 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Begtrup (Denmark); Vice-Chairman: Mrs. Street (Australia); Rapporteur: Mrs. Uralova (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic). Members: Mrs. New (China); Mrs. De Echeverria (Costa Rica); Mrs. Lefauchaux (France); Miss Basterrechea (Guatemala); Mrs. Hamid Ali (India); Mrs. Castillo Ledon (Mexico); Mrs. Cosma (Syria); Mrs. Popova (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Miss Sutherland (United Kingdom); Miss Kenyon (United States of America); Mrs. Urdaneta (Venezuela). Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mrs. Rowe (ILO); Miss Maass (UNESCO). Consultant of Non-Governmental Organization: Miss Spiegel (WFTU). Secretariat: Mr. Humphrey; Mr. Lawson; Miss Bowerman (Secretary of the Commission).

...

[7]

...

Consideration of Item 11 of the Agenda (Co-ordination with other Commissions)

THE CHAIRMAN read paragraphs 5, 6 and 7, pages 2 and 3 of the document entitled "Co-ordination with other Commissions" (document E/CN.6/7), which suggested various means of informal co-ordination with other Commissions.

She thought that the Commission should decide on what points it had common interest with other Commissions, and she suggested a discussion of the co-ordination of work with the Human Rights Commission.

MRS. LEFAUCHEUX (France) said that a resolution, which would be distributed soon, dealt with the question of protection of minorities and the struggle against discrimination, both of which concerned the Human Rights Commission.

MRS. STREET (Australia) spoke of the particular interest of women in an International Bill of Rights, and proposed that the following communication should be sent to the Human Rights Commission:

"The Commission on the Status of Women notes that the Commission on Human Rights has appointed a Sub-Committee to draft an International Bill of Rights and requests (a) that the Commission on the Status of Women be represented on this Sub-Committee, and (b) that the draft of the International Bill of Rights be submitted for consideration to the Commission on the Status of Women."

MRS. NEW (China) said that she had prepared a paper containing the same idea.

MR. HUMPHREY (Secretariat) explained that the Commission on Human Rights had asked its Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur to prepare a preliminary draft of an International Bill of Rights which could be used as a basis for discussion at its next session. He thought it might be more appropriate for the Commission on the Status of Women to ask that a representative be [8] allowed to participate in the meetings of the Human Rights Commission when the draft was under discussion.

Mr. Humphrey also pointed out the problem of timing, for if the Commission on Human Rights did not meet until after the next session of the present Commission, there might not be time for the Commission on the Status of Women to consider the International Bill of Rights before it was sent to the Economic and Social Council.

In reply to a question by the CHAIRMAN, he stated that he did not know whether it would be possible for the Commission on the Status of Women to get a copy of the preliminary draft before it was submitted to the Commission on Human Rights.

MRS. POPOVA (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) proposed that the Commission on the Status of Women should appoint a committee composed of the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur to prepare a draft of points which the Commission wished the International Bill of Rights to contain.

MR. HUMPHREY (Secretariat) thought that the Commission might make recommendations to the Commission on Human Rights on questions involving the status of women.

MISS SUTHERLAND (United Kingdom) felt that the Commission had no right to ask to be represented on a small committee appointed by another Commission. She could not agree either that the Commission should appoint a committee to draw up a special draft of women's rights, for there was no reason to think that the Commission on Human Rights would fail to realize that women's rights were a part of human rights.

She agreed with Mr. Humphrey's suggestion that the Commission should ask to send a representative to the Human Rights Commission to participate in the discussion on the International Bill of Rights.

MISS KENYON (United States of America) supported the member from the United Kingdom, and thought that the Chairman should represent the Commission at the meetings of the Human Rights Commission.

[9]

In view of the explanations given by Mr. Humphrey, MRS. STREET (Australia) made the following proposal:

“The Commission on the Status of Women requests the Economic and Social Council to arrange that the Commission be represented by its officers at the meetings of the Human Rights Commission when the draft of the International Bill of Rights is considered.”

MISS SUTHERLAND (United Kingdom) and MISS KENYON (United States of America) thought that the Commission should not ask to be represented by more than one member.

THE CHAIRMAN, MRS. STREET (Australia), and MRS. POPOVA (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) thought that the responsibility was too great for one person, for there would be need for consultation on the important questions that would arise.

MRS. LEFAUCHEUX (France) made a general suggestion about co-operation with other Commissions. After the Commission had decided with which other Commissions it had common interests, the work of co-ordination should be divided up, and each member of the Commission on the Status of Women should be assigned the task of keeping in touch with the work of a particular Commission.

MRS. NEW (China) said that while the Commission should in no way interfere with the work of the drafting group of the Commission on Human Rights, it should be represented during that group’s discussions. She believed that one member would be sufficient for such representation, and suggested that that Member should be the Chairman.

MISS KENYON (United States of America) supported the Member from China.

MRS. POPOVA (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) maintained her original proposal that the Commission should be represented by the Chairman, the Vice-Chairman, and the Rapporteur.

THE CHAIRMAN moved that the Commission should request the drafting group of the Commission on Human Rights to circulate the draft of the International Bill of Rights among the Members of the present Commission at the same time as it was made available to the Members of the Commission on Human Rights.

[10]

Decision: The United Kingdom amendment, to the effect that the Commission should be represented by a single Member, was defeated by 10 to 4.

The Australian resolution, requesting the Economic and Social Council to arrange that the Commission should be represented by its officers at the Commission of Human Rights when the draft International Bill of Rights was being considered, was adopted by 9 to 0 (5 abstentions).

The Danish proposal with respect to the circulation of the draft International Bill of Rights among the Members of the Commission was adopted by 13 votes to 0.

...

E/281<sup>108</sup>

25 February 1947

Report of the Commission on the Status of Women to the Economic and Social Council

...

[10]

Chapter IX

Co-ordination with Other Commissions

32. Commission on Human Rights – The Commission decided:

- (a) to request the Economic and Social Council to arrange that the Commission on the Status of Women be represented by its officers (the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur) at the session of the Commission on Human Rights when the draft of the International Bill of Human Rights is being considered.
- (b) to request that the Drafting Group of the Commission on Human Rights be requested to circulate copies of the preliminary draft of the International Bill of Human Rights to Members of the Commission on the Status of Women at the same time as it is made available to the members of the Commission on Human Rights.

...

E/C.2/28<sup>109</sup>

28 February 1947

Original Text: French

Letter dated 26 February 1947 from Mr. Louis Saillant, Secretary-General of the World Federation of Trade Unions, to the Secretary-General of the United Nations

By letter dated 14 January 1947, the World Federation of Trade Unions requested you to place on the agenda of the Economic and Social Council:

<sup>108</sup> Document E/281/Rev.1 does not contain any relevant additions or changes.

<sup>109</sup> The text of this document is taken from Official Records of the Economic and Social Council, Second Year, Fourth Session, 28 February–29 March 1947, Annex 31, pp. 333–337.

1. Guarantees for the exercise and development of trade union rights;
2. Equality of social rights for immigrant workers.

[334]

I have the honour to send you herewith officially the text (in French and English) of the draft resolution on the guarantees for the exercise and developments of trade union rights, which the World Federation of Trade Unions wishes to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its session which is to open on 28 February 1947.

As regards the other question mentioned in our letter of 14 January 1947, the World Federation of Trade Unions is not requesting that it should be submitted and studied during the session starting on 28 February 1947, but that this question, that of the equality of social rights between immigrant and national employees with respect to the vested interests of the latter should simply be taken into consideration by yourself and the President of the Economic and Social Council and reserved for possible consideration by the Economic and Social Council at a session other than that which is to open at Lake Success on 28 February 1947.

I should be grateful, Sir, if you would bring this letter and the attached resolution to the knowledge of the President of the Economic and Social Council and to the representatives of the States members of the said Council.

Draft resolution on guarantees for the exercise and development of trade union rights submitted by the World Federation of Trade Unions
to the Economic and Social Council

1. Ever since the end of the Second World War, one notes that certain interventions tend, in various countries, to destroy the very foundations of trade union rights. The means employed to hinder the progress of the trade union movement are principally as follows: the large-scale dismissal of trade unionist workers, the arrest of active trade unionist and trade union leaders, the occupation of trade union premises, the revocation by the government of bodies democratically chosen by the trade unions, the nomination of trade union leaders by the government, the prohibition of all coloured or native workers against forming occupational organizations, the prohibition on occupational organizations against forming any federal occupational or inter-occupational organizations, whether locally, nationally or internationally, etc.

2. Such attacks on trade union rights can demonstrate the persistence in certain countries of nefarious ideologies which have placed the world in deadly peril. The respect for trade union rights as an element of peace and co-operation between the peoples should be assured on the international level.

3. Trade-Unionism when unhampered in its evolution tends to go further than the particular interests of its members and becomes, in an ever-increasing measure, the spokesman of the general interests. This aspect of the evolution is also clearly illustrated by the programmes of economic reorganization formulated in most countries by the workers' trade unions. Basing themselves on the generally accepted idea that the exercise of the right of ownership is a social function. Trade Unionism, representing the producers, insists on the necessity of bringing the community into still greater participation in the general direction of economic policy.

[335]

4. In the social domain, the role of the trade unions is still more important. They conclude collective agreements which can be extended to embrace all workers in a profession or in a nation, that is to say, even those who are not members of these organizations. In certain cases therefore, the trade unions are given the power to make regulations. In many countries also, they share in the control and direction of industrial undertakings and even in the activities of the State; in this way, they take part in the preparation of social legislation through their advisory councils, labour councils and economic councils, and share in the application of social legislation by administering social security institutions, by collaborating with inspecting bodies and also on conciliation and arbitration boards and on labour tribunals by supervising employment, apprenticeships, occupational training, and control of prices, etc.

5. Thus, in war, as in peace, the states call on the aid of trade union organizations in order to introduce a higher degree of justice into their social system. In this way alone can there be the guarantee of a peaceful evolution in conformity with the facts and with the democratic development. If, for example, it is rendered impossible for workers to make collective agreements, they have no other means of redressing the wrongs inflicted on them than by the collective stoppage of work and by agitation.

6. This evolution, which must be guaranteed and made general, is merely the expression of the democratic principle, according to which those concerned, namely the producers, should have a say in determining economic and social policy. The value of this principle has been increased by the fact that the war for the triumph of democracy and liberty has been brought to a successful issue with the active help of the working class and as a result of its sacrifices. Already the victory of the United Nations has inspired the development of trade unionism in all quarters in close relationship with social progress and the development of popular liberties.

7. Within the State, the role of modern trade unionism is of ever-increasing importance. This role, however, can be effective and can be of value for the community only on condition that the trade union movement preserve its independence, its autonomy and its spontaneous character. It is therefore over the workers' movement by means such as: the nomination of administrative bodies and leaders by the public authorities, or the interference of the latter on any other score in the running of trade unions.

8. Furthermore, any attempt to hinder the federation of trade union organizations on the occupational and inter-occupational level, locally, nationally and internationally, constitutes a very serious infringement of trade union liberty. In fact, the idea of organization is at the very basis of trade union movement which, by its very nature, tends to integrate into ever-widening entities. Trade union practice in every country is decisive in this direction and any effort to the contrary could only tend to restore a corporate system condemned by experience.

[336]

Moreover, the evolution of trade unionism extends beyond national frontiers and is manifested with equal intensity on the international level.

9. Even at the end of the First World War, the Peace Conference insisted on the necessity of organizing the working class. Through its representatives, the working class took part in a series of conferences and in a number of international organizations and in this way the international personality of the workers organizations became an indisputable reality.

10. Attention should be drawn to the work undertaken by the WFTU after the Second World War, in order to assist trade union organization in liberated or defeated countries, an action which constitutes one of the most important factors in the spread of democracy in the political, social and economic domain, and of which the beneficial effect has been recognized by all the governments concerned.

11. After the Second World War, the evolution which we have demonstrated both on the national and international level, became more pronounced. Already relations of confidence have been established between the Economic and Social Council and the World Federation of Trade Unions.

12. Besides, according to Article 1, paragraph 3 of its Charter, the United Nations propose as one of their aims, the realization of international co-operation "in solving international problems of an economic, social, intellectual or humanitarian nature, by developing and encouraging respect by the rights of man and the fundamental liberties for all without distinction of race, sex, language or religion". The same idea is to be found in Articles 55(c) and 62 of the Charter. The attainment of this objective, presupposes the general expansion and consolidation of trade unionism on the national and international level.

13. Effective co-operation in economic and social matters is only feasible with the help of the masses of the peoples, who must be assured of an ever-increasing standard of comfort, and whose most responsible elements are organized within trade unions.

The recognition of trade union rights and the unrestricted and uncontested use of those rights should allow the full development of the trade union activities. These activities may lead the trade union organizations in each country to co-operation in establishing and implementing social legislation. The outcome of this progressive social legislation, setting out the constructive possibilities of trade unionism, can be a new right enabling the trade unions to determine the economic and social policies in each country.

14. Unorganized, spontaneous anarchic movements can be a danger to the internal peace of every country. If effective international co-operation is to be established, there must be pacification and consolidation of the democratic regime within each state.

15. Effective respect for trade union rights, apart from guarantees proper to every country, demands a safeguard of an international character whenever the use of these rights results in developments which might affect the international life. From national and international practice there can be established, for trade union rights, a real common international law, for which, respect in all states, should be assured by the Economic and Social Council.

On the basis of preceding considerations, the WFTU submits to the Economic and Social Council, the following resolutions:

- I. Trade Union rights are recognized as an inviolable prerogative enjoyed by salaried workers for the protection of their professional and social interests.
- II. Trade union organizations should be able to administer their own affairs, to deliberate and freely decide on all questions falling within their competence, in conformity with the law and with their constitution, without interference in their duties from governmental or administrative bodies.
- III. There should be no obstacle to the federation of trade union organizations on the occupational or inter-occupational level, whether locally, regionally or internationally.
- IV. All legislation which places restrictions on the above-mentioned principles is contrary to the economic and social collaboration laid down by the Charter of the United Nations.
- V. The Economic and Social Council decides to set up a Committee for Trade Union Rights which will safeguard, in a permanent fashion, respect for trade union rights. On every occasion on which the afore-mentioned principles are violated, the Committee will make the necessary enquiries and will submit recommendations to the Economic and Social Council as to the measures to be adopted.

E/C.2/32
13 March 1947

Letter dated 12 March 1947 sent by the American Federation of Labor to the Secretary-General of the United Nations

Mr. Trygve Lie, Secretary-General
United Nations
Lake Success, New York

Attached please find a memorandum prepared by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor. We would appreciate it if you would submit the latter to the Economic and Social Council.

(Signed) Matthew Woll
David Dubinsky
Consultant
Toni Sender
Assistant Consultant

Memorandum

1. On 28 February 1947, a document E/C.2/28 was circulated to the members of the Economic and Social Council on behalf of the World Federation of Trade Unions. This document contains a draft of the proposed resolution regarding the guarantees for the exercise and development of trade unions' rights.

2. In the document E/CT.2/2 circulated to members of the Council as of 20 August 1946, the American Federation of Labor, in its draft of a proposed "International Bill of Rights" covered, among other questions, the basic points raised by the World Federation of Trade Unions. Specifically, the American Federation of Labor draft urged the adoption of the following provisions as a part of the "International Bill of Rights":

...
<sup>110</sup>

3. Basically, the protection of rights of trade union members and of their organizations is encompassed by the above proposals of the American Federation of Labor. These proposals were referred to the Human Rights Commission of the Economic and Social Council, were considered by that Commission and were referred by it to the Drafting Committee empowered to draft an International Bill of Rights.

<sup>110</sup> See E/CT.2/2 for the text.

4. There is no doubt that numerous problems which affect workers generally, or labour and trade union organizations more specifically, are outside the framework of reference set forth for the Human Rights Commission. The United Nations, under the terms of its agreement with the International Labour Organization (document A/72), article 1<sup>1</sup>, recognized the latter organization as “a specialized agency responsible for taking such action as may be appropriate under its basic instrument for the accomplishment of the purpose set forth therein”. The terms of reference of the International Labour Organization are indicated in its constitution, article 10 and articles 19, 20, 21, 35. (Constitution and Rules, Montreal, 1946.)

...

5. It is therefore quite proper for the Economic and Social Council to request the International Labour Organization to make a survey of labour conditions in the various countries, Members of the United Nations, in order to secure information on the treatment received by the individual workers in the exercise of their rights to form, join, or belong to trade union organizations without interference or coercion by the governmental authorities; on the extent, if any, of government domination or interference with the trade union organizations; and regarding any coercive acts directed against individual works in so far as their relations to their trade union organizations are concerned. On the basis of such inquiries, the International Labour Organization should be requested to undertake the necessary steps for the elimination of such practices, which deny basic individual rights to workers or collective rights to their organizations.

...

6. The American Federation of Labor after examining in detail the proposals submitted to the Economic and Social Council by the World Federation of Trade Unions, suggests that these proposals be amended to read as follows:

Draft Resolution

- I. The Economic and Social Council recommends, in accordance with the agreement between the United Nations and the International Labour Organization, that the International Labour Organization take into early consideration the problem of trade union rights with reference to questions as follows:
  - A. To what extent have workers the right to form, join or belong to labour or trade union organizations of their own choice without interference or coercion by the government?
  - B. To what extent are trade unions free to operate in accordance with the decisions of their own members, whether on a local, regional or national basis, without interference by governmental authorities?
  - C. To what extent are workers free to select, elect or appoint officers of their own trade unions?
  - D. To what extent are unions free to raise their own funds and dispose of them by decisions of their own memberships or in accordance therewith, under their own rules and regulations, without governmental interference?

- E. To what extent are workers or their organizations free to communicate with other workers or organizations, either within the confines of the same country or outside the country?
- F. To what extent are local, regional or national trade union members free to join international organizations, without fear and free from governmental interference?
- G. To what extent are labour or trade union organizations free to deal with the employers of workers they represent and conclude collective agreements and participate in their formulation?
- H. To what extent is the right of workers and of their organizations to resort to strikes recognized and protected?
- I. To what extent are workers and their trade unions free to resort to voluntary arbitration, free from government domination and interference, in order to settle their differences with their employers?
- J. To what extent have workers and their organizations the right to press for governmental action for the purpose of securing legislative or administrative action on their behalf?
- K. To what extent are workers free to move from one part of the country to another, within the confines of the national borders, and to what extent are they free to migrate outside the national boundaries?
- L. To what extent are workers free to accept employment, to stay on the job or to abandon it, in accordance with their own decision, without governmental coercion or interference?
- M. To what extent, if any, does forced or slave labour exist and how are individuals of whatever nationality, race, sex, language or religion, protected against compulsory, or forced, labour?
- N. To what extent are working conditions and workers' welfare protected by legislative standards and what is the nature and character of such protection?

<sup>[1]</sup> For the text of the draft agreement, see Official Records of the Economic and Social Council, First Year First Session, pages 365 to 373. This agreement was approved without change by resolution 50(I) of the General Assembly.

E/439

14 March 1947<sup>111</sup>

Summary Record of the Sixty-Eighth Meeting
[of the Economic and Social Council]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Friday,
 14 March 1947 at 11:00 a.m.

Present. President: Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar (India). Mr. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic); Mr. Smith (Canada); Mr. Santa Cruz (Chile); Dr. Chang (China); Dr. Belt (Cuba); Mr. Papenek (Czechoslovakia); Mr. Mendes-France (France); Mrs. Mehta

<sup>111</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 22 May 1947.

(India); Mr. Malik (Lebanon); Mr. van Roijan (Netherlands); Mr. Nash (New Zealand); Mr. Colbjørnsen (Norway); Mr. Arca Parro (Peru); Mr. Yazici (Turkey); Mr. Morozov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Mayhew (United Kingdom); Mr. Stinebower (United States of America); Mr. Zuloaga (Venezuela). Secretariat: Mr. Humphrey; Mr. Hogan; Mr. Yates.

Report of the Human Rights Commission

MR. VAN ROIJEN<sup>112</sup> (Netherlands) said that his Government whole-heartedly supported the decisions of the Commission establishing Sub-Commissions: one on Freedom of Information and of the Press, and on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. He warned that even with the best intentions there was little chance of achieving full freedom of information in countries where newsprint was scarce.

MRS. MEHTA (India) declared that the International Bill of Rights, [2] on which the Human Rights Commission began preliminary work, should be binding on all Members of the United Nations. The problem, in her opinion, resolved itself into two parts: supervision of the observance of rights, and enforcement, if the rights were not observed. She stated further that machinery to ensure that the rights were observed would have to be considered.

MR. MENDÈS-FRANCE<sup>113</sup> (France), after recalling his country's traditional advocacy of human rights, said he would submit certain proposals to the drafting group, headed by Mrs. Roosevelt, to which the Commission had entrusted the task of formulating a preliminary draft International Bill of Rights. He added that his Government intended to submit to the International Conference on Freedom of Information a programme calling for the study of measures to ensure freedom of information and of the Press throughout the world, and of measures to prevent abuses of these freedoms, and of the material means required to make achievement of these aims possible. It would also suggest an international statute for journalists and an international Press organization, whose duty it would be to ensure that the principles accepted were respected. Mr. Mendès-France marked his delegation's complete approval with no reservation whatever of the creation of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.<sup>1</sup>

MR. MOROZOV<sup>114</sup> (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) said that his delegation did not agree with the Commission's recommendations on the constitution of the two Sub-Commissions, on the drafting group for the International Bill of Human Rights, and of the treatment of communications received concerning human rights; nor did it agree with the decision of the Commission giving the work of drafting the Bill of Rights to a small group of experts. He said he believed that two Sub-Commissions should consist not of private experts but of representatives of Governments; that this was the principle followed in selecting members of the Council and other United Nations agencies. The drafting group for the Bill of Rights, he said, had been set up before any decisions were taken on the actual rights. This made the group's [3] responsibilities much wider than had originally been intended; the group was also too small and did not include any representatives of European countries. He suggested that the group should be chosen in accordance with geographic principles, and enlarged from three to five members.

<sup>112</sup> J.H. van Roijen (1905–1991) served as Minister of State and Minister of Foreign Affairs for the Netherlands from 1945–1946. Mr. van Roijen represented the Netherlands as a member of the Economic and Social Council during its fourth session and was a delegate during the first special session of the General Assembly in 1947.

<sup>113</sup> Pierre Mendès-France (1907–1982) was a French politician who served as Prime Minister in 1954 and 1955.

<sup>114</sup> Platon D. Morozov (1907–1985) was a Russian international lawyer who was part of the Soviet prosecution team at the International Military Tribunal for the Far East. He sat as judge of the International Court of Justice from 1970 to 1985.

On the handling of communications received by the Commission on Human Rights, Mr. Morozov asserted that the Commission's decisions given in paragraphs 21 and 23 of the report conflicted with the Charter (Articles 64 and 71) and the powers of the Council, and required amendment. He also thought that paragraphs 21 and 23 were in contradiction with paragraph 22 of the report, with which he agreed.

MR. YAZICI (Turkey) expressed full agreement with all recommendations of the Human Rights Commission Report, and stated that a Human Rights group has been established in Turkey.

MR. ARCA PARRÓ (Peru) emphasized that in his opinion the drafting of an international bill of human rights should take place simultaneously with a creation of machinery to enforce such rights. He pointed to the fact that most national constitutions contained provisions for the rights of the individual, and while recommending to the Commission to study and take notice of all existing national legislation in this respect, he stressed that the final declaration of international human rights should go beyond a mere compilation of already recognized rights.

Mr. Arca Parró further endorsed the principle that the group charged with the drafting of the International Bill should be composed of representatives of Governments. Only thus, he said, could fair geographic distribution of membership be ensured. Finally, he warned that freedom of the Press should not be interpreted as a right for those having the material means of distributing information to publish only such items as suited their own interests.

[4]

MR. MAYHEW<sup>115</sup> (United Kingdom) welcomed the progress made so far by the Human Rights Commission, but said he thought the Commission would hardly be able to prepare the International Bill during its next session. It would be better, he said, if the Commission, instead, took more time to study it and presented the

<sup>115</sup> Christopher Paget Mayhew (1915–1995) was Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in 1946.

International Bill to the General Assembly in 1948, and methods of implementing the bill could be discussed later.

Mr. Mayhew also said that the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities could only function effectively after the International Bill of Human Rights had been agreed. On the other hand, he regarded it as essential that the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press should get to work immediately, because it was formulating one of the basic human freedoms.

The meeting rose at 1:15 p.m.

E/422

14 March 1947<sup>116</sup>

Summary Record of the Sixty-Ninth Meeting
[of the Economic and Social Council]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Friday,
14 March 1947 at 2:45 p.m.

Present: President: Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar (India). Mr. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic); Mr. Davidson (Canada); Mr. Santa Cruz (Chile); Dr. Chang (China); Mr. Osuna (Cuba); Mr. Papenek (Czechoslovakia); Mr. Boris (France); Mr. Kirpalani (India); Mr. Malik (Lebanon); Mr. van Kleffens (Netherlands); Mr. Nash (New Zealand); Mr. Colbjørnsen (Norway); Mr. Arca Parro (Peru); Mr. Yazici (Turkey); Mr. Morozov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Mayhew (United Kingdom); Mr. Stinebower (United States of America); Mr. Stolk (Venezuela). Representatives of Specialized Agencies: Mr. J. Thomas (UNESCO). Secretariat: Mr. Yates.

Continuation of the Discussion of the Report of the Human Rights Commission (Documents E/259, E/259/Add.1)

MR. THOMAS (UNESCO) wished to raise two questions concerning the report of the Commission on Human Rights. It has been stated during the discussion that the elaboration of an international bill of human rights would necessitate a great amount of work as well as consultation with many important specialists and a vast documentation. The report of the [2] Commission had mentioned the appointment of a drafting group which would work in consultation with experts. However, it was to be regretted that no mention had been made of collaboration with the specialized agencies. Some of the suggestions which UNESCO might make on the subject, particularly in view of that agency's character, would be very helpful for the elaboration of an international bill of human rights.

<sup>116</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 17 March 1947.

The contribution of UNESCO might be most useful in the field of the preliminary collection of documents and collation of various points of view.

The second point in which UNESCO was particularly interested was the projected conference on freedom of information and of the Press. The Convention bringing UNESCO into relationship with the United Nations stipulated that one of UNESCO's primary tasks was to ensure freedom of information and of the Press by various media such as books, newspapers, radio and the cinema.

The UNESCO Conference in Paris had recommended to its secretariat to get in touch with the United Nations and in particular with the Economic and Social Council, with a view to extending all possible co-operation for the projected conference on freedom of information and of the Press. UNESCO had indeed hoped to play a more active part in convening that conference than seemed to have been assigned to it. There were certain practical aspects of freedom of information and of the Press on which UNESCO might give very useful assistance.

MR. STOLK<sup>117</sup> (Venezuela) stated that the need for formulating an international declaration of the rights of man and finding a procedure which would guarantee their effective enjoyment was a problem which had been of special interest to the American Republics. Consequently they had resolved, at the International Conference at Chapultepec, to entrust the formulation of a draft declaration of the international rights and duties of man to the Inter-American Juridical Committee. The draft prepared by that body had been submitted to the various Governments, whose observations would in turn serve the Committee as a basis for a text to be submitted [3] to the Conference of Inter-American Jurisconsults. That Conference would make the final decision on the terms of the declaration with the object of submitting it for adoption as a convention by all the States of the continent. The advantages of a declaration of that type which would define the individual rights and guarantees that would be acceptable to all the States were indisputable. In presenting its observations on the draft of the Inter-American Juridical Committee, the Venezuelan Government wished to stress the importance of agreeing on a definitive text which could be presented as the Inter-American contribution to the joint study now undertaken by the United Nations.

The Venezuelan delegation wished to refer to a suggestion it had previously made and to request that the Council should broaden the basis of the work of the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission had decided to set up a drafting group to formulate a preliminary draft declaration; the group would be authorized to consult any person or document that it thought necessary. However, in clause (b) of section 10 of chapter II of the report, that consultation was limited to observations and suggestions from members of the Commission alone. That rule did not seem adequate since it would exclude the co-operation of Members of the United Nations which were not represented on the Commission. It would also forego the help of those institutions which were concerned with the type of study under consideration. To obviate the difficulty it would be sufficient to modify the end of the paragraph to read: "any member of the Commission or of the United Nations". Likewise the draft prepared by the drafting group should be submitted not only to the members of the Commission but to all the Members of the United Nations to enable them to present their observations.

<sup>117</sup> Carlos Eduardo Stolk (born 1912) represented Venezuela on the Inter-American Juridical Committee in 1942, the General Assembly in 1946 and the Economic and Social Council in 1947.

In conclusion, Mr. Stolk urged that the Council should suggest to the Commission the desirability of preparing the declaration at an early date to enable the Council to discuss it and submit it for the consideration of the General Assembly at its next ordinary session.

[4]

MR. MALIK (Lebanon),<sup>118</sup> speaking as Rapporteur of the Commission, pointed out that the report was exceedingly concise and presented only the positive decisions of the Commission. For a full presentation of what had taken place during the Commission's discussions, reference should be made to the summary and verbatim records.

The phrase "drafting group" was rather unfortunate. It had only been used because no equivalent could be found for the French word bureau. The Commission had merely asked its officers to prepare, in collaboration with the Secretariat, a preliminary draft bill of human rights taking into account all suggestions that had been made during the discussion as well as in the many papers and documents that had been submitted to the Commission. Consequently, the entire Commission should be considered a drafting committee, which would eventually submit the draft to the Council.

In view of the Commission's terms of reference, which stated that the Commission was itself responsible for drawing up the bill of human rights, the Venezuelan amendment would not seem appropriate. However, no Member of the United Nations, specialized agency or private organization was prevented from submitting suggestions, which would all be carefully examined. In fact, two specialized agencies, ILO and UNESCO, as well as three non-governmental organizations, the American Federation of Labor, the International Chamber of Commerce and the World Federation of Trade Unions had made notable contributions to the work of the Commission.

<sup>118</sup> The verbatim transcript of Mr. Malik's remarks is published as Chapter 5 of Habib C. Malik, ed., The Challenge of Human Rights, Charles Malik and the Universal Declaration, Oxford: Centre for Lebanese Studies, 2000, pp. 53–60.

Speaking as the representative of Lebanon, Mr. Malik pointed out that in the opinion of his delegation, chapter V, embodying the measures which ought to be taken in dealing with communications concerning human rights, represented a minimum programme. By receiving those communications the Commission would not be establishing relations not authorized by the Charter with any people or organization. The Lebanese delegation could not agree with the opinion of the representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics that chapter V constituted a contradiction to the United Nations Charter.

The Lebanese delegation could not agree with the representative of the [5] United Kingdom that the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities was less important than the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press.

It was also urgent that the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press should be established at the earliest possible date. Fear and suspicion due to lack of information were basic evils, and the promotion of freedom of information would cut their very roots.

Regarding the composition of the two Sub-Commissions, the Lebanese Government maintained that they should be established on the basis of personal capacity and not of governmental representation. The Commission should itself maintain the initiative in the choice of personnel of the two Sub-Commissions.

The Bill of Human Rights would be the United Nations' answer to the question: "What is man?" and would give meaning to the phrase "dignity and worth of the human person", which was to be found in the Preamble of the Charter. The elaboration of the bill of rights was fraught with three grave dangers. The first was that of legalism or getting lost in legalistic distinctions and niceties. The second danger was that of instrumentalism, namely allowing the instrumental things of life to obscure the essence of man.

The last and most important danger was that of totalitarianism. It was not to be feared that the rights of the State would not be properly represented. But the danger existed that the individual human person might be forgotten. Unless the Bill of Rights embodied man as he really was, the declaration would merely express the dominant forces of the age, which did not respect man sufficiently.

MR. SANTA CRUZ<sup>119</sup> (Chile) stated that in the opinion of his Government the State should intervene in guiding the internal economy of a country, supplying what private initiative was not able to give and ensuring that production and distribution of goods was adjusted to the general welfare of the population. That criterion was regarded by some as a limitation of freedom and democracy, but it was merely a way of transforming [6] the political democracy of the nineteenth century into an economic democracy.

<sup>119</sup> Hernán Santa Cruz (1906–1999) was a Chilean military judge and academic who published on economic and social problems.

Though the Chilean Government favoured that point of view in social and economic matters, it maintained that political freedom, the safeguarding of the fundamental rights of the individual and respect for the dignity of man, were an obligation of the State and of society.

Chile was ready to co-operate wholeheartedly with the United Nations in furthering respect for the rights of man and his fundamental liberties irrespective of race, sex, language or religion. Consequently, the Chilean delegation approved the report of the Commission and hoped that its sub-commissions would be composed of persons whose qualifications would constitute a guarantee of the fulfilment of their tasks.

The Chilean delegation also wished to see incorporated in the bill the new legal concepts with regard to human rights, for instance, the principle enunciated at the Inter-American Conference on Social Security held in Santiago, Chile, in 1942, according to which freedom and dignity were essential and inalienable attributes of man and of the human person.

MR. STINEBOWER<sup>120</sup> (United States of America) declared his readiness to accept the report in its present form. The bill of rights should be as bold and as broad as possible and, in addition to the traditional categories of rights, it should embrace social rights such as those of employment, social security and equal opportunity as well as minimum standards of economic, cultural and social wellbeing.

The United States laid great stress on freedom of information, and he welcomed the Human Rights Commission's proposal to establish a Sub-Commission on freedom of information, which would be a practical way of implementing the General Assembly resolution of 14 December 1946 for a Freedom of Information Conference. The Assembly had defined freedom of information as a fundamental human right and as the touchstone of all the freedoms to which the United Nations was consecrated. He was prepared to submit a list of nominations for this sub-commission as soon as nominations were requested. [7] The first item on the sub-commission's agenda should be the drafting of a provisional agenda for the Conference on Freedom of Information.

<sup>120</sup> Leroy D. Stinebower (1904–1976) became Deputy Director of Office of International Trade Policy in 1945.

MR. PAPANĚK<sup>121</sup> (Czechoslovakia) said that his delegation would state its views when the substance of the problems had been defined; at present the report was concerned only with procedural and preparatory work.

The trend of discussions and opinions during the Commission's deliberations should be reflected in the report, as that would offer an extremely useful summary of the Commission's activity.

He supported the United Kingdom representative's suggested method of executing the programme in the report.

Members of the sub-commissions should represent their various Governments. In any case the necessary experts would be recruited from all countries and there was therefore no reason for avoiding the straightforward decision to declare them representatives of their countries.

When speaking of the freedom of the Press members should bear in mind the very weighty responsibilities and duties of the Press. Freedom without obligation might lead to action opposed to the aims of the Charter. The free Press should refrain from sensationalism.

With regard to chapter V of the report, it would be impractical to permit a flood of communications on suggested human rights from irresponsible people or organizations [sic] should be method of filtering communications should be evolved so that relations might be maintained only with knowledgeable and responsible individuals.

He agreed with the representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics that the Committee of three should be increased or that the Commission itself should undertake to draft the bill. He supported the representatives of France and of the United States in stressing the social aspect of human rights.

MR. CHANG (China) hoped that after the myopia of the last hundred and fifty years, nations were at last on the threshold of a new humanistic period. [8] The bill envisaged should be based on the aspiration for a new humanism.

The fact that rights of men were included in thirty-five or forty of the world's constitutions indicated that a large measure of agreement was possible in spite of differences of philosophy or ideology.

In Article 18 of the Constitution promulgated in December 1946 by the Constituent Assembly in China a new right was included – the right to take public examination for holding public offices – of which little notice had been taken in the world as a whole. The institution of public civil service examinations and that of representative government had contributed greatly to the promotion of true freedom and equality and formed the basis of social democracy. He hoped that some notice would be taken of the former institution in the Bill of Rights.

<sup>121</sup> Jan Papanek (1896–1991) was secretary of the Czechoslovakian Legation in Washington from 1927–1932. He served as Vice President of the Economic and Social Council in 1947. As Permanent Representative of Czechoslovakia in 1948, he condemned the pro-Soviet coup in the United Nations General Assembly and was relieved of his functions by the new government. For the next forty years, he headed the American Fund for Czechoslovak Refugees.

MR. NASH<sup>122</sup> (New Zealand) felt that the right to live healthily for the maximum period of time with the availability of all essentials for cultural, spiritual and mental progress transcended all others. People could agree upon rights but could not confer them upon others. The inherent right of a people to govern itself could not be conferred by a Government, but the latter could help the people exercise its right when it could not do so by its own strength.

He stated his belief in collectivism. Individual rights could not be enjoyed unless the requisite materials and facilities were provided by collective organization and work.

He supported the proposal for a committee of three to draft the bill.

The public of the world desired the following rights: to have access to full and correct information, to exercise freely the various forms of religion, to enjoy material sustenance at the highest level attainable locally, to have basic education, to co-operate in the field of culture, to assemble in order to determine the best social action to be taken in a given situation, to have freedom of action provided the action was not demonstrably harmful to other human beings, to enjoy the maximum level of [9] health, and to develop one's personality so as to live in health and happiness as long as possible.

MR. VAN KLEFFENS<sup>123</sup> (Netherlands) pointed out that a pronouncement concerning the date of the Conference on Freedom of Information and of the Press would have to be made during the present session, because an Assembly resolution called for a conference in 1947. The Secretariat had stated in document E/333 that the conference could not be held in 1947, and the Council had therefore to request the General Assembly to reconsider the date. He supported the view that the conference should be held at Geneva or at Lake Success, and had withdrawn his recommendation that the meeting should be held in the Netherlands for reasons of economy and convenience to the Secretariat.

He suggested that it might be appropriate for the Sub-Committee to consider the possible participation in the Conference of countries which were not Members of the United Nations: Switzerland, for example, had a fine record with regard to freedom of information and the Press. A precedent already existed in the case of the World Health Conference in 1946 and of the proposed International Shipping Conference.

<sup>122</sup> Walter Nash (1882–1968) was Prime Minister of New Zealand from 1957 to 1960.

<sup>123</sup> Eelco van Kleffens (1894–1983) worked in the Secretariat of the League of Nations. In the early 1930s he was Secretary-General of the Hague Academy of International Law. He served as Dutch Minister of Foreign Affairs from 1939 to 1946. He was president of the United Nations General Assembly in 1954.

MR. MOROZOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) disagreed with the attitude of the United Kingdom representative concerning the plan of work. The latter had asserted that the organizational work of the Sub-Committee could await the drafting of the bill of rights and that it would be detrimental to the United Nations to expedite the drafting unduly. That would imply postponing the entire work of the Sub-Committee for a considerable period.

The USSR delegation had strongly recommended the creation of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at the second session of the Council and had stressed that the Sub-Commission should work diligently and urgently to eliminate discrimination with respect to race, sex and religion.

[10]

Mr. Malik had said that the task of the drafting group, namely to prepare a preliminary draft, did not offer any particular complexities; but paragraph 10(a) of chapter II of the Commission's report stated that the group had not only to collect all suggestions, but also was to elaborate the preliminary draft of international rights. If the group had to collate suggestions formulated by the fifty-five Members of the United Nations, the task could not be assigned to such a small body.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) replied that he agreed with Mr. Morozov that the Commission had assigned an exceedingly complex and responsible task to its officers. The Commission had decided to appoint that drafting group rather than to remain in session.

Paragraph 10(b) covered Mr. Morozov's objection to the unrepresentative nature of the drafting group. There was no attempt to limit the responsibility of the work to the three officers of the Commission. The drafting group was bound to consider any oral or written suggestion submitted by a member of the Commission.

MR. MAYHEW (United Kingdom) replied to Mr. Morozov that he shared the latter's high estimation of the importance of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and that what he had intended to propose was a practical point of procedure. He had said that the Sub-Commission could not work effectively until it was in possession of the provisions which would be given at the beginning of the bill of rights. Only when the rights themselves had been defined could the Sub-Commission propose appropriate measures to ensure non-discrimination.

THE PRESIDENT proposed that the report should be referred to the Committee of the Whole of the Council, where a vote would be taken.

There followed some discussion on the agenda and the programme of future work.

The meeting rose at 6:15 p.m.

E/353*18 March 1947

Observations submitted by the delegation of the United Kingdom on the report of the Commission on the Status of Women

...

[3]

...

8. As regards chapter XI, entitled “Urgent Problems”, the question of “equal rights impartially for all citizens” (paragraph 36) appears to be one for the Commission on Human Rights, which is already undertaking studies in this field in connection with the preparation of a draft Bill of Human Rights.

...

E/AC.7/8*20 March 1947

Summary Record of the Sixth Meeting [of the Committee on Social Affairs of the Economic and Social Council]

Held at Lake Success on 20 March 1947 at 3:30 p.m.

...

[3]

...

THE CHAIRMAN opened discussion on the General Assembly Resolution concerning draft Declaration on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms (document A/64/Add.1, page 68) and Report of the Commission on Human Rights.

MR. STOLZ (Czechoslovakia) proposed to amend paragraph 10(a), Chapter II of the Report of the Commission on Human Rights (document E/259, page 2), in order to enlarge the working group in charge of formulating a preliminary draft International Bill of Rights. Mr. Stolz suggested that Chile, France and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics be included.

MR. HAKIM (Lebanon) pointed out that the working group was to do only preparatory work; it had to be small in order to work effectively. Mr. Hakim opposed the Czechoslovak amendment.

MR. KAMINSKY (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic) supported the amendment.

MR. GUERIN (France) considered that all ideologies should be represented in the working group. He further proposed that Australia be added.

MR. STOLK (Venezuela) felt that the working group should receive [4] recommendations from all Member States, but that that it should not be enlarged.

MR. KOTSCHNIG (United States) pointed out that the working group constituted only a "convenience", that it was not a committee and consequently could not be enlarged.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) formally proposed that Australia be added.

MR. ENCINAS (Peru) seconded the proposal.

MR. HAKIM (Lebanon) pointed out that the creation of the working group was a decision of the Commission and not a recommendation to the Council. The Council should not interfere with that decision.

MR. STOLZ (Czechoslovakia) accepted the Chilean amendment to his motion.

(At this point MR. CHANG (China) took the place of Mr. Yang).

THE CHAIRMAN put to a vote the Czechoslovak amendment. The amendment was adopted by 10 votes for, 5 votes against and 2 abstentions.

MR. RIDDLE (Canada) moved that "prior to the meeting of the Drafting Committee the officers of the Commission on Human Rights, assisted by the Secretariat, prepare a draft International Bill of Human Rights and circulate such draft to the Members of the United Nations for their observations and comments."

MR. CHANG (China) asked Mr. Riddle to accept an amendment to his motion which would then read:

"That, prior to the meeting of the Drafting Committee, the Secretariat under the supervision of the officers of the Commission on Human Rights, prepare a draft International Bill of Human Rights and circulate such draft to the Members of the United Nations for their observations and comments."

MR. RIDDLE (Canada) accepted Mr. Chang's amendment.

MR. KAMINSKY (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic) stated that he wished to vote separately on the two paragraphs of the Canadian amendment.

MR. KOTSCHNIG (United States) moved the closure of the debate.

THE CHAIRMAN put to the vote the motion to close the debate. The motion was adopted. The Chairman put to the vote the first paragraph of the Canadian amendment. This was adopted. The second paragraph was put to the vote and adopted.

MR. BORISOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) thought that the Czechoslovak and Canadian amendments as adopted were contradictory. The Chairman gave his interpretation of the Canadian amendment, stating that if the Council decided to enlarge the working group the number of members of the Commission supervising the work of the Secretariat would become seven instead of three.

MR. RIDDLE (Canada) stated that the interpretation of the Chairman did not correspond with his intentions, and asked to change the word “officers” to the words “The Chairman, Vice-chairman and Rapporteur”, in order to clarify the matter.

THE COMMITTEE voted to adjourn to re-examine the motion at its next meeting.
The meeting adjourned at 6:15 p.m.

E/AC.7/13

21 March 1947

Summary Record of the Eighth Meeting [of the Committee on Social Affairs of the Economic and Social Council]

Held at Lake Success on 21 March 1947 at 3:00 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mr. Papanek (Czechoslovakia); Members: Mr. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Riddle (Canada); Mr. Fausto Soto (Chile); Mr. Yang (China); Mr. Pérez Cisneros (Cuba); Mr. Radimsky (Czechoslovakia); Mr. Royer (France); Mr. Mahalanobis (India); Mr. Hakim (Lebanon); Mr. van Heuven (Netherlands); Mr. Reid (New Zealand); Mr. Moe<sup>124</sup> (Norway); Mr. Arca Parró (Peru); Mr. Turhan (Turkey); Mr. Kabushko (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Phillips (United Kingdom); Mr. Kotschnig (Venezuela); Secretariat: Mr. Stanczyk, Mr. Ording, Mr. Hogan.

...

[6]

...

Report of the Commission on Human Rights (continued):
(Documents E/259, E/259/Add.1)

THE CHAIRMAN outlined the discussions on the subject of the drafting of the International Bill of Human Rights which had taken place at the sixth meeting of the Committee. He recalled that a proposal of the representative of Czechoslovakia had added four other members to the drafting group. The Committee had subsequently adopted a Canadian proposal which had changed the situation.

MR. ROYER (France) introduced a draft resolution which read as follows:

“The Economic and Social Council

“Takes note of the Report of the Commission on Human Rights, and “Recommends that the Commission Secretariat [6]

<sup>124</sup> Finn Moe (1902–1971) was Director of Norway broadcasting from 1940–1943 and served as a Press Consultant at Norway Ministry of Foreign Affairs in London from 1943 to 1945. He represented Norway on the Committee on Social Affairs of the Economic and Social Council and was a member of the Norwegian delegation to the General Assembly in London in 1946, as well as during the first special session of the General Assembly in 1947.

“(a) request all member countries to send in by 1 September 1947 their suggestions, proposals, and observations concerning the drafting of an international declaration of human rights;

“(b) classify the answers received and forward them in suitable form to the member countries and invite them to submit their observations before 15 October;

“(c) bring together the Chairman of the Commission, the Vice-Chairman, the Rapporteur and the representatives of Australia, Chile, France, United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, at the earliest possible date after 15 October, to draw up a preliminary draft international declaration on human rights in accordance with the instructions and decisions of the first session of the Human Rights Commission.

“Recommends to the Commission that it examine this preliminary draft and transmit a final draft to the Council, which will examine it during its first session after 1 January 1948.”

MR. RIDDLE (Canada) also introduced a resolution which was a revision of the Canadian proposal as adopted at the sixth meeting (document E/AC.7/8) and which read as follows:

“That the Secretariat, under the supervision of the Chairman, the Vice-Chairman and the Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, prepare a preliminary draft International Bill of Human Rights. That this preliminary draft be considered by the three officers of the Commission and the representatives of Australia, France, Chile and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. That the draft then be considered by the Commission on Human Rights at its next session and, that after that session it be circulated to Member States for observation and comment.”

MR. ROYER (France) stated his opinion that the bill of human rights should [8] originate from as many countries as possible and explained the procedure his resolution envisaged.

MR. MOE (Norway) said a weakness of the French proposal was that the Governments would have no draft to work on.

MR. KAMINSKY (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic) said the French proposal would revise the decision taken previously. If the drafting group was to be enlarged to eight members, he reserved the right to make another nomination.

MR. RADIMSKY (Czechoslovakia) explained that the discussion had been reopened for the reason that some representatives might have voted under a misunderstanding.

MR. FAUSTO SOTO (Chile) summarized the discussion which had taken place at the sixth meeting and the reason for revision of the Canadian proposal.

MR. RIDDLE (Canada) said that he did not consider that his proposal implied a reversal of the Czechoslovakian resolution, but was a method of ensuring that the drafting body should start where the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur left off. He would be happy to add the United Kingdom to his list.

MR. ARCA PARRÓ (Peru) who was Chairman of the sixth meeting of the Committee explained the procedure adopted at that meeting, and the sequence of events.

MR. KABUSHKO (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), who was supported by the representative from the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, pointed out that the Committee had adopted the Czechoslovakian proposal, and this decision could not be reversed. He did not think the new Canadian proposal should be considered.

MR. RIDDLE (Canada) said he was sorry some members had suggested he was trying to mislead the Committee. Such had not been his intention; his revision had attempted to clear up doubtful points.

[9]

THE CHAIRMAN ruled that the French draft be considered first.

MR. KAMINSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) said the Committee should first decide on the principle of whether the drafting group should be increased further.

MR. RIDDLE (Canada) complained that he was receiving sharp treatment. He had agreed, at the request of the Chair to clarify his proposal, and now it was set aside.

MR. MAHALANOBIS (India) said that the Committee should concentrate on paragraph (a) of the French resolution, which was the heart of the proposal.

MR. HAKIM (Lebanon) said the French proposal upset the programme of the Commission on Human Rights, and would be a vote of no confidence in the Commission.

MR. KOTSCHNIG (United States of America) thought the French proposal helpful, but questioned the dates suggested. There also seemed to be a step missing somewhere. Prior to paragraph (a) there might be a statement requesting the Secretariat, under the supervision of the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur, to prepare a documented outline of the International Bill of Human Rights to be submitted to Member Governments at the earliest possible date.

MR. ROYER (France) pointed out that a majority of the Committee had agreed on the principle of establishing equality among the drafting group. The United States suggestion was contrary to the spirit of this decision. He was prepared to seek a formula which would meet the wishes of the representatives of Norway and India, and also the wishes of the United States representative regarding dates. He stated that his resolution did not imply lack of confidence in the Commission on Human Rights or its officers.

MR. RADIMSKY (Czechoslovakia) suggested making paragraph (c) of the French proposal paragraph (a).

MR. YANG (China) suggested adding India and the Philippine Republic to the drafting group.

[10]

MR. KABUSHKO (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) said he would accept the French proposal with the Czechoslovakian amendment making paragraph (c) paragraph (a) and a provision that the Council should prepare the final draft for submission to the General Assembly. The Council should make out the draft on a democratic basis and on a proper geographic basis, in order to produce a draft acceptable to everyone.

MR. ROYER (France) accepted the suggestion of the representative of Czechoslovakia.

The Committee agreed to refer the French and Canadian proposals to a drafting committee consisting of the representatives of Czechoslovakia, France and the United States of America.

The meeting rose at 6:55 p.m.

E/AC.7/19

22 March 1947

Summary Record of the Ninth Meeting [of the Committee on Social Affairs of the Economic and Social Council]

Held at Lake Success on 22 March 1947 at 2:45 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mr. Papanek (Czechoslovakia); Members: Mr. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic); Mr. Riddle (Canada); Mr. Santa Cruz (Chile); Mr. Sze (China); Mr. Cisneros (Cuba); Mr. Stolz (Czechoslovakia); Mr. Mendès-France (France); Mr. Mahalanobis (India); Mr. Malik (Lebanon); Mr. van Heuven (Netherlands); Mr. Reid (New Zealand); Mr. Moe (Norway); Mr. Arca Parró (Peru); Mr. Turhan (Turkey); Mr. Borisov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Phillips (United Kingdom); Mr. Kotschnig (United States of America); Mr. Stolk (Venezuela); Secretariat: Mr. Yates, Mr. Notestein.

The meeting was convened at 3:15 p.m.

1. *Consideration of the Report of the Commission on Human Rights (Document E/259 and E/259/Add.1) (continued)

THE CHAIRMAN opened the discussion on the draft resolution on the drafting of the International Bill of Human Rights submitted by the sub-committee consisting of the members from Czechoslovakia, France and the United States, which read as follows:

The Economic and Social Council

Takes note of Chapter II of the Report of the Commission on Human [2] Rights; and Resolves

- (a) that the Secretariat be requested to prepare a documented outline concerning an International Bill of Human Rights and that this form the basis for the work of a

- drafting committee consisting of the members of the Commission on Human Rights for Australia, Chile, China, France, Lebanon, United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States, and that this drafting committee be convened prior to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights; and
- (b) that the draft prepared by the Committee of eight be submitted to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights; and
  - (c) that the draft as developed by the Commission on Human Rights be submitted to all States, Members of the United Nations, for their observations, suggestions and proposals; and
  - (d) that these observations, suggestions and proposals then be considered as the basis of a re-draft, if necessary, by the Committee of eight; and
  - (e) that the resulting draft then be submitted to the Commission on Human Rights for final consideration; and
  - (f) that the Council consider the proposed International Bill of Human Rights as submitted by the Commission on Human Rights with a view to recommending an International Bill of Human Rights to the General Assembly in 1948.

MR. STOLZ (Czechoslovakia) explained that the presented draft resolution was a combination of the French and the Canadian proposals. He stated that the desire of the sub-committee was that the draft resolution be discussed in two parts: first the whole procedure, and second, the composition of the drafting group.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) said he wished to raise a point of principle. The Council had resolved that the Commission on Human Rights should draw up [3] an International Bill of Human Rights. The Commission at its first session had debated and voted down a motion to set up a drafting committee. The Council can reverse that decision – it can reverse a decision of any commission, – but is it proper for the Council to set up a Committee of a Commission in the absence of the Commission? Had it ever been done before? Since a point of precedent and fundamental principle was involved, Mr. Malik said he would request that the President of the Council be asked to the meeting to give a ruling.

MR. MENDÈS-FRANCE (France) stated that he understood the objection raised by Mr. Malik, but it ought to have been raised before, during the three days of long discussions. He thought that at that stage a solution could be reached by the Committee. Legally, the Council had the authority to take a decision in this case. Since the Committee was unanimous in its desire to reach a conclusion, he suggested that the President put the proposed draft resolution to a vote.

MR. KAMINSKY (Byelorussia) agreed with Mr. Mendès-France but pointed out that a decision had already been taken by the Committee and that the discussion was only on the point of procedure of drafting the International Bill of Rights.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) wished to point out that he was speaking as Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights and could not have done so before, having been ill. He also stated that since the question had to come before the Council, the discussion could not be finished.

MR. BORISOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) asked the Committee to abide by its own decision. He further stated that if the Commission on Human Rights did not take a democratic approach, it was up to the Council to change its decision. He reminded the Committee that the draft of the International Bill of Human Rights must be acceptable to all Member States.

MR. REID (New Zealand) emphasized that he was speaking only as Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights and stated that it was of [4] paramount importance to find out if the Council's interference with the procedure of the Commission was appropriate or not.

THE CHAIRMAN decided that the point of order raised by the Delegate for Lebanon would be before the Council at its next plenary session. He asked the committee to examine the first paragraph of the draft resolution without taking membership into consideration.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) stated that the first paragraph was incompatible with the decision of the Council that the Commission on Human Rights draft the Bill.

MR. KAMINSKY (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic) pointed out that Resolution 43(1) of the General Assembly put the Economic and Social Council in charge of drafting the International Bill of Human Rights with the aid of the Human Rights Commission.

MR. KOTSCHNIG (United States), after stating that though the United States Delegation would have liked to uphold the decisions of the Commission, it was willing to accommodate its views to the majority of the Committee, suggested a vote on the draft proposal as a whole before the ruling of the President of the Council.

MR. CISNEROS (Cuba) proposed to defer the matter until after the ruling of the President of the Council.

MR. MAHALANOBIS (India) supported the Cuban proposal.

MR. MOE (Norway) expressed the opinion that the question whether the Council could overrule a decision of a commission was not a procedural one, but one of principle. He thought that it was the task of the Council of the General Assembly to resolve it.

MR. KAMINSKY (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic) supported the Delegate of Norway and urged an immediate vote.

MR. CHANG (China) stated that only the Commission on Human Rights could make the proposed changes.

MR. MENDÈS-FRANCE (France) proposed to adjourn so that the previous sub-committee of three could meet and prepare an acceptable draft which [5] would combine all points of view.

MR. PHILLIPS (United Kingdom) supported the French proposal.

THE CHAIRMAN put the proposal to a vote and it was accepted.

(At that point Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar, the President of the Council, came in.)

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) asked the sub-committee of three to have in mind that the Commission on Human Rights was charged with the responsibility of drafting the Bill.

MR. KOTSCHNIG (United States) asked the President of the Council to participate in the discussions of the sub-committee. The President of the Council accepted.

[The remainder of the meeting concerned the Report of the Population Commission, (E/267).]

E/AC.7/12

23 March 1947

Draft Resolutions on Human Rights and on International Conference on the Freedom of the Press

Following is the text of draft resolutions prepared by the Secretariat on the basis of discussion by the Social Committee at its meeting on 23 March:

The Economic and Social Council

Takes note of the Report of the Commission on Human Rights; and

A. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a documented outline concerning an International Bill of Human Rights; and

Establishes a temporary Sub-Commission consisting of the Members of the Commission on Human Rights for Australia, Chile, China, France, Lebanon, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States. This temporary Sub-Commission shall be convened prior to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights and shall prepare, on the basis of documentation supplied by the Secretary-General, a preliminary draft of an International Bill of Human Rights; and

Decides

- (a) that the draft prepared by the temporary Sub-Commission be submitted to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights; and

- (b) that the draft as developed by the Commission on Human Rights be submitted to all Members of the United Nations for their observations, suggestions and proposals; and
  - (c) that these observations, suggestions and proposals then be considered as a basis of a redraft, if necessary, by the temporary Sub-Commission; and
  - (d) that the resulting draft then be submitted to the Commission on Human Rights for final consideration; and
- [2]
- (e) that the Council consider the proposed International Bill of Human Rights as submitted to the Commission on Human Rights with a view to recommending an International Bill of Human Rights to the General Assembly in 1948; and

[Paragraphs B, C and D concern the composition and functions of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, and the handling of communications.]

[3]

The Economic and Social Council

Pursuant to Resolution No. 43(1) of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly (Draft Declaration on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms)

Transmits the Declaration on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms presented by the Delegation of Panama, and any other draft declarations received from Member States, to the Temporary Sub-Commission and the Commission on Human Rights for consideration in their preparation of an International Bill of Human Rights.

E/AC.7/20

23 March 1947<sup>125</sup>

Summary Record of the Tenth Meeting of the Social Committee of the Economic and Social Council

Held at Lake Success on 23 March 1947 at 10:45 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Sir A. Ramaswami Mudaliar (India); Members: Mr. Kaminsky (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic); Mr. Riddle (Canada); Mr. Chang (China); Mr. Pérez Cisneros (Cuba); Mr. Stolz (Czechoslovakia); Mr. Mendès-France (France); Mr. Mahalanobis (India); Mr. Malik (Lebanon); Mr van Heuven (Netherlands); Mr. Reid (New Zealand);

<sup>125</sup> This document was issued on 25 April 1947.

Mr. Moe (Norway); Mr. Arca Parró (Peru); Mr. Phillips (United Kingdom); Mr. Kotschnig (United States); Mr. Borisov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Stolk (Venezuela); Secretariat: Mr. Stanczyk, Mr. Hogan, Mr. Yates. (During the meeting Mr. Chang replaced Mr. Yang (China) and Mr. Stinebower replaced Mr. Kotschnig (United States).)

The meeting opened at 10:45 a.m.

Discussion on Draft Resolution Submitted by the Sub-Committee consisting of the Representative of Czechoslovakia, France and the United States on the Drafting of the International Bill of Human Rights

THE CHAIRMAN introduced the draft resolution which read as follows:

[2]

“The Economic and Social Council

“Takes note of the Report of the Commission on Human Rights; and

“Requests the Secretariat to prepare a documented outline concerning an International Bill of Human Rights; and

“Establishes a temporary Sub-Commission consisting of the Members of the Commission on Human Rights for Australia, Chile, China, France, Lebanon, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States. This temporary Sub-Commission shall be convened prior to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights and shall prepare, on the basis of documentation supplied by the Secretariat, a preliminary draft of an International Bill of Human Rights; and

“Decides

- a. that the draft prepared by the temporary Sub-Commission be submitted to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights; and
- b. that the draft as developed by the Commission on Human Rights be submitted to all States, Members of the United Nations, for their observations, suggestions and proposals; and
- c. that these observations, suggestions and proposals then be considered as a basis of a redraft, if necessary, by the temporary Sub-Commission; and
- d. that the resulting draft then be submitted to the Commission on Human Rights for final consideration; and
- e. that the Council consider the proposed International Bill of Human Rights as submitted by the Commission on Human Rights with a view to recommending an International Bill of Human Rights to the General Assembly in 1948.”

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) said that the draft was entirely different from what had been considered on Friday and Saturday. He presumed that the internal [3] arrangements of the Commission on Human Rights were untouched by it.

THE CHAIRMAN gave a ruling as President of the Council. He said that Commissions were appointed by the Economic and Social Council. Sub-Commissions of Commissions were authorized to be appointed by the Council and, when a Sub-Commission was established, approval of the Council was required. Sub-Commissions might consist not only of members of Commissions but also of others. The Council, or any body, had the right to appoint the sub-committees of itself. This was an inherent right. A committee of a Commission composed of its own members could always be appointed by the Commission; the Council appointed a sub-committee of itself. It was the privilege of all bodies, not only under the United Nations Charter, to appoint sub-committees of their own members. If the desire of the Council was that this Bill of Human Rights should be studied by a larger body, the only way that desire could be accomplished is by proposing a temporary Sub-Commission which could be appointed without reference to the Commission. They could always interpose a Sub-Commission to which certain terms of reference might be directly made by the Council and that Sub-Commission could, of course, report, through the main Commission, to the Council. Therefore, the desire of the Council having been expressed that a number of members should study this Bill, the way to do this was to interpose a Sub-Commission which would report to the Council, or to the Commission. The draft proposal tried to carry out that idea. This was a problem of procedure. It did not interfere with the procedures that the Commission saw fit to follow in the meantime.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) said he was grateful to the Chairman for clearing up this point. The whole question was whether a superior body had the right to appoint sub-committees of an inferior body. The Chair had given an unequivocal ruling that it had no right to appoint such sub-committees. This was a separate act entirely; the Commission had seen fit not to set up a sub-committee but would itself supervise the drafting of the bill. He could [4] see only one question, which was one of propriety, not of rights. Was it really proper, was it a duplication, or a vote of lack of confidence in the Commission? He stated he was raising a subtle moral issue in this respect, and he thought that the Sub-Commission envisaged, might by reason of that moral point, discourage the Commission in its delicate task.

MR. KAMINSKY (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic) said he held that the Council had the right to create any organs to carry out its task. The resolution submitted differed from the decision already taken, which had entrusted the draft to a seven-person drafting committee. He had no objection to the principle of setting up the Sub-Commission, but proposed the addition, where the countries were listed, of Yugoslavia.

MR. KOTSCHNIG (United States of America) observed that the proposal was a valuable compromise. He moved the closure of the debate and a vote on the document as it stood but leaving the enumeration of the countries for separate discussion.

MR. PÉREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) supported the representative of the United States, and said he also agreed with most of the views of the representative of Lebanon. He suggested it might be helpful to decide on paragraph 10(d) of the report of the Commission on Human Rights.

THE CHAIRMAN stated that that point was within the competence of the Commission.

MR. PÉREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) added that he would like to ask four questions. First, should membership of the Sub-Commission be restricted to members of the Commission on Human Rights? Second, should they represent only some countries with specialized interests in the field of human rights? Third, was it necessary to have original representation? And fourth, would there be a balance between great and small states?

THE CHAIRMAN said the only relevant principle was whether the Council could include non-members of the Commission in the Sub-Commission. The [5] Council could. The others were points which the members of the Committee could keep in mind when voting.

MR. YANG (China) said the proposal was a little unusual procedurally. He supported the United States motion to close the debate.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) suggested that the word “prepare” in paragraph (A) was inappropriate.

THE CHAIRMAN said ultimately it would be the Commission which would prepare the draft. This action of the Council could not be interpreted as a reflection on the Commission.

The proposal, with the exception of the phrase relating to the composition of the Sub-Commission, was put to the vote and was accepted. The representative of Lebanon said he considered the decision a reflection on the Commission on Human Rights, and reserved his right to raise the matter again in plenary session.

THE CHAIRMAN maintained that there was no reflection on the Commission. The Council had set up other sub-commissions, such as the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press, which reported to the Commission on Human Rights.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) said that as far as the other sub-commissions were concerned, the relevant text that the Economic and Social Council “empowered” the Commission on Human Rights to establish sub-commissions. The present text was different.

MR. BORISOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) drew attention to the fact that, as far as composition was concerned, the Committee had decided, by ten votes to five, that the body should consist of seven members. He had no objection to including the United Kingdom, but would support the Byelorussian suggestion to include Yugoslavia also.

MR. MALIK (Lebanon) restated his opinion that this was a superfluous arrangement. He pointed out that two countries, India and Panama, had [6] submitted draft bills of human rights, and the Panamanian draft was the subject of a General Assembly Resolution. He suggested including these countries.

MR. YANG (China) recalled that he had suggested including India.

THE CHAIRMAN, referring to the point raised by the Soviet representative, said he understood that at a previous meeting of the committee it had been decided to include seven members, and not eight. If that were so, an addition could only be made in plenary session. The draft would stand with the deletion of the words "United Kingdom".

MR. RIDDLE (Canada) referred to the fact that his previous proposal had also been accepted by the Committee, and summarized the sequence of discussions. He maintained that there should be a certain amount of flexibility.

MR. MENDÈS-FRANCE (France) thought there was some misunderstanding and recounted the sequence of discussions. The propositions were entirely different, he maintained, and the Committee was free to decide on a membership of seven or eight.

THE CHAIRMAN agreed with the representative of France that the Committee would be free to discuss the matter of membership.

MR. BORISOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) said that the basic idea was that the Sub-Commission should be democratic in its representation. The seven countries named represented different, even opposing, points of view regarding human rights. He thought that if a different principle were adopted, the Sub-Commission would become big and unwieldy.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that the main Commission consisted of 19 members; there should be some relevance between the two compositions. All countries were interested in the subject.

MR. MOE (Norway) formally proposed the same countries as named previously, deleting the United Kingdom. He pointed out that, while it was desired to [7] have different ideologies and trends of law represented, the Anglo-Saxon tradition was represented – by the United States and Australia.

MR. PHILLIPS (United Kingdom) disagreed with the representative of Norway and referred to his country's long traditions in human rights, and added that the United Kingdom had a draft bill ready to submit. He would be disappointed if the United Kingdom were excluded.

The proposal that the Sub-Commission should consist of seven members was defeated. Decision to make the number eight was then taken.

MR. MENDÈS-FRANCE (France) referred to the paragraphs in the report of the Commission on Human Rights providing for consultation of experts and the views of others on the subject of human rights. He presumed the Sub-Commission would consider all the information available.

Consideration of the Draft Resolution submitted by Sub-Committee consisting of Representatives of Czechoslovakia, France, and the United States of America on the Subject of the Panamanian Draft Declaration on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms.

MR. KAMINSKY (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic) said he did not approve of the resolution. A great number of other drafts might be received, and would demand similar treatment.

MR. MENDÈS-FRANCE (France) suggested that the resolution should indicate that any other draft proposals coming from member governments would also be referred to the Sub-Commission.

The representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics supported the representative of France, and the resolution was adopted as follows;

“The Economic and Social Council

“Pursuant to Resolution No. 43(1) of the second part of the First Session of the General Assembly (Draft Declaration on Fundamental Rights and Freedoms)

“Transmits the Declaration on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms presented by the Delegation of Panama, and any other draft declaration received from Member States, to the Temporary Sub-Commission and the [8] Commission on Human Rights for consideration in their preparation of the International Bill of Human Rights.”

...

E/RES/52(IV)

24 March 1947

Resolution 52(IV) of the Economic and Social Council
“Guarantees for the Exercise and Development of Trade Union Rights”

“The Economic and Social Council

“Having taken note of the item regarding Trade Union Rights placed on its agenda at the request of World Federation of Trade Unions, and the memoranda submitted by the World Federation of Trade Unions and the American Federation of Labor,

“The Economic and Social Council

“Further resolves to transmit the documents to the Commission on Human Rights in order that it may consider those aspects of the subject which might appropriately form part of the Bill or Declaration on Human Rights.”<sup>126</sup>

E/SR.79<sup>127</sup>

24 March 1947

Summary Record of the Seventy-Ninth Meeting
[of the Economic and Social Council]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Monday,
 24 March 1947 at 3 p.m.

President: SIR RAMASWAMI MUDALIAR (India)

...

[191]

...

56. Discussion of the resolution submitted by the World Federation of Trade Unions on guarantees for the exercise and development of trade union rights and memorandum submitted by the American Federation of Labor (documents E/C.2/28 and E/C.2/32)<sup>128</sup>

...

[192]

...

MR. WINSLOW (United States of America) stated that his Government, which believed in free trade unionism and the right of association, viewed with alarm any threat to those principles. He agreed with the United Kingdom representative that the matter fell within the scope of the ILO. The Council had to guard itself against duplicating the work of the specialized agencies. He felt that referring the matter to the ILO for consideration and for a report containing recommendations as to measures that might be taken would in no way mean prejudging the case. He suggested that the WFTU draft resolution should at the same time be transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights, to be used by that Commission in its work of drafting the international bill of rights. The memorandum of the American Federation of Labor should be dealt with in the same manner.

<sup>126</sup> The documents to which reference is made here are contained in E/CN.4/AC.1/9.

<sup>127</sup> The document is taken from Official Records of the Economic and Social Council, Second Year, Fourth Session, 28 February-29 March 1947, pp. 189-197.

<sup>128</sup> These documents are contained in E/CN.4/AC.1/9.

...

[195]

...

Decision. The United Kingdom proposal that the draft resolution of the World Federation of Trade Unions and the memorandum of the American Federation of Labor should be referred for consideration to the International Labour Organization and considered by the Council at its next session was adopted.

The United States proposal that the two documents should be referred to the Commission on Human Rights for consideration of those aspects which might appropriately form part of the international bill of rights, was adopted.

...

E/383

24 March 1947

Report of the Commission on Human Rights

The attached letter from the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to the President of the Economic and Social Council is circulated for the information of the Council.

[2]

March 24, 1947

My dear Mr. President:

Prior commitments made before my election as chairman of the Commission on Human Rights forced me to tell the Commission I could not appear before the Economic and Social Council to submit the Commission's report, and the Commission voted to have the Rapporteur, Dr. Malik, present its report. While I regretted not being present, I have been gratified by the great interest shown by the Council in the work and the report of the Commission.

According to information which I have just received, a majority of the members of the Council have indicated a desire for the appointment of a special body within the framework of the Commission on Human Rights which would undertake to prepare a preliminary draft of the proposed International Bill of Human Rights and would assist the Commission in carrying out its responsibilities in this field.

As you know, the Commission on Human Rights itself voted that all members of the Commission should be consulted in the preparation of the draft declaration of Human Rights. It had of course, always been my intention to take advantage of the advice of other members of the Commission at all stages of the work and I can see no important inconsistency between the suggestion of the Social Committee and the procedure that we intended to follow. I shall, of course, be assisted by the suggestions of this Committee as to the members of the Commission who should be consulted, and in the light of the discussions which have taken place, I shall be pleased, acting as Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, to appoint immediately a Drafting Committee composed of the members of the Commission on Human Rights for Australia, China, Chile, France, Lebanon, United States, United Kingdom, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

It is my understanding that this Drafting Committee would meet prior to the next session of the Commission and prepare, on the basis of documentation supplied by the Secretariat, a preliminary draft of an International Bill of Human Rights. I furthermore concur in the recommendation of the Social Committee of the Whole that the following procedure be adopted in preparing the International Bill of Human Rights.

- (a) that the draft prepared by the Drafting Committee be submitted to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights; and
- (b) that the draft as developed by the Commission on Human Rights be submitted to all States, Members of the United Nations, for their observations, suggestions and proposals; and
- (c) that these observations, suggestions and proposals then be considered as a basis of a redraft, if necessary, by the Drafting Committee; and
- (d) that the resulting draft then be submitted to the Commission on Human Rights for final consideration; and
- (e) that the Council consider the proposed International Bill of Human Rights as submitted by the Commission on Human Rights with a view to recommending an International Bill of Human Rights to the General Assembly in 1948.

In accordance with the directions given us by the Commission on Human Rights, the group working on a preliminary Draft Bill was requested to send reports on progress by the first of every month beginning with April first, and I presume that we are following that procedure.

Very sincerely yours,
(sgd.) Eleanor Roosevelt
(Chairman, Commission on Human Rights)

E/AC.7/15<sup>129</sup>

25 March 1947

Resolutions on the Report of the Commission on Human Rights, on the Conference on Freedom of Information and on the Crime of Genocide

Following are the texts of draft resolutions on the Report of the Commission on Human Rights agreed by the ad hoc drafting sub-committee of the Social Committee at its meeting on 24 March:

Draft Resolution on the Resolution of the General Assembly Concerning the Draft Declaration on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms

The Economic and Social Council,

Pursuant to Resolution No. 43 of 11 December 1946, of the General Assembly (Draft Declaration on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms)

Transmits the Declaration on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, presented by the Delegation of Panama, and any other draft declarations received from Member States, Specialized Agencies and Category A NGOs to the Temporary Sub-Commission and the Commission on Human Rights for consideration in their preparation of an International Bill of Human Rights.

...

[2]

...

Draft Resolutions on the Report of the Commission on Human Rights

The Economic and Social [Council]

Takes note of the Report of the Commission on Human Rights; and

A. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a documented outline concerning an International Bill of Human Rights; and

Establishes a temporary Sub-Commission consisting of the Members of the Commission on Human Rights for Australia, Chile, China, France, Lebanon, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States. This temporary Sub-Commission shall be convened prior to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights and shall prepare, on the basis of documentation supplied by the Secretary-General, a preliminary draft of an International Bill of Rights; and

<sup>129</sup> Also issued as E/386 on 27 March 1947.

Decides

- (a) that the draft prepared by the temporary Sub-Commission be submitted to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights; and
  - (b) that the draft as developed by the Commission on Human Rights be submitted to all members of the United Nations for their observations, suggestions and proposals; and
- [3]
- (c) that these observations, suggestions and proposals then be considered as a basis of a redraft, if necessary, by the temporary Sub-Commission; and
  - (d) that the resulting draft then be submitted to the Commission on Human Rights for final consideration; and
  - (e) that the Council consider the proposed International Bill of Human Rights as submitted by the Commission on Human Rights with a view to recommending an International Bill of Human Rights to the General Assembly in 1948;

...

E/AC.7/15/Add.1

26 March 1947

Resolution of the General Assembly Concerning the Draft Declaration on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms

Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar
President, Economic and Social Council
United Nations
Lake Success, New York

Sir:

The American Federation of Labor wishes to draw the attention of the Council to the omission in the "Draft Resolution of the General Assembly Concerning the Draft Declaration on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms", document E/AC.7/15 dated 25 March, of any mention of other draft declarations which organizations such as the American Federation of Labor might wish to submit.

The American Federation of Labor would suggest, therefore, the insertion in the fourth line of the Resolution, after the words “member states” of the following: “Specialized Agencies and Category A Non-Governmental Organizations”.

Thank you for your kind attention.

Very truly yours,
Toni Sender, Consultant
American Federation of Labor

E/AC.7/18
26 March 1947

The Economic and Social Council

Takes note of the report of the Commission on the Status of Women (document E/281/Rev.1) and

A. Resolves:

...

3. That the Commission on the Status of Women be represented by its officers, the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur, at all sessions of the Commission on Human Rights at which the draft international bill of human rights is under consideration;

4. That the preliminary draft of the international bill of human rights be circulated to the members of the Commission on the Status of Women at the same time as it is made available to the members of the Commission on Human Rights;

...

E/386
27 March 1947

Report of the Commission on Human Rights

International Bill of Human Rights

The following is the text of the Draft Resolution approved by the Committee of the Whole on 27 March in replacement of the Resolution commencing on page 2 of document E/AC.7/15:

The Economic and Social Council,
Taking note of Chapter II, paragraph 10 of the Report of the Commission on Human Rights,

Requests the Secretariat to prepare a documented outline concerning an International Bill of Human Rights; and

Having noted with approval the letter of the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to the President of the Economic and Social Council, under date of 24 March 1947, including her statement of intention to appoint immediately a Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights consisting of the members of the Commission on Human Rights for Australia, China, Chile, France, Lebanon, United States, United Kingdom, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, which will be convened prior to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights and prepare, on the basis of documentation supplied by the Secretariat, a preliminary draft of an International Bill of Human Rights

Decides

- (a) that the draft prepared by the above-mentioned Drafting Committee be submitted to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights; and

[2]

- (b) that the draft as developed by the Commission on Human Rights be submitted to all States, Members of the United Nations, for their observations, suggestions and proposals; and
- (c) that these observations, suggestions and proposals then be considered as a basis of a redraft, if necessary by the Drafting Committee; and
- (d) that the resulting draft then be submitted to the Commission on Human Rights for final consideration; and
- (e) that the Council consider the proposed International Bill of Human Rights as submitted by the Commission on Human Rights with a view to recommending an International Bill of Human Rights to the General Assembly in 1948.

E/386/Add.1

28 March 1947

Amendment to Draft Resolution on the Report of the Commission on Human Rights Proposed by the Delegation of Canada

The resolution contained in document E/386 be amended to read:

- (e) Further, that the Commission on Human Rights invite a representative of the Commission on the Status of Women to be present when sections of this draft of the International Bill of Human Rights concerning the particular rights of women are being considered; and

That paragraph (e) be retained as paragraph (f).

In connection with the above, the Delegation of Canada will move the rejection of Paragraph A(3) of the Draft Resolution on the Report of the Commission on the Status of Women. (E/AC.7/18)

E/SR.84

29 March 1947

Summary Record of the Eighty-Fourth Meeting
[of the Economic and Social Council]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Saturday,
29 March 1947 at 2:30 p.m.

Present: President: Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar (India); Mr. Smith (Canada); Mr. Santa Cruz (Chile); Dr. Chang (China); Mr. Osuna (Cuba); Mr. Papenek (Czechoslovakia); Mr. Mendès-France (France); Mr. Kirpalani (India); Mr. Hakim (Lebanon); Mr. van Kleffens (Netherlands); Mr. Reid (New Zealand); Mr. Moe (Norway); Mr. Arca Parro (Peru); Mr. Turhan (Turkey); Mr. Morozov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Mayhew (United Kingdom); Mr. Stinebower (United States of America); Mr. Stolk (Venezuela). Secretariat: Mr. Owen; Mr. Stanczyk.

...

[2]

...

Consideration of the Report of the Commission on the Status of Women (Documents E/AC.7/18; E/AC.7/18/Add.1; E/AC.7/18/Add.1/Rev.1; E/AC.7/18/Add.2; E/AC.7/18/Add.3, and E/386/Add.1)

In introducing the Soviet amendment (document E/AC.7/18/Add.3) to section A, paragraph 6 (document E/AC.7/18), MR. MOROZOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) emphasized that it expressed much more clearly than the original text the scope and importance of the work of the Commission. From the paragraph as it now stood, the whole conception of political rights seemed to have disappeared, and its indefinite wording did nothing to reflect the aims and principles contained in the report of the Commission on the Status of Women (document E/201/Rev.1). There was no need to limit the sphere of the activities of the Commission, nor was there any purpose in stating didactically with which organizations it should enter into consultation.

MR. PHILLIPS (United Kingdom) pointed out that the present text did nothing to preclude a discussion of political or other rights, but rather widened the area of consideration with the use of the word “opportunities”. One could have rights and at the same time not the opportunity to enjoy them.

Decision: The USSR amendment was rejected by the Council.

In connexion with the amendment (document E/386/Add.1) which his delegation proposed should be made to the resolutions on the report of the Commission on Human Rights, MR. HALSTEAD (Canada) brought forward two considerations. First, it was only natural that the Economic and Social Council should instruct the Commission on Human Rights to invite a representative of the Commission on the Status of Women to be present during the drafting of the international bill of rights. Secondly, it was [3] also logical that the representative of the latter Commission should limit her advice to those sections of the bill which dealt specifically with the question of the rights of women.

MR. MOROZOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) opposed the Canadian amendment in principle. There seemed to be a deliberate attempt on the part of certain members of the Council to place the Commission in the position where it would not be able to do anything which it had asked the Council’s approval to do. At the meeting on Friday, it had been decided that it should hold only one session a year, and now a request that its officers should participate in the drafting of the International Bill of Rights was being opposed. The Canadian proposal limited the number of its representatives on the Commission on Human Rights to one, and further attempted to guarantee that the representative should express views on no other question but the rights of women. Without the possibility of another meeting this year, the Commission would not be able to formulate its recommendations on the International Bill of Rights nor, in fact, would it be able to nominate its representative to the Commission on Human Rights.

MR. SMITH (Canada) assured the delegate of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics that his delegation had no desire to refuse the legitimate requests of the Commission, but owing to the fact that so much of its report had been expressed in too broad terms, it had seemed necessary to rephrase and narrow some of its requests. The Commission on Human Rights represented the interests of both men and women: there was therefore no more reason why the point of view of the Commission on the Status of Women should be represented during all of its deliberations than for representatives of, say the Transport and Communications Commission to be present because the problems of transport workers might come under consideration.

It was to be hoped that all organs would have an opportunity to express their views, but it should be remembered that it was the Commission on Human Rights that had been given the task of drafting the preliminary version of the International Bill of Human Rights.

[4]

As a final argument, he pointed out that the representatives of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics had taken the lead in arguing that members of Commissions should be Government nominees rather than individual experts, in which case the point of view of the Soviet Government could be equally well expressed by its representative on the Commission on Human Rights, as by its representative on the Commission on the Status of Women.

In reply to the Chairman, Mr. Smith (Canada) stated that, on second thought, he had no objection to the Commission on the Status of Women being represented by its three officers.

MR. STINEBOWER (United States of America) was thus able to accept the Canadian amendment, as were also MR. MOE (Norway) and MR. MENDÈS-FRANCE (France).

MR. MOROZOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) pointed out that his statement had not been a proposal, but was simply a reflection of the request made to the Council by the Commission. To ask to be present during the drafting of the Bill of Human Rights was surely a very natural and legitimate claim.

After a short discussion, the President proposed and it was agreed that the following text should be included among the resolutions on the report of the Commission on Human Rights:

“That the Commission on Human Rights invite the officers of the Commission on the Status of Women to be present and to participate without vote in its deliberations at all of its sessions when sections of the draft of the international bill of human rights concerning the particular rights of women are under consideration.”

He further proposed that paragraph A.3 (document E/AC.7/18) be amended to read as follows:

“That the Commission on the Status of Women be represented by its officers (the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur) at all sessions of the Commission on Human Rights at which sections of the draft of the international bill of human rights concerning the particular rights of women are under consideration, to participate, without vote, in the deliberations on such sections”.

Decision: The proposals put forward by the President were adopted by the Council.

...

E/RES/46(IV)<sup>130</sup>

28 March 1947

Draft Declaration on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms

The Economic and Social Council,

Pursuant to Resolution No. 43(1) of the General Assembly of 11 December 1946
Transmits the Declaration on Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms, presented by the Delegation of Panama, and any other draft declarations received from Member States, to the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights and to the Commission on Human Rights for consideration in their preparation of an International Bill of Human Rights.

...

Report of the Commission on Human Rights

A. Draft International Bill of Rights

...

The Economic and Social Council

Taking note of Chapter II, paragraph 10 of the Report of the Commission on Human Rights,

A. Requests the Secretariat to prepare a documented outline concerning an International Bill of Human Rights; and

Having noted with approval the letter of the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to the President of the Economic and Social Council, under date of 24 March 1947, including her statement of intention to appoint immediately a Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights consisting of the members of the Commission on Human Rights for Australia, Chile, China, France, Lebanon, United States, United Kingdom, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, which will be convened prior to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights and prepare, on the basis of documentation supplied by the Secretariat, a preliminary draft of an International Bill of Human Rights,

Decides

(a) that the draft prepared by the above-mentioned Drafting Committee be submitted to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights; and

<sup>130</sup> Issued as E/325.

- (b) that the draft as developed by the Commission on Human Rights be submitted to all States Members of the United Nations for their observations, suggestions and proposals; and
- (c) that these observations, suggestions and proposals then be considered as a basis of a redraft, if necessary by the Drafting Committee; and
- (d) that the resulting draft then be submitted to the Commission on Human Rights for final consideration; and
- (e) that the Council consider the proposed International Bill of Human Rights as submitted by the Commission on Human Rights with a view to recommending an International Bill of Human Rights to the General Assembly in 1948; and further
- (f) that the Commission on Human Rights invite the officers of the Commission on the Status of Women, the Chairman, the Vice-Chairman and the Rapporteur, to be present and participate without vote in its deliberations when sections of the draft of the International Bill of Rights concerning the particular rights of women are being considered;

...

E/RES/48(IV)<sup>131</sup>

29 March 1947

Status of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Takes note of the Report of the Commission on the Status of Women (document E/281/Rev.1), and

A. Resolves

...

3. That the Commission on the Status of Women be represented by its officers, the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur, at the sessions of the Commission on Human Rights when sections of the draft of the international bill of human rights concerning the particular rights of women are under consideration, to participate, without vote, in the deliberations thereon;

4. That the preliminary draft of the international bill of human rights be circulated to the members of the Commission on the Status of Women at the same time as it is made available to the members of the Commission on Human Rights;

...

<sup>131</sup> Issued as E/425.

E/CN.4/AC.1/2

29 May 1947

Memorandum on the Historical Background of the Committee (Submitted by the Division of Human Rights)

1. At its first session, the Commission on Human Rights decided (Document E/259, pages 2 and 3):

- (a) That the Chairman, together with the Vice-Chairman and the Rapporteur, undertake, with the assistance of the Secretariat, the task of formulating a preliminary draft International Bill of Human Rights, in accordance with the instructions and decisions of the Commission at its first session, to be submitted to the Commission at its second session for thorough examination.
- (b) That the Chairman, in the course of this work, might enlist the co-operation of, and should receive, orally or in writing, any observations and suggestions from, any member of the Commission.
- (c) That the Chairman might consult experts chosen with the consent of their Governments, Members of the United Nations.
- (d) That the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur, in drawing up the preliminary draft of the International Bill of Human Rights, might consult any person or document deemed by them of relevance to their work.
- (e) That, while recognizing that it was not at present in a position to formulate precisely its views concerning the means of enforcement of the rights to be included in the International Bill of Human Rights, it invite the drafting group to explore this field and to study the Australian proposal (E/CN.4/15) and any other [2] documents which had been or might be submitted to it, so that the Commission at its second session might be able to work out proposals on this subject in fulfilment of the duties assigned to it by the Council (Journal of the Economic and Social Council, No. 29).

2. At the sixty-eighth plenary meeting of the Economic and Social Council, the delegate for the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics said that his delegation did not agree with the Commission's recommendations on, inter alia, the drafting group for the International Bill of Rights, nor with the decision of the Commission giving the work of drafting the Bill of Rights to a small group of experts.

The drafting group, he said, had been set up before any decisions were taken on the actual rights. This made the group's responsibilities much wider than had originally been intended. He stated that in the opinion of his delegation the group was too small and did not include representatives of the European countries. He suggested that the group should be chosen in accordance with geographic principles, and enlarged from three to five members (Document E/439, pages 2–3).

3. Speaking as Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, Mr. Malik of Lebanon pointed out that the phrase “drafting group” had been used only because no equivalent could be found for the French word “bureau”. He explained that the Commission had merely asked its officers to prepare, in collaboration with the Secretariat, a preliminary draft bill of human rights taking into account all suggestions that had been made during the discussion as well as in many papers and documents that had been submitted to the Commission. Consequently the entire Commission must be considered as a drafting Committee which would eventually submit the draft to the Council (Document E/422, page 4).

4. The delegate for Czechoslovakia agreed with the representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics that the Committee of Three should be increased or that the Commission itself should undertake the [3] drafting of the Bill (Document E/422, page 7).

5. The report of the Commission on Human Rights was referred to the Committee of the Whole on Social Affairs of the Council. It was first discussed at the sixth meeting of this Committee.

A proposal was put forward by the delegate for Czechoslovakia to amend paragraph 10 (a) of Chapter II of the Commission’s report, in order to enlarge the working group in charge of formulating a preliminary draft International Bill of Human Rights. The proposal was adopted by ten votes for, five against, and two abstentions. The delegate for Czechoslovakia suggested that Chile, France, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics be included (Document E/AC.7/8, pages 3 and 4).

6. The delegate for Chile proposed that Australia be added to the list of States suggested by the delegate for Czechoslovakia. This proposal was seconded by the delegate for Peru (Document E/AC.7/8, page 4).

7. A draft resolution was proposed by the delegation of Canada and amended at the suggestion of the delegate for China to read as follows (Document E/AC.7/8, page 4):

“That, prior to the meeting of the Drafting Committee, the Secretariat, under the supervision of the officers of the Commission on Human Rights, prepare a draft International Bill of Human Rights and circulate such draft to the Members of the United Nations for their observations and comments.”

This resolution was adopted by the Committee. However, the delegate for the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics thought that the Czechoslovakian and Canadian amendments, as adopted, were contradictory. The Committee decided to re-examine the matter at a later meeting.

8. At the eighth meeting of the Committee of the Whole on Social Affairs, the delegate for France introduced a draft resolution proposing a procedure for the drafting of the International Bill of Human Rights (Document E/AC.7/13, pages 6 and 7). A revised Canadian proposal on the [4] same subject was also introduced (Document E/AC.7/13, page 7).

9. The delegate for the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics pointed out that the Committee had adopted the Czechoslovakian proposal. Because it had done so, and because its decision could not be reversed, he did not think that the Canadian proposal should be considered. He was supported by the delegate for the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic.

The Chairman ruled that the French draft resolution should be considered first. The delegate for the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics said that the French proposal would be acceptable to his delegation if a suggestion made by the Czechoslovakian delegation, altering the order of the paragraphs, were accepted; and if provision were made that the Council should prepare the final draft for submission to the General Assembly.

The delegate for France accepted the Czechoslovakian amendment, and the French and Canadian proposals were referred to a drafting committee consisting of the representatives of Czechoslovakia, France, and the United States of America (Document E/AC.7/13, pages 8–10).

10. A draft resolution prepared by this Committee (E/AC.7/12) was considered at the tenth meeting of the Social Committee on 23 March. It proposed, inter alia, the establishment of a temporary Sub-Commission consisting of the Members of the Commission on Human Rights for Australia, Chile, China, France, Lebanon, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States of America, to be convened prior to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights and to prepare, on the basis of documentation supplied by the Secretariat, a preliminary draft of an International Bill of Human Rights. No decision was taken on the proposal at this meeting (E/AC.7/20).

11. On 24 March a letter was received by the President of the Council from the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights (Document E/383). In this letter the Chairman of the Commission recognized the fact that, according to information she had received, a majority of the members of [5] the Council had indicated a desire for the appointment of a special body within the framework of the Commission on Human Rights which would undertake to prepare a preliminary draft of the proposed International Bill of Human Rights and would assist the Commission in carrying out its responsibilities in this field.

The Chairman wrote:

“As you know, the Commission on Human Rights itself voted that all members of the Commission should be consulted in the preparation of the draft declaration of Human Rights. It had of course, always been my intention to take advantage of the advice of other members of the Commission at all stages of the work and I can see no important inconsistency between the suggestion of the Social Committee and the procedure that we intended to follow. I shall, of course, be assisted by the suggestions of this Committee as to the members of the Commission who should be consulted, and in the light of the discussions which have taken place, I shall be pleased, acting as Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, to appoint immediately a Drafting Committee composed of the Members of the Commission on Human Rights for Australia, China, Chile, France, Lebanon, United States, United Kingdom, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

“It is my understanding that this Drafting Committee would meet prior to the next session of the Commission and prepare, on the basis of documentation supplied by the Secretariat, a preliminary draft of an International Bill of Human Rights. I furthermore concur in the recommendation of the Social Committee of the Whole that the following procedure be adopted in preparing the International Bill of Human Rights.

“(a) that the draft prepared by the Drafting Committee be submitted to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights; and

[6]

“(b) that the draft as developed by the Commission on Human Rights be submitted to all States, Members of the United Nations, for their observations, suggestions and proposals; and

“(c) that these observations, suggestions and proposals then be considered as a basis of a redraft, if necessary, by the Drafting Committee; and

“(d) that the resulting draft then be submitted to the Commission on Human Rights for final consideration; and

“(e) that the Council consider the proposed International Bill of Human Rights as submitted by the Commission on Human Rights with a view to recommending an International Bill of Human Rights to the General Assembly in 1948.”

12. On 25 March, the drafting committee of the Council’s Committee of the Whole on Social Affairs submitted a draft resolution to this Committee (Document E/AC.7/15, pages 14–15). With a few alterations, this draft resolution was approved by the Committee on 27 March (Document E/386), and adopted by the Economic and Social Council on 28 March (Document E/325, pages 2 and 3). The final resolution, after taking note of Chapter II, paragraph 10 of the Report of the Commission on Human Rights,

“Requests the Secretariat to prepare a documented outline concerning an International Bill of Human Rights; and

“Having noted with approval the letter of the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to the President of the Economic and Social Council, under date of 24 March 1947, including the statement of her intention to appoint immediately a Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights consisting of the Members for Australia, Chile, China, France, Lebanon, United States, United Kingdom, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, which will be convened prior to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights and [7] prepare, on the basis of documentation supplied by the Secretariat a preliminary draft of an International Bill of Human Rights.

“Decides

“(a) that the draft prepared by the above-mentioned Drafting Committee be submitted to the second session of the Commission on Human Rights; and

“(b) that the draft as developed by the Commission on Human Rights be submitted to all States Members of the United Nations for their observations, suggestions and proposals; and

“(c) that these observations, suggestions and proposals then be considered as a basis of a redraft, if necessary by the Drafting Committee; and

“(d) that the resulting draft then be submitted to the Commission on Human Rights for final consideration; and

“(e) that the Council consider the proposed International Bill of Human Rights as submitted by the Commission on Human Rights with a view to recommending an International Bill of Human Rights to the General Assembly in 1948; and further

“(f) that the Commission on Human Rights invite the officers of the Commission on the Status of Women, the Chairman, the Vice-Chairman and the Rapporteur, to be present and participate without vote in its deliberations when sections of the draft of the International Bill of Rights concerning the particular rights of women are being considered.”

13. The Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, by letter dated 8 April, appointed the members of the Drafting Committee of eight, and proposed that the Committee meet at Lake Success on 9 June for its first session.

E/CN.4/AC.1/3

4 June 1947

Draft Outline of International Bill of Rights (prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

[2]

The Preamble shall refer to the four freedoms and to the provisions of the Charter relating to human rights and shall enunciate the following principles:

1. that there can be no peace unless human rights and freedoms are respected;
2. that man does not have rights only; he owes duties to the society of which he forms part;
3. that man is a citizen both of his State and of the world;
4. that there can be no human dignity unless war and the threat of war is abolished.

Article 1

Everyone owes a duty of loyalty to his State and to the (international society) United Nations. He must accept his just share of responsibility for the performance of such social duties and his share of such common sacrifices as may contribute to the common good.

Article 2

In the exercise of his rights everyone is limited by the rights of others and by the just requirements of the State and of the United Nations.

Article 3

Everyone has the right to life. This right can be denied only to persons who have been convicted under general law of some crime to which the death penalty is attached.

Article 4

No one shall be subjected torture, or to any unusual punishment or indignity.

Article 5

Everyone has the right to personal liberty.
[3–4]

Article 6

No one shall be deprived of his personal liberty save by a judgment of a court of law, in conformity with the law and after a fair public trial at which he has had an opportunity for a full hearing, or pending his trial which must take place within a reasonable time after his arrest. Detention by purely executive order shall be unlawful except in time of national emergency.

Article 7

Everyone shall be protected against arbitrary and unauthorized arrest. He shall have the right to immediate judicial determination of the legality of any detention to which he may be subject.

Article 8

Slavery and compulsory labour are inconsistent with the dignity of man and therefore prohibited by this Bill of Rights. But a man may be required to perform his just share of any public service that is equally incumbent upon all, and his right to a livelihood is conditioned by his duty to work. Involuntary servitude may also be imposed as part of a punishment pronounced by a court of law.

Article 9

Subject to any general law adopted in the interest of national welfare or security, there shall be liberty of movement and free choice of residence within the borders of each State.

Article 10

The right of emigration and expatriation shall not be denied.

Article 11

No one shall be subjected to arbitrary searches or seizures, or to unreasonable interference with his person, home, family relations, reputation, privacy, activities, or personal property. The secrecy of correspondence shall be respected.

[5–6]

Article 12

Everyone has the right to a legal personality. No one shall be restricted in the exercise of his civil rights except for reasons based on age or mental condition or as a punishment for a criminal offence.

Article 13

Everyone has the right to contract marriage in accordance with the laws of the State.

Article 14

There shall be freedom of conscience and belief and of private and public religious worship.

Article 15

Everyone has the right to form, to hold, to receive and to impart opinions.

Article 16

There shall be free and equal access to all sources of information both within and beyond the borders of the State.

Article 17

Subject only to the laws governing slander and libel, there shall be freedom of speech and of expression by any means whatsoever, and there shall be reasonable access to all channels of communication. Censorship shall not be permitted.

Article 18

There exists a duty towards society to present information and news in a fair and impartial manner.

[7–8]

Article 19

There shall be freedom of peaceful assembly.

Article 20

There shall be freedom to form associations for purposes not inconsistent with this Bill of Rights.

Article 21

Everyone has the right to establish educational institutions in conformity with conditions laid down by the law.

Article 22

Everyone has a right to own personal property.

His right to share in the ownership of industrial, commercial and other profit-making enterprises is governed by the law of the State within which such enterprises are situated.

The State may regulate the acquisition and use of private property and determine those things that are susceptible of private appropriation.

No one shall be deprived of his property without just compensation.

Article 23

No one shall be required to pay any tax or be subjected to any public charge that has not been imposed by the law.

Article 24

There shall be equal opportunity of access to all vocations and professions not having a public character.

[9–10]

Article 25

Everything that is not prohibited by law is permitted.

Article 26

No one shall be convicted of crime except by judgment of a court of law, in conformity with the law, and after a fair trial at which he has had an opportunity for a full public hearing.

Nor shall anyone be convicted of crime unless he has violated some law in effect at the time of the act charged as an offence, nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that applicable to at the time of the commission of the offence.

Article 27

There shall be access to independent and impartial tribunals for the determination of rights and duties under the law.

Everyone has the right to consult with and to be represented by counsel.

Article 28

Everyone has the right, either individually or in association with others, to petition the government of his State or the United Nations for redress of grievances.

Article 29

Everyone has the right, either individually or with others, to resist oppression and tyranny.

Article 30

Everyone has the right to take an effective part in the government of the State of which he is a citizen. The State has a duty to conform to the wishes of the people as manifested by democratic elections. Elections shall be periodic, free and fair.

Article 31

Everyone shall have equal opportunity of access to all public functions in the State of which he is a citizen.

[11–12]

Appointments to the civil service shall be by competitive examination.

Article 32

Everyone has the right to a nationality.

Everyone is entitled to the nationality of the State where he is born unless and until on attaining majority he declares for the nationality open to him by virtue of his descent.

No one shall be deprived of his nationality by way of punishment or be deemed to have lost his nationality in any other way unless he concurrently acquires a new nationality.

Everyone has the right to renounce the nationality of his birth, or a previously acquired nationality, upon acquiring the nationality of another State.

Article 33

No alien who has been legally admitted to the territory of a State may be expelled therefrom except in pursuance of a judicial decision or recommendation as a punishment for offences laid down by law as warranting expulsion.

Article 34

Every State shall have the right to grant asylum to political refugees.

Article 35

Everyone has the right to medical care. The State shall promote public health and safety.

Article 36

Everyone has the right to education.

Each State has the duty to require that every child within its territory receive a primary education. The State shall maintain adequate and free facilities for such education. It shall also promote facilities for higher education without distinction as to the race, sex, language, religion, class or wealth of the persons entitled to benefit therefrom.

[13–14]

Article 37

Everyone has the right and the duty to perform socially useful work.

Article 38

Everyone has the right to good working conditions.

Article 39

Everyone has the right to such equitable share of the national income as the need for his work and the increment it makes to the common welfare may justify.

Article 40

Everyone has the right to such public help as may be necessary to make it possible for him to support his family.

Article 41

Everyone has the right to social security. The State shall maintain effective arrangements for the prevention of unemployment and for insurance against the risks of unemployment, accident, disability, sickness, old age and other involuntary or undeserved loss of livelihood.

Article 42

Everyone has the right to good food and housing and to live in surroundings that are pleasant and healthy.

Article 43

Everyone has the right to a fair share of rest and leisure.

Article 44

Everyone has the right to participate in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts and to share in the benefits of science.

Article 45

No one shall suffer any discrimination whatsoever because of race, sex, language, religion, or political creed. There shall be full equality before the law in the enjoyment of the rights enunciated in this Bill of Rights.

[15–16]

Article 46

In States inhabited by a substantial number of persons of a race, language or religion other than those of the majority of the population, persons belonging to such ethnic, linguistic or religious minorities shall have the right to establish and maintain, out of an equitable proportion of any public funds available for the purpose, their schools and cultural and religious institutions, and to use their own language before the courts and other authorities and organs of the State and in the press and in public assembly.

Article 47

It is the duty of each member State to respect and protect the rights enunciated in this Bill of Rights. The State shall, when necessary, co-operate with other States to that end.

Article 48

The provisions of this International Bill of Rights shall be deemed fundamental principles of international law and of the national law of each of the member States of the United Nations. Their observance is therefore a matter of international concern and it shall be within the jurisdiction of the United Nations to discuss any violation thereof.

E/CN.4/AC.1/4

5 June 1947

Text of Letter from Lord Dukeston,<sup>132</sup> the United Kingdom Representative on the Human Rights Commission, to the Secretary-General of the United Nations

1. I have the pleasure of transmitting to you herewith, to be laid before the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights the following documents:

- (a) A draft International Bill of Human Rights.
- (b) A draft resolution which might be passed by the General Assembly when adopting an International Bill of Rights.

2. It is suggested that the International Bill of Rights should be prepared in the form of an instrument which would be approved by the Assembly and submitted to Governments for accession by members of the United Nations, by states parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice, and by any other state whom the General Assembly of the United Nations shall, by resolution, declare to be eligible. The draft Bill itself requires little explanation. It is intended to contain an enumeration of the Human Rights and fundamental freedoms, provisions as regards execution and enforcement, and certain formal provisions which necessarily accompany the bringing of the Bill into force. The draft Assembly Resolution deals with a number of secondary matters which will assist in the execution of the Bill, but which should be approved in a form which will allow for relatively simple amendment and adaptation. The proposals in the resolution regarding the furnishing of information by signatory States are of considerable importance in this respect.

3. It is understood that the purpose of the Drafting Committee is to produce texts for the consideration of the Human Rights Commission, and that [2] the texts submitted by the Drafting Committee, being the result of the combined efforts of its members working for this purpose, will not bind any delegation which has taken part in the work of the Drafting Committee. In submitting the attached draft Bill and Assembly Resolution the United Kingdom representative is making suggestions for the assistance of the Drafting Committee, and the draft must not be taken as representing the final views of His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom either as regards the provisions which are contained in the United Kingdom drafts or as regards any matters which are not contained in those drafts.

<sup>132</sup> Charles Dukes, a British labour leader who had represented his country at the first session of the Commission, became Baron Dukeston of Warrington on 1 April 1947.

Draft of Resolution of General Assembly when Adopting the International Bill of Rights

I.

1. Whereas it is a purpose of the United Nations to achieve international co-operation as a means of encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion; and

2. Article 13 of the Charter provides that the General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of assisting in the realization of the said human rights and fundamental freedoms;

II.

1. Whereas, in conformity with Article 68 of the Charter, the Economic and Social Council set up a Commission to study and recommend measures for the promotion of human rights: and

2. The said Human Rights Commission has reported and recommended the acceptance by all members of an International Bill of Human Rights;

III.

1. Whereas it is also an aim of the United Nations as defined in its Charter to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural and humanitarian character and to achieve social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom; and

[3]

2. It is through measures taken through the instrumentality of the Economic and Social Council and its organs and through specialized agencies in relationship with the United Nations that the United Nations is seeking to establish international co-operation for the achievement of this aim; and

3. It is through the international co-operation so established that the United Nations can most effectively assist the realization of the right of all persons to work, to education, to social security and similar social and economic rights, which cannot by their nature be defined in the form of legal obligations for states in an instrument such as the International Bill of Rights;

IV.

The General Assembly expresses the opinion that human rights and fundamental freedoms can only be completely assured by the application of the rule of law and by the maintenance in every land of a judiciary, fully independent and safeguarded against all pressure, and that the provisions of an International Bill of Rights cannot be fulfilled unless the sanctity of the home and the privacy of correspondence are generally respected and unless at all trials the rights of the defence are scrupulously respected, including the principle that trials shall be held in public and that every man is presumed innocent until he is proved guilty.

V.

Considering also that the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms will be assisted by full and accurate information on the position in every land with regard to these matters, and that such information should be published by the United Nations under conditions which will best guarantee its objectivity.

The General Assembly entrusts this function to the Commission for Human Rights and requests the Economic and Social Council to reconsider the terms of reference of the said Commission, having regard to the principles and directives set forth in Annex 2.

[4]

VI.

Considering further that it is by defining human rights and fundamental freedoms and placing them under the protection of international law and the guarantee of the United Nations that the dignity and worth of the human person will be best secured.

The General Assembly approves the International Bill of Rights which forms Annex 1 to the present Resolution and recommends that all members should accept the obligations thereof.

[5]

Annex 1

International Bill of Human Rights

Preamble

1. Whereas the peoples of the United Nations have reaffirmed their faith in fundamental human rights and in the dignity and worth of the human person;

2. Whereas it is one of the purposes of the United Nations to achieve international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion;

3. Whereas all men are members of communities and as such have the duty to respect the rights of their fellow men equally with their own;

4. Whereas the just claims of the state, which all men are under a duty to accept, must not prejudice the respect of man's right to freedom and equality before the law and the safeguard of human rights, which are primary and abiding conditions of all just government;

5. Whereas the denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms endangers the general welfare and friendly relations among nations and the enjoyment of such rights and freedoms by all persons must be secured by international law and protected by the organized community of states;

6. Whereas it is expedient to define more exactly the aforesaid human rights and fundamental freedoms and to make provision for their universal observance and protection;

Now therefore the States parties to this International Bill of Rights have accepted the following provisions:

Part I

Article 1

The State parties hereto declare that they recognize the principles set forth in Part II of this Bill as human rights and fundamental freedoms founded on the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations.

[6]

Comment to Article 1

The phrase at the end of this Article comes from Article 38(1)(c) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. This phrase in the Statute of the Court is with justification considered by many commentators to represent the same principle as the phrases "law of nature" and "jus gentium" which play so great a part in the early development of international law. The conceptions both of the "law of nature" and “jus gentium” have also played a considerable part in the conception of the fundamental rights of man.

Article 2

Every state is, by international law, under an obligation to ensure:

- (a) that its laws secure to all persons under its jurisdiction, whether citizens, persons of foreign nationality or stateless, the enjoyment of these human rights and fundamental freedoms:
- (b) that any person whose rights or freedoms are violated should have an effective remedy, notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity:
- (c) that such remedies shall be enforceable by a judiciary whose independence is secured: and
- (d) that its police and executive officers should act in support of the enjoyment of these rights and freedoms.

Comment to Article 2

Proposals that the provisions of the Bill of Rights should be embodied in the constitutions of states parties to the Bill, or otherwise consecrated by special constitutional guarantees, are not practicable for all countries. Some countries, like the United Kingdom, have no rigid constitution and, as a matter of internal law, it is not possible to surround any provision with any special constitutional guarantee. No enactment can be given a greater authority than an Act of Parliament, and one Act of Parliament can repeal any other Act of Parliament. Therefore, the legal provisions which safeguard human rights can only have as their special [7] safeguard the solemn international obligations undertaken in this Bill, together with the firm foundation which these principles have in the deepest convictions of Parliament and the people.

Article 3

On receipt of a request to this effect from the Secretary-General of the United Nations, made under the authority of a resolution of the General Assembly,* the governments of any party to this Bill will supply an explanation, certified by the highest legal authorities of the state concerned, as to the manner in which the law of that state gives effect to any of the said provisions of this Bill of Rights.

Comment to Article 2 (a) and Article 3

The expression “law” is used in this draft as equivalent to the word “droit” that is, anything a court will enforce including statute law, regulations and common or customary law.

Article 4

1. In time of war or other national emergency, a state may take measures derogating from its obligations under Article 2 above to the extent strictly limited by the exigencies of the situation.

2. Any state party hereto availing itself of this right of derogation shall inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations fully of the measures which it has thus enacted and the reasons therefor. It shall also inform him as and when the measures cease to operate and the provisions of Article 2 are being fully executed.

Article 5

A failure by any state party hereto fulfil the obligations under Article 2 is an injury to the community of states and a matter of concern to the United Nations as the community of states organized under the rule of law.

Comment to Article 5

This Article is meant to apply to failures of a substantial

[*] Comment: Section V of the draft resolution to which this Bill is Annex 1 is intended to provide this authority.

[8]

character. It is not intended to apply to failures of a trivial or technical character.

Article 6

1. While declaring their readiness to consider the adoption of further procedures designed to strengthen the international protection of fundamental human rights and freedoms, the states parties hereto accept the right of any of them, acting in the interests of the community of states, to bring to the attention of the General Assembly of the United Nations any violation by any of them of the provisions of this Bill of Rights as constituting a situation likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations amongst nations and as a violation of the purposes and principles of the United Nations within the meaning of Article 14 of the Charter.

2. Any party hereto which is thus alleged to have violated the provisions of this Bill of Rights shall have the right to request the General Assembly to obtain the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice thereon and to refrain from taking any further action on the matter until this opinion has been obtained, and if such a request is made the parties hereto agree that they are bound to support the request.

Comment to Article 6

It would be possible to insert here an additional provision under which all parties to this Bill would agree that in the event of any alleged violation of the Bill being brought before the General Assembly they would support a proposal that the matter should first be considered by a committee composed only of members of the United Nations who are parties to the Bill.

Article 7

The parties hereto agree that anyone of them which is found by a Resolution of the General Assembly adopted by a two-thirds majority [9] persistently to have violated the provisions of this Bill of Rights should be deemed to have violated the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and therefore be liable to expulsion from the organization under Article 6 of the Charter.

Part II

Definition of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms

Article 8

It shall be unlawful to deprive any person of his life save in the execution of the sentence of a court following on his Conviction of a crime for which this penalty is provided by law.

Article 9

1. No form of slavery shall be permitted.
(A text on the subject of compulsory labour will be inserted here later.)

Article 10

1. No person shall be deprived of his liberty save by an arrest which is effected for the purpose of bringing him before a court on a reasonable suspicion of having committed a crime or which is reasonably considered to be immediately necessary to prevent his committing a crime or breach of the peace.
2. Every person arrested and detained shall be brought without delay before a judge who shall either try the case or decide, after hearing evidence, whether there is sufficient case to justify that person's trial and if so whether his liberty shall be restored to him on bail.
3. The period of detention pending trial shall not be unreasonably prolonged.
4. The preceding provisions of this Article do not apply to (i) the lawful detention of a person sentenced after conviction to deprivation of liberty or (ii) lawful detention of persons of unsound mind or (iii) the lawful custody of minors or (iv) the lawful arrest and detention of a person [10] to prevent his effecting an unauthorized entry into the country.

5. Every person who is deprived of his liberty shall have an effective remedy in the nature of “Habeas corpus” by which the lawfulness of his detention shall be decided speedily by a court and his release ordered if the detention is not justified.

6. Every person shall have an enforceable right to compensation in respect of any unlawful arrest or deprivation of liberty.

Article 11

Every person who is not subject to any lawful deprivation of liberty or to any outstanding obligations with regard to national service shall be free to leave any country including his own.

Comment to Article 11

There may also be other outstanding obligations such as those relating to taxation or the maintenance of dependents, of which account should be taken here.

Article 12

No person shall be held guilty of any offence on account of acts or omissions which did not constitute such an offence at the time when they were committed.

Article 13

1. Every person shall be free to hold any religious or other belief dictated by his conscience and to change his belief.

2. Every person shall be free to practise, either alone or in community with other persons of like mind, any form of religious worship and observance, subject only to such restrictions, penalties or liabilities as are strictly necessary to prevent the commission of acts which offend laws passed in the interests of humanity and morals, to preserve public order and to ensure the rights and freedoms of other persons.

[11]

3. Subject only to the same restrictions, every person of full age and sound mind shall be free to give and receive any form of religious teaching and to endeavour to persuade other persons of full age and sound mind of the truth of his beliefs, and in the case of a minor the parent or guardian shall be free to determine what religious teaching he shall receive.

Article 14

1. Every person shall be free to express and publish his ideas orally, in writing, in the form of art, or otherwise.

2. Every person shall be free to receive and disseminate information of all kinds, including both facts, critical comment and ideas by books, newspapers, or oral instruction, and by the medium of all lawfully operated devices.

3. The freedoms of speech and information referred to in the preceding paragraphs of this Article may be subject only to necessary restrictions, penalties or liabilities with regard to: matters which must remain secret in the interests of national safety; publications intended or likely to incite persons to alter by violence the system of Government, or to promote disorder or crime; obscene publications; [publications aimed at the suppression of human rights and fundamental freedoms]; publications injurious to the independence of the judiciary or the fair conduct of legal proceedings; and expressions or publications which libel or slander the reputations of other persons.

Comment to Article 14

The fundamental provisions of the Bill of Rights relating to freedom of speech and information will be completed by other agreements, resulting from the work of the sub-committee on Freedom of Information and the international conference on the subject.

Comment to Article 14 (3)

- (a) The provision in paragraph 3 above, recognizing the right of Governments to impose the necessary restrictions, penalties [12] or liabilities on publications likely or intended to incite persons to alter by violence the system of Government, is to be interpreted as strictly confined to such publications as advocate the use of violence, and does not apply to publications advocating a change of government or of the system of Government by constitutional means.
- (b) Some doubt is felt as to the suitability of the words “publications aimed at the suppression of human rights and fundamental freedoms” from the point of view of drafting. It may be that these words afforded a wider power for the limitation of freedom of publication than is necessary or desirable. On the other hand it may be said that it would be inconsistent for a Bill of Rights whose whole object is to establish human rights and fundamental freedoms to prevent any Government, if it wished to do so, from taking steps against publications whose whole object was to destroy the rights and freedoms which it is the purpose of the Bill to establish. In the last analysis, perhaps, the best definition of a Nazi or Fascist regime is that it is a regime which does not recognize the dignity and worth of the human person and permit individuals to enjoy human rights and fundamental freedoms.
- (c) In any case it will be observed that no Government is obliged by the Bill to make use of the powers of limitation which are provided in paragraph 3.

Article 15

All persons shall have the right to assemble peaceably for any lawful purpose including the discussion of any matter, on which under Article 14 any person has the right to express and publish his ideas. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of this right other than those necessary for the protection of life and property and to prevent disorders, the obstruction of traffic and of the free movement of others.

[13]

Article 16

All persons shall be free to constitute associations, in whatever form may be appropriate under the law of the state, for the promotion and protection of their legitimate interests and of any other lawful object, including the dissemination of all information of which under Article 14 the dissemination is unrestricted. The rights and freedoms set forth in Articles 13 and 14 shall be enjoyed by such associations.

Comment to Article 16

The word “associations” is here used as the widest possible term and is intended to include the creation of entities having juridical personality.

Comment to Part II

This part of this Bill will be completed by provisions prohibiting distinctions based on race, sex, language and religion. No attempt is made to draft these provisions in advance of the reports of the subcommittee on Discrimination and Minorities and also of the Commission on the Status of Women. In any case, Part II as drafted above in fact provides for absence of discrimination seeing that it uses the words “all persons”. (See also Article 2 (a) of Part I: “all persons under its jurisdiction, whether citizens, persons of foreign nationality or stateless”.)

Part III*Article 17*

1. This Bill of Rights is submitted, for the purpose of accession thereto, to every member of the United Nations, to every state party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice and to every other state whom the General Assembly of the United Nations shall, by resolution, declare to be eligible.

2. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument with the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Bill of Rights shall come [14] into force as soon as . . . * states members of the United Nations have deposited such instruments as regards those states and thereafter as regards each party on the date of the deposit of its instrument of accession.

3. Every deposit of an instrument of accession shall be accompanied by a statement that this Bill had been approved in accordance with the constitutional processes of the state concerned for the acceptance of the obligations of a treaty and by a solemn declaration made by the government of the state concerned that full and complete effect to the provisions of Part II is given by the law of that state.

4. The Secretary-General shall inform all members of the United Nations and the other states referred to in paragraph 1 above of the deposit of each instrument of accession.

Article 18

1. Amendments to this Bill of Rights shall come into force when they have been adopted by a vote of two-thirds of the members of the General Assembly of the United Nations and ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two-thirds of the parties to this Bill.

2. When such amendments come into force they shall be binding on those parties which have ratified them, leaving other parties still bound by the provisions of the Bill which they have accepted by accession including earlier amendments which they have ratified.

[*] Comment: The number to be given here should not be less than two-thirds of the members of the United Nations.

[15]

Annex 2

1. All information published by the United Nations relating to human rights should be approved by the Commission for Human Rights before publication. The Commission should be guided in this matter by the principle that accuracy and objectivity in information published is the first essential.

2. Before any information relating to the position in any particular state is published, it should be transmitted to the government of that state which should be given a reasonable time in which to make any comments thereon which it desires. If the government makes any comments and the Commission decides that publication of this information is nevertheless desirable, these comments should be published, together with the information to which they relate.

3. By careful study and selection, the Commission should endeavour to reduce the frequency of the occasions when it transmits information to governments for comments and also the volume thereof.

4. Any explanations transmitted to the Secretary-General under Part 1, Article 3 of the Bill of Rights and information given to the Secretary-General under Article 4(2) will be published automatically. Requests to governments for explanations under Article 3 of Part I shall be made on a decision of the Commission approved by the Economic and Social Council.

5. The Commission should consider the desirability of appointing an expert committee to assist it in the performance of these functions.

Comment on Annex 2

As Section V in the draft Resolution shows, it is proposed to leave to the Economic and Social Council the task of reviewing the terms of reference of the Commission on Human Rights in the light of the provisions of the Bill. Since the first task of the Commission under its existing terms of reference was the preparation of the draft Bill, it is obvious [16] that when the Bill comes into operation, the Commission must act under new terms of reference which will be drawn up having particular regard to the provisions of the Bill. All that the draft Assembly Resolution does is to lay down certain provisions which must in any case be included in the future terms of reference. The Economic and Social Council would have to consider the manner in which petitions on Human Rights questions received by the Secretary-General should be dealt with and whether, and if so under what conditions, they should be passed to the Commission. Experience of the minorities procedure of the League of Nations has shown that this is a question which requires very mature consideration and that inappropriate procedure may tend to damage rather than further the advancement of Human Rights. In any case, it is suggested that provisions on these matters should not be included in the Bill itself, as such provisions should be capable of easy adaptation and amendment.

E/CN.4/AC.1/6

6 June 1947

Communications Received Requesting the Inclusion of Certain Specific Provisions in the International Bill of Rights

Several communications have been received from Non-Governmental Organizations and Individuals requesting that certain specific provisions should be included in the International Bill of Rights. The substance of most of these communications has already been included in the documented outline prepared by the Secretariat. A précis of each communication is given below and the appropriate Article quoted in each case.

The communications are listed under the following headings, subdivided according to the source of the communication: (Non-Governmental Organization or Individual).

1. General Comments
2. Right to Life (Cf. Article 3)
3. Freedom of Movement (Cf. Article 9)
4. Freedom of Conscience and of Religion (Cf. Article 14)
5. Prevention of Discrimination (Cf. Article 45)
6. Women's Rights (Cf. Article 45)
7. Right to a Nationality (Cf. Article 32)

1. General Comments

Communications received from National Non-Governmental Organizations:

United States of America

American Law Institute

Letter, dated 9 May 1946, addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights.

[2]

Subject: Summary of the views of the drafting committee of the Statement of Essential Rights of the American Law Institute emphasizing the importance of having a clear definition of human rights.

Philadelphia Archdiocesan Holy Name Union<sup>133</sup>

Letter, dated 10 March 1947, addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights.

Subject: Resolution emphasizing the importance of drafting a complete and comprehensive Bill of Rights.

<sup>133</sup> The National Association of the Holy Name Society exists in order to promote the mission of the Catholic Church and assist the members of the various Holy Name Societies.

World Citizenship Movement<sup>134</sup>

Letter, undated, addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights.

Subject: Advocation that a World Bill of Rights be adopted soon, guaranteeing to every individual certain basic human rights and suggesting that machinery be set up within the United Nations for its implementation.

2. Right to Life (Article 3)

“Everyone has the right to life. This right can be denied only to persons who have been convicted under general law of some crime to which the death penalty is attached.”

Communications from National Non-Governmental OrganizationsArgentinaComite permanente de Relaciones Espiritualistas<sup>135</sup>

Letter, dated 8 February 1947, addressed to the Secretary-General.

Subject: Request that capital punishment be made unlawful in those countries where it still exists as any form of violent death is un-Christian.

3. Freedom of Movement (Article 9)

“Subject to any general law adopted in the interest of national welfare or security, there shall be liberty of movement and free choice [3] of residence within the borders of each State.”

Communications received from Individuals.In the United States of America

Letter, dated 4 August 1946, from Evanston, Illinois, addressed to Dr. J. Humphrey, Director of the Division of Human Rights.

Subject: Request that a “fifth freedom”, the freedom of migration be granted to citizens of all nations.

Letter, dated 9 January 1947, from Minnesota, addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights.

<sup>134</sup> The World Citizenship Movement advocated for world or international citizenship, rather than national citizenship. From 1 January 1949 to 1 January 1951, the World Citizenship Movement gained the support of over 750,000 individuals from 150 different countries who declared world citizenship.

<sup>135</sup> The Comite Permanente de Relaciones Espirituales (Permanent Committee on Spiritual Relations) is a South American Christian organization based in Argentina.

Subject: Suggestion that freedom of movement should be included in the Bill of Rights, with special emphasis on the right of any individual to emigrate from a country where conditions have become unbearable to him.

4. Freedom of Conscience and Religion (Article 14)

“There shall be freedom of conscience and belief, and of private and public religious worship.”

Communications received from International Non-Governmental Organizations

Commission of the Churches on International Affairs<sup>136</sup>

Letter, dated 4 March 1947, addressed to Dr. Humphrey, Director, Human Rights Division.

Subject: Expression of the desire of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs to co-operate with the Human Rights Commission in drafting the Bill of Rights.

Enclosure: Memorandum on Provisions for Religious Liberty in an International Bill of Rights.

Religious liberty should be interpreted in the International Bill of Rights to include all the rights and freedoms necessary to the full exercise of religion, either by a detailed statement enumerating all the rights and freedoms pertaining to religion, or by a broad statement wherein their [4] recognition will be understood by implication.

The Bill of Rights should indicate further the relationship between provisions relating specifically to religious liberty, and provisions for such other rights and freedoms as are significant for the exercise of religious liberty.

References are given from the reports of conferences of the World Council of Churches<sup>137</sup> and the International Missionary Council,<sup>138</sup> and from the Statement on Religious Liberty, adopted by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America<sup>139</sup> and the Foreign Conference of North America.<sup>140</sup>

<sup>136</sup> The Commission of the Churches on International Affairs, founded in 1946, offers advice on policy and peace-making efforts with regards to religious conflict and the intersection of religion and political affairs. It is comprised of experts in the field of religion nominated by churches and ecumenical organizations, and meets every eighteen months to review policy and current global issues.

<sup>137</sup> The World Council of Churches is a fellowship of 349 churches whose mission is to foster Christian unity, as well as support and promote service, evangelism and worship.

<sup>138</sup> The International Missionary Council, founded in 1921, is a movement associated with the World Council of Churches whose main focus is promoting the Christian mission.

<sup>139</sup> The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America was an official federation of several evangelical Protestant churches in the United States existing between 1894 and 1952.

<sup>140</sup> The Foreign Missions Conference of North America, existing from 1887 to 1951, was a voluntary cooperative association of various mission boards of Canada and the United States.

War Resisters' International<sup>141</sup>

Letter, dated 25 March 1947, addressed to the Secretariat of the Commission on Human Rights.

Subject: Plea for the inclusion of a specific provision in the International Bill of Rights relating to conscientious objectors, granting the right to refuse military service in obedience to conscience.

Communications received from Individuals*In the United States of America*

Letter, dated 23 December 1946, from Andover, Massachusetts, addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights.

Subject: Suggestion that in the Bill of Rights the rights of free thinkers should be protected. This protection should be in the form of an explicit declaration guaranteeing rights to free thinkers and anti-supernaturalism equal to those granted to religious persons and religion.

5. Prevention of Discrimination (Article 45)

No one shall suffer any discrimination whatsoever because of race, sex, language, religion, or political creed. There shall be full equality [5] before the law in the enjoyment of the rights enunciated in this Bill of Rights.

Communications received from Non-Governmental Organizations*International OrganizationsNordic Authors' Conference*<sup>142</sup>

Letter, dated 30 November 1946, addressed to the Secretary-General.

Subject: Support for those clauses of the draft declaration on an international Bill of Rights submitted by the Delegations of Panama, Cuba, India, which deal with racial persecution and national and religious persecution.

National Organizations*ArgentinaHebrew Society of Argentina*

Cable, dated 7 November 1946, addressed to M. Spaak, President of the General Assembly.

<sup>141</sup> War Resisters International is a network of independent organizations founded in 1921 under the name "Paco". Its activities include the promotion of non-violent action against the causes of war and various publications offering news and information on non-violence.

<sup>142</sup> The Nordic Authors Conference falls under the umbrella of The Nordic Writers Guild. Founded in 1941, it was developed as an antifascist front.

Subject: Request that the United Nations should adopt an international convention declaring racial and anti-semitic demonstrations and all activities harmful to religious freedom, criminal and punishable.

6. Women's Rights (Article 45 See above paragraph 5)

Communications received from International Non-Governmental Organizations

Liaison Committee of Women's International Organizations<sup>143</sup>

Letter, dated 7 February 1947, addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights.

Subject: Request that "equality of persons of both sexes" be included in the Bill of Rights.

Expression of the hope that the opinion of the Liaison Committee and its affiliated Organizations will be considered by the Drafting Committee.

[6]

St. Joan's Social and Political Alliance<sup>144</sup>

Memorandum, dated 26 April 1947, submitted to the Commission on Human Rights.

Subject: Request that the following points specifically relating to women's rights be included in the Bill of Rights.

1. No child or woman, whatever her race, shall be treated as a chattel to be sold by her father or alleged proprietor.

2. Every woman shall be permitted to choose her own partner in life despite any contract entered into in her name by any other person.

3. No marriage contract shall be made for any girl under fourteen, nor for any woman over fourteen without her consent.

4. There shall be no lending out of wives under any pretext.

5. Widows shall not be inherited. They should be free to dispose of themselves and their children as they think fit, remain with the husband's family, go back to their own, be independent, or remarry.

<sup>143</sup> The Liaison Committee of Women's International Organizations (1925–1945) was a cooperation of international women's organizations designed to monitor and promote the appointment of women in the United Nations and more generally the influence of women in international affairs.

<sup>144</sup> St. Joan's International Alliance (formerly St. Joan's Political and Social Alliance) was founded in 1936 as a Catholic organization committed to promoting gender equality in the social, economic and political arenas.

Women's International League for Peace and Freedom<sup>145</sup>

(United States Section)

Telegram, addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights.

Subject: Expression of the hope that “equality of the sexes” will be included as a specific provision in all declarations or other actions of the Commission.

7. Right to a Nationality (Article 32)

“Everyone has the right to a nationality.

Everyone is entitled to the nationality of the State where he is born unless and until on attaining majority he declares for the nationality [7] open to him by virtue of descent.

No one shall be deprived of his nationality by way of punishment or be deemed to have lost his nationality in any other way unless he concurrently acquires a new nationality.

Everyone has the right to renounce the nationality of his birth, or a previously acquired nationality, upon acquiring the nationality of another State.”

Communications received from Individuals*In the United States of America*

Letter, dated 16 February 1947, from Hartford, Connecticut, addressed to the Commission on Human Rights.

Subject: Request that the Bill of Rights should include a provision for freedom of nationality, for the protection of stateless persons. Individuals living without a national status are very often forgotten in declarations on human rights.

E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.2*9 June 1947*Plan of the Draft Outline of an International Bill of Rights (Prepared by the Secretariat)

[2–3]

- Preamble –
- Preliminary articles –
  - Article 1 – Duties towards Society –
  - Article 2 – Limitation of Rights –

<sup>145</sup> The Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, founded in 1915, works to promote disarmament, peace and equality on an international level.

Chapter I – Liberties –

- 1 – Right to life and physical integrity of the person –
    - Article 3 – Right to life –
    - Article 4 – No torture, cruelty or indignity –
  - 2 – Liberty of the person –
    - Article 5 – Principle –
    - Article 6 – Need for judgment of a court of law –
    - Article 7 – Protection against arbitrary arrest –
    - Article 8 – Prohibition of slavery and compulsory labour –
    - Article 9 – Liberty of movement within the borders of the State –
    - Article 10 – Freedom of emigration and expatriation –
    - Article 11 – Liberty of and respect for private life –
  - 3 – Civil status –
    - Article 12 – Right to possess a legal personality and to exercise civil rights –
  - 4 – Marriage –
    - Article 13 – Right to contract marriage –
  - 5 – Public liberties –
    - Article 14 – Freedom of conscience and freedom of religion –
    - Article 15 – Freedom of opinion –
    - Article 16 – Freedom of access to all sources of information –
    - Article 17 – Freedom of speech and freedom of expression –
    - Article 18 – Duty to present information fairly and impartially –
    - Article 19 – Freedom of Assembly –
    - Article 20 – Freedom of association –
    - Article 21 – Freedom of instruction –
- [4–5]
- 6 – Right of property –
    - Article 22 – The right – its limits –
  - 7 – Taxation and public charges –
    - Article 23 – Principle –
  - 8 – Freedom of access to professions –
    - Article 24 – Principle –
  - 9 – Legal principles –
    - Article 25 – Everything not prohibited by law is permitted –
    - Article 26 – Penalties –
      - Necessity of a judgment –
      - Principle of non-retroactivity –

- 10 – Remedies –
 Article 27 – Access to Courts –
 Article 28 – Right of petition –
 Article 29 – Right to resist oppression –
- 11 – Political Rights –
 Article 30 – Right to take part in the government of the State –
 Democracy –
 Article 31 – Right of access to public office –
- 12 – Nationality –
 Article 32 – Right to a nationality –
 No loss of nationality without acquiring a new one –
 Right to renounce nationality –
- 13 – Aliens –
 Article 33 – No arbitrary expulsion –
 Article 34 – Right of asylum –

Chapter II – Social Rights –

- Article 35 – Right to health –
 Article 36 – Right to education –
 Article 37 – Right to work –
 Article 38 – Right to good working conditions –
 Article 39 – Right to an equitable share of the national income –
 Article 40 – Compensation for family responsibilities –

[6–7]

- Article 41 – Right to social security –
 Article 42 – Right to food and housing –
 Article 43 – Right to rest and leisure –
 Article 44 – Right to participate in cultural, scientific and artistic life –

Chapter III – Equality –

- Article 45 – No discrimination –
 Article 46 – Right of minorities to maintain special institutions with State aid –

Chapter IV – General dispositions –

- Article 47 – Duty of the State to respect and protect the rights enumerated –
 Article 48 – Observance of these rights is a matter of international concern –

E/CN.4/AC.1/5

9 June 1947

Proposal Submitted by the French Delegation to the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights

Whereas the Charter of the United Nations provides in Article 55 that the United Nations “shall promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion”;

Whereas the General Assembly of the United Nations on 29 January<sup>146</sup> instructed the Commission on Human Rights to apply those principles, in particular by the preparation of a Bill of human rights;

Whereas, without formulating abstract and philosophical conceptions on the international plane, it appears relatively easy to find in the national systems in force the concrete rights that are generally recognized;

Whereas it also appears possible and necessary to supplement such a list by a certain number of rights, which, owing to their international character, are not at present sanctioned by municipal legislation, but are called for by the progress of international law (right to a nationality, rights of foreigners);

Whereas future negotiations should make it possible to complete later the list of such rights and liberties, the observance of which will also have to be ensured;

The Commission on Human Rights proposes that a resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations should note, on the one hand, the fundamental human rights which form part of the general principles [2] of law recognized by civilized nations, and should recognize, on the other, certain international human rights which can be accepted by civilized nations immediately; and that the General Assembly of 1947 instruct the Commission on Human Rights to study the constitution of an appropriate international organ with a view to ensuring effective observance of those rights.

E/CN.4/AC.1/7

9 June 1947

General Observations Made by Various Members of the Commission on Human Rights Concerning the Form and Content of the International Bill of Rights

- I. The Constitutions of Member States Should be Taken into Account
- II. The Bill Should be Acceptable to ALL Members of the United Nations

<sup>146</sup> This reference is erroneous, because no General Assembly resolution was adopted on 29 January. Presumably, the reference is to General Assembly Resolution 43(I), adopted 11 December 1946.

- III. The Bill Should be Short, Simple, Easy to Understand and Expressive
- IV. It Should be a Reaffirmation of the Most Elementary Rights
- V. The Classification of the Provisions of the Bill

In drawing up its preliminary draft Bill, the Secretariat felt that the observations made by various Members of the Commission on Human Rights should be noted, especially when these observations had not raised any objections from other Members.

Points raised during the discussion may be grouped under five general headings.

I. The Constitutions of Member States Should be Taken into Account

1. MR. DEL RIO (Chile)

“The Chilean representative deems convenient that the drafting group consult the Constitutions of all the Member States of the United Nations for examination of the rights and liberties actually enjoyed by its citizens and alien residents.”*

MR. TEPLIAKOV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics)

“I just want to support the suggestion of the Chilean representative and will say that this drafting group on the bill of rights will consult the national Constitutions. . . .”**

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st Session – 13th Meeting – p. E-102.<sup>147</sup>

[**] H.R. Com. – 1st Session – 13th Meeting – p. E-103.

[2]

2. The Secretariat has examined the Constitutions of all the Member States of the United Nations and extracted therefrom all those provisions relating to human rights which correspond to the various articles of its draft.

In drawing up its draft, the Secretariat has taken into account the form of the various national Bills of Rights. In spite of differences these present, on the whole, a certain unity.

The Drafting Committee can, of course, change this form and adopt a more original one; but in the first instance, it seemed proper that the Secretariat should present its Draft in a familiar form.

The Secretariat has also taken into account the draft international bills presented to the Commission on Human Rights by governments.

II. The Bill Should be Acceptable to All Members of the United Nations

1. GENERAL ROMULO (Philippines)

. . . “We are to frame an international bill of rights, acceptable to and binding upon all the States Members of the United Nations, a herculean task of compromise and agreement. . . .”*

<sup>147</sup> This and subsequent references are to a verbatim record of the first session of the Commission on Human Rights. The verbatim record was not issued as an official document.

2. Unless the Member Governments agree on the draft finally accepted by the Commission, the General Assembly will not adopt the Bill. Such agreement depends upon political considerations beyond the province of the Secretariat. The duty of the Secretariat in the matter was limited to the preparation of a draft which would serve as a basis for discussion. It has attempted to perform its duty in such a way, however, that points of agreement and disagreement will be clearly visible. In this way, it will be possible to see general agreement on certain points, and on others, either to find a compromise acceptable to all, or to decide on their omission.

The Secretariat has adopted the following method:

1. All provisions requested by Members of the Human Rights Commission have been included. The principal provisions relating to human rights contained in the majority of the national constitutions have also been included. The inclusion of these provisions does not mean necessarily that they should be retained in the international bill of rights, but they will provide a basis for discussion.

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st Session – 9th Meeting – V.R. – p. 12

[3]

2. The views of Governments will probably differ on some of the provisions in the Draft, e.g. in those relating to the right of property, and the freedom of access to professions. The different points of view might have been expressed in several draft articles. Thus MR. CASSIN (France) who contemplated this procedure, said:

“One might suppose that in the course of work, directives given by the Commission might be found insufficient and that one might be facing two or three possible or contradictory suggestions. In such case the duty of loyalty of our drafters would be to prepare alternative texts. . .”*

In drawing up the Draft, however, the Secretariat felt that it should present only one draft which could perhaps reconcile the various points of view, it being always understood of course that the purpose of the Secretariat draft is merely to serve as a basis for discussion.

III. The Bill Should be Short, Simple, Easy to Understand and Expressive

Several Members said that the Declaration should possess one or other of the above qualities.

MRS. MEHTA (India)

“Such a bill of human rights must be a simple, forthright document which is easily understood. . .”**

MR. CASSIN (France)

“The Bill of Rights should for the present be in the form of a resolution, which would be sent to the General Assembly rather than in the form of a complete code with all the laws which that embodies. . .

. . . We need a certain ideal, and that I think would be diminished if there were too great an enumeration of all the various details.”***

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st Session – 11th Meeting – p. 31

[**] H.R. Com. – 2nd Meeting – V.R. – p. 23–27 January 1947

[***] H.R. Com. – 8th Meeting – V.R. – p. 82–31 January 1947

[4]

MR. MALIK (Lebanon)

“ . . . We require, I submit, the sensitive insight of the poet, the prophet, the philosopher; and I hope we shall call in these types of minds to aid us in our important enterprise. If only jurists and politicians and diplomats work out this Bill, I am afraid it will come out a distorted thing: it will lack vision and unity; it will lack sweeping simplicity. Vision and sensitiveness belong pre-eminently to the prophet, unity to the philosopher, simplicity to the poet.”*

MR. OSMAN EBEID (Egypt)

“It seems to be advisable that an International Bill of Rights should not go into too much detail which may make it senseless, as our colleague from the Soviet Union rightfully pointed out this morning. . .

Legislation which contains repetitions that can be avoided is always considered bad legislation. . .

I hope that the expected Bill of Rights will be immune from attacks and that we will try to make it precise accurate and confined to the broad outlines by which contradictions can be avoided.”**

So that its Draft might be short and simple, the Secretariat has not included rules of procedure contained in the various national constitutions, but has limited itself to general principles. So that its Draft should be easy to understand the Secretariat has drafted short articles, each article dealing with one or few specific points. There are forty-eight articles. It may be assumed that some articles, which were included in order to cover the whole field of human rights and freedoms, will not be adopted; and some articles will probably be combined when agreement has been reached on their contents. In that event there would be less than forty-eight articles.

It should be noted that certain articles which have no place in a national bill of rights have been included in the draft of the International Bill, e.g. Article 32, which affirms the right to possess a nationality.

The Secretariat has attempted to use language which is as simple as possible and at the same time consistent with the formal and legal character of the document.

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st Session – 9th Meeting – V. R – p. 31

[**] H.R. Com. – 1st Session – 14th Meeting. – p. E-4

[5]

It was difficult to introduce colourful and expressive language into the body of the Bill, but the Preamble may offer an opportunity for this.

IV. It Should be a Reaffirmation of the Most Elementary Rights

MR. CASSIN (France)

“...I believe that the simplest rights should be reaffirmed here...”

“...If you do not speak of fundamental things now, the temptation to speak of details will arise...”*

The Secretariat endeavoured to comply with this suggestion, e.g. the right to life is affirmed in Article 3. This right is not specifically mentioned in most national constitutions.

The right to possess a legal personality is affirmed in Article 12, the right to contract marriage in Article 13, the principle that everything not prohibited by law is permitted in Article 25, etc.

The affirmation of these principles might be of little interest for advanced countries, but it is useful to include them in an international bill of rights, because in certain countries there still remain vestiges of tribal or feudal systems that are incompatible with fundamental human rights.

V. The Classification of the Provisions of the Bill

MR. CASSIN (France)

approves “the classification of rights...by the ideas to which they pertain, the rights classified according to the idea of freedoms, rights according to the conceptions of equality, and rights according to the conception of security.”**

Some discussion arose in the Commission on Human Rights concerning the classification of the Rights. The distinction between rights relating to personal freedom, rights relating to social security and the right to equality was, it seems, unanimously accepted. It was generally agreed, however, that the right to equality should not occupy the first place.

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st Session – 13th Meeting – p. E-95

[**] H.R. Com. – 1st Session – 8th Meeting. – V.R. – p. 81

[6]

The Draft drawn up by the Secretariat is not divided into chapters or sections. However, the arrangement of the articles follows a certain order.

First: there are two preliminary articles (Articles 1 and 2).

Secondly: the articles concerning “Liberties” (Articles 3 to 34).

Thirdly: the articles concerning “Social Rights” (Articles 35 to 44).

Fourthly: two articles corresponding to the idea of equality (Articles 45 and 46).

Fifthly: some general dispositions (Articles 47 and 48).

This order can easily be changed. For example, the Social Rights could be placed before liberties. This is a political and not a technical question.

Special care was taken in the grouping of the articles within the above general categories. For example, Articles 5 to 11 deal with liberty of the individual; Articles 14 to 21 public liberties; Articles 27, 28 and 29 remedies; Articles 30 and 31 political rights.

E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.1

9 June 1947<sup>148</sup>

Summary Record of the First Meeting [of the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Monday, 9 June 1947
at 11:00 a.m.

Present: Col. William R. Hodgson (Australia), Mr. H. Santa Cruz (Chile), Dr. P. C. Chang (China), Prof. René Cassin (France), Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon), Mr. G. Wilson,<sup>149</sup> (United Kingdom), Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States of America), Mr. V. Koretsky<sup>150</sup> (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics). Specialized Agencies: Mr. Havet (UNESCO). Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Toni Sender (American Federation of Labor), Mrs. Fuhrman (International Cooperative Alliance). Secretariat: Mr. Henri Laugier (Assistant Secretary-General for Social Affairs), Prof. J. P. Humphrey (Secretary of the Committee).

1. Opening of the Session

The meeting was called to order by MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT, Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, who announced that Mr. Felix Nieto Del Rio of Chile, Lord Dukeston of the United Kingdom, and Mr. V. F. Tepliakov of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics were not present, but that they would be represented by Mr. H. Santa Cruz, Mr. G. Wilson and Mr. V. Koretsky respectively. Mr. Morgan,

<sup>148</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 10 June 1947.

<sup>149</sup> Geoffrey Masterman Wilson (1910–2004) represented the United Kingdom during the first and second sessions of the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights. He became Vice-President of the World Bank in 1961 and served as deputy secretary of the Ministry of Overseas Development in 1966. Wilson was part of the United Kingdom delegation at the Yalta Conference. According to his obituary in The Telegraph, “[s]eated directly behind Churchill, Wilson’s role was to take the minutes at the plenary meetings and periodically to empty Churchill’s ashtray of cigar butts.”

<sup>150</sup> Vladimir M. Koretsky replaced V.F. Tepliakov as delegate for the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Drafting Committee. He was a judge on the International Court of Justice from 1961 to 1970 and its vice-president from 1967 to 1970.

she stated, would represent Mr. Wilson, who was [2] delayed, temporarily, as an observer.

Mrs. Roosevelt stated that she was of the opinion that it might be very difficult for the Drafting Committee to complete a perfect draft of an International Bill of Human Rights, either as to substance or as to style, during its two-week session. She reminded the delegates that the draft Bill of Human Rights would have to be considered on six separate occasions, after it was completed by the Drafting Committee, before it could be considered final. She mentioned that her Government had considered submitting a draft Bill but had decided not to do so because it felt that it would be better for the Drafting Committee to work from the documented outline prepared by the Secretariat. She suggested that the first thing to be done was to reach agreement on the rights to be included in the draft Bill, and the definitions of those rights. Because of the preliminary nature of the Drafting Committee's work, she proposed that it be understood that no agreement reached in the Drafting Committee be considered as irrevocably binding the Governments represented there, as these Governments might wish to reconsider various parts of the draft at a later date.

2. Election of Officers

COL. HODGSON (Australia) referred to the decision of the Commission on Human Rights, that its officers, Mrs. Roosevelt (Chairman), Dr. Chang (Vice-Chairman), and Dr. Malik (Rapporteur) should undertake, with the assistance of the Secretariat, the task of formulating a preliminary draft of an International Bill of Human Rights. He suggested that the officers of the Drafting Committee be the same as those of the Commission on Human Rights.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) supported the motion, and stated that in his opinion it was the intention of the Economic and Social Council that these members of the Commission should continue to act in their respective capacities on the Drafting Committee.

[3]

Decision: As there were no other nominations, the officers of the Commission on Human Rights were automatically elected as officers of the Drafting Committee.

3. Adoption of Provisional Agenda (Document E/CN.4/AC.1)

DR. CHANG (China) moved the adoption of the provisional agenda as the agenda of the Drafting Committee. PROF. CASSIN (France) supported the motion. COL. HODGSON (Australia) pointed out that the question of implementation was not on the provisional agenda. He said that he felt that the Drafting Committee was obliged, under the resolution relating to implementation adopted by the Commission on Human Rights, to study this question.

THE CHAIRMAN explained that although the question of implementation did not appear on the provisional agenda, that did not mean that the subject would be ruled out entirely from consideration by the Drafting Committee. She stated that in her opinion the Drafting Committee's first objective was to come to an agreement on what should be included in the Bill in the way of rights and that then the question of implementation might be taken up and considered very carefully. COL. HODGSON (Australia) stated his willingness to vote for the adoption of the provisional agenda subject to the reservation that later, if time and opportunity permitted, he might raise the question of implementation although it did not appear on the agenda.

Decision: Without objection the provisional agenda was adopted unanimously as the agenda of the Drafting Committee.

4. Adoption of Rules of Procedure

THE CHAIRMAN proposed that the Drafting Committee adopt the Rules of Procedure of the Commission on Human Rights.

MR. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) did not object to the adoption of these rules but reserved the right, if necessary, to make any other observations in the future since he had had no time to study the document containing the rules of procedure. PROF. CASSIN (France) supported this point of view. DR. MALIK (Lebanon) moved that the Drafting [4] Committee adopt the Rules of Procedure of the Commission on Human Rights.

Decision: Without objection, the Rules of Procedure of the Commission on Human Rights were adopted with the reservations made by the representatives of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and France.

5. Review of Terms of Reference

At the request of the Chairman, PROF. HUMPHREY (Secretariat) read the resolution of the Economic and Social Council on the drafting of an International Bill of Human Rights (Document E/CN.4/AC.1/2, pages 6 and 7), and explained that the terms of reference of the Committee would be found within the body of that resolution. PROF. CASSIN (France) moved that the terms of reference be accepted.

Decision: Without objection, the terms of reference were accepted.

6. Preparation of a Preliminary Draft of an International Bill of Human Rights on the Basis of Documentation Supplied by the Secretariat

THE CHAIRMAN enumerated the documents which had been prepared by the Secretariat or submitted by the members. She suggested that most of the members of the Drafting Committee would prefer to have time to study these documents.

COL. HODGSON (Australia) asked for an explanation of the documented outline prepared by the Secretariat, particularly as to the contents of the document and the principles followed in its compilation. PROF. HUMPHREY stated that Document E/CN.4/AC.1/3 contained the draft outline of an International Bill of Human Rights, in English and in French, as prepared by the Secretariat. Document E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.1 he said contained the documented outline of the Bill.

THE CHAIRMAN wondered whether the Secretariat had compared the documents submitted by France and by the United Kingdom with the suggested Secretariat outline. PROF. HUMPHREY explained that since the French and British papers had been received only a few days prior to the meeting of the Drafting Committee there had not been sufficient time to prepare a comparison. He stated that the Division of Human Rights would undertake [5] this task immediately.

COL. HODGSON addressed a further question to the Secretary of the Commission regarding the principles adopted and the philosophy behind the draft outline submitted by the Secretariat. MR. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) stated that in his opinion any discussion of the documents should be postponed for a reasonable period of time in order that the members might study the documents and be in a position to discuss them. He proposed that the meetings of the Drafting Committee be postponed for two or three days in order to give the members an opportunity to study the documents and to prepare concrete proposals relating to them.

THE CHAIRMAN asked the Secretary of the Committee to reply to the question of the representative of Australia and stated that after his answer had been given the Committee could then decide how long would be required for the members to make themselves familiar with the documentation. PROF. HUMPHREY (Secretariat), in reply to the question which has been addressed by the representative of Australia, stated that the Secretariat had prepared a paper explaining the procedure followed by the Secretariat in drawing up its documented outline (Document E/CN.4/AC.1/7). This paper, he stated, contained no statement about the philosophy on which the Secretariat document was based because this document had not been based on any philosophy. The Secretariat, he explained, had merely prepared an outline to serve as a basis for the discussion of the Drafting Committee. In doing so it had attempted to include all of the rights mentioned in various national Constitutions and in various suggestions for an International Bill of Human Rights.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that the Secretariat draft outline was not a proposed Bill of Human Rights, but simply a working document on the basis of which the Drafting Committee hoped to prepare a preliminary draft bill for the consideration of the Commission on Human Rights.

[6]

THE CHAIRMAN asked each member of the Committee to state how long he felt the Committee should adjourn in order that they might consider the documentation. PROF. CASSIN (France) felt that the Committee might resume work on Wednesday morning. In that time, he said, the Committee might begin to discuss the plan of the draft Bill of Rights. If a plan to be followed could be agreed upon immediately, he felt that the Committee might then undertake to consider the Preamble. He suggested that after a general discussion on the contents of the Preamble, a Sub-Committee might be appointed to consider the wording of the Preamble while the full Committee discussed the substance of the remainder of the bill.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) stated that he thought that by Wednesday the members of the Committee should be prepared to proceed with the work and carry it through. COL. HODGSON (Australia) asked for a clarification of the programme of work proposed for the Drafting Committee. THE CHAIRMAN replied that as she recollected Prof. Cassin had proposed that the Committee meet again on Wednesday morning, by which time its members should have considered the subject matter in the documentation. The members would not be expected, by Wednesday morning, to have reached decisions as to each specific item to be included in the Bill. They would come, however, prepared to discuss and if possible to reach a conclusion as to the exact form of the bill. On Wednesday, also, she added, a Sub-Committee could be appointed which would begin to write a general Preamble with the intention of bringing it to the full Committee for discussion at a later date. The Drafting Committee would then go ahead with the work of deciding on specific items to be included in the bill and on the method of grouping these items.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) stated that the suggestion of beginning with the preamble worried him slightly. In his opinion, he stated, the preamble should come last in the logical sequence of construction, and [7] should be formulated only after the Committee had the concrete articles of the bill before it.

THE CHAIRMAN agreed that the preamble should be decided upon after the remainder of the draft bill had been agreed upon, but she pointed out that all Prof. Cassin had suggested was that a Committee be appointed on Wednesday. That Committee would consider the preamble and would be prepared to bring in a draft at the appropriate time. PROF. CASSIN agreed with this interpretation. DR. CHANG (China) agreed to postpone the second meeting of the Committee until Wednesday. DR. MALIK (Lebanon) also stated that in his opinion Wednesday was the right day. However, he did not believe that a final programme of work for Wednesday could be decided at that time. He stated that in his opinion any decision as to such a programme of work ought to be tentative and open to reconsideration.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that a majority of the members of the Committee had agreed that its second meeting should be held on Wednesday morning. She suggested that all morning sessions be held at 10:30 a.m. and all afternoon sessions at 2:30 p.m. A vote of the members of the Committee indicated that a majority were in favour of beginning work at 10:30 a.m. and ending at 1:00 p.m.; beginning again at 2:30 p.m. and ending at 5:00 p.m. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) who had just taken his place at the Committee table stated that the programme and schedule as adopted by the Committee was convenient for him.

THE CHAIRMAN summarized the general feeling of the Committee that its members would like to have until Wednesday morning at 10:30 a.m. to consider the various documents which had been distributed. She stated that the consensus of opinion was in line with the suggestion of Prof. Cassin, that on Wednesday morning the members should have in mind a plan for setting up the proposed first draft. Before Wednesday each was to go through the documented outline, indicate points on which they felt there might be agreement, and put them into categories. After the items [8] which could be agreed upon were disposed of, the members of the Committee might then take up the controversial questions and decide what agreement could be reached on them. The Chairman also stated the consensus of opinion that a Sub-Committee should be appointed early in the session so that its members would be aware that they must think about the Preamble, even though they might not be able to present their draft until the end of the session.

The meeting adjourned at 12:30 p.m.

E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.3

10 June 1947

Textual Comparison of the Draft International Bill of Human Rights submitted by the Delegation of the United Kingdom to the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights, and the Draft Outline of an International Bill of Rights. (Prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

[2]

Preamble (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

The Preamble shall refer to the four freedoms and to the provisions of the Charter relating to human rights and shall enunciate the following principles:

1. that there can be no peace unless human rights and freedoms are respected;
2. that man does not have rights only; he owes duties to the society of which he forms part;
3. that man is a citizen both of his State and of the world;
4. that there can be no human freedom or dignity unless war and the threat of war are abolished.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Preamble

1. Whereas the peoples of the United Nations have reaffirmed their faith in fundamental human rights and in the dignity and worth of the human person;

2. Whereas it is one of the purposes of the United Nations to achieve international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion;

3. Whereas all men are members of communities and as such have the duty to respect the rights of their fellow men equally with their own;

4. Whereas the just claims of the state, which all men are under a duty to accept, must not prejudice the respect of man's right to freedom and equality before the law and the safeguard of human rights, which are primary and abiding conditions of all just government;

5. Whereas the denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms endangers the general welfare and friendly relations among nations and the enjoyment of such rights and freedoms by all persons must be secured by international law and protected by the organized community of states;

6. Whereas it is expedient to define more exactly the aforesaid human [3] rights and fundamental freedoms and to make provision for their universal observance and protection.

Now therefore the States parties to this International Bill of Rights have accepted the following provisions:

... Article 3 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

Everyone has the right to life. This right can be denied only to persons who have been convicted under general law of some crime to which the death penalty is attached.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part II – Article 8

It shall be unlawful to deprive any person of his life save in the execution of the sentence of a court following on his conviction of a crime for which this penalty is provided by law.

... Article 6 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

No one shall be deprived of his personal liberty save by a judgment of a court of law, in conformity with the law and after a fair public trial at which he has had an opportunity for a full hearing, or pending his trial which must take place within a reasonable time after his arrest. Detention by purely executive order shall be unlawful except in time of national emergency.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part II – Article 10

1. No person shall be deprived of his liberty save by an arrest which is affected for the purpose of bringing him before a court on a reasonable suspicion of having committed a crime or which is reasonably considered to be immediately necessary to prevent his committing a crime or breach of the peace.

2. Every person arrested and detained shall be brought without delay before a judge, who shall either try the case or decide, after hearing evidence, whether there is sufficient cause to justify that person's trial and if so whether his liberty shall be restored to him on bail.

[4]

3. The period of detention pending trial shall not be unreasonably prolonged.

4. The preceding provisions of this Article do not apply to (i) the lawful detention of a person sentenced after conviction to deprivation of liberty or (ii) lawful detention of persons of unsound mind or (iii) the lawful custody of minors or (iv) the lawful arrest and detention of a person to prevent his affecting an unauthorized entry into the country.

5. Every person who is deprived of his liberty shall have an effective remedy in the nature of "Habeas corpus" by which the lawfulness of his detention shall be decided speedily by a court and his release ordered if the detention is not justified.

... Article 7 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

Everyone shall be protected against arbitrary and unauthorized arrest. He shall have the right to immediate judicial determination of the legality of any detention to which he may be subject.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part II – Article 10

Paragraph 6. Every person shall have an enforceable right to compensation in respect of any unlawful arrest or deprivation of liberty.

... Article 8 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

Slavery and compulsory labour are inconsistent with the dignity of man and therefore prohibited by this Bill of Rights. But a man may be required to perform his just share of any public service that is equally incumbent upon all, and his right to a livelihood is conditioned by his duty to work. Involuntary servitude may also be imposed as part of a punishment pronounced by a court of law.

[5]

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part II – Article 9

No form of slavery shall be permitted.

(A text on the subject of compulsory labour will be inserted here later.)

... Article 10 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

The right of emigration and expatriation shall not be denied.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part II – Article 11

Every person who is not subject to any lawful deprivation of liberty or to any outstanding obligations with regard to national service shall be free to leave any country including his own.

Comment to Article 11

There may also be other outstanding obligations such as those relating to taxation or the maintenance of dependents, of which account should be taken here.

... Article 14 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

There shall be freedom of conscience and belief and of private and public religious worship.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part II – Article 13

1. Every person shall be free to hold any religious or other belief dictated by his conscience and to change his belief.

2. Every person shall be free to practise, either alone or in community with other persons of like mind, any form of religious worship and observance, subject only to such restrictions, penalties or liabilities as are strictly necessary to prevent the commission of acts which offend laws passed in the interests of humanity and morals, to preserve public order and to ensure the rights and freedoms of other persons.

3. Subject only to the same restrictions, every person of full age and sound mind shall be free to give and receive any form of religious teaching and to endeavour to persuade other persons of full age and sound mind the truth of his beliefs, and in the case of a minor the parent or guardian shall be free [6] to determine what religious teaching he shall receive.

... Article 16 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

There shall be free and equal access to all sources of information both within and beyond the borders of the State.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part II – Article 14

Paragraph 2. Every person shall be free to receive and disseminate information of all kinds, including both facts, critical comment and ideas by books, newspapers, or oral instruction, and by the medium of all lawfully operated devices.

3. The freedoms of speech and information referred to in the preceding paragraphs of this Article may be subject only to necessary restrictions, penalties or liabilities with regard to: matters which must remain secret in the interests of national safety; publications intended or likely to incite persons to alter by violence the system of Government, or to promote disorder or crime; obscene publications; (publications aimed at the suppression of human rights and fundamental freedoms); publications injurious to the independence of the judiciary or the fair conduct of legal proceedings; and expressions or publications which libel or slander the reputations of other persons.

Comment to Article 14

The fundamental provisions of the Bill of Rights relating to freedom of speech and information will be completed by other agreements, resulting from the work of the sub-committee on Freedom of Information and the international conference on the subject.

Comments to Article 14 (3)

- (a) The provision in paragraph 3 above, recognizing the right of Governments to impose the necessary restrictions, penalties or liabilities on publications likely or intended to incite persons to alter by violence the system of Government, is to be interpreted [7] as strictly confined to such publications as advocate the use of violence, and does not apply to publications advocating a change of government or of the system of Government by constitutional means.
- (b) Some doubt is felt as to the suitability of the words “publications aimed at the suppression of human rights and fundamental freedoms” from the point of view of drafting. It may be that these words afford a wider power for the limitation of freedom of publication than is necessary or desirable. On the other hand it may be said that it would be inconsistent for a Bill of Rights whose whole object is to establish human rights and fundamental freedom to prevent any Government, if it wished to do so, from taking steps against publications whose whole object was to destroy the rights and freedoms which it is the purpose of the Bill to establish. In the last analysis, perhaps, the best definition of a Nazi or Fascist regime is that it is a regime which does not recognize the dignity and worth of the human person and permit individuals to enjoy human rights and fundamental freedoms.
- (c) In any case it will be observed that no Government is obliged by the Bill to make use of the powers of limitation which are provided in paragraph 3.

... Article 17 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

Subject only to the laws governing slander and libel, there shall be freedom of speech and of expression by any means whatsoever, and there shall be reasonable access to all channels of communication. Censorship shall not be permitted.

United Kingdom Draft BillPart II – Article 14

Paragraph 1. Every person shall be free to express and publish his ideas orally, in writing, in the form of art, or otherwise.

...

Paragraph 3. The freedoms of speech and information referred to in the preceding paragraphs of this Article may be subject only to necessary [8] restrictions, penalties or liabilities with regard to: matters which must remain secret in the interests of national safety; publications intended or likely to incite persons to alter by violence the system of Government, or to promote disorder or crime; obscene publications; (publications aimed at the suppression of human rights and fundamental freedoms); publications injurious to the independence of the judiciary or the fair conduct of legal proceedings; and expressions or publications which libel or slander the reputations of other persons.

Comment to Article 14

The fundamental provisions of the Bill of Rights relating to freedom of speech and information will be completed by other agreements, resulting from the work of the sub-committee on Freedom of Information and the international conference on the subject.

Comments to Article 14 (3)

- (a) The provision in paragraph 3 above, recognizing the right of Governments to impose the necessary restrictions, penalties or liabilities on publications likely or intended to incite persons to alter by violence the system of Government, is to be interpreted as strictly confined to such publications as advocate the use of violence, and does not apply to publications advocating a change of government or of the system of Government by constitutional means.
- (b) Some doubt is felt as to the suitability of the words “publications aimed at the suppression of human rights and fundamental freedoms” from the point of view of drafting. It may be that these words afford a wider power for the limitation of freedom of publication than is necessary or desirable. On the other hand it may be said that it would be inconsistent for a Bill of Rights whose whole object is to establish human rights and fundamental freedoms to prevent any Government, if it wished to do so, from taking steps against publications whose whole object was to [9] destroy the rights and freedoms which it is the purpose of the Bill to establish. In the last analysis, perhaps, the best definition of a Nazi or Fascist regime is that it is a regime which does not recognize the dignity and worth of the human person and permit individuals to enjoy human rights and fundamental freedoms.
- (c) In any case it will be observed that no Government is obliged by the Bill to make use of the powers of limitation which are provided in paragraph 3.

... Article 19 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

There shall be freedom of peaceful assembly.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part II – Article 15

All persons shall have the right to assemble peaceably for any lawful purpose including the discussion of any matter, on which under Article 14 any person has the right to express and publish his ideas. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of this right other than those necessary for the protection of life and property and to prevent disorders, the obstruction of traffic and of the free movement of others.

... Article 20 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

There shall be freedom to form associations for purposes not inconsistent with this Bill of Rights.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part II – Article 16

All persons shall be free to constitute associations, in whatever form may be appropriate under the law of the state, for the promotion and protection of their legitimate interests and of any other lawful object, including the dissemination of all information of which under Article 14 the dissemination is unrestricted. The rights and freedoms set forth in Articles 13 and 14 shall be enjoyed by such associations. [10]

Comment to Article 16

The word “associations” is here used as the widest possible term and is intended to include the creation of entities having juridical personality.

... Article 26 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

Paragraph 2

Nor shall anyone be convicted of crime unless he has violated some law in effect at the time of the act charged as an offence, nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that applicable at the time of the commission of the offence.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part II – Article 12

No person shall be held guilty of any offence on account of acts or omissions which did not constitute such an offence at the time when they were committed.

... Article 27 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

There shall be access to independent and impartial tribunals for the determination of rights and duties under the law. Everyone has the right to consult with and to be represented by counsel.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part I – Article 2

Every state is, by international law, under an obligation to ensure:

...

- (b) that any person whose rights or freedoms are violated should have an effective remedy, notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity:
- (c) that such remedies shall be enforceable by a judiciary whose independence is secured: . . .

... Article 45 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

No one shall suffer any discrimination whatsoever because of race, sex, language, religion, or political creed. There shall be [11] full equality before the law in the enjoyment of the rights enunciated in this Bill of Rights.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Comment to Part II – (Articles 8 to 16)

This part of this Bill will be completed by provisions prohibiting distinctions based on race, sex, language and religion. No attempt is made to draft these provisions in advance of the reports of the sub-committee on Discrimination and Minorities and also of the Commission on the Status of Women. In any case, Part II as drafted above in fact provides for absence of discrimination seeing that it uses the words “all persons”. (See also Article 2 (a) of Part I: “all persons under its jurisdiction, whether citizens, persons of foreign nationality or stateless”).

... Article 47 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

It is the duty of each member State to respect and protect the rights enunciated in this Bill of Rights. The State shall, when necessary, co-operate with other States to that end.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part I – Article 2

Every state is, by international law, under an obligation to ensure:

- (a) that its laws secure to all persons under its jurisdiction, whether citizens, persons of foreign nationality or stateless, the enjoyment of these human rights and fundamental freedoms:

...

- (d) that its police and executive officers should act in support of the enjoyment of these rights and freedoms.

Comment to Article 2

Proposals that the provisions of the Bill of Rights should be embodied in the constitutions of states parties to the Bill, or otherwise consecrated by special constitutional guarantees, are not practicable for all countries. Some countries, like the United Kingdom, have no rigid [12] constitution and, as a matter of internal law, it is not possible to surround any provision with any special constitutional guarantee. No enactment can be given a greater authority than an Act of Parliament, and one Act of Parliament can repeal any other Act of Parliament. Therefore, the legal provisions which safeguard human rights can only have as their special safeguard the solemn international obligations undertaken in this Bill, together with the firm foundation which these principles have in the deepest convictions of Parliament and the people.

... Article 48 (Draft Outline prepared by the Division of Human Rights)

The provisions of this International Bill of Rights shall be deemed fundamental principles of international law and of the national law of each of the member States of the United Nations. Their observance is therefore a matter of international concern and it shall be within the jurisdiction of the United Nations to discuss any violation thereof.

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part I – Article 1

The States parties hereto declare that they recognize the principles set forth in Part II of this Bill as human rights and fundamental freedoms founded on the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations.

Comment to Article 1

The phrase at the end of this Article comes from Article 38 (I) (c) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. This phrase in the Statute of the Court is with justification considered by many commentators to represent the same principle as the phrases “law of nature” and “jus gentium” which play so great a part in the early development of international law. The conceptions both of the “law of nature” and “jus gentium” have also played a considerable part in the conception of the fundamental rights of man.

Part I – Article 3

On receipt of a request to this effect from the Secretary-General of [13] the United Nations, made under the authority of a resolution of the General Assembly, the government of any party to this Bill will supply an explanation, certified by the highest legal authorities of the state concerned, as to the manner in which the law of that state gives effect to any of the said provisions of this Bill of Rights.

Comment to Article 2 (a) and Article 3

The expression “law” is used in this draft as equivalent to the word “droit” that is, anything a court will enforce including statute law, regulations and common or customary law.

Part I – Article 5

A failure by any State party hereto to fulfil the obligations under Article 2 is an injury to the community of states and a matter of concern to the United Nations as the community of states organized under the rule of law.

Comment to Article 5

This article is meant to apply to failures of a substantial character. It is not intended to apply to failures of a trivial or technical character.

Part I – Article 6

1. While declaring their readiness to consider the adoption of further procedures designed to strengthen the international protection of fundamental human rights and freedoms, the states parties hereto accept the right of any of them, acting in the interests of the community of states, to bring to the attention of the General Assembly of the United Nations any violation by any of them of the provisions of this Bill of Rights as constituting a situation likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations amongst nations and as a violation of the purposes and principles of the United Nations within the meaning of Article 14 of the Charter.

2. Any party hereto which is thus alleged to have violated the provisions of this Bill of Rights shall have the right to request the General Assembly [14] to obtain the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice thereon and to refrain from taking any further action on the matter until this opinion has been obtained, and if such a request is made the parties hereto agree that they are bound to support the request.

Comment to Article 6

It would be possible to insert here an additional provision under which all parties to this Bill would agree that in the event of any alleged violation of the Bill being brought before the General Assembly they would support a proposal that the matter should first be considered by a committee composed only of members of the United Nations who are parties to the Bill.

Part I – Article 7

The parties hereto agree that any one of them which is found by a Resolution of the General Assembly adopted by a two-thirds majority persistently to have violated the provisions of this Bill of Rights should be deemed to have violated the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and therefore be liable to expulsion from the organization under Article 6 of the Charter.

Article . . .<sup>151</sup> Emergency

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part I – Article 4

1. In time of war or other national emergency, a state may take measures derogating from its obligations under Article 2 above to the extent strictly limited by the exigencies of the situation.

2. Any state party hereto availing itself of this right of derogation shall inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations fully of the measures which it has thus enacted and the reasons therefor. It shall also inform him as and when the measures cease to operate and the provisions of Article 2 are being fully executed.

[15]

Method of Adoption of the Bill of Human Rights

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part III – Article 17

1. This Bill of Rights is submitted, for the purpose of accession thereto, to every member of the United Nations, to every state party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice and to every other state whom the General Assembly of the United Nations shall, by resolution, declare to be eligible.

2. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument with the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Bill of Rights shall come into force as soon as . . . states members of the United Nations have deposited such instruments as regards those states and thereafter as regards each party on the date of the deposit of its instrument of accession.

<sup>151</sup> The original document does not provide an article number.

3. Every deposit of an instrument of accession shall be accompanied by a statement that this Bill had been approved in accordance with the constitutional processes of the state concerned for the acceptance of the obligations of a treaty and by a solemn declaration made by the government of the state concerned that full and complete effect to the provisions of Part II is given by the law of that state.

4. The Secretary-General shall inform all members of the United Nations and the other states referred to in paragraph 1 above of the deposit of each instrument of accession.

Amendments to the Bill of Human Rights

United Kingdom Draft Bill

Part III – Article 18

1. Amendments to this Bill of Rights shall come into force when they have been adopted by a vote of two-thirds of the members of the General Assembly of the United Nations and ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two-thirds of the parties to this Bill.

2. When such amendments come into force they shall be binding on those parties which have ratified them, leaving other parties still bound by the provisions of the Bill which they have accepted by accession including earlier amendments which they have ratified.

E/CN.4/AC.1/6/Add.1

10 June 1947

Additional Communications Received Requesting the Inclusion of Certain Specific Provisions in the International Bill of Rights

Additional communications have been received requesting that certain specific provisions should be included in the International Bill of Rights.

These communications all relate to freedom of conscience and of religion (cf. Article 14 of the Draft Outline of an International Bill of Rights prepared by the Division of Human Rights). One also relates to the problem of the illegitimate child.

Communications received from International Non-Governmental Organizations:

War Resisters' International – Palestine Section

Letter, dated 20 May 1947, addressed to the Secretary, Commission on Human Rights.

Subject: Request that man's freedom of conscience be stressed in the International Bill of Rights and that a special provision be included relating to conscientious objectors.

Communications received from National Non-Governmental Organizations:

United Kingdom

Labour Pacifist Fellowship<sup>152</sup>

Letter, dated 11 May 1947, addressed to the Secretariat, Commission on Human Rights.

Subject: Request that the International Bill of Rights should include a [2] clause relating to conscientious objection to military service.

Communications received from Individuals

In the United Kingdom

Letter, dated 28 April 1947, from London, addressed to the Secretariat, United Nations.

Subject: Endorsement of the suggestion by the War Resisters' International Organization that an International Bill of Rights should concede the right to refuse military service in obedience to conscience. (See Document E/CN.4/AC.1/6 p. 4.)

Letter, dated 29 April 1947, from London, addressed to the Secretariat, Commission on Human Rights.

Subject: Endorsement of the suggestion by the War Resisters' International Organization that an International Bill of Rights should concede the right to refuse military service in obedience to conscience. (See Document E/CN.4/AC.1/6 p. 4.)

Letter, dated 29 April 1947, from London, addressed to the Secretariat, Commission on Human Rights.

Subject: Endorsement of the suggestion of the War Resisters' International Organization that a specific provision relating to conscientious objectors be included in the International Bill of Rights. (See Document E/CN.4/AC.1/6 p. 4.)

Letter, dated 6 May 1947, from London, addressed to the Secretariat, Commission on Human Rights.

Subject: Endorsement of the suggestion of the War Resisters' International Organization that a specific provision relating to conscientious objectors be included in the International Bill of Rights. (See Document E/CN.4/AC.1/6 p. 4.)

<sup>152</sup> The Labour Action for Peace was known as the Labour Pacifist Fellowship from 1940 to 1950. It originated as "an organization of Labour Party members and supporters working for peace, socialism and disarmament".

Letter, dated 1 May 1947, addressed to the Secretary, Commission on Human Rights.

[3]

Subject:

- (a) Request that the International Bill of Rights should include a clause dealing with the rights of individual conscientious objectors to war.
- (b) Request that the Bill should take into account the right of the illegitimate child to claim obligations on the father across national frontiers.

E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.1

11 June 1947

Drafting Committee on an International Bill of Human Rights International Bill of Rights Documented Outline<sup>153</sup>

Part I – Texts
Table of Contents

[The table of contents is omitted]

[1]

Commission on Human Rights
Drafting Committee
International Bill of Rights
Documented Outline, Part I – Texts

Index

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Commission on Human Rights at its First Session, 27 January – 10 February 1947

Section II. Draft International Declarations or Proposals Submitted by Governments to the Commission on Human Rights

A. Declarations

Chile, Cuba, Panama

<sup>153</sup> The International Bill of Rights Documented Outline was prepared by the Secretariat from various sources. The Secretariat appears to have done its own translations of materials from languages other than English and the editor has not endeavoured to correct the text, which is sometimes rather awkward, aside from obvious spelling mistakes.

B. Proposals

India, United States of America

Section III. National Constitutions
(listed alphabetically as follows);

Afghanistan	Fundamental Principles of Afghanistan (Addendum 22 Feb. 1933)	31 Oct. 1931
Argentina	Constitution of the Argentine Nation (As revised 1860, 1866, 1898)	1 May 1853
Australia	No written provisions
Belgium	Constitution of the Kingdom of Belgium	May 1896
Bolivia	Political Constitution of the State	28 Oct. 1938
Brazil	Constitution of the United States of Brazil	18 Sept. 1946
Byelorussia	Constitution of Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic	23 Dec. 1936
Canada	No written provisions
[2]
Chile	Political Constitution of the Republic of Chile	18 Sept. 1925
China	Constitution of the Republic of China (adopted)	Dec. 1946
Colombia	Political Constitution of the Republic of Columbia	4 Aug. 1886
Costa Rica	Political Constitution of Costa Rica	7 Dec. 1871
Cuba	Constitution of the Republic of Cuba	10 Oct. 1940
Czechoslovakia	Constitutional Charter of the Czechoslovak Republic	29 Feb. 1920
Denmark	Constitution of Denmark (with amendment of 10 Sept. 1920)	5 June 1915
Dominican Republic	Constitution of Dominican Republic	10 Jan. 1942
Ecuador	Political Constitution of the Republic of Ecuador	31 Dec. 1946
Egypt	Royal Rescript No. 42 of 1923 establishing the constitutional regime of the Egyptian State	1923
El Salvador	Political Constitution of El Salvador	13 Aug. 1886
Ethiopia	Constitution of Ethiopia	16 July 1931
France	Declaration of the Rights of Man and Citizen	26 Aug. 1789
Greece	Constitution of Greece	1 June 1911
Guatemala	Constitution of the Republic of Guatemala	11 Mar. 1945
Haiti	Constitution of the Republic of Haiti	22 Nov. 1946
Honduras	Political Constitution of Honduras	28 Mar. 1936
Iceland	Constitutional Law of the Kingdom of Iceland (Modified 17 June 1944)	18 May 1920
India	Government of India Act	1935
Iran	The supplementary fundamental laws (Amended 12 Dec. 1925)	7 Oct. 1907
Iraq	Constitution of Iraq (Amended 29 July 1925, and 27 Oct. 1943)	10 July 1924

[3]

Lebanon	Constitution of the Lebanese Republic (Amended Oct. 1927, and May 1929)	23 May 1926
Liberia	Constitution of Liberia (Modified May 1907)	26 July 1847
Luxembourg	Constitution (Amended 15 May 1919)	17 Oct. 1868
Mexico	Constitution of the United States of Mexico (Amended 5 Nov. 1942)	31 Jan. 1917
Netherlands	Constitution of the Netherlands (Amended 1938)	30 Nov. 1887
New Zealand	No written provisions
Nicaragua	Political Constitution of Nicaragua	22 Mar. 1939
Norway	Constitution of the Kingdom of Norway	17 May 1814
Panama	Political Constitution of the Republic of Panama	1 Mar. 1946
Paraguay	Constitution of the Republic of Paraguay	10 July 1940
Peru	Political Constitution of the Republic of Peru	29 Mar. 1933
Philippine Republic	Constitution of the Philippines	8 Feb. 1935
Poland	Constitution of the Republic of Poland	17 Mar. 1921
Saudi Arabia	Constitution of Saudi Arabia	29 Aug. 1926
Siam	Constitution of Siam	10 Dec. 1932
Sweden	Constitution of the Kingdom of Sweden (Amended 30 June 1933)	6 June 1809
Syria	Constitution of the State of Syria	14 May 1930
Turkey	Constitution of the Turkish Republic	20 Apr. 1924
Ukraine Soviet Socialist Republics	Constitution of	20 Jan. 1937
Union of South Africa	South Africa Act 1909	1909
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics	Constitution of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics	5 Dec. 1936
United Kingdom	No written provisions
[4]
United States of America	Constitution of the United States Amendments
Uruguay	Constitution of the Eastern Republic of Uruguay	24 Mar. 1934
Venezuela*
Yugoslavia	Constitution of Yugoslavia	29 Nov. 1945

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Government Organizations in Category A.*****

American Federation of Labor

[*] It is regretted that the text of the Venezuelan Constitution was received too late to be included in this document, but it will be issued separately.

[**] That is, a non-governmental organization recognized in accordance with paragraph 1 (a) of Part IV of the Report of the Committee on Arrangements for Consultation with Non-Governmental Organizations, adopted by the Economic and Social Council 21 June 1946.

[5]

Article 1

“Everyone owes a duty of loyalty to his State and to the (international society) United Nations. He must accept his just share of responsibility for the performance of such social duties and his share of such common sacrifices as may contribute to the common good.”<sup>154</sup>

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Hodgson (Australia):

“... are we, when we put it to the drafting group, going to ask them to attempt to define in some way, to go through the so-called rights one by one and say, well, none of them is absolute, they all have limitations, are they to define what the limitations will be, or are they going to get some general limitation, that is, that that right must have regard to the rights of the group, the rights of the State, the rights of the community and the rights of other human persons?”*

“... Every one of these rights has a corresponding duty. That brings in the points which were raised yesterday as to the interests of the state against the interests of the individual or the interests of the community. Now, none of these rights we are talking about is absolute. Take the best recognized one of all, the right of expression. Now, that right of expression has a corresponding duty. There is a right, there is a duty to respect the rights of others, not to be libellous. If I have, say, a newspaper to express myself, if I speak treasonably or corruptly, or undermine the very foundations of the state by my right of expression, I am automatically limited. So the question comes to my mind: Are we going in every case to put the corresponding duty or are we just going to lay these down as absolute rights?”**

Mr. Wu (China):

He says that it is a question of establishing the rights of the human being and at the same time demanding his acceptance of the corresponding obligations. ***

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 14th meeting – pages 65–70.<sup>155</sup>

[**] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 9th meeting – pages 42–43.

[***] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 9th meeting – pages 56–60.

<sup>154</sup> The original text does not consistently use inverted quotations when quoting articles. This version reflects the original.

<sup>155</sup> This and subsequent references are to a verbatim record of the first session of the Commission on Human Rights. The verbatim record was not issued as an official document.

[6]

Mr. Dukes (United Kingdom):

“... I repeat that in the language as used, it appears as though we are throwing the doors wide open and we unduly, I think, awaiting the right of personal freedom without, at the same time, making provision for the obligations as between the individual or individuals who are supposed to benefit by these freedoms and the obligation to the States into which they would move or where they would hope to find asylum.”*

“... It is of no use in my opinion of seeking to define personal freedom entirely detached from the obligation of those individuals either to the State or to voluntary organizations and at the same time claim the advantages and the benefits outlined in this group under number 3.”**

Mr. Cassin (France):

“... We have a right to food, we say, but if everybody has a right to food and no one wants to be compelled to work, how are we going to feed ourselves? This, therefore, is a point upon which we ought to state the opposite rights. On the one hand we ought to state the right of the individual and on the other hand the right of the community. I, myself, admit in a general way at any rate, that when the State or community creates a member who refuses to work and does not want to collaborate with others, then the rights of that individual must be conditioned by the work he is asked to accomplish.”***

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile – No provision*Cuba* – No provision*Panama* – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision*United States* – No provision

[*] H.R. Com. 1st session - 14th meeting - page E-21.

[**] H.R. Com. 1st session - 14th meeting - page E-51.

[***] H.R. Com. 1st session - 14th meeting - page E-61.

[7]

Section III. National Constitutions

Argentine, Constitution of

Article 21

Every Argentine citizen is obliged to arm himself in defence of the Fatherland and of this Constitution, in accordance with whatever laws the Congress shall enact for the purpose and with the decrees of the National Executive. Citizens by naturalization are free to render this service or not for a term of ten years counting from the date on which they obtain their letters of citizenship.

Byelorussia, Constitution ofArticle 105

See Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Constitution, Article 130.

China, Constitution ofArticle 19

The people shall have the duty of paying taxes in accordance with law.

Article 20

The people shall have the duty of performing military services in accordance with law.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 127

1. Every able-bodied citizen of the Czechoslovak Republic shall undergo training and shall obey the summons when called upon for the defence of the State.

Denmark, Constitution ofArticle 88

Every able-bodied man is obliged to contribute his personal services in the country's defence in accordance with the detailed regulations specified by law.

Dominican Republic, Constitution ofArticle 6

5th. The law will establish penalties applicable to those who act against . . . the social order, or the public peace.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 159

All persons inhabiting national territory shall respect and obey the Constitution, laws and authority of the Republic.

[8]

Ethiopia, Constitution ofArticle 20

All those belonging to the Ethiopian Army owe allegiance and absolute obedience to the Emperor in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Article 21

The nation shall be bound to pay legal taxes.

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 33

The counterpart of the status of citizenship and of civic and political rights is civic duty.

Civic duty consists of all the citizen's obligations towards the State and the nation in moral, political, social and economic matters.

Non-observance of these provisions shall be punishable by law. Officials and employees of all grades must, in the exercise of their duties, conduct themselves as men of honour, dignity and conscience and show due regard for the common weal under all circumstances.

Iceland, Constitution ofArticle 75

Every able-bodied man is bound to take personal part in the defence of the country according to the detailed regulations which may be laid down by law.

Liberia, Constitution ofArticle 1, Section 12

The people have a right to keep and to bear arms for the common defence. . .

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution of theArticle 31

It shall be the duty of all Mexicans: . . .

2nd. To present themselves on the days and hours designated by the municipal council of the place in which they reside, to receive such civic and military instruction as shall fit them for the exercise of their rights as citizens, train them in the use of arms, and accustom them to military discipline.

3rd. To enlist and serve in the national guard in accordance with the [9] respective organic law in order to preserve and defend the independence, territory, honour, rights, and interests of the Fatherland, as well as internal tranquillity and order; and. . .

4th. To contribute toward the public expenses of the Federation, as well as of the State and municipality in which they reside, in a proportionate and equitable manner, as provided by law.

Privileges of citizens are: . . .

Article 35

4th. To bear arms in the army or national guard for the defence of the Republic and its institutions and in the terms prescribed by law; and. . .

Article 36

The duties of a citizen of the Republic are:

1st. To be registered at the municipal revenue office, declaring the property he owns, the industry, profession, or work in which he is engaged, and also to be registered in the electoral list in the terms specified by the laws.

Netherlands, Constitution of the

Article 181

All Netherlands subjects who are able shall be bound to collaborate for the maintenance of the independence of the Realm and for the defence of its territory. This obligation may also be laid upon inhabitants who are not Netherlands subjects.

Article 182

Obligatory military service shall be regulated by law.

Nicaragua, Constitution of

Article 96

Work is a social duty. Every inhabitant of the Republic has the obligation of applying his physical and intellectual energies in a form that will redound to the benefit of the community.

Norway, Constitution of

Article 109

Every citizen of the State shall, as a general rule, for a certain time, be liable to military service, without regard to birth or fortune.

[10]

The application of this principle and the restrictions it may become subject to, shall be determined by law.

Poland, Constitution of

Article 90

Every citizen has the duty of respecting and obeying the constitution of the state and other valid laws and ordinances of the state and self-government authorities.

Article 91

“All citizens are subject to military service. . .”

Article 89

Fidelity to the Republic of Poland is the first duty of a citizen.

Article 93

All citizens are bound to respect legitimate authority and to facilitate the performance of its duties to which they may be appointed by the nation or the proper authority.

Article 92

It is the duty of all citizens to submit to any public burdens, services and duties imposed by virtue of statute.

Siam, Constitution of

Article 15

It is the duty of every person to respect the law, to defend the country and to assist the Government by the payment of taxes and in other ways, under the conditions and in the manner prescribed by law.

Ukraine, Constitution of

Article 129

See Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Constitution Article 130.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution of

Article 130

It is the duty of every citizen of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to abide by the constitution of Soviet Socialist Republics, to observe the laws, to maintain labour discipline, honestly to perform public duties, and to respect the rules of socialist intercourse.

[11]

United States, Constitution of the

Article III, Section 3

1. Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.
2. The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 22

The citizens of the Federal Peoples Republic of Yugoslavia are bound to comply with the Constitution and laws.

Article 34

The defence of the fatherland is the supreme duty and honour of every citizen. High treason is the greatest crime towards the people. Military service is universal for all citizens.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision [12]

Article 2

“In the exercise of his rights everyone is limited by the rights of others and by the just requirements of the State and of the United Nations.”

(See Article 18 quoted below of the Panama Draft of International Declaration)

Section I. Observations Made by Members
of the Human Rights Commission

(See observations of Messrs. Hodgson, Dukes, Cassin under Article 1).

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A – Drafts of International Declarations:

Chile (Draft of the Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XIX

Rights and duties are correlative; and the duty to respect the rights of others operates at all times as a restriction upon the arbitrary exercise of rights.

Cuba – no provision

Panama

Article 18

In the exercise of his rights everyone is limited by the rights of others and by the just requirements of the democratic state.

B – Proposals

India – No provision*United States* – No provisionSection III. National Constitutions*China, Constitution ofArticle 23*

No one of the liberties and rights enumerated in the preceding articles may, except as warranted by reason of preventing infringement of the liberties of other persons, averting an imminent crisis, maintaining social order or advancing public interest, be restricted by law.

[13]

Article 22

All other liberties and rights of the people that are not inimical to social order or public interest shall be guaranteed under the Constitution.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen, 26 August 1789Article 4

Liberty consists in the power of doing whatever does not injure another. Accordingly, the exercise of the natural rights of every man has no other limit than those which are necessary to secure to every other man the free exercise of the same rights; and these limits are determinable only by the law.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 35

The liberties that this Constitution guarantees are all of a social character. Exigencies of the public order may limit them in their exercise in the manner and form that the laws may establish. To preach hatred or class conflict among Paraguayans is not permitted.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 68

Every Turk is born free and free he lives. Liberty consists of any action which is not detrimental to others. The limits of an individual's liberty, which is his natural right, extend only to the point where they infringe on the liberties enjoyed by his fellow-citizens. The said limits are defined solely by law.

Article 79

The limits Imposed on the liberty of making contracts, of labour, of ownership, of meeting and associating, and of incorporating shall be determined.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision
[14]

Article 3

“Everyone has the right to life. This right can be denied only to persons who have been convicted under general law of some crime against society to which the death penalty is attached.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members
of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Cassin (France):

“... we are thinking of the right to live and protection of human life. That is not quite as elementary as we see it. In 1933, when Germany began to violate these very principles, all the countries of the world wondered as to whether they had the right of intervention in order to save humanity and to maintain those principles, and they did not intervene. Later we suffered the loss of millions of human beings. Therefore, I think it is fundamental that we state that human beings have the right of existence.”*

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article I

Every person has the right to life. This right extends to the right to life from the moment of conception; to the right to life of incurables, imbeciles and the insane. It includes the right to sustenance and support in the case of those unable to support themselves by their own efforts; and it implies a duty of the state to see to it that such support is made available.

The right to life may be denied by the state only on the ground of conviction of the gravest crimes, to which the death penalty has been attached.

Cuba

The right to life, to liberty, to personal security and to respect of his dignity as a human being.

Panama – No provision

[*] H.R. Com. 1st session-13th meeting-pages E-94, E-95.

[15]

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 25

. . . Capital punishment shall be applied only in cases of assassination, patricide, and treason to the Fatherland, by treason, complicity with the enemy during a state of foreign war is understood.

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 141

No. 31. There shall be no penalty of death. . . Exception is made, with respect to the death penalty, of the provisions of military law in time of war with a foreign country. . .

China, Constitution of

Article 15

The right of existence. . . shall be guaranteed to the people.

Colombia, Constitution of

Article 29

The legislature may not impose capital punishment in any case.

Costa Rica, Constitution of

Article 45

Human life is inviolable in Costa Rica.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 25

The penalty of death may not be imposed. However, crimes of a military character committed by members of the armed force, and treason or espionage in favour of the army in time of war with a foreign Nation, are excepted.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution of

Article 186

2. All persons residing in the Czechoslovak Republic shall enjoy within its territory in equal measure with the citizens of the Republic complete and absolute security of life and liberty without regard to origin, nationality, language, race or religion. Exception to this principle may be made only so far as is compatible with international law.

[16]

Dominican Republic, Constitution of

Article 6

The following are established as inherent to the human personality:

1st. Inviolability of life.

The penalty of death cannot be established, nor any other that implies the loss of the physical integrity of the individual.

The law will be able, nevertheless, to establish the penalty of death for those who, in time of war with a foreign nation, become guilty of crimes opposing the fortune of the national forces, or of treason or espionage in favour of the enemy.

Ecuador, Constitution of

Article 187

“The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador: (1) the sanctity of human life: there shall be no death penalty. . .”

El Salvador, Constitution of

Article 19

The penalty of death may not be imposed, except for very grave crimes, purely military, and committed in campaign and determined by the military code; and for the crimes of parricide, murder or robbery or arson if death follows. . .

Greece, Constitution of

Article 18

. . . Civil death is abolished.

The penalty of death for political offences, except complex crimes, is abolished.

Guatemala, Constitution of

Article 23

“The state protects human existence in a preferable way. The authorities of the Republic are instituted to maintain the inhabitants in the enjoyment of their rights, which are primarily life. . .”

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 5

The life and liberty of Haitians are sacred and must be respected by individuals and by the State.

Article 20

The death penalty cannot be established for political offences except treason.

[17]

The crime of treason includes every act consisting in taking up arms against the Republic of Haiti, adhering to the declared enemies of Haiti and giving them aid and comfort.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 31

The penalty of death is abolished in Honduras; but while the penal system is being established, it shall be applied in cases determined by law, only to parricides, assassins, and traitors when the latter are in active service and on campaign.

Sentences issued in suits instituted for these crimes shall be deliberated on by the courts of appeals and the decision of the latter shall be sent to the Supreme Court of Justice for review if common crimes are involved, and to the military court of the Republic if the offence is of a military nature.

The Supreme Court of Justice, as well as the military court of the Republic, shall render a decision based only on the proceedings.

Article 44

The right of self-defence is inviolable.

Iran, The Supplementary Fundamental Laws ofArticle 9

All individuals are protected and safeguarded in respect to their lives, property, homes, and honour, from every kind of interference, and none shall molest them save in such case and in such a way as the laws of the land shall determine.

Luxembourg, Constitution ofArticle 18

The death penalty for political offences, civil death and branding are abolished.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution of theArticle 22

The penalty of death for political crimes is likewise prohibited; and for other types of offences, it may be imposed only upon traitors to the Fatherland in a foreign war, parricides, homicides by treachery, premeditation, or gain, incendiaries, plagiarizers, highway robbers, pirates, [18] and offenders who have committed grave offences of a military character.

Nicaragua, Constitution of

Article 36

Human life is inviolable in Nicaragua, but, while the penitentiary system is not established, the penalty of death may be applied in cases determined by law to traitors to the Fatherland in a foreign war, to criminals in cases of grave offences of a purely military character, to parricides, to incendiaries, to highwaymen, to pirates, and to assassins.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 30

There is no penalty of death, expatriation, or confiscation of property.

Paraguay, Constitution of

Article 25

In no case may the death penalty be applied for political reasons.

Peru, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 54

The penalty of death may be imposed for the crimes of treason to the Fatherland and qualified homicide, and for all crimes that may be determined by the law.

Poland, Constitution of

Article 95

“The Republic of Poland guarantees on its territory, to all, without distinction of extraction, nationality, language, race, or religion, full protection of life. . .”

Sweden, Constitution of

Article 16

The King. . . shall not deprive anyone or permit anyone to be deprived of life without legal trial and sentence.

Turkey, Constitution of

Article 71

The life, property, honour and residence of each individual are inviolable.

United States, Constitution of the 5th Amendment

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment, or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger. . .
[19]

Uruguay, Constitution of

Article 25

The penalty of death shall not be inflicted on any person. Penal institutions shall in no case be permitted to inflict humiliating punishments, but shall exist only for the security of the accused and condemned persons, pursuing their re-education, rehabilitation for work, and prevention of crime.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[20]

Article 4

“No one shall be subjected to torture, or to any unusual punishment or indignity.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XII

“ . . . and no cruel or unusual punishments.”

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National ConstitutionsAfghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the GovernmentArticle 19*

The rack and other kinds of torture are absolutely abolished. No punishment can be inflicted which is not prescribed by the law of the land and the sacred Shariat law.

Argentine, Constitution ofArticle 18

No inhabitant of the Nation may be punished without previous trial, based on an earlier law than the date of the offence, nor tried by special commissions, nor removed from the judges designated by law before the date of the trial. No one can be compelled to testify against himself or be arrested except by virtue of a written order from a competent authority. The defence, by trial, of the person and of rights is inviolable. The [21] domicile is inviolable, as also epistolary correspondence and private papers; and a law shall determine in what cases and for what reasons their search and seizure will be allowed. The penalty of death for political offences, all kinds of torture, and whipping, are forever abolished. The prisons of the Nation shall be healthy and clean, for the safety and not for the punishment of the prisoners confined in them; and any measure that under pretext of precaution inflicts on them hardship beyond what the Nation demands, will bring responsibility upon the judge who authorizes it.

Bolivia, Constitution ofArticle 14

. . . In no case shall torture or any other kind of inhuman punishment be employed.

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 18

. . . Torture shall not be applied. . .

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 24

The punishment of infamy is not transcendental. The use of torture and the punishment of confiscation are prohibited.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 161

“ . . . nor may the law prescribe conditions to the detriment of human dignity.”

Article 187

“(1)... mutilation, flogging and other tortures and degrading procedures are categorically forbidden whether as penalties, corrective measures, or means of investigating offences.”

El Salvador, Constitution of

Article 19

Perpetual penalties, flogging and all kinds of torture are prohibited.

Greece, Constitution of

Article 18

Torture and general confiscation are prohibited. . .

Guatemala, Constitution of

Article 45

“... In no case may torture, vexations, molestation, or any other form of coercion be inflicted upon. . .”

[22]

Haiti, Constitution of

Article 12

All unnecessary harshness or constraint in apprehending a person or keeping him in custody, as well as all moral pressure or physical violence, especially during interrogation, are prohibited.

Honduras, Constitution of

Article 47

Whipping, beating with sticks, and all kinds of torture are absolutely forbidden. Unnecessary imprisonment and all undue punishment are also forbidden.

Article 53

Proscriptive, confiscatory laws are prohibited, as well as those ordering inhuman or perpetual punishment. The duration of penalties shall not exceed twelve years, or twenty years for an accumulation for various offences.

Iraq, Constitution of

Article 7

... Torture and the deportation of Iraqis from the Kingdom of Iraq are absolutely forbidden.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution of
Article 19

Any ill treatment on apprehension or in prisons, any hardship inflicted without legal cause, any tax or contribution in penal institutions are abuses which shall be corrected by law and repressed by the authorities.

Article 22

Punishments by mutilation or infamy, branding, flogging, beating, torture of any kind, excessive fines. . . are prohibited.

Nicaragua, Constitution of

Article 55

Prospective laws, those that inflict opprobrious penalties, or those that last more than twenty-five years are prohibited.

Article 76

Prisons are established for security and social defence. The prevention of crime, the re-education of the convict, and his preparation for work outside will be undertaken in them. . .

[23]

Article 76

. . . Every act of cruelty or torture against convicts is prohibited.

Article 221

When the Republic finds itself involved in an international war or in an internal civil war, or there exists the danger that one or the other may occur, or in case of epidemic, earthquake, or any other public calamity, or when for any other reason the defence, peace, and security of the Nation or of its institutions or forms of government may require it, the President of the Republic, in Council of Ministers, may, by decree, restrict or suspend, in all or a part of the national territory, the exercise of the constitutional guarantees, with the exception in all cases of those relating to:

- 1st. The inviolability of human life.
- 2nd. The prohibition against being tried by judges not recognized by the law.
- 3rd. The prohibition against inflicting infamous penalties, including those of whipping and of any kind of torture whatever.
- 4th. The prohibition against retroactive or confiscatory laws; and
- 5th. The levying of taxes.

Norway, Constitution ofArticle 96

Examination by torture must not take place.

Panama, Constitution ofArticle 28

Jails are places of security and regeneration. All severity that is not necessary for express purposes is prohibited in them.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 28

Jails must be sanitary and clean. Punishment by any form of torture, including whipping, is prohibited.

Philippines, Constitution ofArticle III, Section 1. (19)

Excessive fines shall not be imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 98

“... Punishments involving physical suffering are not permitted and no one may be subjected to such punishment. . .”

[24]

Syria, Constitution ofArticle 11

Corporal punishment is forbidden. . .

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 73

Torture, bodily mistreatment, confiscation and forced labour are prohibited.

United States, Constitution of8th Amendment

. . . nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 25

. . . Penal institutions shall in no case be permitted to inflict humiliating punishments, but shall exist only for the security of the accused and condemned persons, pursuing their re-education, rehabilitation for work, and prevention of crime.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor

Article 12

The key to the entire approach of human rights must be the placing of respect for human personality and welfare above all else. In this spirit, the above rights can have tangible meaning and practical application only if -

(e) Freedom from the terror of secret police surveillance, arrest or torture. This can be assured only through the abolition of all political police and concentration camps in every country.

[25]

Article 5

“Everyone has the right to personal liberty”.

Section I. Observations Made by Members
of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Draft of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article II

Paragraph 1 – Every person has the right to personal liberty.

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India

I. (a)

Every human being is entitled to the right of liberty including the right to personal freedom.

United States – No provision

Section III. National ConstitutionsAfghanistan. Fundamental Principles of the GovernmentArticle 11*

There is no interference with personal liberty. No one is imprisoned or punished without an order in accordance with the Shariat or the appropriate laws. The practice of slavery is forbidden in Afghanistan. No male or female may keep any person as a slave.

Belgium, Constitution ofArticle 7

Paragraph 1 – Individual liberty is guaranteed.

Byelorussia, Constitution ofArticle 102

See the USSR Constitution Article 127

China, Constitution ofArticle 8

1st paragraph – Freedom of person shall be guaranteed to the people.
[26]

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 107

“1. Personal freedom shall be guaranteed. . .”

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 187

“The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador:
. . . (3) personal freedom. . .”

Egypt, Royal Rescript No. 42Article 4

The freedom of the individual is guaranteed.

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 9

All inhabitants of El Salvador have an indisputable right to preserve their lives, liberty, and property, and to dispose freely of their goods in conformity with the law.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the CitizenArticle 2

The purpose of all civil association is the preservation of the natural and imprescriptible rights of man. These rights are liberty, property, security, and resistance to oppression.

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 4

Personal liberty is inviolable. . .

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 23

“ . . . The authorities of the Republic are instituted to maintain the inhabitants in the enjoyment of their rights, which are primarily. . . liberty. . . ”

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 5

The life and liberty of Haitians are sacred and must be respected by individuals and by the State.

Article 12

Individual liberty is guaranteed. . .

Iraq, Constitution ofArticle 7

There shall be no violation of, or interference with, the personal liberty of any of the inhabitants of Iraq. None of them shall be arrested, [27] detained, punished or obliged to change their place of residence, or be placed in bonds, or compelled to serve in the armed forces, except in conformity with law.

Lebanon, Constitution ofArticle 8

Personal freedom shall be guaranteed and protected.

Luxembourg, Constitution ofArticle 12

The freedom of the individual is guaranteed.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 109

The State guarantees individual liberty. This may not be restricted unless in conformity with the law.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 95

“The Republic of Poland guarantees on its territory, to all, without distinction of extraction, nationality, language, race, or religion, full protection of . . . liberty . . .”

Siam, Constitution ofArticle 14

Subject to the provisions of the law, every person enjoys full liberty of person, abode, property, speech, writing, publication, education, public meeting, association, and vocation.

USSR, Constitution ofArticle 127

“Citizens of the USSR are guaranteed inviolability of the person. . .”

Ukrainian ConstitutionArticle 126

See Article 127 of the USSR Constitution.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 28

Paragraph 1 – “Citizens are guaranteed inviolability of person.”

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[28]

Article 6

“No one shall be deprived of his personal liberty save by a judgment of a court of law, in conformity with the law and after a fair public trial at which he has had an opportunity for a full hearing, or pending his trial which must take place within a reasonable time after his arrest. Detention by purely executive order shall be unlawful except in time of national emergency.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XII

Every person accused of crime shall have the right to a fair public hearing of the case, to be confronted with witnesses, and to be judged by established tribunals and according to the law in force at the time the act was committed.

Cuba

Article 18

The right to trial without undue delay, to self defence. . .

Panama (American Law Institute)

Article 7

Everyone has the right to have his criminal and civil liabilities and his rights determined without undue delay by fair public trial by a competent tribunal before which he has had opportunity for a full hearing.

The state has a duty to maintain adequate tribunals and procedures to make this right effective.

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States

II. (2)

Among the categories of rights which the United States suggests should be considered are the following. . .

b) procedural rights, such as safeguards for persons accused of crime.

[29]

Section III. – National ConstitutionsAfghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the GovernmentArticle 11*

There is no interference with personal liberty. No one is imprisoned or punished without an order in accordance with the Shariat or the appropriate laws. The practice of slavery is forbidden in Afghanistan. No male or female may keep any person as a slave.

Brazil, Constitution ofArticle 141

25. Accused persons are assured of full defence, with all the means and resources essential to it, from the time of the charge of guilt, which, signed by a competent authority, with the names of the accuser and of the witnesses, shall be delivered to the prisoner within twenty-four hours. The criminal instruction shall be contradictory.

26. There shall be no privileged court nor exceptional judges and tribunals.

Byelorussia, Constitution ofArticles 102, 86, 87, 81

See Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution Articles 127, 110, 111, 103.

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 11

No one may be sentenced unless he is legally tried and by virtue of a law promulgated prior to the act upon which the sentence rests.

Article 12

No one may be tried by special commissions, nor otherwise than by the tribunal the law appoints and has previously constituted.

China, Constitution ofArticle 8

... No person may be tried or punished except by a law court in accordance with legal procedure. Any arrest, detention, trial or punishment, if conducted not in accordance with legal procedure may be refused.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 25

No one shall be obliged, in criminal, correctional, or police proceedings, to testify against himself or against his relatives within [30] the fourth civil degree of consanguinity or the second of affinity.

Article 24

An offender caught in flagrante delicto may be arrested and taken before a judge by any person. If the agents of the authority pursue him and he takes refuge in his own dwelling, they may enter it for the purpose of arresting him; but if he seeks asylum in the dwelling of another person, the consent of the owner or tenant thereof must be previously obtained.

Article 26

No one shall be tried except in conformity with laws antedating the offence with which he is charged, and before a competent tribunal, observing in full the forms proper to each case.

Article 27

The preceding provision shall not prevent the following persons from inflicting punishment, without previous trial, in the cases and within the exact limits established by law:

- 1st. Public officials exercising authority or jurisdiction, who shall have power to punish with fines or imprisonment any person who may injure or offend them with respect to an action that they may perform in discharging the functions of their office.
- 2nd. Military officers, who may inflict instant punishment to subdue insubordination or a military mutiny, or to maintain discipline in the presence of the enemy.
- 3rd. Captains of vessels, who have the same power, when not in port, to repress offences committed on board their ships.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 40

No one can be arrested without a proved indication of having committed a crime, and without a written order from a judge or authority in charge of public order; except when the defendant may be declared a fugitive from justice or a delinquent in flagrante delicto; but in every case he must be placed at the disposition of a competent judge within the definite period of twenty-four hours.

[31]

Article 44

No person can be subjected to prison for debt, except only in the case of legally proved fraud.

Cuba, Constitution ofArticle 26

Persons under arrest, and political or social prisoners, shall be detained in compartments separate from common offenders, and shall not be subjected to any labour or to the penal regulations for common prisoners.

Article 27

Every detained person shall be placed at liberty or delivered to a competent judicial authority within twenty-four hours following the act of his detention.

Every detained person shall be released from custody, or committed to prison by a judicial writ, within seventy-two hours after having been placed at the disposition of a competent judge. Within the same period the detained person shall be notified of the writ issued.

Preventive imprisonment shall be maintained in places distinct and completely separate from those designed for the serving of sentences, and persons kept in said preventive imprisonment may not be subjected to any labour or to penal regulations designed for persons serving sentence.

Article 26

The penal process law shall establish the necessary guarantees that all guilt shall be proved independently by the testimony of the accused, of the spouse, and also of relatives within the fourth degree of consanguinity and second of affinity. All accused persons shall be deemed innocent until found guilty.

In all cases the authorities and their agents shall make a record of detention that shall be signed by the detained person, who will be notified of the authority ordering the detention, the reason for it, and the place to which the person in custody is to be conducted, placing an affidavit as to all these details in the record.

[32]

Registration of detained persons and prisoners shall be open to public inspection. Officials approaching or guarding a person in custody shall be liable for every act against the personal integrity, security, or honour of any detained person, unless such officials shall prove their innocence of such act. A subordinate may refuse compliance with orders that infringe upon this guarantee. A guard employing arms against a detained person or a prisoner attempting to escape, shall be accused and held responsible according to the laws, for the crime that may have been committed.

No person under arrest or imprisoned shall be held incommunicado. Infractions of this provision shall be taken up only in ordinary jurisdiction, regardless of the place, circumstances, or persons involved in the detention.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution of

Article 107

2. No person shall be deprived of personal liberty or restricted in the enjoyment of the same except legal grounds. . .

Article 94

2. No one shall be tried other than before his legal judge.

Article 95

4. Trial by jury may be temporarily suspended in cases provided for by law.

Ecuador, Constitution of

Article 94

In the event of imminent threat of foreign invasion or of international conflict or internal disturbance, the Executive shall apply to Congress. . . in order that. . . it may grant. . . some or all of the following Extraordinary Powers:

(8) to arrest any persons suspected of favouring foreign invasion or internal disturbance, or of participating in such; but within a maximum of six days, he shall place them at the disposal of the competent judge, with a report of the investigation made and other documents in justification of the arrest, or else he shall sentence them to imprisonment within the same six days. . .

(9) to imprison any persons suspected of favouring war, and of taking part in internal disturbance. . .

[33]

El Salvador, Constitution of

Article 20

No person may be deprived of his life, or his liberty, or of his property without previously being heard and convicted in a trial in accordance with the laws; nor may anyone be prosecuted twice, civilly or criminally, for the same cause.

Article 28

Neither the Executive nor the judiciary, nor any other authority, may issue orders of detention or imprisonment if they are not in conformity with the law. These orders must always be written, except in criminal matters, when the offender may be taken in flagrante delicto, in which case he may be detained by any person, to be delivered immediately to the respective authorities. Detention for inquiry shall not exceed forty-eight hours, and the investigating judge is obliged, within the said period, to order the liberty or the provisional arrest of the suspected person.

Article 39

Neither the Legislature nor the Executive, nor any tribunal, authority, or person, may restrict, alter, or violate the constitutional guarantees, without being subject to the responsibilities established by law. A law on the state of siege shall determine those that may be suspended and the cases in which the suspension may take place.

Ethiopia, Constitution of

Article 23

No Ethiopian subject may be arrested, sentenced or imprisoned, except as prescribed by law.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen

Article 9

Every man being counted innocent until he has been convicted, whenever his arrest becomes indispensable, all rigour more than is necessary to secure his person ought to be provided against by law.

Article 7

No one shall be accused, arrested or imprisoned save in the cases [34] determined by law and according to the forms which it has prescribed. All who solicit, promote, execute or cause to be executed arbitrary orders ought to be punished and every citizen summoned or apprehended by virtue of the law ought immediately to obey and becomes culpable if he resists.

Greece, Constitution of

Article 4

... no man may be prosecuted, arrested, imprisoned, or otherwise confined, except when and as the law provides.

Article 5

Except when taken in the act, no man may be arrested or imprisoned without a judicial warrant stating the reason, which must be served at the moment of arrest or detention. Any person who is detained on being taken in the act or on a warrant of arrest must be brought without delay before the competent examining Judge within twenty-four hours of his arrest at the latest, or, if the arrest occurred beyond the limits of the district of the examining judge, within the time absolutely necessary for his conveyance. The examining Judge, must, within at the most three days of his appearance, either release the person arrested or deliver a warrant for his imprisonment. In the event of either of these terms having passed without such action, every gaoler or other person, civil or military, charged with the detention of the arrested person must release him instantly. Those who violate the above provisions are punished for illegal detention, and are obliged to make good any loss sustained by the injured party, and further to indemnify him a sum of money fixed at the discretion of the Judge, but never less than 10 drachmas per diem.

Guatemala, Constitution of

Article 47

Sentence of imprisonment may not be issued without previous summary information of a crime having been committed and the presence of a sufficient motive, according to the law, for the belief that the person detained is guilty.

Article 43

No one may be detained or imprisoned except by reason of crime, offence, [35] or judicial restraint, and by means of a written order by a competent authority issued in accordance with the law. . . but the detained person must be placed without delay at the disposal of a judicial authority and in centres of provisional detention. . .

Haiti, Constitution of

Article 12

No person may be prosecuted, arrested or detained except in the cases provided for and in accordance with the procedure prescribed by law. Furthermore, arrest and detention shall only take place on the warrant of a legally authorized official.

For such warrant to be executed:

- (1) It must formally state the reason for detention and the provision under the law which punishes the alleged act;
- (2) It must be served on the person concerned and a copy of it left with him at the time of his detention, except in cases of flagrante delicto.

No person may be kept in custody unless he has been brought within forty-eight hours after arrest before a judge authorized to decide the question of the legality of arrest. Such jurisdiction shall be organized by the law.

All unnecessary harshness or constraint in apprehending a person or keeping him in custody, as well as all moral pressure or physical violence, especially during interrogation, are prohibited. All violations of this provision are arbitrary acts against which the injured parties may, without previous authorization, appeal to the competent courts and prosecute those authorizing or committing the said acts, whatever may be their rank and duties.

Honduras, Constitution of

Article 35

Detention for inquiry shall not exceed six days.

Article 36

Persons arrested and held incommunicado shall not be held for more than forty-eight hours.

[36]

Article 37

An order for detention in prison shall not be issued without previous full proof that a crime or simple offence meriting the penalty of deprivation of liberty has been committed, and without a rational suspicion of its author. The declaration of the criminal shall be made in the same manner.

Article 38

Imprisonment for debts is prohibited except when fraud is present.

Article 39

Imprisonment or arrest is permitted as punishment, or as a detainer, in the cases and for the terms established by law. The detention may not exceed thirty days.

Article 40

An offender caught in flagrante delicto may be apprehended by any person in order to deliver him to the proper authority.

Article 41

No person shall be imprisoned or detained except in places established by law. Jails shall serve only for the safekeeping of indicted persons or those serving terms of punishment.

Article 42

No person shall be brought to a jail or detained therein, even with an order of arrest, if he presents sufficient bond, when the offence committed does not carry a penalty of more than three years.

Article 56

The laws shall fix the order and form of procedure in civil and criminal matters.

Iran, The Supplementary Fundamental Laws

Article 12

No punishment can be decreed or executed save in conformity with the law.

Liberia, Constitution of

Article I, Section 9

No place shall be searched, nor person seized on a criminal charge, or [37] suspicion, unless upon warrant lawfully issued, upon probable cause supported by oath, or solemn affirmation, specially designating the place or person, and the object of the search.

Article I, Section 10

Excessive bail shall not be required nor excessive fines imposed, nor excessive punishments inflicted. Nor shall the Legislature make law impairing the obligation of contracts; nor any law rendering any act punishable in any manner in which it was not punishable when it was committed.

Article I, Section 20

That all prisoners shall be bailable by sufficient sureties; unless for capital offences, when the proof is evident, or presumption great; and the privilege and benefit of the writ of habeas corpus shall be enjoyed in this Republic, in the most free, easy, cheap, expeditious and ample manner, and shall not be suspended by the legislature, except upon the most urgent and pressing occasions, and for a limited time, not exceeding twelve months.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution of

Article 16

No order of apprehension or detention shall be issued, except by judicial authority, without being preceded by a denunciation, accusation, or complaint of a specific act which the law penalizes by corporal punishment nor without the same being substantiated by an affidavit, under oath, made by some trustworthy person, or by other evidence showing the probable guilt of the accused; exception is made in cases in flagrante delicto, in which any person may apprehend the offender and his accomplices, placing them without delay at the disposal of the nearest authorities. Only in urgent cases, when there is no judicial authority available in the district, and involving offences officially prosecuted, may the administrative authority, under its strictest accountability, order the detention of the accused, placing him immediately at the disposal of the judicial authority. . .

[37]

Article 17

No person may be imprisoned for debts of a purely civil character. . .

Article 19

No detention may exceed the term of three days without being authorized by a formal warrant of penal arrest in which shall be specified; the offence imputed to the accused; the elements constituting it; the place, time, and circumstances of its commission, and the facts that brought forth the previous investigation, which should be sufficient to prove the circumstance of the offence and show the probable guilt of the accused. The authority ordering the detention or consenting to it, and the agents, ministers, wardens, and guards executing it, shall be responsible for the violation of this provision. . .

Article 21

The imposition of penalties is the strict and exclusive right of the judicial authorities. The prosecution of crimes concerns the Public Ministry and the judicial police, the latter being under the immediate authority and command of the former. The administrative authority has jurisdiction in punishing violations of governmental and police regulations, which punishment shall consist only of a fine or arrest of not more than thirty-six hours; but should the offender not pay the fine that may have been imposed, his punishment shall be changed to a corresponding arrest that in no case may exceed fifteen days.

Should the offender be a day labourer or a workman, he shall not be punished by a fine greater than the amount of his weekly wage or salary.

Netherlands, Constitution of

Article 158

Except in cases determined by the law, no person may be arrested otherwise than under an order of the judge, stating the reasons for the arrest. This order must be served on the person against whom it is directed, either at the moment of arrest or immediately afterwards. The form of this order and the time within which all arrested persons must be heard shall be fixed by law.

Nicaragua, Constitution of

Article 221

When the Republic finds itself involved in an international war or in an [39] internal civil war, or there exists the danger that one or the other may occur, or in case of epidemic, earthquake, or any other public calamity, or when for any other reason the defence, peace, and security of the Nation or of its institutions or forms of government may require it, the President of the Republic, in Council of Ministers, may, by decree, restrict or suspend, in all or a part of the national territory, the exercise of the constitutional guarantees, with the exception in all cases of those relating to:

- 1st. The inviolability of human life.
- 2nd. The prohibition against being tried by judges not recognized by the law.
- 3rd. The prohibition against inflicting infamous penalties, including those of whipping and of any kind of torture whatever.
- 4th. The prohibition against retroactive or confiscatory laws; and
- 5th. The levying of taxes.

Article 110

No one may be detained except by a written order from a public official expressly empowered by law. In cases in flagrante delicto, the offender may be arrested by any private individual in order to turn him over to a competent authority or court.

Every order of detention that does not emanate from a competent authority, or that has not been issued with legal formalities, is punishable.

Article 111

Every detained person must be set at liberty or delivered to a judicial authority within twenty-four hours following the act of detention, exclusive of the extra time it takes to cover the distance for such delivery, according to the case.

Article 114

No order of imprisonment may be issued without full proof that an act has been committed that calls for a greater penalty than a purely correctional one, and without at least grave presumption that the party to be imprisoned is guilty.

[40]

Article 115

When the offence for which one is being tried does not call for imprisonment for more than two years, the judges may place the defendant at liberty by means of a bond, in accordance with the law.

Article 116

Every detention for investigation shall cease to have effect, or shall be changed to imprisonment, within ten days after the person detained has been delivered to a competent court.

Article 117

Every restriction of personal liberty for debts or purely civil obligations is prohibited, unless it be by judicial agreement or bond in the cases and for the period that the law prescribed.

Article 118

The State guarantees the right of habeas corpus. Any person illegally detained or threatened with detention by virtue of an arbitrary order, or any other inhabitant of the Republic, acting for him, may invoke orally or by writing before a competent tribunal recourse to the writ of habeas corpus in order that the person apprehending shall, in such case, present the one detained and shall immediately explain and justify the legal cause for detention or threat of detention, conforming to what the tribunal decides in the matter.

Article 221

This decree will be repealed when the reasons for its existence are removed, and the Executive must without delay give an account of his actions to the Congress.

The restriction of guarantees will in no way affect the functioning of the public organs of the Nation, and their members will always enjoy the prerogatives granted them by the law.

[41]

The President of the Republic and the Secretaries of State will be responsible when they declare a suspension or restriction of the constitutional order without the circumstance having occurred that will justify it; and they will be responsible, along with any other officials, for any abuse they may have committed in the exercise of the powers granted in this article.

In case of foreign war, the Executive, by the same decree in which the exercise of the constitutional guarantees is restricted or suspended, will call the Congress to meet within the following thirty days; and, in case he does not call it, the Congress may meet by its own right.

Norway, Constitution of

Article 99

No one may be arrested and committed to prison except in the cases determined by law and in the manner prescribed by the laws. For unjustifiable arrest and illegal detention the officer concerned shall be responsible to the person imprisoned.

Panama, Constitution of

Article 22

No one may be deprived of his liberty except by virtue of a written order by a competent authority, issued in accordance with the legal formalities and for a reason previously defined in the law. The executors of said order are obliged to give a copy of it to the interested party, provided he requests it.

A delinquent surprised in flagrante delicto may be apprehended by any person and must be delivered up immediately to the authorities.

No one may be detained more than twenty-four hours without being placed under the orders of a competent authority. Members of the police who may violate this precept have as a penalty the immediate loss of their office, without prejudice to the penalties that the law may establish for the purpose.

[42]

There is no imprisonment, detention, or arrest for purely civil debts or obligations.

Article 24

Every individual detained apart from the cases and the form that this Constitution and the law may prescribe will be placed at liberty on his petition or that of any other person. For this purpose the law will regulate the recourse of habeas corpus by means of a summary judicial proceeding and without consideration of the applicable penalty.

Peru, Constitution of

Article 56

No one may be detained save by written order authorized by a competent judge or by the authorities charged with preserving public order, excepting cases of crimes in flagrante delicto, with the stipulation in every case that the detained person be placed, within twenty-four hours, or within the limits of the distance, at the disposal of the corresponding court, which shall either order his release or order a prison sentence for the period that the law stipulates.

Article 58

There is no detention for debts.

Article 69

All of the individual and social rights recognized by the Constitution are open to the action of habeas corpus.

Philippines, Constitution of

Article III, Section 1. (12)

No person shall be imprisoned for debt or non-payment of a poll tax.

Article III, Section 1. (16)

All persons shall before conviction be bailable by sufficient sureties, except those charged with capital offences when evidence of guilt is strong. Excessive bail shall not be required.

Article III, Section 1. (14)

The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended except in cases of invasion, insurrection, or rebellion, when the public safety requires it, in any of which events the same may be suspended wherever during [43] such period the necessity for such suspension shall exist.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 98

No one may be deprived of the court to which he is subject by law. Exceptional courts are admissible only in cases determined by statutes, which statutes must have been issued before the offence was committed.

Sweden, Constitution ofArticle 16

The King . . . shall not deprive anyone or allow anyone to be deprived of . . . personal liberty . . . without legal trial and sentence.

Syria, Constitution ofArticle 9

No offence shall be punished and no conviction may be pronounced, except in conformity with the law.

Article 10

No person shall be tried except before the courts prescribed by the law.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 86

In the event of a war, rebellion or in the case of convincing evidence of a positive and serious conspiracy against the country and the Republic, the Council of Ministers may proclaim partial or general martial law on condition that this does not exceed one month and that this measure is submitted without delay to the Grand National Assembly for approval. The Assembly, may, if deemed necessary, extend or reduce the duration of martial law. Should the Assembly not be in session, it shall be convened immediately.

The prolongation of Martial Law is subject to the decision of the Grand National Assembly. Martial Law implies the temporary restriction or suspension of personal and residential immunity, of inviolability of correspondence, of the freedom of the press, and of the right of assembling and associating. The area over which Martial Law may be proclaimed, the application of the provisions of this regulation over the said area, as well as the mode of restriction or suspension of immunity, and freedom in time of war is determined by law.

[44]

Uruguay, Constitution of

Article 26

Judges may place the accused at liberty at any stage of a criminal trial from which punishment by imprisonment is not likely to result, provided he gives bond according to law.

Article 15

No person shall be arrested unless taken in flagrante delicto or with partial proof on written order of an authorized judge.

Article 16

In either of the cases of the previous article, the judge, under the strictest responsibility, shall take the declaration of the accused within twenty-four hours and shall return an indictment within not more than forty-eight hours. The declaration of the accused shall be taken in the presence of his defender. The latter shall also have the right to be present at all of the summary judicial proceedings.

Article 12

No person shall be punished or confined without a legal form of trial and sentence.

Article 51

No person shall be deprived of liberty because of debts.

Article 30

Individual security may not be suspended except with the compliance of the General Assembly or the permanent committee, in case the former has been dissolved or is in recess, and in the extraordinary case of treason or conspiracy against the Fatherland; and then it shall be instituted only for apprehension of the offenders, without prejudice to the provision of Clause 18 of Article 157.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution of

Article 127

“... no person may be placed under arrest except by decision of a court or with the sanction of a procurator.”

[45]

Article 110

“Judicial proceedings are conducted in the language of the Union Republic, Autonomous Republic or Autonomous Region, persons not knowing this language being guaranteed every opportunity of fully acquainting themselves with the material of the case through an interpreter and likewise the right to use their own language in court.”

Article 111

“In all courts of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics cases are heard in public, unless otherwise provided for by law, and the accused is guaranteed the right to be defended by Counsel.”

Article 103

“In all courts cases are tried with the participation of people’s assessors, except in cases specially provided for by law.”

Ukraine, Constitution of

Articles 126, 109, 110 and 103

See Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; Constitution – Articles 127, 110, 111, 103.

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 28

No person may be punished for a criminal act except by sentence of a competent court on the basis of the law establishing the competence of the court and defining the offence.

Article 28 (paragraph 5)

No person, if within the reach of the State authorities, may be tried without being given a lawful hearing and duly invited to defend himself.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor

Article 12

The key to the entire approach of human rights must be the placing of respect for human personality and welfare above all else. In this spirit, the above rights can have tangible meaning and practical application only if [46]

(e) Freedom from the terror of secret police surveillance, arrest or torture. This can be assured only through the abolition of all political police and concentration camps in every country.

Article 11

Freedom from arbitrary arrest, detention, search and seizure; proper judicial determination of arrest and charges; a fair public trial by jury or competent and unprejudiced court constituted in accordance with normal judicial procedure, right of habeas corpus and freedom from arbitrary imposition of penalties.

[47]

Article 7

“Everyone shall be protected against arbitrary and unauthorized arrest. He shall have the right to immediate judicial determination of the legality of any detention to which he may be subject.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

None

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XI

Every person accused of crime shall have the right not to be arrested except upon warrant duly issued in accordance with the law, unless the person is arrested in flagrante delicto. He shall have the right to a prompt trial and to proper treatment during the time he is in custody.

Cuba

Article 19

The right to immunity from arbitrary arrest and to a review of the regularity of his arrest by ordinary tribunals.

Panama (American Law Institute)Article 8

Everyone who is detained has the right to immediate judicial determination of the legality of his detention.

The state has a duty to provide adequate procedures to make this right effective.

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States of America – No provision

Section III. National ConstitutionsBelgium, Constitution ofArticle 7 (paragraph 3)*

Except in the cases of flagrant offence no one may be arrested without warrant issued by a magistrate, which ought to be shown at the time of arrest, or at the latest within twenty-four hours thereafter.

Bolivia, Constitution ofArticle 7

No person shall be arrested, detained, or imprisoned except in the [48] cases and according to the forms established by law.

For the execution of an order of arrest, it is required that the latter shall be issued by the proper authority and be recorded in writing.

Article 8

Every person who believes he is illegally arrested, prosecuted, or imprisoned, may himself or by means of some other person in his name, with or without power of attorney, have recourse to the superior court of the district or to the corresponding judge, as he prefers, to require that the legal formalities be preserved. The judicial authority shall decree immediately that the individual be brought to his presence and his decree shall be obeyed, without objection or excuse, by those in charge of the jail or place of detention. Informed of the antecedents, the judicial authority shall decree his liberty and have the legal proceedings complied with or shall place the individual at the disposal of the proper judge within twenty-four hours. The decision that is pronounced shall be subject to an appeal of annulment before the Supreme Court of Justice, an appeal that shall not suspend execution of the sentence.

Public officials or private individuals who resist the judicial decisions in the cases covered by this article shall be guilty at all times of offence against constitutional guarantees, and the plea of having obeyed superior orders shall not serve as an excuse.

Brazil, Constitution ofArticle 141

No. 20. No one shall be imprisoned except in flagrante delicto or, by written order of a competent authority, in the cases expressed in the law.

No. 21. No one shall be taken to prison or detained therein if, when the law permits, he offers bond.

No. 22. The imprisonment or detention of any person shall be immediately communicated to a competent judge, who, if it should not be legal, shall give release, and, in the cases provided for by law, shall [49] hold the restraining authority responsible.

No. 32. There shall be no civil imprisonment for debt, fines, or costs, except in case of failure to fulfil one's obligation to feed his dependents or of unfaithful bondsman, provided for by law.

No. 23. Habeas corpus shall be given whenever anyone shall suffer or be threatened with suffering violence or restraint in his freedom of movement, by illegality or abuse of power. Habeas corpus shall not apply in disciplinary transgressions.

No. 24. Mandate of security shall be granted to protect clear and certain rights not covered by habeas corpus, whatever may be the authority responsible for the illegality or abuse of power.

Byelorussia, Constitution ofArticle 102

See the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Constitution Article 127.

Chile, Constitution of

No one may be arrested except by the order of a public official expressly empowered by law, and after such order has been made known to him, in legal form; unless he is surprised in flagrante delicto, and in this same case for the sole purpose of being conducted before the proper judge.

No one may be arrested, subjected to preventive detention, or imprisoned except in his house or in public places intended for this purpose.

Those in charge of prisons cannot receive in them anyone in the character of arrested, indicted, or imprisoned persons without transcribing in their registers the corresponding order, issued by an authority having legal power. They may, nevertheless, receive within the precincts of the prison for detention those brought for the purpose of being presented before the proper judge, but with the obligation of giving an account to the latter within twenty-four hours.

[50]

Article 16

Every individual who may be arrested, indicted, or imprisoned in violation of the provisions of the foregoing articles may apply, for himself or by anyone in his name, to the judicial authority designated by law, demanding that the legal formalities be observed. This judicial authority shall decree that the individual be brought to his presence and his decree shall be exactly obeyed by all those having charge of prisons and places of detention. Informed of the antecedents, he shall declare his immediate liberty, or cause the legal defects to be corrected, or place the individual at the disposition of the proper judge; in all, proceeding briefly and summarily, himself correcting the defects or pointing them out to whomever it falls to correct them.

Article 15

In case an authority orders the arrest of any person, he must, within the forty-eight hours following, give a report to the proper judge, placing at his disposal the person detained.

Article 17

No order of incommunication shall prevent the official in charge of a house of detention from visiting the detained, indicted, or imprisoned person who is located in it.

This official is obliged, provided that the person arrested so requires, to transmit to the proper judge a copy of the order of arrest, or make demand that he be given said copy, or himself give a certificate that such a person is arrested, if, at the time of his arrest, this requirement was omitted.

Article 19

One who is not answerable for an offence to which the law attaches corporal punishment shall not be detained or subjected to preventive imprisonment if he is sufficiently bonded personally, or in indemnification of the action, in the form and according to the nature of the cases [51] determined by law.

Article 20

Every person, in favour of whom sentence of acquittal is rendered or prosecution finally abated, shall have the right to indemnification in the form determined by law, for the pecuniary or merely moral injuries that he may have unjustly suffered.

China, Constitution ofArticle 8 (paragraph 1)

No person may, except in case of flagrante delicto as otherwise provided for by law, be arrested or detained except through a judicial or a police organ in compliance with legal procedure. . .

Article 8 (paragraph 2)

When a person is arrested or detained on suspicion of having committed a crime, the organ responsible therefore shall in writing inform the said person and his designated relatives or friends of the reason for the arrest or detention, and shall, within twenty-four hours, turn him over to a competent court for trial. The said person, or any other person may petition the competent court to demand from the organ concerned the surrender, within twenty-four hours, of the said person to the court for trial.

Article 8 (paragraph 3)

The court may not reject the petition mentioned in the proceeding section, nor shall it order the organ concerned to make an investigation and report first. The organ concerned may not refuse to execute or delay in executing the writ of the court for surrender of the said person for trial.

Article 8 (paragraph 4)

When a person is arrested or detained illegally he or any other person may petition the court for investigation. The court may not reject such petition, and shall, within twenty-four hours, make the investigation with the organ concerned, and proceed with the case in accordance with law.

[52]

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 23

In no case shall detention, imprisonment, or arrest be made for purely civil debts or obligations, except by judicial decision.

No one shall be molested in his person or his family, imprisoned, arrested, or apprehended, or have his domicile searched, except by virtue of a written warrant from a competent authority, with all legal formalities, and for an offence previously defined in the law.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 41

Every inhabitant of the Republic has the right of habeas corpus.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 29

Any person detained or imprisoned under circumstances not foreseen in the Constitution and the laws, and without the formalities and guarantees provided by them, shall be placed at liberty upon his own petition or upon the petition of any other person, without the necessity of power or direction of an attorney, by means of summary proceedings of habeas corpus before the ordinary tribunals of justice.

The tribunal may not decline jurisdiction or admit question as to competence in any case or for any reason, or defer its decision, which shall have preference over all other matters.

The presentation of every detained or imprisoned person before the tribunal issuing the writ of habeas corpus is absolutely obligatory, regardless of the authority or official, person or body, holding custody of said detained person, and said authority is without power to deny obedience to said writ.

All provisions that may impede or retard the appearance of a person deprived of his liberty, as well as any provisions causing delay in the habeas corpus proceedings, shall be null and shall be so declared by the office of the judicial authority.

In case the person detained or imprisoned should not be brought before the tribunal granting the writ of habeas corpus, the latter shall order the [53] arrest of the detaining officer, who shall be judged in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Judges or magistrates who refuse to admit application for the writ of habeas corpus, or who do not comply with the other provisions of this article, shall be dismissed from their respective offices by the chamber of government of the Supreme Tribunal.

Denmark, Constitution of

Article 78

Every person placed under arrest shall be brought before the judge within twenty-four hours. If the arrested person cannot be set at liberty immediately the judge shall decide, on the basis of a duly substantiated order which is to be submitted as soon as possible and within three days at the latest, whether he is to be detained in custody, and, in case he may be released on bail, the nature and amount of the bail.

Appeal against the judge's verdict may at once be filed separately with a higher court by the party concerned.

No person may be imprisoned in the second division for an offence which is subject only to the penalty of a fine or imprisonment in the first division.

Dominican Republic, Constitution of

Article 6

12th . . . (e) each person deprived of his liberty without cause or without legal formalities, or outside of the cases foreseen by the laws, will be placed immediately at liberty at his request or at that of some other person. The law will determine the manner of proceeding summarily in this case.

(d) each person deprived of his liberty will be submitted to a competent judge or tribunal within forty-eight hours of his arrest, or placed at liberty. Each arrest will be left without effect or will be changed to imprisonment within forty-eight hours of having submitted the arrested person to the competent judge or tribunal, having notified the person concerned, within the same time, the judgment that is issued to this end; . . .

[54]

(b) no one may be sentenced to prison or restricted in his liberty without an order issued and written by a competent judicial official, except in cases in flagrante delicto;

. . .

Individual security. Therefore: (a) bodily restraint for a debt that does not arise from fraud or violation of penal laws will not be permitted; . . .

Ecuador, Constitution of

Article 187

“The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador;

. . . 4) the right of habeas corpus. Save in cases of flagrante delicto, police contravention or military offence, no one may be detained, arrested or imprisoned without a warrant signed by the competent authority stating the motive, which must be one specified by law. . . .”

Egypt, Royal Rescript No. 42

Article 5

No person may suffer arrest and detention, save in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Greece, Constitution of

Article 6

In the case of political offences, the Council of the Judges of the Court of Misdemeanours can always, on the demand of the person detained allow his release under bail fixed by a judicial order, against which an appeal is allowed. In the case of these offences, preliminary detention can never be prolonged beyond three months.

Haiti, Constitution of

Article 12

Individual liberty is guaranteed.

No person may be prosecuted, arrested or detained except in the cases provided for and in accordance with the procedure prescribed by law.

Furthermore, arrest and detention shall only take place on the warrant of a legally authorized official.

For such warrant to be executed:

- (1) It must formally state the reason for detention and the provision under the law which punishes the alleged act;
- (2) It must be served on the person concerned and a copy of it left [55] with him at the time of his detention, except in cases of flagrante delicto.

No person may be kept in custody unless he has been brought within forty-eight hours after arrest before a judge authorized to decide the question of the legality of arrest. Such jurisdiction shall be organized by the law.

All unnecessary harshness or constraint in apprehending a person or keeping him in custody, as well as all moral pressure or physical violence, especially during interrogation, are prohibited.

All violations of this provision are arbitrary acts against which the injured parties may, without previous authorization, appeal to the competent courts and prosecute those authorizing or committing the said acts, whatever may be their rank and duties.

Honduras, Constitution of

Article 32

The Constitution recognizes the guarantee of habeas corpus. In consequence, any person illegally detained, or any other person in his name, has the right to appeal to the respective tribunal verbally or in writing, requesting the exhibition of the person detained.

Article 34

An order of arrest not issued by a competent authority, or one issued without the legal formalities required, is contrary to law.

Iceland, Constitution of

Article 65

Anyone who is arrested must without delay be brought before a judge, and should he not be discharged immediately, the judge shall decide within twenty-four hours, giving his reasons for the finding, whether the person arrested shall be imprisoned. Should it be possible to liberate him on bail, the nature and the amount of the security shall be decided in the award. Appeal can at once be made against the judge's award to a higher court; with regard to notification and appeal the procedure is the same as in criminal cases.

[56]

No one can be kept under remand for an offence which only incurs a fine or ordinary imprisonment.

Iran, The Supplementary Fundamental Laws ofArticle 10

No one can be summarily arrested, save flagrante delicto in the commission of some crime or misdemeanour, except on the written authority of the President of the Tribunal of Justice, given in conformity with the law. Even in such case the accused must immediately or at latest in the course of the next twenty-four hours, be informed and notified of the nature of his offence.

Lebanon, Constitution ofArticle 8

. . . No person may be arrested or kept in custody except in accordance with the law. . .

Liberia, Constitution ofArticle 1

Section 9. No place shall be searched, nor person seized on a criminal charge, or suspicion, unless upon warrant lawfully issued, upon probable cause supported by oath, or solemn affirmation, specially designating the place or person, and the object of the search.

Luxembourg, Constitution ofArticle 12

Paragraph 3. Except in cases of flagrante delicto, no person may be arrested save under a warrant stating the reason for arrest and issued by the court, which must be served on the person concerned at the time of arrest or not later than twenty-four hours thereafter.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 26

. . . No one may be. . . arrested except by virtue of a written order by a competent authority, or be detained more than twenty-four hours without being informed of the reason for his detention, or be detained except in his own house or in public places intended for that purpose. The recourse of habeas corpus is guaranteed to all inhabitants. The law considers anyone innocent who may not have been declared guilty, or legally suspected of so being by decree of a competent judge.

[57]

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 97

Paragraph 1. Limitations of personal liberty, especially search of person and arrest, are admissible only in cases prescribed by law, and in the manner defined by statutes, by virtue of an order from judicial authorities.

Paragraph 2. In case a judicial order cannot be issued immediately, it should be served, at the latest, within forty-eight hours, with a statement of the reasons of the search or arrest.

Paragraph 3. Arrested persons who have not been served within forty-eight hours with a written statement of the cause of the arrest, signed by a judicial authority, regain their freedom at once.

Article 124

“A temporary suspension of citizens’ rights of personal liberty (Article 97). . . may take place for the whole territory of the state or for localities in which it may prove necessary for reasons of public safety. . .”

Syria, Constitution of

Article 7

Personal freedom shall be guaranteed. No person may be arrested or kept in custody, except in cases determined by the law and in observance of the forms prescribed by it.

Article 8

Every person who is arrested or detained in custody shall be informed within twenty-four hours of the grounds for such detention or arrest, and of the authority at whose instance it has been carried out; and such persons shall, within the same period, be accorded all possible facilities for preparing their defence.

Turkey, Constitution of

Article 72

No individual shall be seized or arrested under any other circumstance or manner than that provided by law.

Ukraine, Constitution of

Article 127

See the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Constitution Article 127.
[58]

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution of

Article 127

“. . . No person may be placed under arrest except by decision of a court or with the sanction of a procurator.”

United States, Constitution of6th Amendment

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favour, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defence.

4th Amendment

... and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Article 1, Section 9, clause 2 – The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 17

In case of illegal arrest, the interested party or any other person may address an appeal of habeas corpus to the authorized judge in order that the apprehending authority may immediately explain and justify the legal cause of detention submitting it to the decision of the afore-mentioned judge.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 28

Paragraph 2. “No person may be detained under the arrest for longer than three days without written and motivated decision of a court of law or of a public prosecutor. The longest period of arrest is determined by law.”

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision
[59]

Article 8

“Slavery and compulsory labour are inconsistent with the dignity of man and therefore prohibited by this Bill of Rights. But a man may be required to perform his just share of any public service that is equally incumbent upon all, and his right to a livelihood is conditioned by his duty to work. Involuntary servitude may also be imposed as part of a punishment pronounced by a court of law.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Cassin (France):

“... it is our fundamental right to say in our Charter, in our Bill of Human Rights, that slavery is a shame on the head of humanity and that we will not suffer it”.*

Mr. Dukes (United Kingdom):

“...we talk about the right to work, well, it has been found exceedingly difficult to implement the right to work without placing the obligation to work on unemployed members of the community... .

...I see difficulty in making any attempts to provide or to place on a country the obligation to provide for the right to work, if that right is to be implemented only on one side. What is to happen in the case of the individual who may decline, and, assuming that he is in a state of penury? Is he to have the right to throw his economic burden upon the state without his having any obligation to the State within which he claims, alternatively, either the work or the right to absent himself from work?”**

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article II (paragraph 5)

The right of the state to call upon the services of the individual in time of emergency or to meet the necessities of national defence shall not be regarded as a limitation upon the fundamental right to personal liberty, but merely as a temporary restriction operating during the existence of the national need.

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 13th meeting – p. E-95.

[**] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 14th meeting – p. E-20.

[60]

(paragraph 6)

No person shall be imprisoned or held in servitude in consequence of the mere breach of contractual obligations.

Article XIV (paragraph 5)

The state has the right, in time of emergency, to call upon the services of the individual in cases where such services are necessary to meet an urgent public need.

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National ConstitutionsAfghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the GovernmentArticle 11*

There is no interference with personal liberty. No one is imprisoned or punished without an order in accordance with the Shariat or the appropriate laws. The practice of slavery is forbidden in Afghanistan. No male or female may keep any person as a slave.

Article 18

Levies of money and forced labour are prohibited, except during time of war.

Argentina, Constitution ofArticle 15

In the Argentine Nation there are no slaves; the few that exist today are free from the promulgation of this Constitution; and a special law shall regulate whatever indemnifications to which this declaration may give rise. Any contract for the purchase or sale of persons is a crime for which those committing it, and the notary or officer authorizing it, shall be responsible. And slaves, whatever the manner in which they shall be introduced, shall be free by the mere fact of setting foot on the territory of the Republic.

Article 21

Every Argentine citizen is obliged to arm himself in defence of the Fatherland and of this Constitution, in accordance with whatever laws the [61] Congress enact for the purpose and with the decrees of the National Executive. Citizens by naturalization are free to render this service or not for a term of ten years counting from the date on which they obtain their letters of citizenship.

Bolivia, Constitution of 28 October 1938Article 5

Slavery does not exist in Bolivia.

No kind of servitude is recognized and no person shall be obliged to render personal service without just retribution and without his complete consent.

Personal services shall be exacted only as they may be established by the laws.

Byelorussia, Constitution ofArticle 12 and Article 107

See the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Constitution, Article 12 and Article 132.

Chile, Constitution of 18 September 1925Article 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:

1st. . . . In Chile there are no slaves, and he who sets foot upon its territory becomes free. The slave traffic may not be engaged in by Chileans; the alien who does so cannot live in Chile nor be naturalized in the Republic.

China, Constitution ofArticle 20

The people shall have the duty of performing military service in accordance with law.

Colombia, Constitution of 4 August 1886Article 22

There shall be no slaves in Colombia. Any slave who sets foot on the territory of the Republic shall be free.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 27

All men are free in the Republic; he who is under the protection of its laws cannot be a slave.

[62]

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 107

“2. . . . Public authorities can demand personal services from a citizen only on legal grounds.”

Article 127

1. Every able-bodied citizen of the Czechoslovak Republic shall undergo military training and shall obey the summons when called upon for the defence of the State.

Denmark, Constitution ofArticle 88

Every able-bodied man is obliged to contribute his personal services in the country's defence in accordance with the detailed regulations specified by law.

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 10

Every man in the Republic is free. No one who enters its territory shall be a slave, nor can anyone who deals in slaves be a citizen.

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 15

No one shall be obliged to give work or personal services without just compensation and without his full consent, except for reasons of public necessity or utility established by law.

The law cannot authorize any act or contract that may have for its object the loss or irrevocable sacrifice of the liberty of man whether by reason of work, education, or religious vows.

Nor can it authorize agreements in which a man contracts his proscription or exile.

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 13

In Greece human beings may neither be bought nor sold; a slave, purchased or otherwise, of every race and every religion, is free from the time he sets foot on Greek soil.

Iceland, Constitution ofArticle 75

Every able-bodied man is bound to take personal part in the defence of the country according to the detailed regulations which may be laid down by law.

[63]

Iraq, Constitution of 21 March 1925Article 10

(3) Unpaid forced labour. . . are absolutely forbidden.

Liberia, Constitution ofArticle 1

Section 4. There shall be no slavery within the Republic. Nor shall any citizen of this Republic, or any person resident therein, deal in slaves, either within or without this Republic, directly or indirectly.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 2

Slavery is prohibited in the United Mexican States. Slaves from abroad who enter the national territory shall by this act alone acquire liberty and the protection of the laws.

Article 5

No person may be obliged to render personal labour without just compensation and without his full consent, except labour imposed as punishment by judicial authority; such work shall be regulated by the provisions set forth in Fraction I and II (i.e., 1st and 2nd Clauses) of Article 123.

In regard to public services, only military and jury duty, as well as the discharge of compulsory public offices and those directly or indirectly subject to popular election, may be obligatory in the manner established by the respective laws. Electoral and census functions are obligatory and uncompensated; professional services of a social nature shall be obligatory and are compensated in the manner and with the exceptions indicated by law. . .

. . . Nor shall any contract be permitted whereby a man agrees to his own proscription or exile, or in which he temporarily or permanently renounces the practice of any definite profession, industry, or commerce.

A labour contract shall call only for the performance of a specified service for the time fixed by law, and may not exceed one year to the injury of the worker, and in no sense may it be extended to the forfeiture, loss, or impairment of any political or civil rights.

[64]

Failure on the part of the worker to comply with said contract shall oblige him only for the corresponding civil responsibility and in no case may his person be subject to coercion.

Netherlands, Constitution of

Article 181

All Netherlands subjects who are able shall be bound to collaborate for the maintenance of the independence of the Realm and for the defence of its territory. This obligation may also be laid upon inhabitants who are not Netherlands subjects.

Norway, Constitution of

Article 109

Every citizen of the state shall, as a general rule, for a certain time, be liable to military service, without regard to birth or fortune.

The application of this principle and the restrictions it may become subject to, shall be determined by law.

Paraguay, Constitution of 10 July 1940

Article 24

No personal service is mandatory except by virtue of law. . .

Article 33

. . . There are no slaves in the Republic of Paraguay.

Peru, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 55

No one may be obliged to give personal labour without his free consent and without just recompense.

Philippines, Constitution of the (Bill of Rights)Article III

Section 1. (13) No involuntary servitude in any form shall exist except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 97

(Par. 4) The means of compulsory service by which the administrative authorities may enforce their orders are determined in statutes.

Article 91

“All citizens are subject to military service. . .”
[65]

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 73

Torture, bodily mistreatment, confiscation and forced labour are prohibited.

Ukraine, Constitution ofArticle 12 and Article 131

See the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Constitution, Article 12 and Article 132.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution ofArticle 12

“In the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics work is a duty and a matter of honour for every able-bodied citizen, in accordance with the principle:

‘He who does not work, neither shall he eat.’

The principle applied in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is that of socialism: ‘From each according to his ability, to each according to his work.’”

Article 132

“Universal military service is law. Military service in the Workers’ and Peasants’ Army is an honourable duty of the citizens of the USSR.”

United States of America, Constitution ofArticle<sup>156</sup>13th Amendment, Sect. 1

Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 32

“It is the duty of every citizen to work according to his abilities; he who does not contribute to the community cannot receive from it.”

Article 34

“The defence of the fatherland is the supreme duty and honour of every citizen. High treason is the greatest crime towards the people. Military service is universal for all citizens.”

[66]

Article 33

“It is the duty of citizens to perform conscientiously the public duties to which they have been elected or which are entrusted to them.”

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of LaborArticle 10

Involuntary servitude in any shape, manner or form or under any guise shall be outlawed and discontinued by all nations and all peoples.

Article 12

The key to the entire approach of human rights must be the placing of respect for human personality and welfare above all else. In this spirit, the above rights can have tangible meaning and practical application only if -

(b) There is to be no peacetime conscription or militarization of workers protesting or striking against conditions of labour which they consider as unfair or unsatisfactory.

[67]

<sup>156</sup> No article number is provided.

Article 9

“Subject to any general law adopted in the interest of national welfare or security, there shall be liberty of movement and free choice of residence within the borders of each State.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Mora (Uruguay):

“We need to protect the right of freedom of movement in order that any man would have freedom of movement from one part of a territory of the State to another. . .”*

Mrs. Mehta (India):

“With regard to the right of freedom of movement, there was another freedom that I wish to mention to you. It is not freedom of migration only, but freedom of movement within the State itself. There are laws today in many States which restrict individuals from one part of the country going into the other part of the country. Therefore, there must be freedom of movement within the State itself. That is very important.”**

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article II (paragraph 2)

The right to personal liberty includes the right to freedom of movement from one part of the territory of the State to another and it includes also freedom to establish a residence in any part of the territory, subject only to the restrictions that may be imposed by general laws looking to the public order and security of the State.

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 8th meeting – pages 43–50

[**] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 14th meeting – page -E-21

Section III. National Constitutions*Argentine, Constitution ofArticle 14*

All inhabitants of the Nation enjoy the following rights, in accordance with the laws that regulate their exercise, namely: of working and practising any legal industry; of navigating and trading; of petitioning the authorities; of entering, remaining in, travelling through, and leaving the Argentine territory; of publishing their ideas through the press without previous censorship; of using and disposing of their property; of associating for useful purposes; of freely professing their religion; of teaching and learning.

Bolivia, Constitution ofArticle 6

Every person has the following fundamental rights in conformity with the laws that regulate their exercise: 1st. To enter the national territory, remain there, move about, or leave.

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic: 15th. The liberty to dwell at any point in the Republic, to remove from one place to another. . . under the condition that police regulations be observed, and excepting always injury to a third party; . . .

China, Constitution ofArticle 10

The people shall have the freedom of domicile and of change of domicile.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 28

Every Costa Rican can move to any point in the Republic or outside of it, provided that he is free of all responsibility, and may return when he desires.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 30

Any person may enter and remain in the national territory, leave it, move from one place to another, and change residence without the necessity of a letter of security, passport, or other similar requirement, except for what is provided in the laws of immigration and the duties of the [69] authorities in cases of criminal responsibility.

No person shall be obliged to change his domicile or residence, except by order of a judicial authority and in the cases and subject to the requirements stipulated by law.

No Cuban may be expatriated or be prohibited entrance into the territory of the Republic.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution of

Article 108

“1. Every citizen of the Czechoslovak State may take up his abode wheresoever he will in the Czechoslovak Republic. . .”

2. This right shall only suffer restriction in the public interests and on the basis of law.

Dominican Republic, Constitution of

Article 6

10th. Freedom of transit, except for restrictions that result from the execution of penalties imposed judicially, or of immigration and health laws.

Ecuador, Constitution of

Article 187

“The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador: . . . (5) freedom to travel throughout the Republican Territory, to change their residence. . .”

Egypt, Royal Rescript No. 42

Article 7

Egyptians. . . may not be prohibited from staying in any particular locality, or compelled to reside in a specified place, save in cases prescribed by law.

El Salvador, Constitution of

Article 13

Every person has the right to remain in the place that he may prefer; and that of travelling, emigrating, and returning without a passport, except in case of an executed sentence and without prejudice to what is provided in Article 28 of this Constitution.

Ethiopia, Constitution of

Article 22

Ethiopian subjects have the right to move freely from one place to another within the limits prescribed by law.

[70]

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 25

No one may be obliged to change domicile or residence except by decree of a judicial authority, in the special cases and with the requirements that the law indicates.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 67

Any person may enter the territory of the Republic; leave it, travel within its boundaries, and change residence, in conformity with the laws.

Iran, The Supplementary Fundamental LawsArticle 14

No Persian can be exiled from the country, or prevented from residing in any part thereof, or compelled to reside in any specified part thereof, save in such cases as the Law may explicitly determine.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 11

Any person has the right to enter the Republic, leave it, travel through its territory, and change residence without the necessity of a letter of security, passport, safe conduct, or similar requirements. The exercise of this right shall come under the jurisdiction of the judicial authority in cases of criminal and civil responsibility and under the jurisdiction of the administrative authority insofar as it related to the limitations that the laws impose on emigration, immigration, and the general health of the Republic, or on undesirable aliens residing in the country.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 120

All persons may travel freely within the national territory and choose therein their residence and domicile without being compelled to change it unless it be by virtue of an executed sentence. The right of [sic] emigrate and immigrate is recognized, under the limitations that the law established.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 27

Any person may travel freely through the national territory and change residence without other limitations than those imposed by travel, fiscal, health, and immigration laws and regulations.

[71]

Peru, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 68

No one may be exiled from the territory of the Republic, or removed from the place of his residence, except by an executed sentence or by application of the law of alienage.

Philippines, Constitution ofArticle III Section 1

(4) The liberty of abode and of changing the same within the limits prescribed by law shall not be impaired.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 101

Every citizen has the liberty of selecting on the territory of the state his place of residence and abode, to move about. . . These rights may be restricted only by statute.

Siam, Constitution ofArticle 14

Subject to the provisions of the law, every person enjoys full liberty of person, abode, property, speech, writing, publication, education, public meeting, association and vocation.

Sweden, Constitution ofArticle 16

. . . The King shall not banish any person from any place to another. . .

Syria, Constitution ofArticle 11

It is likewise forbidden to deport Syrians from their national territory or to compel them, or forbid them, to reside in any other place, except as provided by law.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 70

Personal immunity, freedom of conscience, of thought, of speech and press, the right to travel, to make contracts, to work, to own and dispose of property, to meet and associate and to incorporate, form part of the rights and liberties of Turkish citizens.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 78

Travel is subject to no restriction whatsoever except in cases of general mobilization, martial law, or legislative restrictions of a hygienic nature necessitated by epidemics.
[72]

United States, Constitution of theArticle IV Section 2

Clause 1. The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

14th Amendment, 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. . .

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[73]

Article 10

“The right of emigration and expatriation shall not be denied.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members
of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Mora (Uruguay):

“We need to protect the right of freedom of movement in order that any man would have freedom of movement from one part of a territory of the State to another and the right to leave the State itself limited only by law of immigration in other countries.”*

Mr. Cassin (France):

mentions “the right of migration”.**

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article II (paragraph 2)

The right to personal liberty. . . includes. . . the right to leave the State itself. . .

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 8th meeting – pages 43–50, see also 14th meeting – page 2

[**] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 13th meeting – page E-101

[74]

Section III. National Constitutions

Argentine, Constitution of

Article 14

All inhabitants of the Nation enjoy the following rights, in accordance with the laws that regulate their exercise, namely; of working and practising any legal industry; of navigating and trading; or petitioning the authorities; of entering, remaining in, travelling through and leaving the Argentine territory; of publishing their ideas through the press without previous censorship; of using and disposing of their property; of associating for useful purposes; of freely professing their religion; of teaching and learning.

Article 25

The federal Government shall develop European immigration; and shall not be able to restrict, limit or burden with any tax whatsoever the entrance into Argentine territory of aliens who arrive with the object of tilling the ground, improving the industries, and introducing and teaching the sciences and arts.

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 6

Every person has the following fundamental rights in conformity with the laws that regulate their exercise:

1st. To enter the national territory, remain there, move about, or leave.

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 142

Any person may, in time of peace, enter the national territory with his goods and remain therein or depart therefrom, respecting the precepts of the law.

Article 141

No. 13. There shall be no penalty of banishment, . . .

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic: 15th. The liberty to . . . leave the territory, under the condition [75] that police regulations be observed, and excepting always injury to a third party; . . .

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 28

Every Costa Rican can move to any point in the Republic or outside of it, provided that he is free of all responsibility, and may return when he desires.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 30

Any person may enter and remain in the national territory, leave it, move from one place to another, and change residence without the necessity of a letter of security, passport, or other similar requirement, except for what is provided in the laws on immigration and the duties of the authorities in cases of criminal responsibility.

. . . No Cuban may be expatriated or be prohibited entrance into the territory of the Republic.

Article 76

The law shall regulate immigration in keeping with the national economic system and with social necessities. The importation of contract labour, as well as all immigration tending to debase the condition of labour, is prohibited.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 110

The right to emigrate abroad may be restricted only by law.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 187

The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador: . . . (5) freedom . . . to leave and return to Ecuador including removal of belongings, without prejudice to what the law may prescribe in regard to the national artistic heritage and protection of the currency. . .

Egypt, Royal Rescript No. 42Article 7

Egyptians may not be expelled from Egyptian territory.
[76]

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 13

Every person has the right to remain in the place that he may prefer; and that of travelling, emigrating, and returning without a passport, except in case of an executed sentence and without prejudice to what is provided in Article 28 of this Constitution.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 25

Every person has the freedom to enter, to remain in the territory of the Republic, and to leave it, except for the limitations that the law establishes. . .

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 67

Any person may enter the territory of the Republic; leave it, travel within its boundaries, and change residence, in conformity with the laws.

Iraq, Constitution ofArticle 7

. . . Torture and the deportation of Iraqis from the Kingdom of Iraq are absolutely forbidden.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 11

Any person has the right to enter the Republic, leave it, travel through its territory, and change residence without the necessity of a letter of security, passport, safe conduct, or similar requirements. The exercise of this right shall come under the jurisdiction of the judicial authority in cases of criminal and civil responsibility and under the jurisdiction of the administrative authority insofar as it relates to the limitations that the laws impose on emigration, immigration, and the general health of the Republic, or on undesirable aliens residing in the country.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 120

All persons may travel freely within the national territory and choose therein their residence and domicile without being compelled to change it unless it be by virtue of an executed sentence. The right to [77] emigrate and immigrate is recognized, under the limitations that the law establishes.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 72

The law will regulate immigration, paying attention to the national economic system and to social needs.

Contracting for a day labourer who may cut down the conditions of work or the living standards of the national worker is prohibited.

Article 30

There is no penalty of death, expatriation, or confiscation of property.

Peru, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 67

The right of entering, travelling in, and leaving the territory of the Republic is free, with the limitations that may be established by the penal, sanitary, and alienage laws.

Article 68

No one may be exiled from the territory of the Republic, or removed from the place of his residence, except by an executed sentence or by application of the law of alienage.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 101

Every citizen has the liberty. . . to emigrate. . .

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 36

Any person is free to enter the territory of the Republic, to remain in it, or to leave with his property, observing the laws, and without injury to third parties.

Immigration shall be regulated by law, but in no case shall an immigrant who suffers from physical, mental, or moral defects that may injure society, be admitted.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor

Article 7

The right to migrate or leave temporarily or permanently a country in which a citizen does not want to remain must be assured, limited only by the laws of immigration of the country which he may wish to visit.

[78]

Article 11

“No one shall be subjected to arbitrary searches or seizures, or to unreasonable interference with his person, home, family relations, reputation, privacy, activities, or personal property. The secrecy of correspondence shall be respected.”

(See Article 6 of Panama Draft copy of International Declaration)

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article X (paragraph 1)

Every person has the right to be free from interference in his family relations.

Article II (paragraph 3)

The right to personal liberty includes the inviolability of the domicile of the individual and of his personal correspondence.

Cuba

Article 6

The right to protection from unjustified interferences with his person, family, home, reputation or private activities.

Panama (American Law Institute)Article 6

Freedom from unreasonable interference with his person, home, reputation, privacy, activities, and property is the right of everyone.

The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions*Afghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the GovernmentArticle 16*

The residence of every Afghan subject is safe from every sort of interference. No official or other person may enter a private residence [79] without an order under Shariat law or the law of the land.

Article 109

Immunity of correspondence is one of the rights of the people. Letters and other communications from the public on which postage has been paid will not be opened by any post office or at any other place, except under an order of search from a court, but will be delivered closed to the addressee.

Argentine, Constitution ofArticle 18

No inhabitant of the Nation may be punished without previous trial, based on an earlier law than the date of the offence, nor tried by special commissions, nor removed from the judges designated by law before the date of the trial. No one can be compelled to testify against himself or be arrested except by virtue of a written order from a competent authority. The defence, by trial, of the person and of rights is inviolable. The domicile is inviolable, as also epistolary correspondence and private papers, and a law shall determine in what cases and for what reasons their search and seizure will be allowed. The penalty of death for political offences, all kinds of torture, and whipping, are forever abolished. The prisons of the Nation shall be healthy and clean, for the safety and not for the punishment of the prisoners confined in them; and any measure that under pretext of precaution inflicts on them hardship beyond what the Nation demands, will bring responsibility upon the judge who authorizes it.

Article 19

The private actions of men that in no way offend public order or morality, nor hurt a third party, are reserved only to God, and are exempt from the authority of the magistrates.

Belgium, Constitution ofArticle 10

The private domicile is inviolable; no search of premises can take place except in cases provided for by law and according to the form therein prescribed.

Article 22

The privacy of correspondence is inviolable. The law shall determine who are the agents responsible for the violation of the secrecy of letters entrusted to the post.
[80]

Bolivia, Constitution ofArticle 15

... Epistolary correspondence and private papers are inviolable; they shall not be seized except in the cases determined by law and by virtue of written orders issued by the proper authority. Letters and private papers intercepted or sequestered have no legal effect.

Article 35

... 5th. Likewise, censure of correspondence in general may be imposed and the use of transit passports be required for persons who enter or leave the territory in siege.

In case of international war, censorship shall be established over correspondence and all methods of publicity.

Article 16

Every house is an inviolable asylum; no person may enter at night without the consent of its inhabitants, and by day entrance without permission may be effected only by a written order issued by the proper authority except in cases in flagrante delicto.

Brazil, Constitution ofArticle 141

No. 6. The secrecy of correspondence is inviolable.

No. 15. The home is the inviolable asylum of the individual. No one may enter therein at night, without the consent of the dweller, unless it be to succour the victims of crime or disaster, or by day, except in the cases established by law.

Byelorussia, Constitution ofArticle 102, Article 103

See Article 127 and Article 128 of the Constitution of Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:

12th. Inviolability of the home.

The house of any person living in Chilean territory may be forcibly entered only for a special purpose, determined by law, and by virtue of an order from a [81] competent authority. 13th. Inviolability of epistolary and telegraphic correspondence. Documents or public securities shall not be opened, intercepted, or examined, except in the cases expressly designated by the law.

China, Constitution ofArticle 12

The people shall have the freedom of secrecy of correspondence.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 23

No one shall be molested in his person or his family, imprisoned, or apprehended, or have his domicile searched, except by virtue of a written warrant from a competent authority, with all legal formalities, and for an offence previously defined in the law.

Article 24

An offender caught in flagrante delicto may be arrested and taken before a judge by any person. If the agents of the authority pursue him and he takes refuge in his own dwelling, they may enter it for the purpose of arresting him; but if he seeks asylum in the dwelling of another person, the consent of the owner or tenant thereof must be previously obtained.

Article 38

Private correspondence by mail or telegraph is inviolable. Letters and private papers shall not be intercepted or examined, except by authority, by means of an order by a competent official, and in the cases and with formalities that the law may establish, and for the sole purpose of seeking legal evidence.

Presentation of account books and other papers relating thereto may be required for levying taxes and in cases of intervention by the State.

The circulation of printed matter through the mails may be taxed, but may never be prohibited in time of peace.

Costa Rica, Constitution of

Article 30

The domicile of the inhabitants of the Republic is inviolable, and one cannot enter a house forcibly except in the cases and with the formalities that the law prescribes.

[82]

Article 31

The private papers of the inhabitants of the republic may in no case be seized or even examined.

Article 32

The secrecy of written and telegraphic correspondence is inviolable, and whatever is removed cannot be exhibited for legal purposes.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 32

The secrecy of correspondence and other private documents is inviolable, and neither the former nor the latter may be held or examined except by officials of official agents in pursuance of a written order from a competent judge. In all cases secrecy shall be maintained regarding matters not pertaining to the object of the seizure or examination. Under the same provisions, the privacy of telegraphic, telephonic, and cable communication is also declared inviolable.

Article 34

The domicile is inviolable and, in consequence, no person may make entry at night into the domicile of another person without the consent of its resident, except in order to succour victims of a crime or disaster, or during the days except in the cases and in the form determined by law.

In case of suspension of this guarantee, it shall be indispensably required that entry into the domicile of a person be made by proper competent authority, upon written order or resolution, an authentic copy of which shall be presented to the resident, his family, or nearest neighbour, according to the case. When authority is delegated to any of his agents the same procedure shall be followed.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution of

Article 112

1. Domestic rights are inviolable.

Article 116

1. Inviolability of matter entrusted to the mail is guaranteed.

[83]

Denmark, Constitution ofArticle 79

A person's dwelling is inviolable. House search, seizure and examination of letters and other papers can only be undertaken on an order of the court, unless a special exception is authorized by the law.

Dominican Republic, Constitution ofArticle 6

5th. . . The law will establish penalties applicable to those who act against the honour of persons, . . .

The following are established as inherent to the human personality:

8th. Inviolability of correspondence and other private documents, which cannot be seized or inspected except by means of legal proceedings in the substantiation of matters that are examined in the courts. Secrecy of telegraphic, telephonic, and cable communication is equally inviolable.

9th. Inviolability of the home. No search of a house may be carried out except in cases foreseen by the law, and with the formalities that it prescribes.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 187

The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador:

. . . (6) inviolability of the home; no one may enter a house against the owner's will, unless presenting a warrant signed by the competent authority; and, without such warrant, only in cases expressly laid down by law.

. . . (7) inviolability of correspondence, postal or other. Consequently it is forbidden to intercept, open or examine another person's correspondence, except in the cases prescribed by law. . .

Egypt, Royal Rescript No. 42Article 8

The sanctity of the home shall be inviolable. No search may be carried out in the home, save in the cases provided for and in accordance with the procedure prescribed by law.

Article 11

The privacy of letters, telegrams and communications by telephone shall be inviolable, except in the cases prescribed by law.

[84]

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 21

Inspection or search of a person may be undertaken only to prevent or investigate crimes or offences. . .

The domicile is inviolable, and its invasion may not be decreed except for the investigation of crimes or the pursuit of offenders, in the form and in the cases determined by law.

Article 30

Correspondence by letter and telegraph is inviolable. Intercepted correspondence cannot be given faith and cannot figure in any kind of action.

Ethiopia, Constitution ofArticle 25

Except in the cases provided for by law, no search may be carried out in the home.

Article 26

Except in the cases provided for by law, no person shall be entitled to violate the privacy of the correspondence of Ethiopian subjects.

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 12

The dwelling is inviolable. Domiciliary visits can only be made when and as the law directs.

Offenders against these provisions are punished for abuse of authority and are bound fully to indemnify the injured party, and further to compensate him in a sum of money fixed at the discretion of the Law Court, but never less than one hundred drachmas.

Article 20

The secrecy of letters is absolutely inviolable.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 35

The correspondence of all persons, and their private papers and books, are inviolable. . . they may be seized or examined only by virtue of a decree by a competent judge and with the legal formalities. . .

Article 37

The domicile is inviolate. No one may enter it without the permission of [85] the proprietor, except by the written order of a competent judge. . .

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 14

No house search and no seizure of papers may take place except by virtue of the law and in the forms thereby prescribed.

Article 28

The secrecy of correspondence shall be inviolable.

The law shall prescribe what officers shall be held responsible for the secrecy of letters entrusted to the mails.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 46

No person shall be harassed or persecuted because of his opinions. Private actions that do not disturb public order, or that do not cause injury to a third person, shall always be outside of the action of the law.

Article 48

The residence of every person is an inviolable asylum, that shall not be entered except by authority, in the following cases:

- 1st. To remove a criminal surprised in flagrante delicto.
- 2nd. Because an offence is being committed inside the habitation, because of scandalous disorder that requires immediate remedy, or because of a complaint from the interior of the house.
- 3rd. In case of fire, earthquake, flood, epidemic, or other analogous situations; and to make any visit or inspection for purely sanitary purposes.
- 4th. To free a person held illegally.
- 5th. To obtain articles sought for a suit, regarding which there is at least some proof of the existence of said articles; and to execute a legally decreed judicial provision.
- 6th. To apprehend an accused person, whose order for arrest or imprisonment has been obtained previously, some proof being established that he is hidden in the house to be searched.
- 7th. In the last two cases, search of a house may not be made without a written order from a competent authority.

[86]

Article 49

If the domicile to be searched is not the dwelling of the accused person, the authority or its agents shall, before entering, request permission to enter from the person residing therein.

Article 50

Searching of domiciles shall not be made from seven at night until six in the morning without permission of the head of the house.

Article 51

Correspondence by letter and telegraph and private papers are inviolable, except for what is especially provided by the law of state of siege.

Neither the Executive nor his agents may remove, open, or detain such correspondence. If it has been taken from the mails or from any other place, it may not be introduced in a trial.

Article 52

Private correspondence, papers, or books may only be seized by the order of a competent judge, for the civil or criminal suits determined by law, and shall be registered in the presence of the owner, or, in his absence, of two witnesses; all papers having no relation to the investigation shall be returned.

Iceland, Constitution ofArticle 66

A man's dwelling is inviolable. Domiciliary search, seizure and examination of letters and other papers can only take place in accordance with a judicial decision or pursuant to special legal authority.

Iran, The Supplementary Fundamental LawsArticle 9

All individuals are protected and safeguarded in respect to their lives, homes. . . from every kind of interference, and none shall molest them save in such case and in such way as the laws of the land shall determine.

Article 9

All individuals are protected and safeguarded in respect of their. . . honour, from every kind of interference, and none shall molest them save in such a case and in such a way as the laws of the land shall determine.

[87]

Article 13

Every person's house and dwelling is protected and safeguarded, and no dwelling place may be entered save in such case and in such a way as the law has decreed.

Article 22

Correspondence passing through the post is safeguarded and exempt from seizure or examination, save in such exceptional cases as the law lays down.

Article 23

It is forbidden to disclose or detain telegraphic correspondence without the express permission of the owner, save in such cases as the law lays down.

Iraq, Constitution of

Article 8

The inviolability of all places of residence is guaranteed. They may not be entered or searched except in such circumstances and in such a manner as may be prescribed by law.

Article 15

All postal and telegraphic correspondence and all telephonic communications shall be secret and free from censorship or detention, except in such circumstances and in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

Lebanon, Constitution of

Article 14

Dwellings shall be inviolable. No one may enter therein except in the circumstances and in the manner prescribed by law.

Liberia, Constitution of

Article 1, Section 9

No place shall be searched, nor person seized on a criminal charge, or suspicion, unless upon warrant lawfully issued, upon probable cause supported by oath, or solemn affirmation, specially designating the place or person, and the object of the search.

Luxembourg, Constitution of

Article 15

The sanctity of the home shall be inviolable. No search may be carried out in the home except in the cases provided for and in accordance with the procedure prescribed by law.
[88]

Article 28

The privacy of correspondence shall be inviolable.

The law shall determine who are the officers responsible for the privacy of letters entrusted to the mails.

The law shall regulate the guarantee of the privacy of telegrams.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution of

Article 10

The inhabitants of the United Mexican States have the liberty of possessing arms of any kind for their security and legitimate defence, except such arms as those expressly prohibited by law, and those that the Nation reserves for the exclusive use of the army, navy, and national guard; but, these may not be carried in towns, without complying with police regulations.

Article 16

No person, his family, domicile, papers, or possessions may be molested except by virtue of a written order by a competent authority establishing and supporting the legal basis of the proceeding.

Article 16

. . . Every search warrant, which may be issued only by judicial authority and always in writing, shall state the place to be inspected, the person or persons to be apprehended, and the objects to be sought, to which the search should be exclusively limited, and upon the conclusion of said search a circumstantial report shall be drawn up in the presence of two witnesses proposed by the occupant of the place searched, or, in his absence or at his refusal, by the officer making the investigation. . .

Article 16

Administrative officials may enter domiciles only to assure themselves that sanitary and police regulations have been complied with; and to require the exhibition of books and papers necessary to prove that fiscal regulations have been respected, subject to these cases to the respective laws and to the formalities prescribed for searches.

Article 25

Sealed correspondence sent by mail shall be free from all investigation, and its violation shall be punishable by law.

[89]

Article 26

No member of the army may, in time of peace, be lodged in a private house without the consent of the owner, nor may any levies be imposed. Members of the army may, in time of war, exact lodging, supplies, food, and other levies on the terms that the corresponding martial law establishes.

Netherlands, Constitution of the

Article 159

To enter a dwelling against the occupant's will shall only be permitted on cases determined by law, by virtue of a special or general order given by an authority designed by law. The forms to which the exercise of this power shall be bound shall be regulated by law.

Article 160

The secrecy of letters entrusted to the postal service or to other public institutions of conveyance shall be inviolable, except by order of a judge in the cases described by law.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 123

The State guarantees the inviolability of the home. The habitation of all persons in Nicaraguan territory may be broken into by the authorities on [sic] in the following cases:

- 1st. In the actual pursuit of an offender.
  - 2nd. To remove a criminal surprised in flagrante delicto.
  - 3rd. When the tenant requests it, when an offence is committed therein or when a serious disturbance has been created therein that requires prompt remedy.
  - 4th. In case of fire, earthquake, flood, epidemic, or other analogous emergency.
  - 5th. For any visit or inspection of a statistical, sanitary, or hygienic character.
  - 6th. To release a person unlawfully held.
  - 7th. To remove, by virtue of a writ, objects sought, when there is sufficient proof of the existence of said objects therein.
  - 8th. In order to execute a judicial decision, mandate, or order.
- [90]
- 9th. To arrest a criminal whose detention or imprisonment has been ordered, provided that there is sufficient proof that he is concealed in the place to be entered.

The entrance shall not be effected in the four cases last mentioned except on written order issued by a competent authority.

When the domicile to be entered is not that of the criminal pursued, the authority or his agents will previously ask the permission of the tenant.

The entering of a domicile in the cases in which a written order by a competent authority is required shall not be made between the hours of seven at night and six in the morning without the consent of the head of the household.

Article 131

The secrecy of epistolary, telegraphic, telephonic, or of any other kind of correspondence, as well as of private documents and papers, is inviolable. They may never be opened, examined or intercepted except in conformity with the laws exacted for reasons of general interest, and by a previous order from a competent authority. Every examination of this material must be made in the presence of the recipient or possessor of the same, or, in his absence, before two witnesses, returning the correspondence, documents, or papers that have no relation to the matter under investigation.

Article 132

Any correspondence, documents, and papers removed from post-offices, or from any other place, in contravention of the law, will have no legal effect in court proceedings or out of court.

Norway, Constitution of

Article 102

Domiciliary visits shall not be made except in criminal cases.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 26

The domicile is inviolable. No one may enter that of another without the consent of its proprietor unless on the written order of a competent authority or in order to succour the victims of crimes or disasters.

Labour, social welfare, and sanitation officials may, after previous [91] announcement, perform domiciliary or inspection visits to working places for the purpose of seeing to the fulfilment of the social and public health laws.

Article 29

Correspondence and other private documents are inviolable and may not be seized or examined except by provision of a competent authority and by means of legal formalities. In all cases discretion shall be observed about matters foreign to the object of the seizure or examination.

Inspection of papers shall always be performed in the presence of the interested party or of a member of his family or, in their absence, of two reputable neighbours of the same place.

Paraguay, Constitution of

Article 26

... Guilt or dishonour that persons may incur does not affect their relatives.

Article 27

... The domicile, written correspondence, and private papers are also inviolable. The law shall determine in what cases the inviolability of domicile and correspondence may be suspended.

Peru, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 61

The domicile is inviolable. It may not be entered unless a written order authorized by a judge or a competent authority has previously been shown.

Article 66

Correspondence is inviolable. Letters and private papers may not be seized, intercepted, or recorded, except by judicial authority in the cases and in the form established by law.

Letters and private papers that have been violated or removed have no legal effect.

Philippines, Constitution of theArticle III, Section 1

(3) The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, [92] and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, to be determined by the judge after examination under oath or affirmation of the complainant and the witnesses he may produce, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

(5) The privacy of communication and correspondence shall be inviolable except upon lawful order of the court or when public safety and order require otherwise.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 100

The home and hearth of the citizen are inviolable. Infringements of this right by entering the home, searching it and taking papers or movables may, apart from the necessity of executing administrative orders based on specific statutory authorization, take place only by order of judicial authorities in the manner and in the cases prescribed by the protection of statute.

Article 106

The secrecy of letters and other correspondence may be infringed upon only in cases provided by law.

Article 124

A temporary suspension of citizen's rights of inviolability of home and hearth (Article 100) . . . of secrecy of correspondence (Article 106) . . . may take place for the whole territory of the state or for localities in which it may prove necessary for reasons of public safety. . .

Sweden, Constitution ofArticle 16

The King shall not disturb or allow to be disturbed the peace of any person in his home. . .

Syria, Constitution ofArticle 12

Dwellings shall be inviolable; no one may enter therein, except in the circumstances and in the manner prescribed by law.

Article 18

Postal, telegraphic and telephonic communications shall be inviolable [93] and may not be delayed or censored, except as provided by law.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 71

The life, property, honour and residence of each individual are inviolable.

Article 76

No one's domicile may be entered or his person searched except as in the manner and under the conditions stipulated by law.

Article 81

Documents, letters and all kinds of parcels delivered to the postal authorities may not be opened without a decision by a competent examining magistrate and tribunal. Likewise the secrecy of telegraphic and telephonic conversation may not be violated.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 7

Inhabitants of the Republic have the right to be protected in the enjoyment of life, honour, liberty, security, work, and property. No person shall be deprived of these rights except in conformity with the laws that may be established for reasons of general interest.

Article 11

The home is an inviolable haven. No person may enter it at night without the consent of the owner, and by day only by express order in writing from an authorized judge and in the cases determined by law.

Article 27

The papers of private persons and their correspondence by letter, telegraph, or any other means, are inviolable, and their inspection, examination, or interception is prohibited except in conformity with laws that may be established for reasons of general interest.

Ukrainia [sic], Constitution of Article 127, Article 128

See Article 127 and Article 128 of the Constitution of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

[94]

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution of

Article 127

Citizens of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics are guaranteed inviolability of the person. . . .

Article 128

The inviolability of the homes of citizens and privacy of correspondence are protected by law.

United States, Constitution of the

4th Amendment

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 29

The dwelling is inviolable.

Nobody may enter another person's dwelling or premises, or search them against the occupant's will without a legal search warrant.

A search may only be made in the presence of two witnesses. The occupant of the premises has the right to be present during the search of his dwelling or premises.

Article 30

The privacy of letters and other means of communication is inviolable except in cases of criminal enquiry, mobilization or war.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision
[95]

Article 12

“Everyone has the right to a legal personality. No one shall be restricted in the exercise of his civil rights except for reasons based on age or mental condition or as a punishment for a criminal offence.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile – No provision

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Belgium, Constitution of

Article 13

Total deprivation of civil rights (mort civile) is abolished and shall not be re-established.

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 132

The law does not recognize inequality among children; all have the same rights.

Article 23

Every person enjoys civil rights; their exercise is regulated by civil law.

Article 25

Punishment by disgrace or by loss of civil rights shall not exist.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 50

The law shall determine matters relative to the civil status of persons and their consequent rights and duties. Likewise, family patrimonies, which are inalienable and free from attachment, may be established.

[96]

Cuba, Constitution ofArticle 43

3. Marriage may be dissolved by agreement of the husband and wife, or in the petition of either of the two, for the reasons and in the form established in the law.

4. The married woman enjoys the full advantages of equal civil capacity, with no necessity for marital permission or authorization in order to manage property, freely to engage in trade, to enter industry or a profession, to practise an art, to hold office, and to dispose of the product of her labour.

Article 44

Parents are obliged to support, tend, educate and instruct their children, and the latter to respect and assist their parents. The law shall assure the fulfilment of these duties with guarantees and adequate penalties.

Children born out of wedlock to a person who at the time of conception may have been able to contract marriage, have the same rights and duties as are stipulated in the preceding paragraph, except for what the law prescribes in regard to inheritance. For this purpose, children born out of wedlock, of married person, when the latter acknowledge the children, or when the filiation is established by declaration, shall also have equal rights. The law shall regulate the investigation of paternity.

All qualifications on the nature of filiation are abolished. No statement may be made differentiating between births, either upon the civil status of the parents in the written records of the latter, or in any registry of baptism or certificate preferring to the filiation.

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 15

No one shall be obliged to give work or personal services without just compensation and without his full consent, except for reasons of public necessity or utility established by law. The law cannot authorize any act or contract that may have for its object the loss or irrevocable sacrifice of the liberty of man, whether by reason of work, education, or religious vows. Nor can it authorize agreements in which a man contracts his prescription or exile.

[97]

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 18

Civil death is abolished. The penalty of death for political offences, except complex crimes, is abolished.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 5

The State may not permit to be carried into effect any contract, pact, or agreement that has as its object the impairment, loss, or irrevocable sacrifice of the liberty of man, whether by reason of occupation, education, or religious vow. Consequently, the law does not permit the establishment of monastic orders, whatever may be the denomination or the object for which they presume to be established.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 83

The law will procure for illegitimate children the same advantages for their physical, spiritual, and social development as for legitimate ones.

Panama, Constitution ofArticle 58

Parents have the same duties toward children born outside of wedlock as toward those born in it. All children are equal before the law and have the same hereditary rights in intestate succession.

Peru, Constitution ofArticle 44

Any stipulation in a labour contract that may restrict the exercise of civil, political, and social rights is prohibited.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 70

Personal immunity, freedom of conscience, of thought, of speech and press, the right to travel, to make contracts, to work, to own and dispose of property, to meet and associate and to incorporate, form part of the rights and liberties of Turkish citizens.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 41

Parents shall have the same obligations toward children born out of wedlock as toward those born in marriage.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category

American Federation of Labor – No provision
[98]

Article 13

“Everyone has the right to contract marriage in accordance with the laws of the State.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members
of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Lebeau (Belgium):

“... The right to marriage, establish a home and have children...”*

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article X (paragraph 1)

Every person has the right to be free from interference in his family relations.

(paragraph 2)

It is the duty of the State to respect and to protect the reciprocal rights of husband and wife in their mutual relations.

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision*United States* – No provisionSection III. National Constitutions*Belgium, Constitution ofArticle 16*

Civil marriage shall always precede the religious ceremony, except in cases to be established by law if found necessary.

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 13th meeting – page E-82.

[99]

Cuba, Constitution ofArticle 43

1. The family, motherhood, and marriage are under the protection of the State.
2. Only marriages authorized by officials having legal capacity to effect them are valid. Civil marriage is gratuitous and shall be recognized by the law.
3. Marriage is the legal basis of the family, and rests upon absolute equality of rights of both husband and wife. The economic relationship between husband and wife shall be regulated in accordance with this principle.
5. Marriage may be dissolved by agreement of the husband and wife, or in the petition of either of the two, for the reasons and in the form established in the law.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 78

The State fosters the organization of the family on the legal basis of matrimony.

Panama, Constitution ofArticle 56

A union in fact between persons legally capacitated to contract matrimony, maintained during ten consecutive years in conditions of singularity and stability, will have all the effects of civil matrimony.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[100]

Article 14

“There shall be freedom of conscience and belief and of private and public religious worship.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article IV (paragraph 1, 2, 3, 4)

Every person has the right to freedom of religious belief and worship.

This right includes freedom of religious worship in public as well as in private; freedom of religious worship by groups as well as by individuals; freedom to maintain churches and other places of public worship and to assemble in them without restraint; freedom of parents to educate children in their particular religious belief; freedom of religious propaganda in spoken or written form.

The only restrictions which the state may place upon the right of freedom of religious worship are those called for by the requirements of public health, safety and good morals; and all such restrictions must be in accordance with general laws and administered without discrimination.

A distinction is recognized between strictly religious activities and other activities of an economic or financial character associated with the maintenance of religious worship but not forming an essential part of it. These economic or financial activities may be regulated by the state in accordance with the general laws governing such activities.

Cuba

Article 4

The right to choose and profess freely his religion without any restriction other than that imposed by respect for morality and public order.

Panama (American Law Institute)

Article 1

Freedom of belief and of worship is the right of everyone. The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

B. Proposals

IndiaArticle 1(a)

Every human being is entitled to the right of liberty, including the right to freedom of worship.

[101]

United StatesArticle II (2)

Among the categories of rights which the United States suggests should be considered are the following:

- (a) personal rights such as freedom of . . . religion . . .

Section III. National Constitutions*Afghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the GovernmentArticle 1*

The faith of Afghanistan is the sacred faith of Islam, and the official religion and that of the population in general is the Hanafi religion. The King of Afghanistan should be a follower of this religion. Followers of other religions such as Hindus and Jews, who live in Afghanistan, provided they do not infringe the ordinary rules of conduct and propriety, also enjoy protection.

Argentine, Constitution ofArticle 2

The federal Government supports the Roman Catholic Apostolic Church.

Article 14

All inhabitants of the Nation enjoy the following rights in accordance with the laws that regulate their exercise, namely: of working and practising any legal industry; of navigating and trading; of petitioning the authorities; of entering, remaining in, travelling through, and leaving the Argentine territory; of publishing their ideas through the press without previous censorship; of using and disposing of their property; of associating for useful purposes; of freely professing their religion; of teaching and learning.

Belgium, Constitution ofArticle 14

Religious liberty and the freedom of public worship are guaranteed, unless crimes are committed in the use of these liberties.

Article 15

No one shall be compelled to join in any manner whatever in the forms and ceremonies of any religion, nor to observe its days of rest.

[102]

Article 16

The state shall not interfere either in the appointment or in the installation of the ministers of any religion whatever, nor shall it forbid them to correspond with their superiors or publish their proceedings, subject to the ordinary responsibility of the press and of publication. . .

Article 16

. . . Civil marriage shall always precede the religious ceremony, except in cases to be established by law if found necessary.

Bolivia, Constitution of 28 October 1938Article 156

Schools of a private character shall be subject to the same authorities, plans, programmes, and official rules. Liberty of religious instruction is recognized.

Article 2

The State recognizes and supports the Roman Catholic Apostolic religion, guaranteeing the public exercise of all religions.

Brazil, Constitution of 18 September 1946Article 141

No. 7. The liberty of conscience and creed is inviolable, and the free exercise of religious sects is assured, except that they shall not be contrary to public order or good morals. Religious associations shall acquire juridical personality in the form of the civil law.

No. 8. No one shall be deprived of any of his rights by reason of religious, philosophic, or political conviction, unless he shall invoke it in order to exempt himself from any obligation, duty, or service required by the law of Brazilians in general, or shall refuse those which the same law may establish as substitutes for those duties in order to meet an excuse of conscience.

Article 168

Religious instruction shall be a part of the teaching schedule of official schools, and shall be administered in accordance with the religious confession of the pupil, manifested by him, if he is capable, or by his legal representative or person responsible for him.

[103]

Article 141

No. 10. Cemeteries shall have a secular character and shall be administered by the municipal authorities. All religious confessions shall be permitted to practise their rites therein. Religious associations may maintain private cemeteries, in the form of the law.

Byelorussia, Constitution of

Article 99

See Article 124 of the USSR Constitution.

China, Constitution of

Article 13

The people shall have the freedom of religious belief.

Colombia, Constitution of 4 August 1886

Article 53

The State guarantees liberty of conscience. No person shall be molested by reason of his religious opinion, or be compelled to profess beliefs or observe practices contrary to his conscience.

Liberty is guaranteed for all forms of worship that are not contrary to Christian morals or to the laws. Acts contrary to Christian morality or subversive of the public order, engaged in on the occasion or under the pretext of the exercise of religion, shall be subject to the common law.

The Government may negotiate conventions with the Holy See, subject to the subsequent approval of the Congress, to regulate, on the basis of reciprocal deference and mutual respect, the relations between the State and the Catholic Church.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 66

The Roman Catholic Apostolic Religion is that of the State, which contributes to its maintenance, without preventing the free ministry in the Republic of any other worship that is not opposed to universal morality or good customs.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 35

The profession of all religions is free, as well as the exercise of all kinds of worship, without other limitation than respect for Christian morality and public order.

[101]

The Church shall be separated from the State, which shall not grant a subvention to any religion.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 121

Liberty of conscience and religious creed is guaranteed.

Article 122

All inhabitants of the Czechoslovak Republic enjoy in the same degree as the citizens of the Republic, the right to profess and exercise publicly and privately any creed, religion or faith whatsoever, so far as the exercise of the same is not in conflict with public law and order or with morality.

Denmark, Constitution ofArticle 3

The Evangelical-Lutheran Church is the Danish national church and as such receives State support.

Article 73

The constitution of the State Church is prescribed by law.

Article 74

Citizens shall have the right to unite in assembly for divine worship in the manner corresponding to their convictions, but nothing may be taught or practised which is contrary to morality or public order.

Article 75

No person is obliged to make personal contributions to any other form of worship than that which is his own.

Article 76

Detailed regulations regarding religious communities other than the State Church shall be laid down by law.

Article 77

No person may by reason of his religious faith be denied full enjoyment of civic and political rights or evade the fulfilment of any general civic duty.
[105]

Dominican Republic, Constitution of 10 January 1942Article 6

3rd. Freedom of conscience and of worship, without any other limitation than the respect owed to public order and good customs.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 168

Freedom of conscience is guaranteed in all its forms and aspects, in so far as it is compatible with morality and public order. The law shall make no discrimination on religious, ideological or racial grounds.

Article 187

“The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador: . . . (8) the right of every citizen not to be compelled to declare, for any purpose, his political convictions or religious beliefs, nor to be molested for those professed, except in the cases specified in the Constitution and the laws. . .”

Egypt, Royal Rescript No. 42 of 1923Article 12

Freedom of conscience is absolute.

Article 13

The State protects, in conformity with the customs established in Egypt, the free practice of all religions and beliefs, provided that they are not prejudicial to public order and morals.

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 12

The free exercise of all religions, without further restriction than that required by morality and public order, is guaranteed. No religious act shall serve to establish the civil status of persons.

Churches and their dependencies shall be exempt from every kind of tax on real property.

The State recognizes the juridical personality of the Catholic Church, representative of the religion that the majority of Salvadorians profess. Other churches may obtain recognition of their juridical personality in conformity with the law.

[106]

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen, 1789Article 10

No man is to be interfered with because of his opinions, not even because of religious opinions, provided his avowal of them does not disturb public order as established by law.

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 1

The established religion in Greece is that of the Eastern Orthodox Church of Christ. Every other known religion is tolerated, and the forms of its worship are carried out without hindrance under the protection of the laws, proselytism and all other interference with the established religion being prohibited.

Article 2

... The ministers of all recognized religions are subjected to the same superintendence on the part of the State as the ministers of the established religion. . .

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 29

The profession of all religions is free, as well as the practice of all cults, without any preference and in the interior of churches; this right does not extend to the execution of subversive acts or practices incompatible with peace and public order, and does not excuse the fulfilment of civil, social and political obligations.

Religious societies and groups or their members as such, and ministers of cults, may not intervene in politics or in questions related to the organization of labour.

Article 24

(Paragraph 5) No official or public employer may be molested or persecuted for his political, social or religious opinions.

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 22

All forms of worship and all religions are equally free and recognized. Every person has the right to profess his religion and to practise his own form of worship provided that he does not thereby interfere with public order.

[107]

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 57

The Church is separate from the State.

The free exercise of all religions that are not opposed to the laws of the country is guaranteed.

Subsidies for denominations or for religious instruction are prohibited.

Article 58

No religious act shall serve to establish the civil status of a person.

Article 65

Entails in favour of, or entire estates given to, religious institutions are prohibited.

Iceland, Constitution ofArticle 62

The Evangelical Lutheran Church shall be the national church of Iceland and shall as such be supported by the State. This may be modified by law.

Article 63

Citizens have a right to unite in communities to worship God in the way which tallies best with their conviction, but they must not teach or undertake anything which is against morality or public order.

Article 64

No one can be deprived of the full enjoyment of his civil and political rights or evade the fulfilment of any duty as a citizen on account of his creed.

No one shall be obliged to give any personal contribution to any other divine worship than his own.

Anyone outside the national church shall pay to the University of Iceland or to a sustention fund attached to that college the same contributions as he would otherwise have given to the State Church provided, however, that he does not belong to any other religious community acknowledged in the country.

Amendments may be made by law.

[108]

Iraq, Constitution of

Article 13

Islam is the official religion of the State. Freedom to practise the rites of the different sects of that religion, as observed in Iraq is guaranteed. Complete freedom of conscience and freedom to practise the various forms of worship, in conformity with accepted customs, is guaranteed to all inhabitants of the country, provided such forms of worship do not conflict with the maintenance of order and discipline or public morality.

Lebanon, Constitution of

Article 9

There shall be complete freedom of conscience. While acknowledging the Most High, the Government shall respect all creeds and safeguard and protect the free exercise of all forms of worship on condition that public order is not interfered with. It also guarantees that the personal status and religious interests of the populations, to whatever creed they belong, shall be respected.

Liberia, Constitution of

Article 1

Section 3. All men have a natural and inalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, without obstruction or molestation from others; all persons demeaning themselves peaceably and not obstructing others in their religious worship, are entitled to the protection of law in the free exercise of their own religion, and no sect of Christianity shall have exclusive privileges or preference over any other sect; but all shall be alike tolerated; and no religious test whatever shall be required as a qualification for civil office, or the exercise of any civil right.

Luxembourg, Constitution of

Article 21

Civil marriage must always precede the religious ceremony.

Article 19

The freedom of religion and public worship, and the right of every man [109] to express his religious opinions are guaranteed, subject to the power to punish offences committed in the exercise of these liberties.

Article 20

No person may in any way be forced to observe the acts or ceremonies of a religion or its days of rest.

Article 22

The intervention of the State in the appointments and the induction of heads of religion, the method of appointment and dismissal of other ministers of religion, the freedom for such persons to correspond with their superiors and to publish their documents, and the relations between Church and State, shall be regulated by agreements which shall be submitted to the Chamber of Deputies in respect of these provisions which require its intervention.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 24

Every man is free to profess the religious belief which is most pleasing to him and to practise the ceremonies, rites, or acts of the respective cult in places of worship or in his private residence, provided they do not constitute a crime or offence punishable by law.

Any religious rite of public worship shall be confined entirely within places of worship, which shall always be under the supervision of the authorities.

Article 27

. . . 2nd – Religious associations called churches, whatever may be their belief, in no case have the capacity to acquire, possess, or administer real estate or capital invested therein; the properties that they hold at present directly or through some intermediary, shall pass to the domain of the Nation, the people being allowed the right to denounce properties that they find in such case. The ground of presumption shall be sufficient to declare the denouncement established. Churches dedicated to public worship [110] are the property of the Nation, represented by the federal Government, which shall determine those that should continue in use. The headquarters of bishops, parish houses, seminaries, asylums, or academies of religious associations, convents, or any other buildings that may have been constructed or intended for the administration, propagation, or instruction of any religious creed, shall pass immediately, by full right, to the direct domain of the Nation, to be dedicated exclusively to the public services of the Federation or of the States, in their respective jurisdictions. Churches that may be erected in the future for public worship shall be the property of the Nation. . .

Article 130

The federal powers shall exercise the supervision required by law in affairs relating to religious denominations and external discipline. Other authorities shall act as auxiliaries of the Federation.

The Congress cannot enact laws establishing or prohibiting any religion.

. . . Marriage is a civil contract. This and other acts of a civil nature, concerning persons, are within the exclusive competence of the civil officials and authorities, in the manner prescribed by law, and shall have the force and validity defined by said law.

. . . The law does not recognize any personality in religious groups called churches.

Ministers of denominations shall be considered as persons who exercise a profession and shall be directly subject to the laws enacted on such matters.

Only the legislatures of the States shall have the power to determine the maximum number of ministers of denominations necessary to local needs.

To practice the ministry of any denomination in the United Mexican States, it is necessary to be a Mexican by birth. . .

Permission to dedicate new locations open to the public for religious [111] purposes must be obtained from the office of the Secretary of Government, with previous consent of the government of the State. There must be a representative in every church building who is responsible to the authorities for compliance with the laws on religious discipline in said building, and for the objects pertaining to the worship. . .

No privilege shall be granted, or for any reason confirmed, or any other step assigned that has as its purpose to give validity in the official course of studies to studies made in establishments intended for the professional instruction of ministers of denominations. The authority who infringes this provision shall be criminally responsible, and the privilege or step referred to shall be null and shall cause in itself the nullification of the professional degree for the attainment of which the infraction of this provision may have been made. . .

A minister of any denomination may not himself or by means of a proxy inherit or receive any real estate occupied by any association for religious propaganda or for religious or philanthropic purposes. Ministers of denominations are legally incapacitated to be testamentary heirs of the ministers of the same denominations or of any private person who is not related to them, within the fourth degree.

Netherlands, Constitution of

Article 169

All religious communities in the realm shall be afforded equal protection.

Article 170

The professors of the several religions shall all enjoy the same civil and civic rights, and shall have equal claims to the holding of dignities, offices and employment.

Article 168

Every person shall profess his religious opinions with perfect liberty, without prejudice to the protection of society and its members against the violation of the penal laws.

[112]

Article 173

The King shall see that all religious communities keep within the limits of obedience to the laws of the State.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 58

The register of civil status is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the State.

Article 59

Public cemeteries have a secular character. Ministers of any religious belief may practice their respective rites in them.

Article 73

Houses of worship and annexes, dedicated exclusively to the practice of a religion, are exempt from taxation.

No edifice or object of worship, used in the practice of a religion, may be assigned by the State to any other use. The churches, organizations, and religious institutions of any faith will have the same rights as the law grants and recognizes in case of private individuals with regard to property.

Article 74

The enactment of laws that protect or restrict specified faiths is prohibited.

Article 100

The law recognizes the following rights of workers and employees:

1st. Independence of moral and civic conscience.

Article 135

Liberty of conscience, the expression of all beliefs, and the practice of all religions that do not oppose morality, good habits, and the public order, are guaranteed. Practices of religion incompatible with the life and physical integrity of the human being are forbidden.

Acts contrary to morality or subversive to the public order, that are [113] performed on the occasion or pretext of the exercise of a religion, are subject to the common law.

Article 136

No one may be compelled to declare officially his religious beliefs unless it is for a statistical questionnaire ordered by the law.

Norway, Constitution ofArticle 2

The Evangelical-Lutheran religion shall remain the public religion of the State. The inhabitants professing it shall be bound to bring up their children in the same. Jesuits shall not be tolerated.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 36

It is recognized that the Catholic religion is that of the majority of the Panamanians. It will be taught in the public schools, but its learning and attendance at acts of religious worship will not be obligatory for pupils when their parents or guardians so request it. The law will provide the assistance that must be given to said religion for missions to the indigenous tribes and for other analogous purposes.

Article 35

The profession of all religions is free, as well as the exercise of all faiths, without other limitations than respect for Christian morality and public order.

Article 37

Religious associations have juridical capacity and order and administer their property within the limits indicated by the law, the same as other juridical persons.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 19

All the inhabitants of the Republic enjoy the following rights, in conformity with the laws that may regulate their exercise: . . . to profess their faith freely; . . .

Article 3

The religion of the State is the Roman Catholic Apostolic, but other [114] faiths, which may not be opposed to morality and the public order, are tolerated. The head of the Paraguayan Church and the bishops must be native born citizens.

Peru, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 59

Freedom of conscience and of belief is inviolable. No one may be persecuted by reason of his ideas.

Article 232

Respecting the sentiments of the national majority, the State protects the Apostolic Roman Catholic Religion. Other religions enjoy freedom for the exercise of their respective faiths.

Philippines, Constitution of the Republic of theArticle III

Section 1, (7) No law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 111

Freedom of conscience and of religion is guaranteed to all citizens. No citizen may suffer a limitation of the rights enjoyed by other citizens, by reason of his religion or religious convictions.

All inhabitants of the Polish State have the right of freely professing their religion in public as well as in private, and performing the commands of their religion or rite, in so far as this is not contrary to public order or public morality.

Siam, Constitution ofArticle 13

Every person is entirely free to profess any religion or creed and to exercise the form of worship in accordance with his own belief, provided that it is not contrary to the duties of a national or to public order or public morals.

Sweden, Constitution ofArticle 16

. . . The King shall not constrain or allow to be constrained the conscience [115] of any person, but shall protect anyone in the free exercise of his religion, provided he does not thereby disturb public order or occasion general offence. . .

Syria, Constitution ofArticle 15

There shall be absolute liberty of conscience; the State shall respect all creeds and religions established in the country; it shall guarantee and protect the free exercise of all forms of worship consistent with public order and good morals; it shall also guarantee for all peoples, of whatever creed they may belong, the respect of their religious interests and their personal rights.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 75

No one may be censured for the philosophical creed, religion, or doctrine to which he may adhere. All religious services not in contravention to public order and morals and the laws are authorized.

Article 70

Personal immunity, freedom of conscience, of thought, of speech and press, the right to travel, to make contracts, to work, to own and dispose of property, to meet and associate and to incorporate, form part of the rights and liberties of Turkish citizens.

Ukraine, Constitution ofArticle 123

See USSR Constitution Article 124

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution of theArticle 124

In order to ensure to citizens freedom of conscience, the church in the USSR is separated from the State, and the school from the church. Freedom of religious worship and freedom of anti-religious propaganda is recognized for all citizens.

United States, Constitution of the1st Amendment

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, [116] or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

Article VI

3, – . . . but no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

Uruguay, Constitution of

Article 5

All religious denominations are free in Uruguay. The State does not support any religion. It recognizes ownership by the Catholic Church of all churches that have been wholly or partially constructed with funds of the national treasury, except chapels intended for the service of asylums, hospitals, jails, or other public institutions. It declares, likewise, that churches consecrated to the worship of various religions are exempt from all kinds of taxation.

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 25

“Freedom of conscience and freedom of religion are guaranteed to citizens.

The Church is separate from the State.

Religious communities, whose teaching is not contrary to the Constitution, are free in their religious affairs and in the performance of religious ceremonies. Religious schools for the education of priests are free and under the general supervision of the State. The abuse of the Church and of religion for political purposes and the existence of political organizations on a religious basis are forbidden. The State may extend material assistance to religious communities.”

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor

Article 5

Freedom of religion and right to religious worship are indispensable to a truly democratic society.

[117]

Article 15

“Everyone has the right to form, to hold, to receive and to impart opinions.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article III (paragraphs 1 – 2)

Every person has the right to freedom of speech and of expression.

This right includes freedom to form and to hold opinions and to give expression to them in private and in public, and to publish them in written or printed form.

Cuba

Article 3

The right to free investigation to enable him to form his opinions, and to express these opinions freely, subject to his being held responsible for his actions.

Panama (American Law Institute)

Article 2

Freedom to form and hold opinions and to receive opinions and information is the right of everyone.

The State has a duty to protect this freedom.

B. Proposals

India

Article I (a)

Every human being is entitled to the right of liberty including the right to . . . freedom of opinion. . .

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 141

No. 5. The manifestation of thought is free, and shall not be dependent upon censorship, except as regards public spectacles and amusements. . .

[118]

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:

No. 2. Practice of all beliefs, liberty of conscience and the free exercise of all religions that may not be contrary to morality, to good usage, or to public orders; therefore, the respective religious bodies have the right to erect and maintain houses of worship and their dependencies under the conditions of security and hygiene fixed by the laws and regulations.

The churches, creeds, and religious institutions of whatever faith shall have those rights in respect to their property as the laws now in force may grant and recognize, but they will be subject, within the guarantees of this Constitution, to the common law in the exercise of ownership of their future acquired property.

Churches and their dependencies, intended for the service of any sect, are exempt from taxation.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 187

“The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador:

. . . (8) the right of every citizen not to be compelled to declare, for any purpose, his political convictions or religious beliefs, nor to be molested for those professed, except in the cases specified in the Constitution and the laws. . .”

Egypt, Royal RescriptArticle 14

Freedom of opinion is guaranteed. Within the limits of the law, every person has the right to express his thoughts freely, on word, in writing, pictorially, or otherwise.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the CitizenArticle 10

No man is to be interfered with because of his opinions, not even because of religious opinions, provided his avowal of them does not disturb public order as established by law.

France, Constitution of

5. . . . No one may suffer in his work or his employment by reason [119] of his origins, his opinions or his beliefs.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 46

No person shall be harassed or persecuted because of his opinions. Private actions that do not disturb public order, or that do not cause injury to a third person, shall always be outside of the action of the law.

Iraq, Constitution ofArticle 12

Freedom of expression of opinion is guaranteed to all Iraqis within such limits as may be prescribed by law.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 128

No one may be molested or persecuted for his opinions, but he will be subject to the sanction of the laws if the opinions are contrary to public order, to the fundamental institutions of the State, to the republican and democratic form of Government, to the established social order, to morals and good habits, or if they may cause injury to a third party.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of LaborArticle 12

The key to the entire approach of human rights must be the placing of respect for human personality and welfare above all else. In this spirit, the above rights can have tangible meaning and practical application only if -

... (c) All economic or political discrimination and punishment for differences of political opinion or religious belief and practices are to be eliminated. The threat of being sent to concentration or labour camps as a punishment for difference of opinion with any government authority or dominant political party must be completely removed.

[120]

Article 16

“There shall be free and equal access to all sources of information both within and beyond the borders of the State.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Dukes (United Kingdom):

“... Freedom of information is a fundamental right and the touchstone of all the freedom to which the United Nations is consecrated.”*

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article III (paragraph 4)

The right to freedom of speech and expression include freedom of access to the sources of information both domestic and foreign.

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

United States, Constitution of

1st Amendment

Congress shall make no law... abridging the freedom... of the press...

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 8th meeting – page 4

[121]

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor

Article 9

The more full and complete knowledge of the world is extended and realized by the peoples of all nations, the less will be the distance and misunderstanding between nations and people. Therefore, the right of the free access to, and exchange of information – scientific, economic, social, religious and political, the promotion of knowledge and of cultural relations, the full and free dissemination of news by radio and press must be assured.

[122]

Article 17

“Subject only to the laws governing slander and libel, there shall be freedom of speech and of expression by any means whatsoever, and there shall be reasonable access to all channels of communication. Censorship shall not be permitted.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

–None–

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article III (paragraph 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7)

Every person has the right to freedom of speech and of expression. This right includes freedom to form and to hold opinions and to give expression to them in private and in public, and to publish them in written or printed form.

The right to freedom of speech and of expression extends to the use of whatever means of communication are available: freedom to use the postal service, the public utilities of telegraph, telephone and radio communication; freedom to use the graphic arts, the theatre, the cinema and other agencies for the dissemination of ideas.

The right to freedom of speech and of expression includes the special and highly privileged right to freedom of the press.

The only limitations which the state may impose upon this freedom are those prescribed by general law looking to the protection of the public peace against slanderous or libellous defamation of others, and against indecent language or publications, and language or publications directly provocative of violence among the people.

Censorship of the cinema may be in advance of publication, taking into account the particular form of publication and the necessity of protecting the public against matters offensive to accepted standards of conduct. The state may not retain a monopoly of radio broadcasting so as to deny to the individual the opportunity for the free expression of opinion through that instrumentality of communication.

CubaArticle 3

The right to free investigation to enable him to form his opinions, and to express these opinions freely, subject to his being held responsible for his actions.

[123]

Panama (American Law Institute)Article 2

Freedom of expression is the right of everyone.

The state has a duty to refrain from arbitrary limitation of this freedom and to prevent denial of reasonable access to channels of communication.

B. Proposals

India

I (a)

Every human being is entitled to the right of liberty including the right to . . . freedom of opinion. . .

United States

II. (2)

Among the categories of rights which the United States suggests should be considered are the following:

- (a) personal rights, such as freedom of speech, information. . .

Section III. National ConstitutionsAfghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the GovernmentArticle 23*

Publications and newspapers of Afghanistan, such as are not against religion, are under no restrictions save as provided by the special law relating to them. The right of publishing news belongs only to the Government, and to Afghan subjects. The entry into Afghanistan of foreign newspapers which do not contain matter against religion and the policy of the Afghan government is unrestricted.

Argentine, Constitution ofArticle 14

All inhabitants of the Nation enjoy the following rights, in accordance with the laws that regulate their exercise, namely: of working and practising any legal industry; of navigating and trading, of petitioning the authorities; of entering, remaining in, traveling through, and leaving the Argentine territory; of publishing their ideas through the press without previous censorship; of using and disposing of their property, of associating for useful purposes; of freely professing their religion; of teaching and learning.

Article 32

The federal Congress shall not enact laws that restrict the liberty [124] of the press or that establish federal jurisdiction over it.

Belgium, Constitution of

Article 18

The press is free; no censorship shall ever be established; no caution money shall be exacted of writers, publishers, or printers.

In case the writer is known and is a resident of Belgium, the publisher, printer or distributor cannot be prosecuted.

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 6

3rd. To express freely his ideas and opinions by any means of diffusion.

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 141

No. 5. . . The publication of books and periodicals shall not be dependent upon license from the public power. However, propaganda for war, or violent processes to subvert the political and social order, or prejudices of race or of class shall not be tolerated.

Byelorussia, Constitution of

Article 100

See Constitution of Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Article 125

Chile, Constitution of

Article 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:

3rd. Freedom to express their opinions without previous censorship, by word or in writing, through the medium of the press or in any other form, without prejudice to the liability of answering for offences and abuses that may be committed in the exercise of this liberty, in the form and in the cases determined by law.

China, Constitution ofArticle 11

The people shall have the freedom of speech, academic instruction, writing and publication.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 42

- (1) The press shall be free in times of peace; but responsible, in accordance with the law, when it may attack personal honour, the social order, or public tranquillity.
- (2) No newspaper publication shall, without the permission of the [125] Government, receive a subvention from other governments or from foreign corporations.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 37

Everyone can communicate his thoughts by word of mouth or by writing and publish them by means of the press, without previous censorship, remaining responsible for the abuses that he may commit in the exercise of this right, in the cases and in the manner that the law establishes.

Cuba, Constitution of The Republic ofArticle 33

All persons shall have freedom to express their thoughts by speech, writing, or any other graphic or oral means of expression without subjection to previous censure, utilizing for this purpose any and all means of dissemination available.

Editions of books, pamphlets, disks, films, periodicals, or publications of whatever nature, that attack the good reputation of persons, the social order, or the public peace, may be suppressed only after prior determination thereof by competent judicial authority, without affecting the responsibilities consequent upon the criminal act committed.

In the cases referred to in this article, the use and enjoyment of places, equipment, or instruments that the organ of publicity in question may utilize, may not be held or interrupted, except under civil liability.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 117

1. Every person may within the limits of the law express his or her opinion by word, in writing, in print, by picture, etc.

2. The same applies to legal persons within the limits of their competence.
3. No one shall suffer in the sphere of his work or employment for exercising this right.

Article 113

1. Freedom of the press . . . is guaranteed. It is therefore in principle impossible to place the press under preliminary censorship. . .
3. Restrictions may be imposed by law. . . The law shall also state what restrictions shall be placed on the principles of the foregoing [126] paragraphs in time of war or in case of events taking place within the State seriously threatening the republican form of government, the Constitution or public peace and order.

Article 118

Scientific research and the publication of its results, as well as art is free so far as it does not violate the penal code.

Denmark, Constitution of

Article 84

Every person is entitled to publish his ideas in print, but is responsible to the courts. Censorship and other preventive regulations may not at any time be re-introduced.

Dominican Republic, Constitution of

Article 6

The following are established as inherent to the human personality:

5th. The right to express thoughts without subjection to previous censorship.

Ecuador, Constitution of

Article 187

The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador:

(11) freedom of expression of thoughts, and of speech, through the press or other means of utterance or diffusion, provided that such statements imply no abuse, calumny, personal insult, or meaning which is immoral or contrary to the national interest; otherwise the offender shall be liable to the penalties or proceedings prescribed by law.

Article 94

In the event of imminent threat of foreign invasion or of international conflict or internal disturbance, the Executive (President) shall apply to Congress. . . in order that. . . it may grant some or all of the following Extraordinary Powers.

(13) to establish prior censorship, exclusively of news items in the press and radio. . .

[127]

Egypt, Royal Rescript No. 42

Article 15

The press is free within the limits laid down by law. Preventive censorship is prohibited. Warnings, suspension or suppression of newspapers by administrative procedure are likewise prohibited, except where it may be necessary to have recourse to these measures for the protection of the social order.

El Salvador, Constitution of

Article 29

Every man may freely express, write, print, and publish his thoughts, without previous examination, censorship, or bond; but he must answer before a jury for any offence he may commit.

France, Declaration of The Rights of Man And of The Citizen 1789

Article 11

The unrestrained communication of thoughts or opinions being one of the most precious rights of man, every citizen may speak, write and publish freely provided he be responsible for the abuse of this liberty in the cases determined by law.

Greece, Constitution of

Article 14

Everybody may publish his opinions by speech, by writing, or by printing, observing the laws of the Realm. The press is free. Censorship and every other preventive measure is prohibited. The seizure of newspapers and other printed treatises, whether before or after publication is likewise prohibited. Exceptionally seizure after publication is permitted on account of insult to the Christian religion or to the person of the King, or, in cases determined by law, on account of indecent publications manifestly offending public decency; but in such case, within twenty-four hours after the seizure both the Public Prosecutor must submit the case to the Judicial Council and the Council must decide whether the seizure is de jure raised. Appeal is allowed against the order only to the publisher of the article seized, and not to the Public Prosecutor.

[128]

The publication of news or communications relating to military movements or to the fortifications of the country may be prohibited in such manner as the law shall direct, under threat of seizure and criminal prosecution. In case of seizure the provisions above stipulated are applied.

Both the publisher of a newspaper and the author of a reprehensible publication relating to private life, in addition to the penalty imposed according to the terms of the criminal law, are civilly and conjointly liable fully to redress any loss occasioned, and to indemnify the injured party in a sum of money fixed at the discretion of the Judge, but never less than two hundred drachmas. Only Greek citizens are allowed to publish newspapers.

Haiti, Constitution of

Article 21

Every person has the right to express his opinions on all subjects by every means in his power. The expression of ideas in every form cannot be subjected to any previous censorship except in the case of a declared state of war.

Abuses of the right of expression shall be defined and punished by law, provided freedom of expression is not thereby jeopardized.

Honduras, Constitution of

Article 59

Every person may freely, without previous censure, express his opinions orally or in writing, by means of the press or by any other procedure, without exemption from the responsibility for the offences and abuses that he commits in the exercise of this liberty, in the form and cases determined by law.

In no case may the printing press or other accessories be confiscated as instruments of the offence.

Iceland, Constitution of

Article 72

Every person has the right to publish his thoughts in print; he is, [129] however, responsible to the courts. Censorship and other hindrances of the freedom of the press can never be established by law.

Iran, The Supplementary Fundamental Laws

Article 20

All publications, except heretical books and matters hurtful to the perspicuous religion (of Islam) are free, and are exempt from censorship. If, however, anything should be discovered in them contrary to the Press law, the publisher or writer is liable to punishment according to that law. If the writer be known, and be resident in Persia, then the publisher, printer and distributor shall not be liable to prosecution.

Iraq, Constitution of

Article 12

. . . liberty of publication. . . is guaranteed to all Iraqis within such limits as may be prescribed by law.

Lebanon, Constitution of

Article 13

Freedom of speech and of writing shall be guaranteed within the limits laid down by the law. . . the freedom of the press. . . shall be guaranteed within the limits laid down by the law.

Liberia, Constitution of

Article 1, Section 15

The liberty of the press is essential to the security of freedom in a state; it ought not, therefore, to be restrained in this Republic. The press shall be free to every person who undertakes to examine the proceedings of the legislature, or any branch of government; and no law shall ever be made to restrain the rights thereof. The free communication of thoughts and opinions, is one of the invaluable rights of men, and every citizen may freely speak, write and print, on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty. In prosecutions for the publication of papers, investigating the official conduct of officers, or men in a public capacity, or where the matter published is proper for public information, the truth thereof may be given in evidence. And in all indictments for libel, the jury shall have right to determine the law and [130] the facts, under the direction of the court, as in other cases.

Luxembourg, Constitution of

Article 24

Freedom of speech on all subjects and the freedom of the press are guaranteed, subject to the power to punish offences committed in the exercise of these liberties. A censorship shall never be established.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 6

Expression of ideas shall not be the object of any judicial or administrative investigation, except in the case of an attack on the principles or rights of third parties, or where it may provoke some crime or disturb public order.

Article 7

Freedom to write and publish articles on any subject is inviolable. No law or authority may establish a previous censorship, or exact a bond from the authors or printers, or restrict the freedom of the press, which has no further limits than respect for private life, morals, and public peace. In no case may the printing press be sequestered as an instrument of the crime.

The organic laws shall prescribe whatever provisions may be necessary to prevent the imprisonment, under pretext of offences of the press, of distributors, paper vendors, workers, and other employees of the establishment from which has issued the denounced writing, unless the responsibility of said persons has been previously demonstrated.

Article 130

The federal powers shall exercise the supervision required by law in affairs relating to religious denominations and external discipline. Other authorities shall act as auxiliaries of the Federation.

Periodical publications of religious character, whether they be such because of their plan, their title, or simply because of their general [131] tendencies, may not comment on national political matters or publish information on acts of the authorities of the country or of private persons directly related to the functioning of public institutions.

Netherlands, Constitution ofArticle 7

No person shall require previous permission to publish thoughts or feelings by means of the printing press, without prejudice to every person's responsibility according to law.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 129

The State guarantees liberty of the press and of speech. All have the right of freely expressing their ideas and opinions, orally, by writing, by printing, by cartoons, or by any other medium of diffusion, without prejudice to answering for offences and abuses committed in the exercise of this right, in the form and cases determined by the law; this responsibility concerns the author and editor or printer of the punishable publication or distribution thereof, to the extent of adequate satisfaction by indemnification to the person injured.

Article 130

Previous censorship may not exist, but the law may establish exceptions to this principle in respect to cinematographic films, public theatrical presentations, or spectacles, in the protective interest of childhood, of youth, and of good habits. The law may also enact measures against immoral and pornographic literature and against war propaganda and violent means of subverting the political and social order.

Norway, Constitution of

Article 100

There shall be liberty of the press. No person may be punished for any writing, whatever its contents may be which he has caused to be printed and published, unless he wilfully and manifestly has either himself shown or incited others to disobedience to the laws, contempt of religion or morality or the constitutional powers, or resistance to their orders, or has advanced false and defamatory accusations against any other person.

[132]

Everyone shall be free to speak his mind frankly on the administration of the State or on any other subject whatsoever.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 38

Every person may freely express his thoughts, by word, in writing or in any other medium, without subjection to previous censorship.

Paraguay, Constitution of

Article 19

All the inhabitants of the Republic enjoy the following rights, in conformity with the laws that may regulate their exercise: . . . to publish their ideas by the press without prior censorship, provided they refer to matters of general interest;. . .

Article 31

The issuing and publication of books, pamphlets, and periodicals shall be regulated by law. Anonymous publication is not permitted.

Peru, Constitution of The Republic ofArticle 63

The State guarantees freedom of the press. Everyone has the right freely to express his ideas and his opinions by means of printing or by any other method of diffusion under the responsibility established by the law. Responsibility for libellous publication shall pertain to the author and the editor, who shall collectively be responsible for the indemnification due the injured person.

Article 64

The ordinary tribunals shall have jurisdiction over crimes of the press.

Article 65

Public spectacles are subject to review.

Philippines, Constitution of TheArticle III, Section 1

(8) No law shall be passed abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 104

Every citizen has the right to express freely ideas and convictions in so far as he does not thereby violate legal provisions.

[133]

Article 105

Freedom of the press is guaranteed. Censorship or the system of licensing printed matter, may not be introduced. . .

Article 124

A temporary suspension of citizens' rights. . . of freedom of the press (Article 105). . . may take place for the whole territory of the state or for localities in which it may prove necessary for reasons of public safety. . .

Siam, Constitution ofArticle 14

Subject to the provisions of the law, every person enjoys full liberty of person, abode, property, speech, writing, publication, education, public meeting, association and vocation.

Sweden, Constitution ofArticle 85

The following shall be considered fundamental laws; the present Constitution, the Riksdag Law, the Succession Law, and the Law, and the law relating to the freedom of the press, which shall be adopted by the King, and the Riksdag jointly in accordance with the principles laid down by the present constitution.

Article 86

By “freedom of the press” is understood the right of every Swede to publish his writings without any previous interference on the part of the public authorities; that of only being prosecuted afterwards before a regular court on account of the contents of his publication, and that of not being punished unless such contents are in conflict with a law enacted to preserve the public peace, without interfering with public enlightenment.

Article 108

Every fourth year the Riksdag in ordinary session shall, in manner prescribed by the Riksdag law, appoint six persons of known intelligence and erudition, who, together with the Procurator for Judicial Affairs as [134] president, shall watch over the liberty of the press. These Commissioners of whom two in addition to the Procurator for Judicial Affairs, shall be lawyers, shall have the following duty: In case an author or printer, before printing, submits a manuscript to them and asks their advice as to whether it would be subject to an action under the law relating to the freedom of the press, the Procurator for Judicial Affairs, and not fewer than three members of the Committee, of whom one shall be a lawyer, shall give such opinion in writing. If they declare that the manuscript may be printed, both author and publisher shall be free from all responsibility, which shall fall on the Commissioners.

Syria, Constitution ofArticle 16

Freedom of thought shall be guaranteed; all persons shall be entitled to express their views verbally, in writing, in speeches or graphically, subject to the limitations provided by law.

Article 17

Freedom of the press, and of printing shall be guaranteed, subject to the conditions laid down by the law.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 70

Personal immunity, freedom of conscience, of thought, of speech and press, the right to travel, to make contracts, to work, to own and dispose of property, to meet and associate and to incorporate, form part of the rights and liberties of Turkish citizens.

Article 77

The press shall enjoy freedom within the framework of the law and shall not be subject to any censorship or control prior to publication.

Ukraine, Constitution ofArticle 124

See Constitution of Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Article 125

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution ofArticle 125

In conformity with the interests of the working people, and in order to strengthen the socialist system, the citizens of the USSR are guaranteed by law:

[135]

- (a) Freedom of speech;
- (b) Freedom of the press;
- (c) Freedom of assembly, including the holding of mass meetings;
- (d) Freedom of street processions and demonstrations.

These civil rights are ensured by placing at the disposal of the working people and their organizations (printing) presses, stocks of paper, public building, the streets, communication facilities and other material requisites for the exercise of these rights.

United States, Constitution of theFirst Amendment

Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press . . .

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 28

The communication of thought by word, written privately, or published in the press, or by any other method, without necessity of previous censorship, is entirely free; authors and, as the case may be, printers or distributors, remaining liable, according to law, for abuses that may be committed.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 27

Citizens are guaranteed the freedom of the press, freedom of speech, freedom of association, freedom of assembly, the freedom to hold public meetings and demonstrations.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of LaborArticle 2

Freedom of expression and association is vital to the preservation of the basic liberties and the enhancement of the spiritual and material progress of the human race. These rights must be inviolate for those who oppose, no less than for those who support, a ruling party or a regime at any specific moment.

Article 8

There must be freedom of opinion and expression and full access to the opinions of others.

[136]

Article 12

The key to the entire approach of human rights must be the placing of respect for human personality and welfare above all else. In this spirit, the above rights can have tangible meaning and practical application only if -

... (d) Freedom from censorship of books, press, radio and art, having due regard to the requirements of morals and decency.

[137]

Article 18

“There exists a duty towards society to present information and news in a fair and impartial manner.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile – No provision

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Ecuador, Constitution of

Article 187

The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador:
 . . . (11) freedom of expression, of thought . . . through the press or other means . . .
 The law shall govern the exercise of this freedom, bearing in mind that the primary aim of journalism is to defend the national interests and that it constitutes a social service worthy of the respect and support of the State . . .

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision [138]

Article 19

“There shall be freedom of peaceful assembly.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article V

Every person has the right to assemble peaceably with others as a means of giving expression to views upon matters of common interest.

The state has the duty to permit the use of public places for purposes of general assembly. It has the right to be informed of meetings to be held in public places, to designate convenient localities, and to impose conditions upon the use of such places in the interest of the public order and safety. Similar conditions may be imposed upon assemblies in public and in private buildings. But the conditions imposed by the state upon the holding of public meetings must not be such as to impair substantially the right itself to hold such meetings; and no conditions shall be required for the assembly of small groups of persons whether in public or in private places.

The right of assembly includes the right to hold public parades, subject to the same restrictions to which assemblies are subject.

Cuba

Article 15

The right to meeting and associating with his fellow men for fostering the pursuit of permissible aims.

Panama (American Law Institute)

Article 4

Freedom to assemble peaceably with others is the right of everyone. The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

B. Proposals

India

I (a)

Every human being is entitled to the right of liberty including the right to . . . freedom of assembly . . .

United States of America – No provision

[139]

Section III. National ConstitutionsBelgium, Constitution ofArticle 19*

Belgian citizens have the right to assemble peaceably, and without arms, when conforming to the laws which regulate this right, and without previous authorization.

This provision does not apply to assemblies in the open air, which remain entirely under the police laws.

Bolivia, Constitution ofArticle 6

4. To meet (and associate) for various purposes not contrary to the security of the State.

Brazil, Constitution ofArticle 141

11. All may assemble, without arms, and the police shall not intervene to assure public order. With this object in view, the police may designate the place of the assembly, provided that by thus proceeding, they do not hamper the assembly or render it impossible.

Byelorussia, Constitution ofArticle 100

See Article 125 of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Constitution.

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:

4. The right of uniting without previous permission and without arms. In plazas, streets, and other places of public use, assemblies will be governed by the general police regulations.

China, Constitution ofArticle 14

The people shall have freedom of assembly . . .

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 46

Any number of people shall be permitted to assemble or congregate peacefully. The authorities may dissolve any assembly that degenerates into disorder or obstructs the public roads.

[140]

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 33

All of the inhabitants of the Republic have the right to gather peacefully and without arms, whether with the object of occupying themselves with private affairs, or with that of discussing political matters and examining the public conduct of officials.

Cuba, Constitution ofArticle 37

The inhabitants of the Republic have the right to assemble peacefully and without arms, and the right to hold processions and associate with one another for all the legitimate purposes of life, in conformity with the corresponding legal standards, without further limitation than may be necessary to assure public order.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 113

1. . . . the right to assemble peaceably and without arms . . . is guaranteed. The manner in which . . . the right of free assembly shall be exercised shall be determined by law.

3. Restrictions may be imposed by law especially in case of assembly in places which serve as public thoroughfares . . . . The law shall also state what restrictions shall be placed on the principles of the foregoing paragraphs in time of war or in case of events taking place within the State seriously threatening the republican form of government, the Constitution or public peace and order.

Denmark, Constitution ofArticle 86

Citizens have the right of unarmed assembly. The police have the right to attend public meetings. Open-air meetings may be forbidden when there is reason to fear that they are a danger to the public peace.

Article 87

In the case of riot, armed forces, if not attacked, may only intervene after the crowd has been called upon three times in the name of the King and the law to disperse.

[141]

Dominican Republic, Constitution ofArticle 6

The following are established as inherent to the human personality:

(6) Freedom of association and of assembly for pacific ends.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 187

The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador:

... (13) freedom of assembly ... without weapons, for purposes not prohibited by law ...

Egypt, Royal RescriptArticle 20

Egyptians have the right to assemble peaceably and without arms. The police shall not be entitled to attend assemblies, and it shall not be necessary to give notice thereof to the police. This provision shall not apply to public assemblies which are subject to statutory provisions and shall not preclude or restrict the taking of any measures requisite for the protection of the social order.

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 14

Similarly, the inhabitants of El Salvador may associate and assemble peacefully, and without arms, for any lawful purpose.

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 10

The Greeks have the right to meet quietly and unarmed; only at public assemblages the police may be present. Assemblages in the open air may be prohibited if danger to public security is imminent from them.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 31

The right of assembling peacefully and without arms is recognized. The law regulates the right of assembly in open air and that of demonstration. Religious demonstrations outside of churches are permitted and are governed by the respective law.

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 25

Haitians have the right of unarmed peaceful assembly even to deal with political matters, subject to observance of such laws as may govern the exercise of that right but without previous permission being required.

[142]

This regulation does not apply to public meetings, which are subject entirely to the police laws.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 61

Freedom of assembly without arms and that of association for any legitimate purpose are guaranteed.

The establishment of any kind of monastic association is prohibited. The entrance into the country of individuals belonging to these associations shall be regulated by law.

Iceland, Constitution ofArticle 74

Citizens have a right to assemble unarmed. The police have a right to be present at public assemblies. Open-air meetings may be prohibited should it be feared that danger of disturbances might ensue.

Iraq, Constitution ofArticle 12

Freedom of . . . meeting together . . . is guaranteed to all Iraqis within such limits as may be prescribed by law.

Lebanon, Constitution ofArticle 13

. . . freedom to assemble . . . shall be guaranteed within the limits laid down by the law.

Liberia, Constitution ofArticle 1, Section 5

The people have a right at all times, in an orderly and peaceable manner to assemble and consult upon the common good, to instruct their representatives, and to petition the government, or any public functionaries for the redress of grievances.

Luxembourg, Constitution ofArticle 25

Luxembourg nationals have the right to assemble peaceably and without arms without previous authorization, provided that they comply with the laws regulating the exercise of these rights. This provision shall not apply to political, religious and other open-air meetings, which shall continue to be subject to the police laws and regulations in every respect.

[143]

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 9

The right of associating or meeting peacefully for any lawful purpose shall not be infringed, but only citizens of the Republic may exercise it in taking part in the political affairs of the country. No armed assembly has the right of deliberating.

An assembly or meeting that has as its object the formulating of a petition or the presenting of a protest regarding some act of an authority shall not be considered illegal and may not be dissolved, provided insults are not voiced against authority nor any violence or threats used to intimidate or oblige him to decide in the manner that they desired.

Article 35

4. Privileges of citizens are:
3. To assemble for the discussion of the political affairs of the country . . .

Article 9

The right of association and assembly of citizens is recognized. The exercise of this right shall, in the interest of public order be regulated and limited by law.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 124

The right to assemble peacefully, without previous permission and without arms, is guaranteed.

Article 125

The right to assemble in the open air and that of demonstration will be regulated by police laws.

Norway, Constitution ofArticle 99

2. The Government is not entitled to employ military force against subjects of the State, except in accordance with the form prescribed by law, unless any meeting should disturb the public peace and do not immediately disperse after the articles of the Statute book relating to riots have been read out loud three times by the civil authority.

[144]

Panama, Constitution ofArticle 39

All inhabitants of the Republic have the right to assemble peacefully and without arms for lawful purposes. Manifestations or assemblies in open air are not subject to permission. Only a previous announcement to the local administrative authorities, twenty-four hours in advance, is required to effect them.

The authorities may take police measures to prevent or suppress abuses in the exercise of this right, when the form in which it is exercised causes or may cause disturbance in traffic, commotion in public order, or violation of the rights of third parties.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 19

All the inhabitants of the Republic enjoy the following rights, in conformity with the laws that may regulate their exercise: . . . . to assemble peaceably; . . .

Peru, Constitution ofArticle 62

Everyone has the right to assemble peacefully without arms and without compromising the public order. The exercise of the right of assembly shall be regulated by law.

Philippines, Constitution ofArticle III, Section 1

(8) No law shall be passed abridging the right of the people peaceably to assemble.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 108

Citizens have the right of . . . meeting . . . The exercise of these rights is defined by statutes.

Article 124

A temporary suspension of citizen's rights of . . . meeting . . . may take place for the whole territory of the state or for localities in which it may prove necessary for reasons of public safety . . .

[145]

Siam, Constitution ofArticle 14

Subject to the provisions of the law, every person enjoys full liberty of person, abode, property, speech, writing, publication, education, public meeting, association and vocation.

Syria, Constitution ofArticle 25

Freedom of assembly and association shall be guaranteed in the manner prescribed by the law.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 79

The limits imposed on the liberty of making contracts, of labour, of ownership, of meeting and associating, and of incorporation shall be determined by law.

Ukraine, Constitution ofArticle 124

See Article 125 of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Constitution.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution ofArticle 125

In conformity with the interests of the working people, and in order to strengthen the socialist system, the citizens of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics are guaranteed by law:

- (a) Freedom of speech;
- (b) Freedom of the press;
- (c) Freedom of assembly, including the holding of mass meetings;
- (d) Freedom of street processions and demonstrations.

These civil rights are ensured by placing at the disposal of the working people and their organizations (printing) presses, stocks of paper, public buildings, the streets, communication facilities and other material requisites for the exercise of these rights.

United States of America, Constitution of1st amendment

Congress shall make no law . . . abridging . . . the right of the people peaceably to assemble.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 37

The right to assemble peacefully and without arms is guaranteed.

[146]

The exercise of this right cannot be prohibited by any official of the Republic, except by virtue of a law, and only then for reasons of public health, security, and order.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 27

Citizens are guaranteed the freedom of the press, freedom of speech, freedom of association, freedom of assembly, the freedom to hold public meetings and demonstrations.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[147]

Article 20

“There shall be freedom to form associations for purposes not inconsistent with this Bill of Rights.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article VI

Every person has the right to associate with other persons for the protection and promotion of legitimate interests.

The state has the right to adopt regulations governing the activities of associations, provided they are applied without discrimination against a particular group, and provided they do not impair substantially the right of association.

Article XIV (paragraph 2)

... Associated with the right to work is the right to form labour and professional unions.

Cuba

Article 15

The right to meeting and associating with his fellow-men for fostering the pursuit of permissible aims.

Panama (American Law Institute)

Article 5

Freedom to form with others associations of a political, economic, religious, social, cultural, or any other character for purposes not inconsistent with these articles is the right of everyone.

The state has a duty to protect this freedom.

B. Proposals

IndiaI (a)

Every human being is entitled to the right of liberty, including the right to . . . freedom of assembly and association . . .

United States – No provision

[148]

Section III. National ConstitutionsArgentine, Constitution ofArticle 14*

All inhabitants of the Nation enjoy the following rights, in accordance with the laws that regulate their exercise, namely, of working and practising any legal industry; of navigating and trading; of petitioning the authorities; of entering, remaining in, travelling through, and leaving the Argentine territory; of publishing their ideas through the press without previous censorship; of using and disposing of their property; of associating for useful purposes; of freely professing their religion; of teaching and learning.

Belgium, Constitution ofArticle 20

Belgian citizens have the right of association; this right shall not be restricted by any preventive measure.

Bolivia, Constitution of 28 October 1938Article 6

. . . 4th. To meet and associate for various purposes not contrary to the security of the State.

Article 125

Free professional and trade union association is guaranteed and the collective bargaining contract is recognized.

Brazil, Constitution of 18 September 1946Article 141

No. 12. Freedom of association for legitimate purposes is guaranteed. No association may be compulsorily dissolved except by virtue of judicial sentence.

Article 141

No. 13. The organization, registration, or functioning of any political party or association, the programme or action of which may be contrary to the democratic regime, based upon plurality of parties and guarantee of the fundamental rights of men, is prohibited.

[149]

Article 159

Professional or trade union association is free, the form of organization, the legal representation in the collective labour contracts and the exercise of functions delegated by the public power, being regulated by law.

Byelorussian [sic], Constitution of

Article 101

See USSR Constitution – Article 126.

Chile, Constitution of 18 September 1925

Article 10

The Constitution insures to all inhabitants of the Republic:
5th. The right of association without previous permission and in conformity with the law.

China, Constitution of

Article 14

The people shall have freedom of . . . association.

Colombia, Constitution of 4 August 1886

Article 47

Popular political organizations of a permanent character are prohibited.

Article 44

(1) The formation of companies, associations, and foundations that are not contrary to the legal order is permitted. Associations and foundations may obtain recognition as juridical persons.

(2) Religious associations must, in order to remain under the protection of the laws, file, before the civil authority, the authorization issued in their favour by their respective ecclesiastical superiors.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 55

All employers, as well as all workers, may organize freely for the exclusive purposes of their economic-social activities, in accordance with the law.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 37

The formation and existence of political organizations contrary to the democratic representative system of government of the Republic, or [150] which in any way seek to subvert complete national sovereignty, is unlawful.

Cuba, Constitution ofArticle 69

The right of organization is recognized for employers, private employees, and workers, for the exclusive purposes of their economic-social activity.

The competent authority shall have a period of thirty days in which to admit or refuse to admit the registry of a workers' or employers' association. The registration shall determine the juridical personality of the workers' or employers' association. The law shall regulate everything concerned with the recognition of the association by the employers and by the workers respectively.

Association may not be finally dissolved until a provisional decision has been made by the tribunals of justice.

The officials of these associations shall be exclusively Cubans by birth.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 113

1. . . . the right . . . to form associations is guaranteed . . .

3. Restrictions may be imposed by the law especially . . . in cases of the participation of foreigners in political associations. The law shall also state what restrictions shall be placed on the principles of the foregoing paragraphs in time of war or in case of events taking place within the State seriously threatening the republican form of government, the Constitution or public peace and order.

Article 114

1. The right of association to safeguard and ameliorate conditions of employment and economic conditions shall be guaranteed.

2. All acts of individuals or societies which constitute an intentional violation of this right, are prohibited.

[151]

Denmark, Constitution ofArticle 85

Citizens are entitled, without previous permission, to form associations for any lawful purpose. No association can be dissolved by a government measure. An association may, however, be provisionally prohibited, but a suit for dissolution shall immediately be brought against it.

Dominican Republic, Constitution ofArticle 6

The following are established as inherent to the human personality:
6th. Freedom of association and of assembly for pacific ends.

Article 103

The organization of political parties and associations is free, in accordance with the law, providing their tendencies conform with the principles established in the second article of this Constitution.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 187

The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador:
... (13) freedom of ... association ... for purposes not prohibited by law ...

Article 188

With respect to Ecuadorians, the following special guarantees shall be established:

... (4) The right to join parties and other political associations which are not contrary to the Constitution, with the purpose of taking part in national politics ...

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 32

No permanent civil or ecclesiastical corporation, whatever its character, denomination, or object may be, shall have the legal capacity to own real property in fee simple or to administer it for itself, with the single exception of that intended immediately and directly for the service or the purpose of the institution.

[152]

Article 35

The right of association is guaranteed, and the establishment only of conventual congregations and all kinds of monastic institutions is prohibited.

Article 14

Similarly, the inhabitants of El Salvador may associate and assemble peacefully, and without arms, for any lawful purpose.

France, Constitution ofParagraph 6

Every man may defend his rights and interests by trade-union action and may join the union of his choice.

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 11

The Greeks possess the right of association, conforming with the laws of the State, and in no case can the laws subject this right to previous permission on the part of the Government.

An association cannot be dissolved for infractions of the provisions of the laws except by judicial decision.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 32

The right of association for the different purposes of human life is guaranteed, in conformity with the law. The establishment of conventual congregations and of all kinds of monastic institutions or associations, as well as the formation and functioning of political organizations of an international or foreign character is prohibited. Organizations that propose Central American Union or Pan-American doctrines or continental solidarity are not included in this prohibition.

Article 33

Guatemalans have the right to be organized in political parties, which must be inscribed in conformity with what the electoral law determines . . .

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 26

Haitians have the right of association and of forming political parties, trade unions and co-operatives.

This right cannot be subordinated to any preventive measures. Moreover, nobody can be compelled to join a political association or party.

[153]

The law governs the conditions of operation of these bodies.

Honduras, Constitution of

Article 61

Freedom of assembly without arms and that of association for any legitimate purpose are guaranteed. The establishment of any kind of monastic association is prohibited. The entrance into the country of individuals belonging to these associations shall be regulated by law.

Iceland, Constitution of

Article 73

Citizens have a right to establish associations for every lawful purpose, without obtaining permission. No society can be dissolved by a Government measure. A Society can nevertheless be provisionally prohibited, but action must immediately be brought against it for its dissolution.

Iran, The Supplementary Fundamental Laws of

Article 21

Societies (anjumans) and associations (ijtimalat) which are not productive of mischief to Religion of the State, and are not injurious to good order, are free throughout the whole Empire, but members of such associations must not carry arms, and must obey the regulations laid down by the Law on this matter. Assemblies in the public thoroughfares and open spaces must likewise obey the police regulations.

Iraq, Constitution of

Article 12

Freedom of forming and joining associations is guaranteed to all Iraqis within such limits as may be prescribed by law.

Lebanon, Constitution of

Article 13

... freedom of association shall be guaranteed within the limits laid down by the law.

Luxembourg, Constitution ofArticle 26

Luxembourg nationals have the right of association. This right shall not be made subject to any preliminary permit.

The founding of any religious corporation must be authorized by a law.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution of theArticle 9

The right of associating or meeting peacefully for any lawful purpose [154] shall not be infringed, but only citizens of the Republic may exercise it in taking part in the political affairs of the country. No armed assembly has the right of deliberating . . .

Article 28

Associations of workers formed to protect their own interests shall not constitute monopolies.

Nor are associations or co-operative societies of producers to be considered monopolies when, in defence of their own interests or of the general interest, they sell directly in foreign markets the national or industrial products that are the principal source of wealth in the region where they are produced and which are not articles of prime necessity, provided that said associations are under the supervision or protection of the federal Government or of the States and that previous authorization be obtained from the respective legislatures in each case. Those same legislatures, on their own initiative or at the proposal of the Executive, may revoke the authorization granted for the establishment of the associations herein referred to, whenever public necessity so requires.

Article 123

The Congress of the Union shall formulate labour laws which shall apply to workers, day labourers, office holders, domestics, and artisans, and, in a general manner, to all labour contracts without contravening the following basic principles:

16th. Both employers and employees shall have the right to organize for the defence of their respective interests, forming unions, professional associations, etc.

Article 130

The federal powers shall exercise the supervision required by law in affairs relating to religious denominations and external discipline. Other authorities shall act as auxiliaries of the Federation.

The formation of all kinds of political groups, the name of which has any word or indication whatever that it is related to any religious denomination [155] is strictly prohibited. Meetings of a political character may not be held in places of worship.

Netherlands, Constitution of the

Article 9

The right of association and assembly of citizens is recognized. The exercise of this right shall, in the interest of public order be regulated and limited by law.

Nicaragua, Constitution of

Article 50

The State does not recognize the legal existence of political parties of international organization. Individuals belonging to such may not discharge any public function. Only parties recommending the union of Central America are excepted.

Article 126

All persons have the right to form unions or associations, whatever may be the purpose that they pursue, provided that it is not an association declared illegal by the law, but it is incumbent on the State to authorize corporative, moral, cultural, or economic organizations.

Panama, Constitution of

Article 67

The right of organizations of employers, employees, workers, and professional persons of all classes is recognized for the exclusive ends of their economic-social activity.

The Executive will have an unextendable period of thirty days for accepting or rejecting the inscription of a workers' or employers' union. The inscription will determine the juridical personality of the union. The law will regulate everything that concerns the recognition by the Executive of unions of employers, employees, workers, and professional persons.

The Executive may not dissolve a union except when it has departed from its exclusive purposes and is so declared by a competent tribunal by a final decree.

The management of these associations will be composed exclusively of Panamanians.

[156]

Article 40

It is permitted to form companies, associations, or foundations that are not contrary to morality or the legal order, which may obtain their recognition as juridical persons.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 19

All the inhabitants of the Republic enjoy the following rights, in conformity with the laws that may regulate their exercise: . . . to associate with one another for legitimate purposes; . . .

Article 32

The State shall oversee and regulate the organization, the functioning, and the activities of groups or bodies of a public character.

Peru, Constitution ofArticle 27

The State recognizes liberty of association and of contract. The conditions for its exercise are regulated by the law.

Article 53

The State does not recognize the legal existence of political parties of international organization. Those who may belong to such political parties must not discharge any political function.

Philippines, Constitution ofArticle 3, Section 1

(6) The right to form associations or societies for purposes not contrary to law shall not be abridged.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 108

Citizens have the right of combining, meeting and forming associations and unions. The exercise of these rights is defined by statutes.

Article 124

A temporary suspension of citizen's rights . . . of combining, meeting and forming associations (Article 108), may take place for the whole territory of the state or for localities in which it may prove necessary for reasons of public safety . . .

[157]

Siam, Constitution ofArticle 14

Subject to the provisions of the law, every person enjoys full liberty of person, abode, property, speech, writing, publication, education, public meeting, association and vocation.

Syria, Constitution ofArticle 25

Freedom of assembly and association shall be guaranteed in the manner prescribed by the law.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 70

Personal immunity, freedom of conscience, of thought, of speech and press, the right to travel, to make contracts, to work, to own and dispose of property, to meet and associate and to incorporate, form part of the rights and liberties of Turkish citizens.

Article 79

The limits imposed on the liberty of making contracts, of labour, or ownership, of meeting and associating, and of incorporating shall be determined by law.

Ukraine, Constitution of theArticle 125

See USSR Constitution – Article 126

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution ofArticle 126

In conformity with the interests of the working people, and in order to develop the organizational initiative and political activity of the masses of the people, citizens of the USSR are ensured the right to unite in public organizations – trade unions, co-operative associations, youth organizations, sport and defence organizations, cultural, technical and scientific societies . . .

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 38

All persons have the right to associate, whatever may be the object that they pursue, provided they do not form an assembly declared illegal by law.

Article 56

The law shall promote the organization of trade unions, granting them [158] franchises and enacting standards for the recognition of their juridical personality. It shall promote, furthermore, the creation of tribunals of conciliation and arbitration.

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 27

Citizens are guaranteed the freedom of the press, freedom of speech, freedom of association, freedom of assembly, the freedom to hold public meetings and demonstration.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor

Article 2

Freedom of expression and association is vital to the preservation of the basic liberties and the enhancement of the spiritual and material progress of the human race. These rights must be inviolate for those who oppose, no less than for those who support, a ruling party or a regime at any specific moment.

Genuine freedom means the right of association and organization into various, into differing, educational, religious, economic, political and trade union organizations, without fear of the threat of direct or indirect control and compulsion by governmental or any other agencies.

[159]

Article 21

“Everyone has the right to establish educational institutions in conformity with conditions laid down by the law.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members
of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Cassin (France):

... He points out that the right to education and liberty of teaching are two different things which must not be confused.

Note:

This draft carefully distinguishes these two questions. Freedom of education is dealt with in Article 21 while right to education is dealt with in Article 36.

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XVII (paragraph 4–5)

The state has the right to fix general standards to which educational institutions must conform, provided that these standards are in accord with other fundamental rights and are the same for public and for private schools.

The right to education involves the right to teach, subject to the restrictions which accompany the right to education.

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

[160]

Section III. National Constitutions

Afghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the Government

Article 21

In Afghanistan, instruction in the knowledge of Islam is unrestricted. Every Afghan subject is permitted to impart Islamic religious instruction. Foreigners, however, with the exception of those engaged to teach arts, industries and foreign languages, are not permitted to open and conduct schools in the Kingdom of Afghanistan.

Article 22

The public schools of Afghanistan are under the supervision of the Government, so that the education and culture imparted by these institutions may, without infringing the articles of the Islamic faith, provide the benefits which accrue from the study of literature, art and science. But there will be no interference with principles of education which are concerned with the faith and religion of the “Ahl-i-Zimma.”

Argentine, Constitution ofArticle 14

All inhabitants of the Nation enjoy the following rights, in accordance with the laws that regulate their exercise, namely: of working and practising any legal industry; of navigating and trading; of petitioning the authorities; of entering, remaining in, travelling through, and leaving the Argentine territory; of publishing their ideas through the press without previous censorship; of using and disposing of their property; of associating for useful purposes; of freely professing their religion; of teaching and learning.

Bolivia, Constitution ofArticle 6

Every person has the following fundamental rights in conformity with the laws that regulate their exercise:

... 6th. To teach under the supervision of the State.

Article 156

Schools of a private character shall be subject to the same authorities, plans, programmes, and official rules. Liberty of religious instruction is recognized.

[161]

Article 157

Schools maintained by charitable institutions shall have the co-operation of the State.

Article 158

Primary, secondary, normal, and special educational shall be regulated by the national council of education, which shall have technical and administrative autonomy. The law shall determine its organization and duties.

Brazil, Constitution ofArticle 166

Education is the right of everyone, and shall be administered at home and in the school. It shall be inspired by the principles of liberty, and the ideals of human solidarity.

Article 167

Teaching in the different branches shall be administered by the public authorities, and private initiative is free, provided the laws that regulate teaching are respected.

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 10

The Constitution insures to all inhabitants of the Republic:
7th. Freedom of instruction. Public education is preferentially an affair of the State.

China, Constitution ofArticle 11

The people shall have the freedom of speech, academic instruction, writing and publication.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 41

(1) The freedom of instruction is guaranteed. However, the State shall inspect and maintain the greatest vigilance over institutions of learning, both public and private, in order to attain the fulfilment of the social purposes of culture and for the better intellectual, moral and physical development of students.

[162]

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 68

Every Costa Rican or alien is free to give or receive instruction that he may desire in establishments that are not sustained with public funds.

Cuba, Constitution ofArticle 47

Culture in all of its manifestations constitutes a primary interest of the State. Scientific investigation, artistic expression, and the publication of their results, as well as education, and, in this regard, free, without prejudice to the inspection and regulation by the State, established by law.

Article 54

Official or private universities and any other institutions and centres of higher learning may be created. The conditions by which they may be regulated shall be determined by law.

Article 55

Official instruction shall be laic. Centres of private instruction shall be subject to regulation and inspection by the State; however, in all cases the right shall be preserved of imparting, separate from technical instruction, the religious education that may be desired.

Article 56

In all teaching centres, public or private, the teaching of Cuban literature, history and geography, civics and the Constitution, must be imparted by teachers who are Cuban by birth, and by means of textbooks by authors who have the same qualification.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 120

1. Private establishments for instruction and education are permitted to be set up only within the limits of the law.

2. The supreme authority and control over all instruction and education shall be in the hands of the State.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 171

... Municipalities may subsidize private instruction given free of charge ...
[163]

Egypt, Royal RescriptArticle 17

The right to give instruction is free to all in so far as the instruction given is not contrary to public order or morals.

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 16

... Private persons and corporations are allowed to establish private schools conducted in accordance with the Constitution and the laws of the Realm.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 81

Private centres of instruction are subject to inspection by the State ...

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 60

Freedom of instruction is guaranteed. Teaching maintained, by public funds shall be laical, and primary instruction, furthermore, shall be free of charge, obligatory, paid for by the municipalities, and subsidized by the State.

Lebanon, Constitution ofArticle 10

There shall be no interference with public instruction as long as it is not contrary to public order and morals and does not affect the dignity of the various creeds.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 3

Only the State – Federation, States, or municipalities – shall impart primary, secondary, and normal instruction. Individuals desiring to instruct in any of the three preceding grades shall be granted authorization, subject in all cases to the following rules:

1st. The activities and instruction of private educational institutions shall be adjusted, without any exception, to the precepts of the initial paragraph of this article and shall be in charge of persons who, in the opinion of the State, have sufficient professional preparation, the proper morality, and an ideology in accord with these precepts. Therefore, religious organizations, ministers of religious denominations, corporations exclusively or primarily engaged in educational activities, and associations or societies, connected [164] directly or indirectly with the propaganda of any religious belief, shall not participate in any form in the primary, secondary, or normal schools, nor may they contribute financially to the same.

2nd. The formation of plans, programmes, and methods of instruction shall in every case belong to the State.

3rd. No private institution of learning may function without previously having obtained, in every case, express authorization from the public authorities.

4th. The State may at any time revoke the authorizations granted. There shall be no redress or judicial appeal against this revocation.

These same standards shall govern education of any type or grade that may be imparted to industrial workers or farm labourers. . .

The State may, at its discretion and at any time, withdraw the recognition of official validity of studies given to private institutions of learning. . .

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 56

The granting of academic and professional degrees belongs exclusively to the State which will establish the proofs and requirements necessary to obtain them.

Article 87

The system of instruction is under the technical inspection of the State.

Article 90

The law will regulate professional education, determining the professions that require a previous license for their practice, and the formalities for obtaining them.

Article 133

The State guarantees the liberty of higher education.
[165]

Article 134

The sciences, letters, and arts, as well as their instruction, are free when they are not contrary to good habits and public order.

Panama, Constitution ofArticle 79

Liberty of instruction is guaranteed. The State may, nevertheless, intervene in private teaching establishments to see that the national and social purposes of culture and the better intellectual, moral, civic, and physical development of those educated are complied with in them.

Article 81

Instruction in the history of the Fatherland and in civic education will always be under the charge of national professors.

Instruction in foreign languages will not be imported in private educational establishments without the permission of the ministry of education, granted for competent reasons of public interest.

Programmes of primary instruction in private schools will be the same as in public schools; but they may be granted permission for the establishment of additional courses in any language.

It is obligatory for private schools to include in their secondary programmes instruction in the history and geography of the Fatherland and in civic education.

Article 85

Only the academic and professional degrees issued by the State or authorized by the latter in accordance with legal provisions may be recognized.

Article 88

Freedom of professorship is recognized without other limitations than those that the university statute establishes for reasons of public order.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 19

All the inhabitants of the Republic enjoy the following rights, in conformity with the laws that may regulate their exercise: . . . to instruct.

[166]

Article 20

. . . The regulation and inspection of instruction is a charge of the State.

Peru, Constitution ofArticle 80

The State guarantees academic freedom.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 117

. . . Every citizen has the right to teach, to found a school or educational institution, and to direct it if he complies with the requirements laid down by statutes concerning the qualifications of teachers, the safety of the child entrusted to him, and a loyal attitude toward the state. All school and educational institutions, public as well as private, are subject to supervision by state authorities within the limits prescribed by statutes.

Siam, Constitution ofArticle 14

Subject to the provisions of the law, every person enjoys full liberty of person, abode, property, speech, writing, publication, education, public meeting, association and vocation.

Syria, Constitution ofArticle 19

Education shall be free, in so far as it is not contrary to public order and good morals and is not detrimental to the dignity of the country or of religion.

Article 20

Education shall be directed to raising the moral and intellectual standard of the people on lines best suited to the national characteristics, and the promoting concord and a fraternal spirit among all citizens.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 80

Instruction of any kind is free within the limits laid down by law under the supervision and control of the State.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 59

Freedom of instruction is guaranteed.

[157]

A law shall regulate intervention by the State for the sole purpose of maintaining hygiene, morality, security, and public order.

Every parent or guardian has the right to select teachers or institutions he prefers for the instruction of his children or wards.

Article 60

Private institutions of learning that provide classes gratuitously to a number of students and in the form that the law shall determine, as well as cultural institutions, shall be exempted from national and municipal taxes as a subvention for their services.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 38

Schools are State-owned. The founding of private schools may be permitted only by law and their work is controlled by the State.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[168]

Article 22

“Everyone has a right to own personal property. His right to share in the ownership of industrial, commercial and other profit-making enterprises is governed by the law of the State within which such enterprises are situated. The State may regulate the acquisition and use of private property and determine those things that are susceptible of private appropriation.

No one shall be deprived of his property without just compensation.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Hodgson (Australia):

“... What do we mean when we speak of human rights? We refer to, or we have in mind, minorities, nationalities, statelessness, rights of options, property. . .”*

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article VIII (paragraph 1, 3, 4, 5)

Every person has the right to own property.

The state may determine by general laws the limitations which may be placed upon the ownership of property, looking to the maintenance of social justice and to the promotion of the common interest of the community.

The right of private property, includes the right to the free disposal of property, subject, however, to limitations imposed by the state in the interest of maintaining the family patrimony.

The right of private property is subject to the right of the state to expropriate property in pursuance of public policy, just compensation being made to the owner.

Cuba

Article 16

The right to immunity from expropriation other than in pursuance of legal proceedings or for the benefit of the community.

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 14th meeting – page 2.

Panama (American Law Institute)Article 10

Everyone has the right to own property under general law. The state shall not deprive anyone of his property except for a public purpose and with just compensation.

B. Proposals

India

I.c/

Every human being has the right of security including ... and the right to property, subject only to the overriding consideration of public weal when the State or its appropriate organs acquire it after paying equitable compensation.

United States

II. (2)

Among the categories of rights which the United States suggests should be considered are the following:

- (a) ... and rights of property.

Section III. National ConstitutionsAfghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the GovernmentArticle 15*

In Afghanistan the movable and immovable property of everyone is protected. In the event of any immovable property being required by Government in the public interests, the value of it will be paid to the owner according to Shariat law and the special code concerned, before it is taken over.

Article 17

Confiscation of both movable and immovable property is forbidden, with the exception of that belonging to persons residing abroad making propaganda or intrigues against the Afghan Government.

Argentine, Constitution ofArticle 14

All inhabitants of the Nation enjoy the following rights, in accordance with the laws that regulate their exercise, namely: of working and practising any legal industry; of navigating and trading; of petitioning the authorities; of entering, remaining in, travelling through, and leaving the Argentine territory; of publishing their ideas through the press without previous censorship; of using and disposing of their property; of associating for useful purposes; of freely professing their religion; of teaching and learning.

[170]

Article 17

Property is inviolable, and no inhabitant of the Nation can be deprived thereof except by virtue of a sentence founded on law. Expropriation for reasons of public utility must be authorized by law and previously compensated. The Congress alone imposes the taxes mentioned in Article 4. No personal service can be required except by virtue of a law or sentence based on law. All authors or inventors are exclusive proprietors of their work, invention, or discovery for the term granted them by law. The confiscation of property is stricken out forever from the Argentine penal code. No armed body may make requisitions, or demand assistance of any kind.

Belgium, Constitution of

Article 11

No one may be deprived of his property except for the public good and according to the forms established by law, and in consideration of a just compensation previously determined.

Article 12

Punishment by confiscation of property shall not be established.

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 121

Work and capital, as factors of production, enjoy the protection of the State.

Article 17

... ; expropriation may be effected for purpose of public utility as determined by law and with previous just indemnification.

Property is inviolable provided it fulfils a social function;

Article 15

Confiscation of property shall never be applied as a political punishment.

Brazil, Constitution ofArticle 156

The law shall facilitate the settlement of men in the fields, establishing plans for the colonization and use of public lands. For this purpose, nationals, and among them, those living in poor zones and [171] the unemployed, shall have preferences.

Article 141

No. 16. The right of property is guaranteed, except for the case of expropriation for public necessity or utility, or for social unrest, with prior and just indemnification in money. The competent authorities may use private property, in case of imminent peril, such as war or domestic commotion, if the public good so requires, with the right to later indemnification being, nevertheless, assured.

No. 31. There shall be no penalty of . . . confiscation.

. . . The law shall provide for the sequestration and loss of property, in the case of illicit enrichment, through influence or through abuse of public office of function, or of employment in an autarchic entity.

No. 17. Industrial inventions belong to their authors, to whom the law shall guarantee temporary privilege, or, if divulging of the invention should be in the collective interest, it shall grant a just reward.

No. 18. Ownership of industrial and commercial trademarks is assured, as well as monopoly in the use of a commercial name.

No. 19. The exclusive right of reproduction shall belong to the authors of literary, artistic, or scientific works. The heirs of authors shall enjoy this right for such time as the law may determine.

Article 147

The use of property shall be conditioned upon social welfare. The law may, with observance of the provisions of Article 141, No. 16, promote the just distribution of property, with equal opportunities for everyone.

Article 146

The Union may, by means of a special law, intervene in the economic sphere or monopolize specified industries or activities. The intervention shall be based upon the public interest, and shall be limited by the fundamental rights assured by this Constitution.

Article 154

Usury, in all forms, shall be punished by law.
[172]

Byelorussian [sic], Constitution ofArticles 9 and 10

See USSR Constitution – Articles 9 and 10

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:

10th. Inviolability of all property, without distinction. No one can be deprived of property under his control, or of any part thereof, or the right he may have to it, except by virtue of a judicial decree or of an expropriation by reason of public interest, conformable to a law. In this case, indemnification, as may be agreed on, or as may be fixed by a corresponding judicial sentence, shall be paid the owner previously.

The exercise of the right of property is subject to the limitations or rules that the maintenance and advancement of the social order demand, and, in this sense, the law may impose obligations or servitudes for public benefit in favour of the State, of the health of the citizens, and of the public welfare.

11th. Exclusive property in every discovery or production, for the time that the law may concede. If the law shall exact expropriation, the author or inventor shall be given suitable indemnification.

Article 18

. . . nor in any case may the penalty of confiscation of property be imposed, except forfeiture in the cases established by law.

China, Constitution ofArticle 15

The right of existence, the right of work and the right of property shall be guaranteed to the people.

Article 142

National economy shall be based on the Principle of the People's livelihood for equitable distribution of land ownership and control of [173] capital in order to obtain a well-balanced development of public economy and private livelihood.

Article 143

All land within the territory of the Republic of China shall in principle belong to the whole body of citizens. Private ownership of land, acquired by the people in accordance with law, shall be protected and restricted by law. Privately owned land shall be liable to taxation according to its value and the government may buy such land according to its value.

If any land has an increase in its value, not through the exertion of labour and the employment of capital, the state shall levy thereon an increment tax, the proceeds of which shall be enjoyed by the people in common.

In the distribution and adjustment of land, the state shall, as a principle, assist self-farming landowners and persons who make use of the land by themselves, and shall also regulate their appropriate areas of operation.

Colombia, Constitution of

Article 30

Private property and other rights acquired by just title by natural or juridical persons are guaranteed, in accordance with the civil law, and may not be disavowed or injured by later laws. When the application of a law enacted for reasons of public benefit or social interests results in a conflict of the rights of private persons with the necessity recognized by the same law, the private interest must give way to the public or social interest.

Property is a social function that implies obligations.

Expropriation may be undertaken, for reasons of public benefit or social interest defined by the Legislature, by means of a judicial decision and with previous indemnification.

Nevertheless, the Legislature, for reasons of justice, may determine [174] the cases in which there is not ground for indemnification by a favourable vote of an absolute majority of the members of each Chamber.

Article 35

Literary and artistic property shall be protected as transferable property, during the lifetime of the author and for eighty years thereafter, by means of the formalities prescribed by law.

The same guarantee shall be extended to the owners of works published in countries using the Spanish language, provided that the respective Nations recognize in their legislation the principle of reciprocity, and without the necessity of including any international conventions for this purpose.

Article 34

The penalty of confiscation shall not be inflicted.

Article 33

In case of war, and only for the purpose of re-establishing public order, the need of expropriation may be decreed by authorities who do not belong to the Judiciary, and without previous indemnification.

Real estate alone may be temporarily occupied, in the case mentioned, either to meet the necessities of war or to reserve its products for war, as a pecuniary penalty imposed on its owners in accordance with the law.

The Nation shall always be responsible for expropriations made by the Government directly or by means of its agents.

Article 37

No real estate shall be inalienable or obligations irredeemable in Colombia.

Costa Rica, Constitution of

Article 23

The Republic does not recognize hereditary titles, or venal positions, nor permit the establishment of entailed estates.

Article 29

Property is inviolable; no one can be deprived of his if it is not in the public interest legally proved, and without previous indemnification in [175] conformity with the law. In case of war or internal disturbance, it is not necessary that the indemnification be paid previously.

The Congress may, for reasons of public necessity, by the vote of two-thirds of all of its members, impose limitations on property for social interest.

Cuba, Constitution of

Article 24

Confiscation of goods is forbidden. No one may be deprived of his property except by competent judicial authority and for a cause justified by public utility of social interest, and with mandatory prior payment of the proper indemnification in cash, in the amount judicially determined. In case of failure in compliance with these requirements, the person whose property has been expropriated shall have the right of protection by the tribunals of justice, and as the case may warrant, that of the restoration of his property.

In case of contradiction, the tribunals of justice shall have the power to decide upon the necessity of expropriation, for reasons of public utility or social interest.

Article 46

Within the restrictions stipulated in this Constitution, Cubans shall be free to bequeath one-half of their inheritance.

Article 75

The formation of co-operative enterprises, whether commercial, agricultural, industrial, of the consumer, or any other type, shall be subject to regulation by the law; but the latter shall regulate the definition, constitution, and functioning of such enterprises in order that they shall not serve to evade or abridge the provisions that this Constitution establishes for the regulation of labour.

Article 87

The Cuban State recognizes the existence and legitimacy of private property in the fullest concept of its social function, and with no further [176] limitations than those that may be established by law for reasons of public necessity or social interest.

Article 88

The subsoil belongs to the State, which may make concessions for its exploitation, in conformity with what the law may establish. Mining property granted and not exploited within the period that the law may fix shall be declared null and shall revert to the State.

Land, forests, and concessions for the exploitation of the subsoil, utilization of waters, means of transportation, and every other enterprise of public service, must be exploited in a manner favourable to the social welfare.

Article 90

Latifundia are outlawed, and in order to effect their disappearance the law shall stipulate the maximum extent of property that each person or corporation may possess for each type of exploitation for which the land may be employed, at the same time taking into account individual circumstances.

Article 95

The property of charitable institutions is declared to be imprescriptible.

Article 96

Those areas of land given by persons of old Spanish nobility for the founding of a town or community, and effectively employed for this purpose, acquiring the character of a municipal government, though afterward occupied or held by the heirs or inheritors of the donor, are declared to be in the nature of a public utility and therefore subject to expropriation by the State, the Province, or the municipality.

The inhabitants of such a town or city, who possess buildings or occupy lots in the settled part, may obtain ownership or possession of the estates or sections of land that they may be occupying, by payment of a fair proportionate price through the expropriating body empowered to transfer the said property to them.

[177]

Article 90

The law shall restrictively limit acquisition and possession of land by foreign persons and companies, and shall adopt measures tending to revert the land to Cuban ownership.

Article 91

The father of a family who lives upon, cultivates, and directly exploits a rural property that he owns, provided that the value of the latter does not exceed 2,000 pesos, may declare it of irrevocable character as family property as soon as it may be essential for his living and subsistence, . . . and said property shall be exempt from taxes and shall be unattachable and inalienable except for responsibilities incurred prior to this Constitution. Improvements that exceed the sum above mentioned shall pay the corresponding taxes in the manner that the law may establish. In order to exploit the said property the owner may mortgage it, or give sowings, plantings, fruits, or products of the same as guarantee.

Article 92

Every author or inventor shall enjoy exclusive ownership of his work or invention, with the limitations stipulated by law as to time and form.

Article 93

No perpetual charges on property in the character of perpetual interest payments or other charges of an analogous nature may be imposed, and, furthermore, the establishment of such charges is prohibited. The Congress shall approve a law regulating the liquidation of the existing charges within a period of three legislative terms.

Perpetual interest payments, or charges established, or which may be established, to the benefit of the State, Province, or municipality, or in favour of public institutions of all kinds or of private institutions of beneficence are excepted from the stipulations of the preceding paragraph.

[178]

Czechoslovakia, Constitution of

Article 109

1. Private ownership may be restricted only by law.
2. Expropriation is possible only in the basis of law.

Compensation shall be given in all cases unless it is or shall be provided by law no compensation be given.

Denmark, Constitution of

Article 50

Regulations are prescribed by law regarding the right of aliens to possess fixed property in this country.

Article 80

Property ownership is inviolable. No person may be obliged to cede his property unless the public interest so demands. Such session may only occur in accordance with the law and against total compensation.

Dominican Republic, Constitution of

Article 6

The following are established as inherent to the human personality:

11th. The exclusive ownership, for the time and the form that the law determines, of inventions and discoveries, as well as scientific, artistic, and literary productions.

7th. The right of property. This, however, can be taken for a duly justified reason of public utility or social interest, and with previous just indemnification. In cases of public calamity, the indemnification need not be given previously. General confiscation of goods remains prohibited, except as a penalty for persons guilty of treason or espionage in favour of the enemy in time of war with a foreign Nation.

Ecuador, Constitution of

Article 183

The right of private property is guaranteed in so far as this is compatible with the social function of such property . . .

No one may be deprived of the 'ownership or possession of his estate, save by virtue of a judicial mandate or by legally confirmed expropriation on ground of public expediency . . .

[179]

Egypt, Royal Rescript

Article 9

Property shall be inviolable. No person may be deprived of his property except for reasons of public utility in the cases and in the manner prescribed by law and in consideration of fair compensation.

Article 10

Punishment by general confiscation of property is prohibited.

Article 21

Egyptians have the right of association. The law shall lay down rules governing the exercise of this right.

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 5

All property is transferable in the manner that the laws determine, and in consequence, all kinds of entails are prohibited, except the following:

1st. Trusts, when they may be established in favour of the Nation, of charitable or cultural institutions of the country that exist or that may be created, of incompetent natural persons in conformity with the law for the management of their interests, or of persons who may not have been born but are already in the maternal womb.

2nd. Family property.

Article 18

Confiscation, whether as a penalty, or in any other way, is prohibited. The authorities who violate this provision shall answer at all times with their persons and property for the damage caused; the things confiscated are imprescriptible.

Article 31

Property is inviolable. No person may be deprived of his property except by reasons of public utility, legally proved and after just indemnification. In cases of war, public calamity, the opening of new highways or the modification of existing ones, and the supply of water, the indemnification need not be previous.

When the necessities of an international war may require it, the State [180] may intervene in the administration of property belonging to nationals of enemy countries; it may dispose of it and apply its income as indemnity of war, according to circumstances and a previous decree in which reasons are expressed. The law shall regulate the form of making these provisions effective.

Article 34

All industry is free, and may be monopolized only for the benefit of the Nation, with the aguardiente, saltpetre, gunpowder business to be administered by the Executive.

There shall be no other monopoly of any kind, or any prohibitions on industrial liberty, even for protection. There are excepted only those relative to the coining of money and to the privileges that, for a limited time, are granted by law to inventors or to those improving any industry.

Ethiopia, Constitution of

Article 27

No person shall have the right to take from an Ethiopian subject any real or personal property in his possession, except in cases of public expediency specified by law.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen, 26 August 1789

Article 2

The purpose of all civil association is the preservation of the natural and imprescriptible rights of man. These rights are liberty, property, security and resistance to oppression.

Article 17

The right to property being inviolable and sacred, no one shall be deprived of it except in cases of evident public necessity, legally ascertained and on condition of a previous just indemnity.

France, Constitution of

Paragraph 9

All property and all business whose exploitations have acquired the characteristics of a national public service or a monopoly in fact should become the property of the community.

[181]

Greece, Constitution of

Article 17

No one may be deprived of his property except for the public benefit duly proven, when and as the law directs and always after indemnification. The indemnification is always fixed through the judicial channel. In case of urgency it may be provisionally fixed judicially after the beneficiary has been heard or summoned, and the beneficiary may be obliged, at the discretion of the Judge, to give a proportionate guarantee in the manner defined by law. Until the final or provisional indemnification fixed is paid, all the rights of the proprietor are maintained intact, dispossession not being permitted.

Special laws settle the details respecting the proprietorship and disposal of mines, quarries, archaeological treasures, and mineral and running waters.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 90

The State recognizes the existence of private property and guarantees it as a social function, without further limitations than those determined by law, for reasons of public necessity or utility or of national interest.

Article 28

All persons may dispose freely of their property, provided that in doing so they do not contravene the law. . .

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 17

The right of citizens to possess property is guaranteed. Expropriation on grounds of legally established public expediency may only take place on previous payment or assignment to the owner of a proper indemnity.

Possession of property also involves obligations. It must be utilized in the common interest.

The property owner owes a duty to the community to cultivate, work and protect the soil, especially against erosion.

Penalties for non-observance of that obligation shall be prescribed by law.

[182]

Property rights do not extend to springs, rivers and other watercourses which belong to the State domain.

The condition governing the use of such waterways shall be prescribed by law.

The law shall limit the maximum extent of this property right.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 62

Industry and commerce are free; but alcohol, aguardiente, saltpetre, gunpowder, firearms, munitions of war, and explosives used in military practice are to be monopolized for the benefit of the State.

Traffic in sedatives or drugs derived from heroin shall be regulated by law or by international conventions.

Article 63

There shall be no monopolies in favour of private individuals.

Privileges may be granted for a period that does not exceed ten years. A term limited to ninety years may be granted concessions to promote the introduction or improvement of new industries, for immigration, institutions of credit, the opening or routes of communication, or colonization projects.

In the cases above mentioned, only the established regulations and taxes may be suspended, but the public charges for establishment may not be abolished in any case or in any way, in concessions and treaties.

In the concessions it grants or the treaties it makes, the State may not dispense with the payment of municipal taxes.

When the term of a concession relative to colonization, immigration, or the opening of means of communication has elapsed, the enterprise, in full operation and with all its accessories, shall pass to the ownership of the State, without any remuneration.

Article 64

Any person may acquire property and dispose of it by any title, within the limitations established by law.

[183]

Article 73

No person shall be deprived of his property except by virtue of a law or by a sentence founded on law.

Article 74

Expropriation of real property, for reasons of public necessity or utility, shall be determined by law or by a judgment founded on law, and shall not be executed without previous indemnification.

Article 75

The right to own property shall not prejudice the right of eminent domain of the State within its territorial boundaries, nor can it supersede the rights maintained by national institutions or works of a national character.

Article 76

Every inventor shall enjoy exclusive property rights in his work or discovery, for the period that the law determines.

Article 77

The right to regain possession of confiscated property is imprescriptible.

Iceland, Constitution ofArticle 67

The right of possession is inviolable. No one can be obliged to surrender his property, unless for the benefit of the public weal; this can only be done by law and on full compensation being paid.

Article 68

Paragraph 2. A foreigner's right to possess real property in the country shall be regulated by law.

India, Constitution ofArticle 299

1. No person shall be deprived of his property in British India save by authority of law.
2. Neither the Federal nor a Provincial Legislature shall have power to make any law authorizing the compulsory acquisition for public purposes of any land, or any commercial or industrial undertaking, or any interest in, [184] or in any company owning, any commercial or industrial undertaking, unless the law provides for the payment of compensation for the property acquired and either fixes the amount of the compensation, or specifies the principles on which, and the matter in which, it is to be determined.
3. No Bill or amendment making provision for the transference to public ownership, of any land or for the extinguishment or modification of rights therein, including rights or privileges in respect of land revenue, shall be introduced or moved in either Chamber of the Federal Legislature without the previous sanction of the Governor-General in his discretion, or, in a Chamber of a Provincial Legislature without the previous sanction of the Governor in his discretion.
4. Nothing in this section shall affect the provisions of any law in force at the date of the passing of this Act.
5. In this section "land" includes immovable property of every kind and any rights in or over such property, and "undertaking" includes part of an undertaking.

Iran, The Supplementary Fundamental LawsArticle 17

To deprive owners or possessors of the properties or possessions controlled by them on any pretext whatever is forbidden, save in conformity with the law.

Article 16

The confiscation of the property or possessions of any person under the title of punishment or retribution is forbidden, save in conformity with the law.

Article 15

No property shall be removed from the control of its owner save by legal sanction, and then only after its fair value has been determined and paid.

Article 9

All individuals are protected and safeguarded in respect to their . . . property . . . , from every kind of interference, and none shall molest them save in such case and in such a way as the laws of the land shall determine.

[185]

Iraq, Constitution ofArticle 10

3rd . . . the general confiscation of movable property are absolutely forbidden.

1. Rights of ownership shall be safeguarded. No person's goods or property shall be expropriated except for the public benefit, and in the circumstances and in the manner prescribed by law, and on condition that just compensation is paid.
2. Forced loans may not be imposed, nor may goods or property be seized or prohibited goods confiscated, except in accordance with law.

Lebanon, Constitution ofArticle 15

Rights of ownership shall be protected by law. No person may be expropriated except on grounds of public utility, in the circumstances defined by law and on condition that fair compensation is paid beforehand.

Liberia, Constitution ofArticle 14

The purchase of any land by any citizens or citizens from the aborigines of this country for his or their own use, or for the benefit of others as estate or estates in fee-simple shall be considered null and void to all intent and purpose.

Section 13

Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation.

Luxembourg, Constitution ofArticle 16

No person may be deprived of his property, except for reasons of public utility, in the cases and in the manner prescribed by law and in consideration for just and prior compensation.

Article 17

The penalty of confiscation of property shall not be established.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 22

... confiscation of property, or any other uncommon or unusually severe penalties are prohibited.

[186]

The complete or partial application by the judicial authority of the property of a person to the payment of a civil liability resulting from the commission of a crime or for the payment of taxes or fines, shall not be considered as confiscation of property.

Article 27

Ownership of the lands and waters included within the boundaries of the national territory belongs originally to the Nation, which has held and still holds the right to transfer ownership of them to private persons, thereby constituting private property.

Expropriation may be effected only for reasons of public utility and by means of indemnification.

The Nation shall at all times have the right to impose on private property the measures that the public interest dictates, as well as that of regulating the exploitation of natural resources susceptible for use, in order to insure an equitable distribution of public wealth and to guard its conservation. To this end, the necessary measures shall be taken for the sub-division of large rural estates; for the creation of new centres of agricultural population with the lands and waters that may be necessary; for the encouragement of agriculture and the prevention of the destruction of natural resources and property damage detrimental to society. Population centres that may lack lands and waters or do not possess a sufficient amount for the needs of their people shall have the right to be supplied with them, taking them from the surrounding estates, but always respecting the small agricultural properties under cultivation.

The Nation has direct ownership of all minerals or substances.

The waters of territorial seas, to the extent and in the manner fixed by international law, are also the property of the Nation.

The laws of the Federation and of the States in their respective jurisdiction shall determine the cases where the occupation of private property may be of public utility, and, in accordance with said laws, the administrative authority shall make the necessary declaration. The price that [187] shall be fixed as indemnification for the property expropriated shall be based on its assessed value as recorded in the offices of the census or tax collectors, whether this value may have been declared by the owner or simply accepted by him in a tacit manner by having paid taxes on this basis.

14th. The owners affected by decisions that may have been issued in favour of towns, or that in the future may be issued, for apportioning or restoring ejidos or waters shall not have any right of redress or ordinary legal recourse, nor may they institute suit of amparo.<sup>157</sup>

Those affected by the apportionment of lands shall have only the right of applying to the Federal Government in order that the respective indemnification may be paid. Those interested must exercise this right within the term of one year, counting from the date on which the respective resolution was published in the Diario Oficial of the Federation. After expiration of this term no claim shall be admitted . . .

Article 28

There shall be in the United Mexican States no monopolies, restraints of trade of any kind, exemption from taxes, prohibitions under the title of protection to industry, excepting only those relative to the coinage of money, to the mails, telegraphs, and wireless telegraphy, the emission of currency by means of a single bank that shall be controlled by the Federal Government.

. . . and the privileges that may be conceded for a limited time to authors and artists for the reproduction of their works and those granted to inventors for the exclusive use of their inventions and those who perfect inventions of any kind.

Consequently, the law shall severely punish and the authorities shall diligently prosecute any monopoly or concentration in the hands of one or a few, of articles of prime necessity, that has as its object the obtaining of an increase in prices; also any act or measure restraining or tending to restrain free competition in production, industry, commerce, or public services; any agreement or combination of any kind made by producers, [188] industrialists, merchants, or carriers, or by those engaged in any other service, for the purpose of restraining competition among themselves and obliging consumers to pay exorbitant prices; and, in general, whatever constitutes an undue, exclusive advantage in favour of one or more specified persons to the injury of the public in general or of any social class.

<sup>157</sup> Amparo is a remedy in Latin American legal systems that is similar in some respects to habeas corpus. It enables judicial intervention when matters of fundamental rights are involved.

Article 19

... any tax or contribution in penal institutions are abuses which shall be corrected by law and repressed by the authorities.

Article 123

The Congress of the Union shall formulate labour laws which shall apply to workers, day labourers, office holders, domestics and artisans, and, in a general manner, to all labour contracts without contravening the following basic principles:

28th. The laws shall determine the property that constitutes the family patrimony, property that shall be inalienable, that which cannot be subjected to real taxes or attachment and which shall be transmissible by deed of inheritance with simplification of the formalities of inheritance.

Netherlands, Constitution of theArticle 161

The general forfeiture of the goods belonging to an offender may not be inflicted as penalty for any crime.

Article 152

Expropriations for reasons of public utility cannot take place except after a previous declaration by law that public utility requires expropriation and against previous received or previously assured compensation, all in accordance with rules laid down by law.

It shall be determined by law in which cases the previous declaration by law shall not be required.

The requirement that the compensation shall be paid or assured beforehand shall not apply if war, danger of war, riot, fire or flood require that possession be taken immediately.

[189]

Article 153

When in the public interest the public authority has to destroy property or render it unserviceable either permanently or temporarily, this shall take place against compensation, unless the contrary is stipulated by law. The use of property for the preparation and effecting of military inundations, if required on account of war or danger of war, shall be regulated by law.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 39

Monopoly for private interest is prohibited, as well as all classes of commercial and industrial control of the market.

Only the law may establish monopolies of the State in the exclusive national interest.

Article 53

The State may nationalize enterprises of public service, by previous indemnification and in conformity with the law.

Article 60

There will be no confiscation of property except from the nationals of an enemy country that confiscates property of Nicaraguans.

The right of recovery of property confiscated in contravention of this guarantee is imprescriptible.

In no case may property be sequestered or interfered with for reasons or offences of a political character.

Offending authorities will at all times answer to this with their persons and property to the extent of the damage inflicted.

Article 61

All the artistic and historical wealth of the country, irrespective of who may be the owner, constitutes the cultural treasure of the Nation, and enjoys the protection and special care of the State. The latter prohibits its exportation and alienation and may order legal expropriation for its defence and conservation.

Article 62

The State recognizes freedom of contract, of commerce, and industry.
[190]

The law will designate the requirements to which their exercise is subject and the guarantee accorded them. The law may, when they concern public security or necessity, establish limitations or reservations regarding said exercise, or may authorize the Executive to establish them, seeing to it that such restrictions do not in any case have a personal character or a confiscatory one.

Article 63

Property is inviolable. No one may be deprived of his possessions except by virtue of judicial sentence, general taxation, or because of public utility or social interest determined by law or by a sentence based on law, with proper price indemnification.

In the event of national war, internal disturbance, or public calamity, competent authorities may use private property where the public welfare requires it, always respecting the right to later indemnification.

Article 64

The State guarantees and protects intellectual property, the rights of the author, of the inventor, and the artist. The law regulates their exercise and duration, and if it demands their expropriation, it will be by means of prior appraised indemnification.

Article 65

Property, by virtue of its social function, imposes obligations. The amount of these, their nature, and extent are fixed by the law.

Article 66

The right of property, as concerns its exercise, is subject to the limitations that the maintenance and progress of the social order impose. In harmony with this principle, the law may impose obligations or services of public utility on property in favour of the general interest of the State, of the health of the citizens, and of the public health.

Article 67

Property, regardless of who may be its owner, is exclusively controlled by the laws of the Republic and is subject to the maintenance of public needs, in accordance with the Constitution and the laws.

[191]

Article 68

Aliens may in no case demand exceptional treatment in respect to property.

Article 69

The law may, for reasons of public or social interest, establish restrictions or prohibitions on the acquirement and transfer of specified kinds of property, by reason of its nature, condition, or location in the country.

Article 70

The State will be inclined toward the proper division of uncultivated land, and will favour the establishment and diffusion of medium and small rural holdings.

Article 72

Everyone may freely dispose of his property by any legal title whatsoever; but entailment of property is prohibited, as is endowment in favour of mortmain, excepting only those established in order to constitute a family patrimony or in favour of charitable institutions.

Article 85

The law will control the organization and regulation of family inheritance, on the basis that it shall be inalienable, not subject to seizure, and exempt from all public burdens.

Article 94

Usury is prohibited. The law which sets the maximum rate of interest for money is for the benefit of the public. The same law will determine the penalty to be applied to violators.

Norway, Constitution ofArticle 104

Forfeiture of lands and goods shall be abolished.

Article 105

If the welfare of the State shall demand that any person shall surrender his movable or immovable property for the public use, he shall receive full compensation from the Exchequer.

Panama, Constitution ofArticle 49

In case of war, grave disturbance of public order, or of urgent social interest, that demand rapid measures, the Executive may decree expropriation of occupation of [192] private property and the indemnification need not be prior.

When restitution of the object seized may be feasible, the seizure will be only for the time in which the circumstances that caused it continue.

The State is always responsible for every expropriation thus carried out by the Executive and for the damage and injuries caused by the seizure and will pay its value as quickly as the reason determining the expropriation or seizure may have ended.

Article 50

Every author or inventor enjoys exclusive property in his work or invention during the time and in the form that the law establishes.

Article 46

There may be expropriation, for reasons of public utility or social interest defined by the law, by means of a judicial decree and previous indemnification.

Article 47

When the application of a law enacted for reasons of public utility or social interest may result in conflict of the rights of private individuals with the need recognized by the law itself, the private interest must give way to the public or social interest.

Article 30

There is no penalty of death, expatriation, or confiscation of property.

Article 45

Private property acquired in accordance with the law by juridical or natural persons is guaranteed, and it may not be denied or injured by later laws.

Private property implies obligations for its proprietor by reason of the social function that it must fulfil.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 21

... The law may fix the maximum extent of lands of which one single individual or legally constituted corporation may be owner, and the excess must be sold at public auction or be expropriated by the State for distribution.

The Constitution guarantees private property, the contents and limits of which shall be fixed by law, with reference to its social function. No one may be deprived [193] of his property except by virtue of a decision based on law. Property in any kind of goods may legally be transferred by means of expropriation for reasons of social utility defined by the law, which shall likewise determine the form of the indemnification.

Article 19

All the inhabitants of the Republic enjoy the following rights, in conformity with the laws that may regulate their exercise: ... to dispose of their property ...

Article 15

The State shall regulate the national economic life ... The State may, with indemnification, nationalize the public services, and may monopolize the production, circulation, and sale of articles of primary necessity.

Article 25

In no case may the death penalty be applied for political reasons, or the penalty of confiscation of property.

Article 24

. . . Every author or inventor is the owner of his work, invention, or discovery for the term the law may decide.

Peru, Constitution ofArticle 16

Monopolies and combines in restraint of trade and industry are prohibited. The law shall fix the penalties to be imposed upon offenders. The law alone may establish State monopolies and privileges in the exclusive national interest.

Article 17

Mercantile companies, national or foreign, are subject without restrictions to the laws of the Republic. In any contract between the State and aliens, or in the concessions that the former may grant in favour of aliens, the express submission of the latter to the laws and tribunals of the Republic and their renunciation of all diplomatic claims must be made clear.

Article 33

Public properties used by everyone, such as rivers, lakes, and public roads, are not subject to private ownership.

[194]

Article 31

Property, whoever may be the owner, is governed exclusively by the laws of the Republic and is subject to the taxes, charges, and limitations established in the laws themselves.

Article 34

Property must be used in harmony with the social interest. The limits and nature of the right of property shall be fixed by law.

Article 35

The law may, for reasons of national interest, establish special restrictions and prohibitions for the acquisition and transference of specified kinds of property, on account of the nature, condition, or location of such property in the country.

Article 47

The State shall favour the preservation and growth of moderate and small rural ownership; it may, by means of a law, and prior indemnification, expropriate lands of private ownership, especially those not being exploited, in order to subdivide them or transfer them under conditions that may be regulated by law.

Article 36

Aliens may not, within fifty kilometres of the frontiers, acquire or possess, by any title, lands, waters, mines, or combustibles, directly or indirectly, individually or corporatively, under penalty of losing the acquired property, to the benefit of the State, except in a case of national necessity declared by an express law.

Article 37

Mines, lands, forests, waters, and, in general, all natural sources of wealth belong to the State, except for rights legally acquired. The conditions of their utilization by the State, or their concession, in ownership or usufruct, to private parties, shall be fixed by law.

Article 38

The State, may, by means of a law, take under its charges or nationalize land, maritime, river, lake, and aerial transportation, or other public services of private ownership, with prior indemnification and in conformity with the existing laws.
[195]

Article 41

The State shall receive part of the proceeds of mining enterprises, in the amount and proportion that shall be determined for alienating them under the conditions fixed by law.

Article 49

In extraordinary circumstances of social necessity, laws may be enacted or authorized by the Executive for adopting provisions tending to lower the cost of living. In none of these cases may property be expropriated without just indemnification.

Article 29

Property is inviolable, whether material, intellectual, literary, or artistic. No one may be deprived of his property except by reason of legally established public utility and after justly appraised prior indemnification.

Article 30

The State guarantees and protects the rights of authors and inventors. Their exercise shall be regulated by law.

Article 32

The same provision regarding property applies to aliens as well as Peruvians, except that in no case may said aliens make use of their exceptional positions or resort to diplomatic appeals.

Article 82

Archaeological, artistic, and historical treasures are under the safeguard of the State.

Philippines, Constitution ofArticle 13

Section 1. All agricultural, timber and mineral lands of the public domain, waters minerals, coal, petroleum, and other mineral oils, all forces of potential energy, and other natural resources of the Philippines belong to the State, and their disposition, exploitation, development, or utilization shall be limited to citizens of the Philippines, or to corporations or associations at least sixty per centum of the capital of which is owned by such citizens, subject to any existing right, grant, lease, or concession at the time of the inauguration of the Government established under this [196] Constitution. Natural resources, with the exception of public agricultural land, shall not be alienated, and no license, concession, or lease for the exploitation, development, or utilization of any of the natural resources shall be granted for a period exceeding twenty-five years, renewable for another twenty-five years, except as to water rights for irrigation, water supply, fisheries, or industrial uses other than the development of water power, in which cases beneficial use may be the measure and the limit of the grant.

Section 2. No private corporation or association may acquire, lease or hold public agricultural lands in excess of one thousand and twenty-four hectares, nor may any individual acquire such lands by purchase in excess of one hundred and forty-four hectares, or by lease in excess of one thousand and twenty-four hectares or by homestead in excess of twenty-four hectares. Lands adapted to grazing, not exceeding two thousand hectares, may be leased to an individual, private corporation, or association.

Section 3. The National Assembly may determine by law the size of private agricultural land which individuals, corporations, or associations may acquire and hold, subject to rights existing prior to the enactment of such law.

Section 6. The State may, in the interest of national welfare and defence, establish and operate industries and means of transportation and communication, and, upon payment of just compensation, transfer to public ownership utilities and other private enterprises to be operated by the Government.

Section 5. Save in cases of hereditary succession, no private agricultural land shall be transferred or assigned except by individuals, corporations or associations qualified to acquire or hold lands of the public domain of the Philippines.

Section 4. The National Assembly may authorize, upon payment of just compensation, the expropriation of lands to be subdivided into small lots and conveyed at cost to individuals.

Article 14

Section 4. The exclusive right to writings and inventions shall be secured to authors and inventors for a limited period.

[197]

Article 3

Section 1. (2) Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation.

Section 1. (19) Excessive fines shall not be imposed.

Poland, Constitution of

Article 99

(Paragraph 1) The Republic of Poland recognizes all property, whether belonging personally to individual citizens or collectively to associations of citizens, institutions, self-government organizations, or the state itself, as one of most important bases of social organization and legal order, and guarantees to all citizens, institutions and associations, protection of their property, permitting only in cases provided by a statute the abolition or limitation of property, whether personal or collective, for reasons of higher utility, against compensation. Only a statute of public utility, shall form the exclusive property of the state, and in how far rights of citizens and of their legally recognized associations to use freely land, waters, minerals, and other treasures of nature, may be subject to limitations for public reasons.

Siam, Constitution of

Article 14

Subject to the provisions of the law, every person enjoys full liberty of person, abode, property, speech, writing, publication, education, public meeting, association and vocation.

Sweden, Constitution ofArticle 16

. . . The King shall not deprive anyone or allow anyone to be deprived of any real or personal property without trial and judgment in accordance with the provisions of the Swedish law and statutes. . .

Syria, Constitution ofArticle 13

Rights of ownership shall be protected by law, no person may be expropriated, except on grounds of public utility and in the circumstances defined by law, and on condition that fair compensation is paid beforehand.

Article 14

General confiscation of property is forbidden.
[198]

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 70

Personal immunity, freedom of conscience, of thought, of speech, and press, the right to travel, to make contracts, to work, to own and dispose of property, to meet and associate and to incorporate, form part of the rights and liberties of Turkish citizens.

Article 71

The life, property, honour and residence of each individual are inviolable.

Article 73

Torture, bodily mistreatment, confiscation and forced labour are prohibited.

Article 74

No person may be deprived of his possessions and property or have them expropriated unless he has first been indemnified in cash for the value of the property in accordance with the pertinent laws.

The expropriation indemnity and the manner of payment of such indemnity and land or forest to be expropriated in order to make the farmer proprietor of land and to place administration of forests under the State, shall be determined by special laws.

No person shall be constrained to make any sort of sacrifice except such as may be imposed in kind, or money, or in the form of labour in extraordinary circumstances and in conformity with the law.

Ukraine, Constitution ofArticles 9 and 10

See USSR Constitution – Articles 9 and 10.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution ofArticle 9

Alongside the socialist system of economy, which is the predominant form of economy in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the law permits the small private economy of individual peasants and handicraftsmen based on their personal labour and precluding the exploitation of the labour of others.

[199]

Article 10

The rights of citizens to personal ownership of their incomes from work and of their savings, of their dwelling houses and subsidiary household economy, their household furniture and utensils and articles of personal use and convenience, as well as the right of inheritance of personal property of citizens, is protected by law.

United States of America, Constitution of5th Amendment

. . . nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 47

The right of succession shall be guaranteed within the limits established by law. The direct ascending and descending lines shall have preferential treatment in positive law.

Article 32

Intellectual work, the right of an author, an inventor, or an artist, shall be recognized and protected by law.

Article 31

Property is an inviolable right, but subject to the provisions of the laws that may be established for reasons of general interest.

No person shall be deprived of his right to own property except in cases of public necessity or utility established by law, and always first receiving just compensation from the national treasury.

When expropriation is declared because of public necessity or utility, property owners shall be indemnified for the injuries and damage they suffer by reason of the delay in effecting the expropriation or not doing so.

Article 14

Punishment by confiscation of property shall not be inflicted for reasons of a political character.

Article 33

All artistic or historic wealth of the country, regardless of who may be its maker, constitutes the cultural treasure of the Nation; it shall be [200] under the guardianship of the State, and the law shall determine what is considered necessary for its protection.

Article 51

Usury is prohibited. The law that provides the maximum rate of interest on loans is of a public character. It shall determine the penalty to be applied to transgressors . . .

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 18

Private property and private initiative in economy are guaranteed.

The inheritance of private property is guaranteed. The right of inheritance is regulated by law.

No person is permitted to use the right of private property to the detriment of the people's community.

The existence of private monopolist organizations such as cartels, syndicates, trusts and similar organizations created for the purpose of dictating prices, monopolizing the market and damaging the interests of the national economy, is forbidden.

Private property may be limited or expropriated if the common interest requires it, but only in accordance with the law. It will be determined by law in which cases and to what extent the owner shall be compensated.

Under the same conditions individual branches of national economy or single enterprises may be nationalized by law if the common interest requires it.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision [201]

Article 23

“No one should be required to pay any tax or be subjected to any public charge that has not been imposed by the law.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile – No provision

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Afghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the Government

Article 25

Fixed revenues and taxes are recovered in accordance with a separate Code.

Article 26

Nothing may be recovered from anyone beyond what is laid down in the Government Codes.

Argentina, Constitution of

Article 17

The Congress alone imposes the taxes mentioned in Article 4.

[202]

Bolivia, Constitution ofArticle 20

No tax is obligatory unless it has been established by the Legislature in conformity with the prescriptions of this Constitution. Plaintiffs may establish suit before the respective judicial authority against illegal taxes. Municipal taxes are obligatory when the requirements formulated by this Constitution have been observed in their establishment.

Article 21

All persons are equally obliged to pay taxes and public charges. Their creation, distribution, and abolition shall have a general character and should be determined in relation to the financial capacity of those contributing.

Brazil, Constitution ofArticle 141

No. 34. No tax shall be demanded or increased except as the law shall establish; and none shall be collected without previous budgetary authorization in each fiscal year, excepting, however, the customs tariff and taxes levied by reason of war.

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:

9th. The equal apportionment of imposts and taxes in proportion to property, or in graduation or form as fixed by law; and the equal apportionment of other public charges.

Direct or indirect taxes may be imposed only by law, and without its special authorization every authority of the State and every individual is prohibited from imposing them, even though it be under pretext of urgency, of being in voluntary form, or of any other nature . . .

China, Constitution ofArticle 19

The people shall have the duty of paying taxes in accordance with law.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 43

Only the Congress, the departmental assemblies, and the municipal councils may, in time of peace, impose taxes.

[203]

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 111

1. Taxation and public levies generally may be imposed only by law.
2. Likewise only by law may fines and punishment be prescribed and imposed.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 182

Taxes or other public charges may be levied only by virtue of a law and in proportion to the economic capacity of the taxpayer.

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 6

No taxes shall be levied except by virtue of a law, and for the public service.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen, 26 August 1789Article 14

Every citizen has a right, either of himself or his representative, to a free voice in determining the necessity of public contribution, the appropriation of them and their amount, mode of assessment and duration.

Article 13

A common contribution being necessary for the support of the public force and for defraying the other expenses of government, it should be divided equally among the members of the community according to their abilities.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 72

Proportionality shall be the basis of direct taxes.

Article 78

Only the Congress may impose taxes and other public charges.

Iceland, Constitution ofArticle 77

Taxation shall be regulated by law.

Iran, Constitution ofArticle 11

No tax or duty shall be imposed except by law, the provisions whereof shall include all the persons liable to pay the tax.

Liberia, Constitution ofArticle 1

Section 16. No subsidy, charge, impost or duties ought to be established, fixed, laid or levied, under any pretext whatsoever, without the consent of the people, or their representatives in the Legislature.

[204]

Netherlands, Constitution ofArticle 175

No taxes may be levied on behalf of the Exchequer of the Realm, except by virtue of a law.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 38

There will be no personal privileges in the matter of taxes and other public charges. Imposts and taxes will be established in proportion to the value of property or in the progression or form that the law fixes.

The tax system will tend toward direct levy.

Article 37

Only for reasons of public interest or service, and by virtue of a law, may taxes be levied and their payment exempted either in whole or in part.

Article 221

When the Republic finds itself involved in an international war or in an internal civil war, or there exists the danger that one or the other may occur, or in case of epidemic, earthquake, or any other public calamity, or when for any other reason the defence, peace, and security of the Nation or of its institutions or forms of government may require it, the President of the Republic, in Council of Ministers, may, by decree, restrict or suspend, in all or a part of the national territory, the exercise of the constitutional guarantees, with the exception in all cases of those relating to:

- 1st. The inviolability of human life.
- 2nd. The prohibition against being tried before judges not recognized by the law.
- 3rd. The prohibition against inflicting infamous penalties, including those of whipping and of any kind of torture whatever.
- 4th. The prohibition against retroactive or confiscatory laws; and
- 5th. The levying of taxes.

In respect to taxes, the President, in Council of Ministers, may, by decree, levy taxes of a general character if an international or civil war has already started.

[205]

Nicaragua, Constitution of (continued)

Article 221

Such decree will state:

- 1st. The reason for justifying its issue.
- 2nd. The designation of the guarantee or guarantees restricted or suspended; and
- 3rd. The territory affected by the suspension or restriction . . .

Article 51

Every service must be remunerated except those that must be furnished gratuitously by virtue of the law or of a sentence founded on it.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 48

No one is obliged to pay a tax or impost that is not legally established and the collection of which is not made in the form prescribed by the laws.

Article 41

No tax or assessment will be established for the exercise of the liberal professions, trades, and arts.

Paraguay, Constitution of

Article 7

Equality is the basis of public taxation. The Government provides for the expenses of the State by the proceeds of the imposts, contributions, and assessments created by law, the sale or leasing of public lands, the exploitation of mines, the utilities arising from public services and monopolies under the charge of the State, and loans and other credit operations.

Peru, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 8

The law may create, alter, or suppress taxes, and exempt their payment in whole or in part for public services only.

Article 31

Property, whoever may be the owner, is governed exclusively by the laws of the Republic and is subject to the taxes, charges, and limitations established in the laws themselves.

[206]

Article 40

The State recognizes the freedom of commerce and industry. The law shall indicate the requisites to which the exercise of such freedom is subject and the guarantees granted it. When public security or necessity require it the law may establish limitations or reservations in said exercise, or may authorize the Executive to establish them, but in no case may such restrictions have a personal or confiscatory character.

Sweden, Constitution ofArticle 57

The ancient right of the Swedish nation to tax themselves shall be exercised by the Riksdag alone.

The manner in which separate communities shall tax themselves for their own needs shall be determined by communal laws to be enacted by the King and the Riksdag jointly.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 85

Taxes may be levied and collected only by virtue of a law. However, the collecting of such taxes as have been customarily levied by the State or by provincial and municipal administrations shall be continued pending the enactment of new laws.

Article 84

Taxes shall be understood to be the participation of the people in the general expenditures of the State. The collection of toll, tithes, or any kind of taxes in a manner incompatible with the aforesaid principle by individuals or corporations or on their behalf is prohibited.

United States of America, Constitution of

8th Amendment

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed . . .

Article 1, Section 8, Clause 2

The Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes . . .

16th Amendment

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes . . .
[207]

Uruguay, Constitution of

Article 34

No person shall be obliged to render aid, of any kind whatever, to armies, or to offer his house for the quartering of soldiers, unless on the order of a civil magistrate according to law, and he shall receive an indemnification from the Republic for the losses suffered in such cases.

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 42

All citizens shall pay taxes in proportion to their economic capacity. Public taxes and duties and exemptions from them are established only by law.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision [208]

Article 24

“There shall be equal opportunity of access to all vocations and professions not having a public character.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XIV (paragraph 2)

This right includes the right to choose freely a vocation, insofar as the opportunities of work available make this possible, as well as the right to transfer from one employment to another and to move from one place of employment to another. Associated with the right to work is the right to form labour and professional unions.

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Afghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the Government

Article 12

Afghan subjects are free, within the limits of the appropriate regulations, in all matters relating to trade, industry and agriculture.

Bolivia, Constitution

Article 6

Every person has the following fundamental rights in conformity with the laws that regulate their exercise:

2. To engage in work, commerce, or industry under conditions that do not injure the collective welfare.

Brazil, Constitution

Article 141

No. 14. The practice of any profession shall be free, observing the conditions of capacity that the law may establish.

[209]

Article 161

The law shall regulate the exercise of the liberal professions, and the revalidation of diplomas issued by foreign educational institutions.

Article 146

The Union may, by means of a special law, intervene in the economic sphere or monopolize specified industries or activities. The intervention shall be based upon the public interest, and shall be limited by the fundamental rights assured by this Constitution.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 40

Only those who have a professional degree may in the future be inscribed as attorneys.

No one may legally represent his own or another's case if he is not an inscribed attorney. Nevertheless, the law may establish exceptions.

Article 39

Every person is free to choose a profession or trade. The law may require certificates of competence and may regulate the exercise of professions.

The authorities shall inspect professions and trades in matters relating to morality, safety, and public health.

The law may restrict the production and consumption of liquors and alcoholic beverages.

The law may also order the revision and supervision of rates and regulations for transportation enterprises and other public services.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 62

Under equality of conditions employers and public or private enterprises have the obligations of giving preference to Costa Rican workers. In the cases occurring, the law shall fix the minimum proportion of native workers, giving consideration not only to their number but also to the total amount of salaries or wages paid them.

[210]

Cuba, Constitution ofArticle 70

Official obligatory collective organization is established in the practice of university-trained professions. The law shall determine the form of the organization and functioning of such bodies, by a higher organization of national character, and by the local organizations that may be necessary, in a manner such that they may be regulated with full authority by the majority of their colleagues.

The law shall also regulate the obligatory collective organization of the other professions recognized officially by the State.

Article 73

The majority of persons participating in labour shall be Cubans by birth as much as regards total amount of wages and salaries as in the distinct categories of labour, in the form determined by law.

Protection shall also be extended to naturalized Cubans with families born in the national territory, with preference over naturalized citizens who do not meet these conditions, and over aliens.

The stipulations in the preceding paragraphs concerning aliens shall not be applied in the filling of indispensable technical positions, subject to the prior formalities of the law, and with provision that apprenticeship in the technical work in question be facilitated for native Cubans.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 108

Every citizen of the Czechoslovak State may . . . carry on any calling for the purpose of earning profits within the limits of the law.

This right shall only suffer restriction in the public interests and on the basis of law.

Denmark, Constitution ofArticle 81

All restrictions on free and equal access to employment which are not justified by the public welfare shall be abolished by law.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 181

The freedom of exercising professions is guaranteed or prescribed by law . . .

[211]

Article 187

The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador:
 (10) freedom of work, trade and industry . . . no one shall be compelled to work without a contract and the corresponding remuneration . . .

El Salvador, Constitution of

Article 24

All the industry is free, and may be monopolized only for the benefit of the Nation, with the aguardiente, saltpetre, and gunpowder business to be administered by the Executive.

There shall be no other monopoly of any kind, or any prohibitions on industrial liberty, even for protection. There are excepted only those relative to the coining of money and to the privileges that, for a limited time, are granted by law to inventors or those improving any industry.

Haiti, Constitution of

Article 18

The freedom of labour shall be exercised under the control and supervision of the State and subject to the conditions prescribed by law. Nevertheless, only natural born Haitians may engage in retail trade, practice handicrafts and pursue all other commercial and professional activities as determined by law.

Honduras, Constitution of

Article 63

There shall be no monopolies in favour of private individuals.

Privileges may be granted for a period that does not exceed ten years. A term limited to ninety years may be granted concessions to promote the introduction or improvement of new industries, for immigration, institutions of credit, the opening of routes of communication, or colonization projects.

In the cases above mentioned, only the established regulations and taxes may be suspended, but the public charges for establishment may not be abolished in any case or in any way, in concessions and treaties.

In the concessions it grants or the treaties it makes, the State may not dispense with the payment of municipal taxes.

When the term of a concession relative to colonization, immigration, or the opening of means of communication has elapsed, the enterprise, in [212] full operation and with all its accessories, shall pass to the ownership of the State, without any remuneration.

Iceland, Constitution ofArticle 69

No restrictions on the freedom of trade can be made except by law or for reasons of public welfare.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 4

No person may be prevented from engaging in the profession, industry, commerce, or labour which suit him, provided it is lawful. The exercise of this liberty may be suspended only by judicial action, when the rights of third parties are attacked, or by governmental order issued in the terms that the law indicates when the rights of society are infringed. No one may be deprived of the product of his labour except by judicial determination.

The law shall determine in each State which are the professions that require a license for their practice, the conditions that must be fulfilled to obtain it, and the authorities to issue it.

Article 57

The acceptance of foreign professionals must be made on the basis of possible reciprocity. The law will regulate this provision.

Article 96

The State guarantee, within this concept, freedom of labour in order that one may freely dedicate himself to the profession, industry, or trade that each finds suitable, provided that it does not oppose public morality, health, and security.

Vagrancy is punishable.

Article 52

The State may, for purposes of general interest, intervene in the exploitation and control of enterprises of public service.

Norway, Constitution ofArticle 101

New and permanent privileges implying restrictions on the freedom of trade and industry may not be granted to anyone in the future.

[213]

Panama, Constitution ofArticle 41

Every person is free to exercise any profession or occupation. Their exercise remains subject to the regulations that the law establishes relative to capacity, morality, security, and public health.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 33

Nationals are admissible to any employment with no other condition than that of fitness, and aliens are subject to the limitations that the laws may establish.

Article 19

All the inhabitants of the Republic enjoy the following rights, in conformity with the laws that may regulate their exercise: to choose an occupation . . .

Article 20

The law shall determine which are the professions that need diplomas for their practice, the conditions that must be fulfilled in order to obtain said diplomas, and the authority that shall confer them.

Article 19

All the inhabitants of the Republic enjoy the following rights, in conformity with the laws that may regulate their exercise: to work and to practise any legitimate trade or industry, except for the limitations that, for social and economic reasons of national interest, the law may impose.

Peru, Constitution ofArticle 42

The State guarantees freedom of labour. Any profession, industry or business that may not be opposed to morality, health, or public security, may be practised freely.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 101

Every citizen has the liberty . . . to choose his occupation and profession . . . These rights may be restricted only by statute.

Siam, Constitution ofArticle 14

Subject to the provisions of the law, every person enjoys full liberty [214] of person, abode, property, speech, writing, publication, education, public meeting, association and vocation.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 35

Every person has the right to devote himself to work, cultural pursuits, industry, commerce, a profession, or any other lawful activity, within the limitations of the general interest that the laws may establish.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision [215]

Article 25

“Everything that is not prohibited by the law is permitted”.

Section I. Observations Made by Members
of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile – No provision

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National ConstitutionsArgentina, Constitution ofArticle 19*

No inhabitant of the Nation shall be obliged to do what the law does not command nor deprived of what it does not forbid.

The private actions of men that in no way offend public order or morality, nor hurt a third party, are reserved only to God, and are exempt from the authority of the magistrates.

Bolivia, Constitution ofArticle 29

No person shall be obliged to do what the Constitution and the laws do [216] not require, not be deprived of what they do not prohibit.

Article 33

The declarations, rights, and guarantees that this Constitution enumerates shall not be understood as a denial of other rights and guarantees not mentioned, which may originate in the sovereignty of the people and in the republican form of Government.

Brazil, Constitution ofArticle 144

The specification of the rights and guarantees expressed in this Constitution does not exclude other rights and guarantees flowing from the regime and from the principles which it adopts.

Article 141

#2. No one may be obliged to do or refrain from doing anything except by virtue of the law.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 20

Private persons are responsible to the authorities only for infraction of the Constitution or of the laws. Public officials are also responsible for the same infractions and for exceeding their powers or for omissions in the exercise of them.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 36

No one can be disturbed or prosecuted for any act that does not infringe the law, or for the declaration of his political opinions.

No one, however, may deliver, in any form, political propaganda, through clergymen or laymen, invoking motives of religion or making use, as a means, of the religious beliefs of the people.

Article 50

Private actions that do not touch public morality or order, or that do not produce harm or injury to a third party, are outside of the jurisdiction of the law.

Dominican Republic, Constitution ofArticle 7

The enumeration contained in Article 6 is not restrictive, and [217] therefore does not exclude the existence of other rights of similar nature.

Note: Article 6 refers to individual rights.

Article 88

No one can be obliged to do that which the law does not command, or be impeded from doing that which the law does not prohibit.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen 1789Article 5

The law ought to prohibit only actions hurtful to society. What is not prohibited by the law should not be hindered; nor should anyone be compelled to that which the law does not require.

Article 8

The law should impose only such penalties as are absolutely and evidently necessary; and no one ought to be punished but by virtue of the law promulgated before the offence and legally applied.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 23

2. No person may be hindered in that which the law does not prohibit.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 41

No person will be obliged to do that which the law does not order, or be prevented from doing that which it does not prohibit.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 30

No inhabitant shall be obliged to do anything the law does not command him to do, nor shall he be deprived of what the law does not prohibit.

Peru, Constitution ofArticle 24

No one is obliged to do that which the law does not require, or may be impeded from doing what it does not prohibit.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 63

The enumeration of rights, duties, and guarantees made by the Constitution does not exclude others that are inherent in the human personality or that may be derived from the republican form of government.

[218]

Article 10

Private actions of persons not interfering in any way with public order or injuring a third party are exempt from the authority of the magistrates.

No inhabitant of the Republic shall be obliged to do what the law does not command, nor be prevented from doing what it does not prohibit.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[219]

Article 26

“No one shall be convicted of crime except by judgment of a court of law for violation of a law in effect at the time of the commission of the act charged as an offence, nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that applicable at the time of the commission of the offence.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XII

Every person accused of crime shall have the right to a fair public hearing of the case, to be confronted with witnesses, and to be judged by established tribunals and according to the law in force at the time the act was committed. No fines shall be imposed except in accordance with the provisions of general laws.

Cuba

Article 18

The right to trial without undue delay, to self-defence, and to protection from sentences except in pursuance of laws in force prior to the act with which he is charged.

Panama (American Law Institute)

Article 9

No one shall be convicted of crime except for violation of a law in effect at the time of the commission of the act charged as an offence, nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that applicable at the time of the commission of the offence.

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

[220]

Section III. National Constitutions

Afghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the Government

Article 11

There is no interference with personal liberty. No one is imprisoned or punished without an order in accordance with the Shariat or the appropriate laws. The practice of slavery is forbidden in Afghanistan. No male or female may keep any person as a slave.

Argentine, Constitution of

Article 18

No inhabitant of the Nation may be punished without previous trial, based on an earlier law than the date of the offence, nor tried by special commissions, nor removed from the judges designated by law before the date of the trial. No one can be compelled to testify against himself or be arrested except by virtue of a written order from a competent authority. The defence, by trial, of the person and of rights is inviolable. The domicile is inviolable, as also epistolary correspondence and private papers; and a law shall determine in what cases and for what reasons their search and seizure will be allowed. The penalty of death for political offences, all kinds of torture, and whipping, are forever abolished. The prisons of the Nation shall be healthy and clean, for the safety and not for the punishment of the prisoners confined in them; and any measure that under pretext of precaution inflicts on them hardship beyond what the Nation demands, will bring responsibility upon the judge who authorizes it.

Belgium, Constitution of

Article 9

No penalty shall be established or enforced except in pursuance of law.

Article 7, paragraph 2

No one may be prosecuted except in cases provided for by law and in the form therein prescribed.

Article 8

No person shall be removed against his will from the jurisdiction of the judge to whom the law assigns him.

[221]

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 14

No person is obliged to testify against himself in criminal cases, nor shall his relatives to the fourth degree of consanguinity inclusive or of the second of affinity be so required.

Article 31

The law provides only for future circumstances and does not have retroactive effect.

Article 24

Only the Legislature has power to amend and modify the codes, as well as to enact regulations and provisions regarding judicial proceedings.

Article 13

No person shall be tried by special commission or submitted to judges other than those previously designated for such suits.

Brazil, Constitution ofArticle 141

27. No one shall be prosecuted or sentenced except by a competent authority and in the form of a previous law.

Article 14

29. Penal law shall be retroactive only when it shall so benefit the accused.

Article 141

28. The institution of the jury is maintained with the organization that the law may give to it, provided that the number of its members shall be always odd and the secrecy of its voting shall be guaranteed, as shall be the fullness of the defence of the accused and the sovereignty of the verdicts. The judgment of treacherous crimes against life shall obligatorily be within its competence.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 28

No person shall, even in time of war, be punished ex post facto except in accordance with a law, order, or decree in which the act has been previously prohibited and corresponding punishment determined.

[222]

If there are serious reasons to fear a disturbance of the public order, this provision shall not prevent, even in time of peace, the arrest and detention, by order of the Government upon previous advice of Ministers, of any person suspected with good reason of attempting to disturb the public peace.

Article 26

... In criminal matters, the law favourable to the defendant, even if enacted after the commission of the alleged offence, shall be applied in preference to the restrictive or unfavourable law.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 26

The law has no retroactive effect.

Article 38

Jurisdiction in civil and criminal trials is exclusive in the authorities established by law. No commission, tribunal, or judgeship may be created for specified trials, nor shall anyone be subjected to military jurisdiction except individuals of the army and only for the crimes of sedition and rebellion, and for those who committed them while being in active service or when required to lend such service; also for offences against discipline, and any others committed in campaign, in which cases they shall be judged according to the military ordinance.

Article 42

No one shall be made to suffer any punishment without having been heard, and convicted in a trial, and without having been sentenced by an executory sentence by a judge or competent authority. Bodily restraint, non-appearance and other matters of this nature in civil cases and those of fine or arrest in police cases are excepted.

Article 43

Punishment can be imposed on no one except by a pre-existent law that names the crime or offence committed.

[223]

Article 39

In a criminal matter, no one is obliged to testify against himself; nor can he testify in the status of a witness against his mate, ancestors, descendants, or other relatives within the third degree of consanguinity or the second of affinity.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 22

No other laws shall have retroactive effect unless the law itself so provides for reasons of public order, social utility, or national necessity, as may be expressly stipulated in that law by a vote of two-thirds of the total number of members of each co-legislative body. If the basis of the retroactivity should be impugned as unconstitutional, it shall be within the jurisdiction of the tribunal of constitutional and social guarantee to decide upon the same, without the power of refusing to render decision because of form or for any other reason.

In every case the same law shall concurrently establish the degree, manner, and form of indemnification for injuries, if any, and of retroactivity affecting rights legitimately acquired under the protection of prior legislation.

The law giving the protection afforded by this article shall not be valid if it produces effects contrary to the provisions of Article 24 of this Constitution.

Article 21

Penal laws shall have retroactive effect when favourable to the offender. This advantage is denied in cases of perpetration of fraud by public officials or employees who may be delinquent in the exercise of their office, and of persons responsible for electoral crimes and crimes against the individual rights guaranteed by this Constitution. The penalties and qualifications of the law in force at the moment of the offence shall be applied to those found guilty of these crimes.

[224]

Czechoslovakia, Constitution of

Article 94

2. No one shall be tried other than before his legal judge.

Ecuador, Constitution of

Article 169

... No one may be removed from the jurisdiction of his proper judges; nor punished without previous trial; in accordance with a law passed prior to the act committed ... nor deprived of the right of defence at any stage of his trial.

Article 187

The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador:

... (2) the right of every individual. . . to be considered innocent unless proved guilty according to the laws.

Egypt Royal Rescript No. 42 of 1923

Article 6

No offence and no penalty may be established, save in pursuance of the law.

Article 6

Penalties may only be inflicted in respect of offences committed after the law providing for them has been promulgated.

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 20

No person may be deprived of his life, or his liberty, or of his property without previously being heard and convicted in a trial in accordance with the laws; nor may anyone be prosecuted twice, civilly or criminally, for the same cause.

Article 22

No individual shall be tried in another jurisdiction than that where the crime was committed, except in the cases determined by law, or in those in which the law itself authorizes the court of justice to designate another jurisdiction.

Article 24

The laws cannot have retroactive effect, except in penal matters when the new law may be more favourable to the offender.

[225]

Article 27

No power or authority may remove pending cases to another court or open terminated cases.

Article 25

No one may be tried except by laws enacted prior to the offence and by a tribunal that the law had previously established.

Article 26

The same judge may not take cognizance of the same case on appeal.

Ethiopia, Constitution ofArticle 24

No Ethiopian subject may, against his will, be deprived of the right to trial by the legally established tribunal.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen 1789Article 8

The law should impose only such penalties as are absolutely and evidently necessary; and no one ought to be punished but by virtue of the law promulgated before the offence and legally applied.

Article 7

No one shall be accused, arrested or imprisoned save in the cases determined by law and according to the form which it has prescribed. All who solicit, promote, execute or cause to be executed arbitrary orders ought to be punished and every citizen summoned or apprehended by virtue of the law ought immediately to obey and becomes culpable if he resists.

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 7

No punishment may be inflicted unless previously fixed by law.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 52

No one may be condemned without having been accused, heard and brought to trial.

Article 49

Acts of omission or commission that are not qualified as crimes or offences and subject to a penalty by a law prior to their perpetration are not punishable. Penal laws shall have retroactive effect when they may be [226] favourable to the offender. Other laws shall not have retroactivity, except for reasons of public order and social utility, or of national necessity, expressly indicated in the law by a vote equal to two-thirds part of the total number of deputies that compose the Congress.

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle "D"

The principle of non-retroactivity of laws does not preclude all such measures of reconstruction and punishment as are dictated by the national interest being taken within legal limits and in respect of the period of five years immediately preceding the present Constitution.

Article 15

No law may have retroactive effect except in penal cases where it favours the delinquent.

Article 13

No person may be removed from the jurisdiction of his proper judges under the constitution or the law. Accordingly, a civilian cannot be tried by any military court whatsoever, nor may a military person be tried elsewhere than in the common law courts for common law offences; and an exception is made in the case of a legally declared state of emergency.

Article 16

Penalties may only be established by law and may be applied only in the cases determined by law.

Article 24

Juries shall be established in the cases prescribed by law in respect of crimes and of political offences committed through the medium of the press or otherwise.

Honduras, Constitution of

Article 54

No law shall have retroactive effect, except in criminal matters when the new law favours the offender or indicted person.

Article 43

No person shall be tried by special commissions or by other judges than those designated by law.

[227]

Article 45

In criminal suits no person shall be obliged to testify against himself, against his spouse, or against his relatives within the fourth degree of consanguinity, or the second of affinity.

Lebanon, Constitution of

Article 8

No offence may be established and no penalty imposed except by law.

Liberia, Constitution of

Article I

Section 6. Every person injured shall have remedy therefor, by due course of law; justice shall be done without sale, denial or delay; and in all cases, not arising under martial law, or upon impeachment the parties shall have state right to a trial by jury, and to be heard in person or by counsel, or both.

Section 7. No person shall be held to answer for a capital or infamous crime, except in cases of impeachment, cases arising in the army or navy, and petty offences, unless upon presentment by a grand jury; and every person criminally charged, shall have a right to be seasonably furnished with a copy of the charge, to be confronted with the witness against him, to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favour; and to have a speedy, public and impartial trial by a jury of the vicinity. He shall not be compelled to furnish or give evidence against himself; and no person shall for the same offence, be twice put in jeopardy of life and limb.

Section 8. No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, property or privilege, but by judgment of his peers or the law of the land.

Section 18. No person, can in any case, be subject to the law martial, or to any penalties or pains, by virtue of that law (except those employed in the army or navy, and except the militia in actual service) but by the authority of the Legislature.

Luxembourg, Constitution of

Article 13

No person may against his will be removed from the jurisdiction of the judges assigned to him by law.

[228]

Article 14

No penalty may be introduced or applied except in pursuance of the law.

United Mexican States, Constitution of the

Article 14

No law shall be given retroactive effect to the prejudice of any person.

No person may be deprived of life, liberty, or his property, possessions, or rights except by means of a direct judgment before previously established tribunals, in which the essential formalities of procedure are complied with, and in conformity with laws enacted previous to the commission of the act.

In cases of a criminal nature, it is forbidden to impose, either because of simple analogy or by a prior evidence, any punishment that is not decreed by a law exactly applicable to the crime involved.

In cases of a civil nature, the final sentence must be according to the letter or a judicial interpretation of the law, and in the absence of the latter, it shall be founded on the general principles of the law.

Article 13

No person may be judged by private laws or special tribunals. No person or corporation may have special privileges, nor enjoy greater emoluments than those that may be compensation for public services and are fixed by law. The military code exists for crimes and offences against military discipline; but the military tribunals may in no case and for no cause extend their jurisdiction over persons who do not belong to the army. Should a civilian be implicated in crime or offence of a military character, the proper civil authority shall hear the case.

Article 17

No person may take justice into his own hands or resort to violence to claim his right. Tribunals shall be prepared to administer justice at the time and in the manner that the law determines; their service shall be free and, consequently, judicial charges are prohibited.

Article 19

Each case shall necessarily be instituted for the offence or offences [229] indicated in the warrant of formal arrest. Should it appear from the result of a trial that there has been committed an offence distinct from the one being prosecuted, it shall be the object of a separate accusation, without prejudice to the subsequent decreeing of the accumulated penalty, if deemed advisable.

Article 23

No criminal suit may have more than two appeals. No person, whether acquitted or convicted, shall be tried two times for the same offence. The practice of leaving a case in abeyance until new evidence is presented is prohibited.

Article 130

The federal powers shall exercise the supervision required by law in affairs relating to religious denominations and external discipline. Other authorities shall act as auxiliaries of the Federation.

Suits for violation of the above provisions shall never be heard before a jury.

Netherlands, Constitution of

Article 162

All judgments shall state the grounds upon which they are based, and in penal cases they shall indicate the legal provisions upon which the condemnation is based.

The pronouncement of sentence shall take place with open doors. Without prejudice to the exceptions made by law, the hearings shall be public.

In the interest of public order and morality the judge may depart from this rule.

For punishable acts designated by law, the provisions of the first and second paragraphs may also be departed from.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 43

No law may have a retroactive force or effect except in a penal matter in favour of the offender.

[230]

Article 44

Only acts and transgressions declared punishable by laws prior to their commission may be punished.

Article 221

When the Republic finds itself involved in an international war or in an internal civil war, or there exists the danger that one or the other may occur, or in case of epidemic, earthquake, or any other public calamity, or when for any other reason the defence, peace, and security of the Nation or of its institutions or forms of government may require it, the President of the Republic, in Council of Ministers, may, by decree, restrict or suspend, in all or a part of the national territory, the exercise of the constitutional guarantee, with the exception in all cases of those relating to:

- 1st. The inviolability of human life.
- 2nd. The prohibition against being tried by judges not recognized by the law.
- 3rd. The prohibition against inflicting infamous penalties, including those of whipping and of any kind of torture whatever.
- 4th. The prohibition against retroactive or confiscatory laws; and
- 5th. The levying of taxes.

Norway, Constitution ofArticle 96

No one may be convicted except according to law, or be punished except according to judicial sentence.

Article 97

No law may be given retroactive effect.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 31

Only acts declared punishable by a law prior to their perpetration and exactly applicable to the act imputed will be punished.

Article 33

The following may inflict punishment without previous trial and in the cases and within the precise terms of the law:

[231]

1st. Officials who exercise command jurisdiction, who may impose fines or arrest anyone who harms them or is disrespectful in the acts by which the functions of his office are discharged or by reason of the discharging of the same.

2nd. Chiefs of police, who may impose the penalty of arrest on their subordinates in order to restrain insubordination or mutiny; and

3rd. Ship captains who, being outside of port, have the power to restrain insubordination or mutiny or to maintain order on board, and to detain provisionally any actual or presumed offender.

Article 32

No one will be judged except by a competent authority and in conformity with the legal procedure, nor more than once for the same reason.

Article 25

No one is obliged to testify in a criminal, correctional, or police matter against himself, his spouse, or his relatives within the fourth degree of consanguinity or the second of affinity.

Article 44

Laws do not have retroactive effect, except those of public order or of social interest. In criminal matters a law favourable to the criminal always has preference and retroactivity, even though sentence may have been executed.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 26

No law may have retroactive effect. No inhabitant may be punished except by a prior judgment founded upon some law prior to the violation under prosecution, nor may be judged by special tribunals. . .

Article 26

. . . Guilt or dishonour that persons may incur does not affect their relatives.
[232]

Article 26

. . . No one may be obliged to testify against himself . . .

Peru, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 25

No law has retroactive force or effect.

Article 57

No one may be condemned for an act or an omission which at the time of being committed was not qualified in the law in an express and unequivocal manner as a punishable violation, or be judged except by tribunals established by the laws. Any declaration obtained by violence is without value.

The penalty of confiscation of property may not be imposed.

Article 64

The ordinary tribunals shall have jurisdiction over crimes of the press.

Philippines, Constitution of theArticle 3, Section 1

(1) No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall any person be denied the equal protection of the laws.

(11) No ex post facto law or bill of attainder shall be enacted.

(15) No person shall be held to answer for a criminal offence without due process of law.

(17) In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall be presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and shall enjoy the right to be heard by himself and counsel, to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, to have a speedy and public trial, to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to secure the attendance of witnesses in his behalf.

(18) No person shall be compelled to be a witness against himself.

[233]

(20) No person shall be twice put in jeopardy of punishment for the same offence. If an act is punished by a law and an ordinance, conviction or acquittal under either shall constitute a bar to another prosecution for the same act.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 98

No one may be deprived of the court to which he is subject by law. Exceptional courts are admissible only in cases determined by statutes, which statutes must have been issued before the offence was committed. A citizen may be prosecuted and punishment inflicted only by virtue of statute actually in force . . .

Sweden, Constitution ofArticle 16

The King shall cause everyone to be tried by a court to the jurisdiction of which he is properly subject.

United States of America, Constitution ofArticle I

Section 9, Clause 3 – No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed.

Section 10, Clause 1 – No State shall . . . pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law or law impairing the obligation of contracts . . .

7th Amendment

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 12

No person shall be punished or confined without a legal form of trial and sentence.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 28

Paragraph 3: No person may be punished for a criminal act except by sentence of a competent court on the basis of the law establishing competence of the court and defining the offence.

[234]

Paragraph 4: Punishments may be determined pronounced only on the basis of the law.

Paragraph 6: Punishments for infringements of legal prescriptions may be pronounced by the organs of the State administration only within the limits set by law.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[235]

Article 27

“There shall be access to independent and impartial tribunals for the determination of rights and duties under the law. Everyone has the right to consult with and to be represented by counsel.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile – No provision

Cuba

Article 17

The right to protection from competent courts free from all influence contrary to justice.

Panama (American Law Institute)

Article 7

Everyone has the right to have his criminal civil liabilities and his rights determined without undue delay by fair public trial by a competent tribunal before which he has had opportunity for a full hearing.

The state has a duty to maintain adequate tribunals and procedures to make this right effective.

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Afghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the Government

Article 24

The settlement of personal disputes and other matters between subjects falls within the province of the courts of justice and other official [236] departments connected therewith, and such persons as are not satisfied with a decision and order of a court may appeal to higher authorities up to the Ministry concerned and, if still not satisfied, to the Prime Minister and His Majesty the King.

Argentine, Constitution of

Article 24

The Congress shall promote the amendment of the present legislation in all its branches, and the establishment of trials by juries.

Belgium, Constitution of

Article 7

Individual liberty is guaranteed.

Article 8

No person shall be removed against his will from the jurisdiction of the judge to whom the law assigns him.

Article 24

No previous authorization is necessary to bring action against public officials for the acts of their administration, except as provided for cabinet ministers.

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 141

No. 4 The law shall not exclude any injury to individual rights from consideration by the judiciary.

No. 35 Public authorities shall grant judicial assistance to the needy in the manner that the law may establish.

Byelorussia, Constitution of

Article 88

See Article 112 of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Constitution.

China, Constitution of

Article 8

. . . No person may be tried or punished except by a law court in accordance with legal procedure . . .

Article 16

The people shall have the right to file complaints or institute legal proceedings.
[237]

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 20

Public officials are responsible for the infraction of the Constitution or of the laws. Action in order to accuse them is open to the public.

Article 47

All Costa Ricans or aliens, having recourse to the law, shall find a remedy for injuries or damages that they may have received in their persons, property, or honour. Justice must be rendered promptly, completely, and without hesitation, and in strict conformity with the law.

Article 49

The same judge cannot serve in various appeals, provided that the decision deals with the same point.

Cuba, Constitution ofArticle 28

There shall be no prosecution or sentence except by a competent judge or tribunal, acting under laws enacted prior to the commission of crime, and with the formalities and guarantees that these laws may establish. No sentence shall be pronounced against any prosecuted person in his absence, nor shall anyone be condemned in a criminal matter without being heard. Neither shall any person be obliged to testify against himself, or against his spouse, or his relatives within the fourth degree of consanguinity or the second of affinity.

No violence or coercion of any kind shall be practised on persons in order to force them to testify. Any statement obtained in violation of this provision shall be null, and those responsible shall incur the penalties fixed by law.

Article 40

Provisions of a legal, governmental, or any other nature that regulate the exercise of the rights guaranteed by this Constitution, shall be null if they abridge, restrict, or corrupt said rights.

Adequate resistance for the protection of individual rights previously guaranteed, is legitimate.

Violations of this title shall be prosecuted by public action, without [238] precaution or formality of any kind, and by simple denunciation.

The enumeration of the rights guaranteed in this title does not exclude others established in this Constitution, or other rights of an analogous nature, or those that are derived from the principle of the sovereignty of the people and from the republican form of government.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution of

Article 98

All judges shall be independent in the exercise of their conscience and they shall be bound only by law.

El Salvador, Constitution of

Article 7

Everyone who exercises any public office is directly and immediately responsible for the acts that he commits in the exercise of his functions. The law shall determine the manner of making this responsibility effective.

Article 37

Every person has the right to ask and obtain protection from the Supreme Court of Justice or the chamber of second instance, when any authority or individual may restrict his personal liberty of the exercise of the other individual rights that the present Constitution guarantees. A special law shall regulate the manner of making this right effective.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen 1789

Article 2

The purpose of all civil association is the preservation of the natural and imprescriptible rights of man. These rights are liberty, property, security and resistance to oppression.

Greece, Constitution of

Article 8

No one may be withdrawn without his consent from the jurisdiction of the Judge assigned to him by law.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 36

... Expression of thought by any means of diffusion is free without previous censoring ...

Article 40

The inhabitants of the Republic have free access to tribunals to [239] prosecute their suits in the form that the laws indicate.

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 12

Individual liberty is guaranteed.

No person may be prosecuted, arrested or detained except in the cases provided for and in accordance with the procedure prescribed by law.

Furthermore, arrest and detention shall only take place on the warrant of a legally authorized official.

For such warrant to be executed:

- (1) It must formally state the reason for detention and the provision under the law which punishes the alleged act;
- (2) It must be served on the person concerned and a copy of it left with him at the time of his detention, except in cases of flagrante delicto.

No person may be kept in custody unless he has been brought within forty-eight hours after arrest before a judge authorized to decide the question of the legality of arrest. Such jurisdiction shall be organized by the law.

All unnecessary harshness or constraint in apprehending a person or keeping him in custody, as well as all moral pressure or physical violence, especially during interrogation, are prohibited.

All violations of this provision are arbitrary acts against which the injured parties may, without previous authorization, appeal to the competent courts and prosecute those authorizing or committing the said acts, whatever may be their rank and duties.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 33

Any person has the right to request protection against transgression or arbitrary action of which he may be the victim, and to require the exercise of all the guarantees that this Constitution establishes, when he may be unduly prevented in the enjoyment of these guarantees by laws or acts of any authority, agent, or public official.

Article 85

If the Executive violates any of the provisions contained in this chapter, the injured party, or any person in his name, may have recourse for protection.

[240]

Article 189

Public employees and officials who violate any of the rights and guarantees stated in this Constitution shall be criminally and civilly responsible, and they cannot obtain a pardon or commutation during the currency of the following term.

Prescription of the offences and penalties incurred shall not begin until after said terms.

Iraq, Constitution of

Article 9

No person shall be prevented from having recourse to the Courts, or be obliged to have recourse to a Court other than the Court competent to deal with his case, except in accordance with law.

Liberia, Constitution of

Article I, Section 17

Suits may be brought against the Republic in such manner, and in such cases as the Legislature may by law direct.

Luxembourg, Constitution of

Article 30

No prior authorization is required for instituting proceedings against public officials for acts committed in their administration, subject to the provisions relating to Members of the Government.

Nicaragua, Constitution of

Article 40

Individuals are responsible before the authorities for violations of the Constitution and the laws. Public officials are responsible for the same causes, or for overstepping the limits of their functions, or for neglect in the exercise of the latter.

Article 42

In the case of violation of a constitutional precept to the detriment of any person, the superior of the official bringing it about may not exempt him from the responsibility incurred. Soldiers in service are excepted from this provision. The responsibility in respect to them will fall on the superior who gives the order.

[241]

Article 45

No one may be refused access to a legal court, or his case be removed to a special jurisdiction without such prescription by a previous law.

Article 46

The law may establish a trial by jury in criminal and civil cases.

Article 47

No one may be deprived of the right of defence.

Article 48

No public agency or official may transfer cases pending before a competent authority to other courts.

Article 49

Closed trials or processes may in no case be reopened. The offender in criminal cases may be allowed recourse to revision of closed cases when the penalty imposed may have been greater than merely correctional. The law will regulate the exercise of this right.

Article 112

Court proceedings will be public. The Council for the defence will have the right to be present at all summary judicial proceedings, including the declaration of the defendant.

Article 113

No one will be obliged in a criminal, correctional, or police case to declare against himself, his spouse, or his relatives within the fourth degree of consanguinity or the second of affinity.

Article 221

When the Republic finds itself involved in an international war or in an internal civil war, or there exists the danger that one or the other may occur, or in case of epidemic, earthquake, or any other public calamity, or when for any other reason the defence, peace, and security of the Nation or of its institutions or forms of government may require it, the President of the Republic, in Council of Ministers, may, by decree, restrict or suspend, in all [242] or a part of the national territory, the exercise of the constitutional guarantees, with the exception in all cases of those relating to:

- 1st. The inviolability of human life.
- 2nd. The prohibition against being tried by judges not recognized by the law.
- 3rd. The prohibition against inflicting infamous penalties, including those of whipping and of any kind of torture whatever.
- 4th. The prohibition against retroactive or confiscatory laws; and
- 5th. The levying of taxes.

Article 319

Public officials are personally responsible for violation of the Constitution for lack of administrative honesty, and for any other offence or failure in the exercise of their functions, all in conformity with the law.

Article 320

Public officials are personally responsible for the damages they may cause through negligence, omission, or abuse in the exercise of their offices.

Panama, Constitution of

Article 20

Private individuals are responsible before the authorities only for violation of the Constitution or of the law. Public officials are responsible for that same reason and also for exceeding their functions or for omissions in the exercise of the latter.

Article 34

In case of a manifest violation of a legal or constitutional precept to the detriment of any person, a superior order does not excuse from responsibility the agent who executes it. Individuals of the public force are excepted when they are in service, in which case the responsibility falls solely on the hierarchical superior who gives the order.

Paraguay, Constitution of

Article 17

All superior authorities, officials, and public employees are individually [243] responsible for the offences and crimes that they may commit in the exercise of their functions, without prejudice to the indirect responsibility of the State, which may be exercised by the law. In no case may they exercise functions foreign to their jurisdiction, and their acts must always be in conformity with the law.

Article 27

The defence of the person or rights by trial is inviolable.

Article 34

No person may take justice into his own hands, or employ violence to reclaim his rights. The people do not deliberate or govern except by means of their representatives and the authorities created by this Constitution. Any armed force or assemblage of persons that assumes the rights of the people, and petitions in the name of the latter, commits the crime of sedition.

Peru, Constitution of

Article 19

Acts of those who usurp public functions and positions without the requisites prescribed by the Constitution and the laws are null.

Article 20

Those who discharge public office are directly and immediately responsible for the acts practised in the exercise of their functions. The manner of making this responsibility effective shall be determined by the law. The fiscal ministry is obliged to see to the fulfilment of the provisions of this article.

Poland, Constitution of

Article 98

2. No statute may deprive a citizen of access to the courts for the purpose of demanding reparation for injury or damage.

Article 121

Every citizen has the right to compensation for damage inflicted upon him by civil or military organs of state authorities, by an official act not in accordance with the rights or duties of the service. The state is responsible for the damage, jointly with the guilty organs; actions may be brought against the state and against officials, independently of any permission by a [244] public authority. Communes and other self-government bodies as well as their organs, are responsible in the same manner.

Special statutes will define the application of this principle.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 83

No one may be summoned before or taken to a court other than to that court having jurisdiction in the question in accordance with the law.

Ukraine, Constitution ofArticle 111

See Article 112 of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Constitution.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution ofArticle 112

Judges are independent and subject only to the law.

United States, Constitution of6th Amendment

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial . . . and to have the assistance of counsel for his defence.

Article III, Section 2, C1.3 – The trial of all crimes . . . shall be by jury . . .

5th Amendment

. . . nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law . . .

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 23

All judges are responsible before the law for the slightest violation of the rights of individuals, as well as for deviating from the order of procedure established by it.

Article 24

All officials who, in the exercise of the public function which may have been entrusted to them, and with neglect of the duties that the office imposes on them, cause injury to a third party, shall be civilly liable.

The State, municipalities, autonomous entities or decentralized services, or any public agency employing said official, shall answer in a subsidiary manner for his neglect of duty, and said agencies shall constitute a [245] necessary party in the suite instituted for this purpose, and shall have the right to take action against the official in the event he is found guilty.

Article 57

Public officials are in service of the Nation and not of a political party. In the places and during the hours of work, political activity shall be illegal, and as such, shall be suppressed by law.

The law shall establish the statute for public officials on the fundamental principle that the official was chosen for his office and not that the office was created for the official . . .

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 39

2. Citizens have the right of appeal against the decisions of the organs of the State administration and the irregular proceedings of official persons. The procedure for lodging an appeal will be prescribed by law.

Article 40

Every citizen has the right to file a suit against official persons before a competent tribunal on account of criminal acts committed by them in their official work.

Article 41

Subject to conditions prescribed by law, citizens have the right to seek indemnity from the State and from official persons for damage resulting from the illegal or irregular discharge of official functions.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision [246]

Article 28

“Everyone has the right, either individually or in association with others, to petition the government of his State or the United Nations for redress or grievances.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article VII

Every person has the right, whether exercised by individual action or in conjunction with other, to petition the government for redress of grievances or to petition in respect to any other matter of public or private interest.

The publication of such petitions shall not be made a ground for penalizing in any way, directly or indirectly, the person or persons making the petition.

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India

I (a)

Every human being is entitled to the right of liberty, including . . . the right to access to the United Nations, without risk of reprisal, whenever there is an actual or threatened infringement of human rights.

United States – No provision

[247]

Section III. National Constitutions

Argentine, Constitution of

Article 14

All inhabitants of the Nation enjoy the following rights, in accordance with the laws that regulate their exercise, namely: of working and practising any legal industry; of navigating and trading; of petitioning the authorities; of entering, remaining in, travelling through, and leaving the Argentine territory; of publishing their ideas through the press without previous censorship; of using and disposing of their property; of associating for useful purposes; of freely professing their religion; of teaching and learning.

Belgium, Constitution ofArticle 21

Anyone has the right to address petitions to the public authorities signed by one or more persons.

The constituted authorities alone have the right to address petitions in the name of the people collectively.

Bolivia, Constitution ofArticle 6

Every person has the following fundamental rights in conformity with the laws that regulate their exercise:

... 5th. To make individual or collective petitions.

Brazil, Constitution ofArticle 141

No. 37. The right is assured to any person whomsoever to make representation against abuses by authorities and hold them responsible, by petition addressed to the public powers.

Article 194

Juridical persons of public law are civilly responsible for any harm that their employees, as such, may cause to third parties.

These persons shall enjoy recourse of action against the employees causing the harm, if the latter are found to have been guilty.

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 10

The Constitution insures to all inhabitants of the Republic:

6th. The right of presenting petitions to the constituted authority [248] upon any matter of public or private interest, without other limitation than that of using respectful and suitable language.

China, Constitution ofArticle 16

The people shall have the right to present petitions, file complaints or institute legal proceedings.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 45

Any person shall have the right to present respectful petitions to the authorities, on subjects either of general or private interest, and obtain a prompt decision.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 35

The right of petition may be exercised individually or collectively.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 36

Every person has the right to direct petitions to the authorities, and the right to have said petitions heeded and determined within a period not longer than forty-five days, with the further right to be apprised of the decision thereon.

At the expiration of the legal period, or in default of the above stipulations, the interested party may seek redress in the manner authorized by law as if his petition had been denied.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 115

The right to petition shall be enjoyed by every person. Legal persons and corporations shall enjoy the right only within the bounds of their competence.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 187

The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador: . . .
 . . . (12) freedom of petition in writing, individual or collective, to any authority or corporation, with the right to obtain a decision . . .

Article 188

With respect to Ecuadorians, the following special guarantees shall be established:
 . . . (2) the right of petition to the Government verbally and collectively, [249] by processions or other public demonstrations, peaceful and unarmed, with the previous permission of the competent authority . . .

Egypt, Royal RescriptArticle 22

Egyptians have the right to apply to the public authorities by means of signed petitions. Constituted authorities and bodies corporate alone have the right to address petitions collectively.

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 16

Every person has the right to address his petition to the legally established authorities, provided that they are made in a decorous manner; and to have them acted upon and to be informed of the decision reached regarding them.

Ethiopia, Constitution ofArticle 28

All Ethiopian subjects have the right to address petitions to the Government in due legal form.

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 9

Each individual or many together possess the right, on conforming with the laws of the Realm, to address petitions in writing to the public authorities, who are bound to take prompt action and to furnish the petitioner with an answer in writing in accordance with the provisions of the law. Only after the final decision of the authority to whom the petition was addressed, and by leave of that authority, may enquiry be made as to responsibility on the part of the petitioner for offences contained in the petition.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 30

The inhabitants of the Republic have the right, individually or collectively, to direct their petitions to the authorities, who are obliged to decide them in conformity with the law and without delay, and to communicate the decisions to those interested. The armed force may not deliberate or exercise the rights of petition or of suffrage.

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 27

The right of petition may be exercised personally to one or more[253] individuals but never on behalf of any association.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 66

Any person or assembly of persons has the right to direct their petitions to legally established authorities for consideration, and to have the decision communicated to them.

Iran, The Supplementary Fundamental LawsArticle 11

No one can be forcibly removed from the tribunal which is entitled to give judgment on his case to another tribunal.

Article 32

Any individual may submit in writing to the Petition Department of the Archives of the Assembly a statement of his own case, or of any criticisms or complaints. If the matter concerns the Assembly itself, it will give him a satisfactory answer; but if it concerns one of the Ministries, it will refer it to that Ministry, which will enquire into the matter and return a sufficient answer.

Iraq, Constitution ofArticle 14

Iraq nationals have the right to present petitions of complaints and memorials, in matters concerning themselves personally, or in public matters, to the King and to Parliament and to the public authorities, in the manner and in the circumstances to be prescribed by law.

It is not permitted, except to official bodies and juristic persons, to address the authorities in the name of a number of persons.

Liberia, Constitution ofArticle I

Section 5. The people have a right at all times, in an orderly and peaceable manner to assemble and consult upon the common good, to instruct their representatives, and to petition the government, or any public functionaries for the redress of grievances.

Luxembourg, Constitution ofArticle 27

Everyone has the right to address petitions to the public authorities signed by one or more persons.

[251]

Legally constituted authorities alone have the right to address petitions under a collective name.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution of the

Article 8

Public officials and employees shall respect the exercise of the right of petition, provided it is formulated in writing and in a respectful and peaceful manner; but in political matters only citizens of the Republic may make use of this right.

A written decision shall be given to all petitions by the authority to whom they have been directed, who has the obligation of notifying the petitioners of the decisions as soon as possible.

Article 35

Privileges of citizens are:

5th. To exercise the right of petition in any matter.

Netherlands, Constitution of

Article 8

Every person shall have the right to present petitions to the competent authority, always provided he does so in writing.

Incorporated bodies may present petitions to the competent authority, but only on matters appertaining to their particular sphere of activity.

Nicaragua, Constitution of

Article 119

Every person has the right to demand protection in order to make effective the guarantees that the Constitution and the constitutional laws establish, when they are unduly retrained in the enjoyment of those guarantees by laws, decrees, decisions, orders, commands, or acts on the part of any authority, official, or agents of the same.

Article 127

All persons have the right to present written petitions or claims to the public agencies and to the authorities, and to have them decided and to be informed of the result.

This right may be exercised individually or collectively.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 42

Every person has the right to present respectful petitions and complaints [252] to public officials, for reasons of social or private interest, and to obtain a prompt answer.

An official to whom a petition, question, or complaint is presented must decide it within a period of thirty days.

The law will indicate the penalties that apply to violation of this precept.

Article 51

Every person against whom is issued or executed, by any public official, an order to act or not to act that violates the rights and guarantees that this Constitution consecrates, will have the right to petition, by himself or through any other person, that the order may be revoked. The law will determine the form of this summary procedure of appeal of the constitutional guarantees.

The recourse to which this article refers will always be within the competence of the judicial tribunals.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 19

All the inhabitants of the Republic enjoy the following rights, in conformity with the laws that may regulate their exercise: . . . to petition the authorities. . .

Peru, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 26

Claims regarding infractions of the Constitution may be brought before the Congress.

Article 60

The right of petition may be exercised individually or collectively. It may not be exercised by the armed force.

Philippines, Constitution of theArticle III

Section 1. (8) No law shall be passed abridging. . . the right of the people to assemble and petition the Government for redress of grievances.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 107

Citizens have the right of presenting individual or collective petitions to all state and self-government representative bodies and public authorities.

[253]

Syria, Constitution of the State ofArticle 27

All Syrians shall be entitled to submit requests or petitions, in conformity with the law, to the authorities or to Parliament, whether collectively or individually, and in regard to business, personal or general matters.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 82

Turkish citizens shall have the right, should they notice any instances which are in contravention to the laws and regulations in force, to report such cases or complaints, individually or collectively, either in their own interest or in the interest of the Assembly. The reply to a personal application must be communicated to the petitioner in written form.

United States of America, Constitution of1st Amendment

Congress shall make no law respecting . . . the right . . . to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 29

Every inhabitant has the right of petition to each and every official of the Republic.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 39 (paragraph 1)

Citizens have the right to address requests and petitions to the organs of the State authorities.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[254]

Article 29

“Everyone has the right, either individually or with others, to resist oppression and tyranny.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

- None -

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile – No provision

Cuba

Article 20

“The right to resist any form of oppression.”

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

El Salvador, Constitution

Article 36

The right of insurrection shall in no case produce the abrogation of the laws, its effects being limited to the removal, as may be necessary, of persons discharging governmental office and the provisional appointment of those who shall substitute for them until the vacancies are filled in the manner established by the Constitution.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen

Article 2

The purpose of all civil association is the presentation of the natural and imprescriptible rights of man. These rights are liberty, property, security and [255] resistance to oppression.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision [256]

Article 30

“Everyone has the right to take an effective part in the government of the State of which he is a citizen. The State has a duty to conform to the wishes of the people as manifested by democratic elections. Elections shall be periodic, free and fair.”

(See Article 16 of the Draft of International Declaration submitted by Panama)

Section I. Observations Made by Members
of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Mora (Uruguay):

Proposes to grant to human beings a certain degree of world citizenship and to offer them the possibility of participating personally in the international organization of the community, namely: United Nations – abstraction made of the right of petitioning United Nations.*

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals
Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XIII

Every person, national of the state, has the right to participate in the election of the legislative and executive officers of the government in accordance with the provisions of the national constitution. The practical exercise of this right may, however, be conditioned by the duty of the person to show that he is competent to understand the principles upon which the constitution is based. The constitution of the state shall provide for a government of the people, by the people and for the people.

This right presupposes the right to form political parties.

Cuba

Article 22

The right to choose his ruler and to share in the government of his country.

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 14th meeting – page 2.

[257]

Panama (American Law Institute)Article 16

Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his state. The state has a duty to conform to the will of the people as manifested by democratic elections.

B. Proposals

India

I (c)

Every human being has the right of security including. . . the right to participate in government. . .

United States

II 2. d/

Among the categories of rights which the United States suggests should be considered are the following: . . .

d/ political rights, such as the right to citizenship and the right of citizens to participate in their government.

Section III. National ConstitutionsArgentine, Constitution ofArticle 5*

Each Province shall adopt for itself a constitution, under the republican, representative system, in accordance with the principles, declarations, and guarantees of the national Constitution, insuring its administration of justice, municipal government, and primary education. Under these conditions, the federal Government guarantees to each one of the Provinces the enjoyment and exercise of its institutions.

Article 22

The people do not deliberate or govern except through their representatives and authorities created by the Constitution. Any armed forces or meeting of persons assuming the rights of the people and petitioning in the latter's name, commits the crime of sedition.

Belgium, Constitution ofArticle 4

Belgian citizenship is acquired, maintained and lost according to regulations established by the civil law.

The present constitution and the other laws relating to political rights determine what other conditions are necessary for the exercise of these rights.

[258]

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 4

The people shall not deliberate or govern except by means of their representatives and by the authorities created by law.

Any armed force or association of persons usurping the rights of the people commits the crime of sedition.

Byelorussia, Constitution of

Articles 109–115

See USSR Constitution Articles 134–140.

China, Constitution of

Article 1

The Republic of China, founded on the San Min Chu I (Three People's Principles), is a democratic republic of the people, for the people and governed by the people.

Article 3

Persons possessing the nationality of the Republic of China are citizens of the Republic of China.

Article 17

The people shall have the right of election, recall, initiative and referendum.

Article 18

The people shall have the right to take public examinations and to hold public offices.

Article 129

The election stipulated in the Constitution, except when otherwise provided for by the Constitution, shall be universal, equal and direct suffrage and by secret ballot.

Article 130

Any citizen of the Republic of China having attained the age of twenty years shall have the right of election in accordance with law. Unless otherwise provided by the Constitution and laws, any citizen having attained the age of twenty-three years shall have the right of being elected in accordance with law.

[259]

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 38

All acts by which a citizen is prohibited or limited in his participation in the political life of the Nation are declared punishable.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution of

Article 9

The right to vote for the Chamber of Deputies appertains to all Citizens of the Czechoslovak Republic without distinction of sex, who are twenty-one years of age and comply with the other provisions of the electoral regulations.

Article 14

The right to vote for the Senate appertains to all citizens of the Czechoslovak Republic without distinction of sex, who are twenty-six years of age and who comply with the other provisions of the law concerning the constitution and the rights and powers of the Senate.

Denmark, Constitution of

Article 30

Every man and woman possessing nationality rights, who has reached the age of twenty-five years and is domiciled in this country, is entitled to vote for the Folketing, unless he or she:

- (a) has been tried and found guilty of an act regarded by public opinion as dishonourable and has not been rehabilitated,
- (b) is receiving or has received poor relief, which has been neither remitted nor repaid,
- (c) has not free disposal of his personal property because he has been declared bankrupt or incapable of managing his affairs.

Article 31

Every person who by virtue of Article 30 has the right to vote for the Folketing is eligible for election to that House.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 188

“with respect to Ecuadorians, the following special guarantees shall be established:
 . . . (l) the right to elect freely and to be elected for public office, according to the law . . .”

[260]

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen 1789Article 6

The law is an expression of the common will. All citizens have a right to concur either personally or by their representation in its formation. It should be the same for all whether it protects or punishes; and all being equal in its right are equally eligible to all honours; places and employment according to their different abilities without any other distinction than that of their virtues and talents.

Article 3

The nation is essentially the source of all sovereignty; nor shall anybody of men or any individual exercise authority which is not expressly derived from it.

France, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 3

National sovereignty belongs to the French people.

No section of the people nor any individual may assume its exercise.

The people shall exercise it in constitutional matters by the vote of their representatives or by the referendum.

In all other matters they shall exercise it through their deputies in the National Assembly, elected by universal, equal, direct and secret suffrage.

Article 4

All French citizens and nationals of both sexes, who are majors and enjoy civil and political rights, may vote under conditions determined by the law.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 34

Every act by which a citizen is hindered or limited in participating in the political life of the Nation or in exercising his rights as a citizen, except for the restrictions that this constitution establishes, is punishable.

[261]

Article 30

... “The armed force may not deliberate or exercise the rights of petition or of suffrage.”

Liberia, Constitution ofArticle I

Section 5. The people have a right at all times, in an orderly and peaceable manner to assemble and consult upon the common good, to instruct their representatives, and to petition the government, or any public functionaries for the redress of grievances.

All elections shall be by ballot; and every male citizen of twenty-one years of age, possessing real estate, shall have the right of suffrage.

All power is inherent in the people; all free governments are instituted by their authority and for their benefit and they have a right to alter and reform same when their safety and happiness require it.

Section 19. In order to prevent those who are vested with authority from becoming oppressors, the people have a right at such periods, and in such manner as they shall establish by their frame of government, to cause their public officers to return to private life, and to fill up vacant places, by certain and regular elections and appointments.

Mexico, (United Mexican States, Constitution of the)Article 35

Privileges of citizens are:

1st. . . To vote in popular election. . .

Article 36

The duties of a citizen of the Republic are:

3rd. To vote in the popular elections in the electoral district to which he belongs.

4th. To discharge the popularly elective offices of the Federation or of the States, which shall in no case be uncompensated; and

5th. To discharge the public office of the municipality where he resides and to perform all electoral and jury services.

[262]

Article 38

The rights and privileges of citizens may be suspended:

1st. For failure to comply without justifiable cause, with any of the obligations imposed by Article 36. The suspension shall last one year and shall be imposed in addition to the other penalties prescribed by law for the same offence.

2nd. For being subjected to criminal prosecution for an offence punishable by imprisonment, such suspension to be reckoned from the time of the order for formal commitment.

3rd. During the term of imprisonment.

4th. For vagrancy or habitual intoxication, as declared in the manner that the laws prescribe.

5th. For being a fugitive from justice, from the time when the order of arrest is issued until the proscription of the criminal action, and

6th. By an executory sentence imposing such suspension as a penalty.

The law shall define those cases in which citizenship shall be lost and others in which the rights of citizenship shall be suspended, as well as the manner of regaining them.

Netherlands, Constitution of the

Article 81

The members of the Second Chamber shall be chosen directly by the citizens being Netherlands subjects or recognized by law as Netherlands subjects, who have reached the age fixed by law, which age may not be under twenty-three years.

...

Those persons shall be debarred the right of exercising elective franchise to whom that right has been denied by irrevocable sentence of court of law.

[263]

Article 85

To be eligible as a member of the Second Chamber a person is required to be a Netherlands subject or recognized by law as a Netherlands subject, to have completed the age of thirty years, not to be deprived of eligibility or excluded from the exercise of elective franchise by virtue of the regulation made on the subject pursuant to the third paragraph of Article 81. . .

Norway, Constitution of

Article 50

The right of voting shall belong to Norwegian citizens, men and women, who have completed their twenty-first year, have been domiciled in this country for five years and are resident there. . .

Article 61

No one may be elected as a representative unless he is thirty years of age, has resided in the Kingdom for ten years, and has the right of voting in the district for which he is nominated. . .

Panama, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 21

Political rights are reserved to nationals, except for what is provided in Article 192.

Ukraine, Constitution of theArticles 133–139

See USSR Constitution Articles 134–140.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution of theArticle 134

“Members of all Soviets of Working People’s Deputies of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, the Supreme Soviets of the Union Republics, the Soviets of Working People’s Deputies of the Territories and regions, the Supreme Soviets of the Autonomous Republics, the Soviets of Working People’s Deputies of Autonomous Regions, area, district, city and rural (stanitsa, village, hamlet, kishlak, aul) Soviets of Working People’s Deputies – are chosen by the electors on the basis of universal, direct and equal suffrage by secret ballot.”

[264]

Article 135

“Elections of deputies are universal, all citizens of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics who have reached the age of eighteen, irrespective of race or nationality, religion, educational and residential qualifications, social origin, property status or past activities, have the right to vote in the election of deputies and to be elected, with the exception of insane persons and persons who have been convicted by a court of law and whose sentences include deprivation of electoral rights.”

Article 136

“Elections of deputies are equal: each citizen has one vote. All citizens participate in elections on an equal footing.”

Article 137

“Women have the right to elect and be elected on equal terms with men.”

Article 138

“Citizens serving in the red Army have the right to elect and be elected on equal terms with all other citizens.”

Article 139

“Elections of deputies are direct: All Soviets of Working People’s Deputies, from rural and city Soviets of Working People’s Deputies, to the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics inclusive, are elected by the citizens by direct vote.”

Article 140

“voting at elections of deputies is secret.”

United States, Constitution of theArticle I

Section 1, Clause 1. The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States. . .

Article II

Section 1, Clause 1. . . . The (President) shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice-President, chosen for the same term, be elected. . .

17th Amendment. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two senators from each State, elected by the people thereof. . .

[265]

15th Amendment, Section 1. The right of Citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, colour, or previous condition of servitude.

19th Amendment. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any other State on account of sex.

Article VI

. . . but no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 23

“All citizens regardless of sex, nationality, race, creed, degree of education or place of residence, who are over eighteen yews of age, have the right to elect and to be elected to all organs of State authority.

Citizens in the ranks of the Yugoslav army have the same right to elect and to be elected as other citizens.

The suffrage is universal, equal and direct and is carried out by secret ballot.

The suffrage is not enjoyed by persons under guardianship, persons deprived of electoral rights by sentence of a court of law for the duration of the sentence, and persons who have lost their electoral rights in accordance with federal law.”

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Governments in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision [266]

Article 31

“Everyone shall have equal opportunity of access to all public functions in the State of which he is a citizen.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Chang (China):

He refers to Article 18 of the Chinese Constitution concerning the right to take public examinations.

“. . . that is one of the political devices towards social democracy that has been worked out by humankind”.*

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XIII (paragraph 3)

No person shall be denied the right to hold public office, or to be appointed to any of the public services of the state of which he is a national, upon grounds of race or religion or sex or any other arbitrary discrimination; and the administration of the public services of the state shall, in respect to appointments and terms and conditions of service, be without favour or discrimination.

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Afghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the Government

Article 14

Any Afghan subject, according to his ability and capacity, is taken into Government service as required.

[*] H. R. Comm. – 1st session – 13th meeting – page E-84

[267]

Argentine, Constitution of

Article 16

The Argentine nation does not admit prerogatives of blood or of birth; in it there are no personal privileges, nor titles of nobility. All its inhabitants are equal before the law, and admissible for employment without any other requisite than fitness. Equality is the basis of taxation and of the public burdens.

Belgium, Constitution of

Article 6

There shall be no distinction of classes in the State. Belgian citizens are equal before the law; they alone are admissible to civil and military offices, with such exceptions as may be established by law for particular cases.

Chile, Constitution of

Article 10

The Constitution insures to all inhabitants of the Republic:
8th Admission to all public employments and offices without other conditions than those imposed by the law.

China, Constitution of

Article 18

The people shall have the right to take public examinations and to hold public offices.

Article 130

... Unless otherwise provided by the Constitution and laws, any citizen having attained the age of twenty-three years shall have the right of being elected in accordance with law.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 54

The profession of the priesthood is incompatible with the discharge of public office. Nevertheless, Catholic priests may be employed in public instruction and social work.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 39

Public functions that imply jurisdiction shall be discharged only by Cuban citizens.

Article 82

Only Cubans by birth and naturalized Cubans who have held their status [268] as such for five years or more prior to the date of their seeking authorization to practise, may practice professions that require official title, except as provided in Article 57 of this Constitution. However, the Congress may, by special law, grant temporary suspension of this provision when, for reasons of public utility, the co-operation of foreign professionals and technicians shall be necessary or convenient in the development of public or private undertakings of national interest. Such a special law shall fix the limits and period of the authorization.

In the fulfilment of this provision, as well as in cases in which, by any law or regulation, the practice of any new profession, art, or official may be regulated, the working rights acquired by persons who, until that time may have practised the profession, art, or office in question, shall be respected, and the principles of international reciprocity shall be observed.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 10

All citizens of the Czechoslovak Republic without distinction of sex who are 30 years of age and comply with the conditions of the suffrage law may be elected as Deputies to the Chamber.

Article 15

All citizens of the Czechoslovak Republic without distinction of sex, who are 45 years of age and who comply with the other conditions concerning the constitution and the rights and powers of the Senate are eligible to the Senate.

Article 128

2. Difference in religion, belief, confession or language shall within the limits of the common law constitute no obstacle to any citizen of the Czechoslovak Republic particularly in regard of entry into the public service and offices, of attainment to any promotion or dignity, or in regard to the exercise of any trade or calling.

Denmark, Constitution ofArticle 31

Every person, who by virtue of Article 30 has the right to vote for the [269] Folketing is eligible for election to that House.

Article 35

Every person entitled to vote for the Landsting is eligible for election to that House, provided that he (or she) is domiciled in the Landsting constituency concerned.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 188

With respect to Ecuadorians, the following special guarantees shall be established:

- (1) the right to elect freely and to be elected for public office, according to the law. . .

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 5

No hereditary offices or privileges are recognized in the Republic.

Ethiopia, Constitution ofArticle 19

All Ethiopian subjects, provided they fulfil the conditions laid down by the law and satisfy the decrees promulgated by His Majesty the Emperor, may be appointed officers in the Army or civil servants or be called upon to assume any other duties or functions in the service of the State.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen 1789Article I

Men are born and remain free and equal in respect of rights. Social distinction shall be based solely upon public utility.

Article 6

The law is an expression of the common will. All citizens have a right to concur either personally or by their representation in its formation. It should be the same for all whether it protects or punishes; and all being equal in its right are equally eligible to all honours, places and employment according to their different abilities without any other distinction than that of their virtues and talents.

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 3

... Only Greek citizens are admissible to all public employments saving the special exceptions introduced by special laws. . .

[270]

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 38

All Guatemalans, without distinction of sex are admissible to public offices and employment according to their merit and capacity, except for the incompatibilities that the laws indicate and the limitations that this Constitution establishes.

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 11

Haitians are equal before the law, subject to the advantages conferred on natural-born Haitians. They shall also be eligible, without any discrimination, for civil and military employment under the conditions established by law.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 71

Ministers of the various religions shall not exercise public offices.

Iraq, Constitution ofArticle 18

... To them alone (i.e. to Iraq nationals) shall public appointments, civil or military, be entrusted, and foreigners may not hold such appointment except in the exceptional circumstances to be prescribed by law.

Lebanon, Constitution ofArticle 12

All forms of public employment shall also be open to all Lebanese citizens in accordance with the conditions laid down by law, preference being given solely to merit and capacity. The conditions applicable to State officials shall be embodied in a special Statute, according to the department to which they belong.

United Mexican States, Constitution of theArticle 35

Privileges of citizens are:

2nd. To be eligible to all popularly elective offices and be qualified for any other position or commission, provided they have the qualifications prescribed by law.

Netherlands, Constitution ofArticle 5

Every Netherlands subject shall be eligible for appointment to any office in the service of the State.

[271]

No alien shall be eligible for such appointment save in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 43

Ministers of religious faiths may not exercise public office, civil or military, with the exception of those that may be related to social welfare or public instruction.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 96

Public offices are accessible in equal measure to all, on conditions prescribed by the law.

Sweden, Constitution ofArticle 28

In pursuance of the rules approved by the King and the Riksdag, women may be appointed and promoted to the posts and services set out above, but no woman may be appointed to the priestly office, unless otherwise prescribed in accordance with Article 87, paragraph 2.

In all promotions the King shall take into consideration only the merit and ability of the candidates, but not their birth.

Syria, Constitution of

Article 26

All Syrians shall have access to public employment, without any other distinction than that due to their qualifications or capacity, subject to the conditions laid down by the law.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution of

Article 135

Elections of deputies are universal: all citizens of the USSR who have reached the age of eighteen, irrespective of race, or nationality, religion, educational and residential qualifications, social origin, property status or past activities, have the right to vote in the election of deputies and to be elected, with the exception of insane persons and persons who have been convicted by a court of law and whose sentences include deprivation of electoral rights.

Article 137

Women have the right to elect and be elected on equal terms with men.
[272]

Article 138

Citizens serving in the Red Army have the right to elect and be elected on equal terms with all other citizens.

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 33

Paragraph 1. All public offices are equally accessible to all citizens in accordance with the conditions of the law.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[273]

Article 32

“Everyone is entitled to the nationality of the State where he is born unless and until on attaining majority he declares for the nationality open to him by virtue of descent.

“No one shall be deprived of his nationality by way of punishment or be deemed to have lost his nationality in any other way unless he concurrently acquires a new nationality.”

“Everyone has the right to renounce the nationality of his birth, or a previously acquired nationality, upon acquiring the nationality of another State.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Cassin (France):

He remarks that the right to a nationality is not specified in the National Bill of Rights and adds that such a right is to be mentioned in an international Bill of Rights.*
He also mentions the “right of a nationality”.**

Mr. Mora (Uruguay):

He proposes to proclaim the right of changing nationality.***

Mr. Hodgson (Australia):

What do we see when we speak of human rights? We refer to, or we have in mind, minorities, nationality, statelessness, right of option. . .****

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article IX

Every person has the right to a nationality.

No state may refuse to grant its nationality to persons born upon its soil of parents who are legitimately present in the country.

No person may be deprived of his nationality of birth unless by his own free choice he acquires another nationality.

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 8th meeting – p. 82

[**] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 13th meeting – p. E-101

[***] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 14th meeting – p. E-3

[****] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 2nd meeting – p. 42

[274]

Every person has the right to renounce the nationality of his birth, or a previously acquired nationality, upon acquiring the nationality of another state.

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision*United States* – No provisionSection III. National ConstitutionsAfghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the GovernmentArticle 9*

All persons residing in the Kingdom of Afghanistan are called Afghan subjects without any distinction of creed and religion. Afghan nationality is acquired or lost in accordance with the nationality laws.

China, Constitution ofArticle 3

Persons possessing the nationality of the Republic of China are citizens of the Republic of China.

Egypt, Royal RescriptArticle 2

Egyptian nationality shall be determined by law.

Ethiopia, Constitution ofArticle 1

The territory of Ethiopia as a whole is throughout its extent subject to the Government of His Majesty the Emperor. All natives of Ethiopia subjects of the Empire form the Ethiopian nation.

Article 18

The law shall lay down the conditions required for holding Ethiopian nationality.

France, Constitution ofArticle 80

All nationals of the Overseas Territories shall have the status of citizens, [275] in the same capacity as French nationals of Metropolitan France or the Overseas Territories. Special laws shall determine the conditions under which they may exercise their rights as citizens.

Article 81

All citizens and nationals of territories within the French Union shall have the status of citizens of the French Union, which ensures them the enjoyment of the rights and liberties guaranteed by the Preamble of the present Constitution.

Article 82

Those citizens who do not have French civil status shall retain their personal status so long as they do not renounce it.

This status may in no case constitute a ground for refusing or restricting the rights and liberties pertaining to the status of French citizen.

Iceland, Constitution of

Article 68

No foreigner can acquire nationality except by law.

Iraq, Constitution of

Article 5

Iraq nationality and the rules applicable thereto will be prescribed by law.

Lebanon, Constitution of

Article 6

Lebanese nationality and the manner in which it is acquired, retained and lost shall be determined in accordance with the law.

Liberia, Constitution of

Article 13

None but negroes or persons of negro descent shall be eligible for citizenship in this Republic.

Luxembourg, Constitution of

Article 9

The status of Luxembourg national is acquired, retained and lost in accordance with the rules laid down by civil law. The present Constitution and the other laws relating to political rights shall determine what are the conditions necessary for the exercise of these rights, apart from the aforesaid status.

Article 10

Naturalization shall be granted by the legislative power. By such naturalization an alien is placed on the same footing as a Luxembourg national as [276] regards the exercise of political rights.

Where the father has been naturalized, such naturalization shall extend to his child under age where the latter within two years of attaining majority makes a declaration of his desire to claim this benefit.

United Mexican States, Constitution of the

Article 34

All those who, in addition to being Mexicans, also possess the following qualifications, are citizens of the Republic:

- 1st. Those who have reached the age of eighteen years and are married or twenty-one if they are not; and
- 2nd. Those who have an honest means of livelihood.

Article 37

1st. Mexican nationality shall be lost:

- (a) by the voluntary acquisition of a foreign nationality,
- (b) by accepting or using titles of nobility that imply submission to a foreign State,
- (c) by residing continuously for five years in the country of his birth, although being a Mexican by naturalization, and
- (d) by representing himself as an alien in any public instrument, being a Mexican by naturalization, or by obtaining and using a foreign passport.

2nd. Mexican citizenship shall be lost:

- (a) by accepting or using titles of nobility that do not imply submission to a foreign Government,
- (b) by voluntarily serving a foreign Government officially, without permission of the federal Congress or of its permanent committee,
- (c) by accepting or using foreign decorations without permission from the federal Congress or its permanent committee,
- (d) by receiving titles or offices from the Government of another country without previous permission from the federal Congress or from its permanent committee, excepting literary, scientific, or humanitarian honours, which may be freely accepted,

[277]

- (e) by aiding a foreigner or a foreign Government against the Nation, in any diplomatic claim or before an international tribunal, and
- (f) in the other cases established by law.

Netherlands, Constitution ofArticle 6

It shall be declared by law who are Netherlands subjects and who are citizens. Naturalization shall take place by or in virtue of a law. The consequence of naturalization in respect of the wife and children under age of the naturalized person shall be regulated by law.

Philippines, Constitution of theArticle 4

The following are citizens of the Philippines:

1. Those who are citizens of the Philippine Islands at the time of the adoption of this Constitution.
2. Those born in the Philippine Islands of foreign parents who, before the adoption of this Constitution, had been elected to public office in the Philippine Islands.
3. Those whose fathers are citizens of the Philippines.
4. Those whose mothers are citizens of the Philippines and, upon reaching the age of majority, elect Philippine citizenship.
5. Those who are naturalized in accordance with law.

Philippine citizenship may be lost or reacquired in the manner provided by law.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 87

A Polish citizen may not be at the same time a citizen of another state.

Article 88

Polish citizenship is acquired:

1. by birth if the parents are Polish citizens,
2. by naturalization granted by the competent State authority. Special statutes define other rules as to Polish citizenship, its acquisition and loss.

[278]

Syria, Constitution ofArticle 5

The conditions under which Syrian nationality may be acquired or forfeited shall be laid down by law.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 88

Any person born of a Turkish father, in Turkey or elsewhere, as well as any person born of an alien father domiciled in Turkey and who, residing in Turkey, formally assumes Turkish citizenship upon attaining majority, as well as any person granted Turkish citizenship by law, are Turks. Turkish citizenship may be lost under circumstances defined by law.

United States of America, Constitution of14th Amendment

1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

Article IV, Section 2, Clause 1

The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution ofArticle 21

A single Union citizenship is established for all citizens of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Every citizen of a Union Republic is a citizen of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 28

Paragraph 9. Federal law determines in which cases and in what manner citizens of the Federal Peoples Republic of Yugoslavia may be deprived of their citizenship.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[279]

Article 33

“No alien who has been legally admitted to the territory of a State may be expelled therefrom except in pursuance of a judicial decision or recommendation as a punishment for offence laid down by law as warranting expulsion.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile – No provision

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

III. National Constitutions

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 143

The federal Government may expel from the national territory an alien injurious to the public order, unless he has married a Brazilian and has a Brazilian child dependent upon paternal support.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 31

In case of the expulsion of an alien from national territory, in conformity with the Constitution and the law, such expulsion shall not be made to the territory of the State that may reclaim him if political asylum is involved.

[280]

Denmark, Constitution of

Article 50

No alien may acquire naturalization except in accordance with the law.

Guatemala, Constitution of

Article 26

Extradition of persons accused of political offences is prohibited.

When expulsion of an alien from the national territory is agreed to, it shall not be effected to a State that would persecute him, if political asylum is involved.

Iran, The Supplementary Fundamental Laws

Article 24

Foreign subjects may become naturalized as Persian subjects, but their acceptance or continuance as such, or their deprivation of this status, is in accordance with a separate Law.

Netherlands, Constitution of

Article 4

All persons who are on the territory of the Realm, shall have equal rights to protection of their person and goods.

The admission and expulsion of aliens and the general conditions under which, in respect of their extradition, treaties may be concluded with foreign powers, shall be regulated by law.

Nicaragua, Constitution of

Article 121

It is the province of the law to determine the rules and conditions for the expulsion of aliens from national territory.

Paraguay, Constitution of

Article 36

Aliens shall not be obliged to assume citizenship.

If they shall make attempts against the security of the Republic or disturb public order, the Government may effect their expulsion from the country, in conformity with the regulatory laws.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision [281]

Article 34

“Every State shall have the right to grant asylum to political refugees.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Cassin (France):

He mentions the “right of asylum”.*

Mr. Dukes (United Kingdom)

He affirms that the right of a nation to claim the extradition of its criminals ought to be preserved.**

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile – No provision

Cuba

Article 21

The right to sanctuary in a foreign country when escaping from persecution of a political, religious or racial nature.

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 13th meeting – p. E-101

[**] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 14th meeting – p. E-20

[282]

Section III. National Constitutions

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 141

31. There shall be no penalty of . . . banishment. . .

33. Extradition of an alien shall not be granted for political crimes or crimes of opinion, nor extradition of a Brazilian, in any case.

Byelorussia, Constitution of

Article 104

See Article 129 of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution.

Cuba, Constitution ofArticle 31

The Republic of Cuba offers and recognizes the right of asylum to those persecuted for political reasons provided that persons thus sheltered respect the national sovereignty and the laws.

The State shall not authorize the extradition of persons guilty of political crimes, nor shall it attempt to extradite Cubans guilty of these crimes who may have taken refuge in foreign territory. . .

Egypt, Royal RescriptArticle 151

The extradition of political refugees is prohibited, without prejudice to the international agreements aiming at the protection of special order.

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 11

The Republic is a sacred asylum for the alien who may reside in its territory, except for those guilty of common offences who are claimed by another Nation by virtue of existing treaties in which extradition is provided.

Extradition shall never be stipulated, in any case, with respect to nationals, nor, with respect to aliens, for political crimes, even though in consequence a common crime may result from them.

France, Constitution of

4. Anyone persecuted because of his acts in favour of liberty has the right of asylum on the territories of the Republic.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 26

Guatemala recognizes and offers the right of asylum to politically persecuted persons, provided that they respect national sovereignty and laws.

[283]

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 30

The right of asylum of political refugees is acknowledged on condition that they comply with the country's laws.

Article 31

Extradition on political grounds shall be neither allowed nor requested.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution of

Article 11

Any person has the right to enter the Republic, leave it, travel through its territory, and change residence without the necessity of a letter of security, passport, safe conduct, or similar requirements. The exercise of this right shall come under the jurisdiction of the judicial authority in cases of criminal and civil responsibility and under the jurisdiction of the administrative authority in so far as it relates to the limitations that the laws impose on emigration, immigration, and the general health of the Republic, or on undesirable aliens residing in the country.

Article 15

The negotiation of treaties for the extradition of political offenders or those covering civil delinquents who may have been slaves in the country where they committed the offence shall not be authorized; nor shall conventions or treaties be made by virtue of which guarantees and rights established for the individual and the citizen by this Constitution are altered.

Panama, Constitution of

Article 23

The State may not be obliged to surrender its own nationals by any international extradition treaty.

Nor will extradition be granted for aliens who are pursued for political offences.

Ukraine, Constitution of

Article 128

See Article 129 of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution.
[284]

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution of

Article 129

The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, affords the right of asylum to foreign citizens persecuted for defending the interests of the working people, or for their scientific activities, or for their struggle for national liberation.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 31

Foreign citizens persecuted on account of their struggle for the principles of democracy, for national liberation, the rights of the working people, or the freedom of scientific and cultural work, enjoy the rights of asylum in the Federal Peoples Republic of Yugoslavia.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of LaborArticle 6

The right of asylum is to be guaranteed by all nations. No human being who is a refugee from any political regime he disapproves is to be forced to return to territory under the sovereignty of that regime.

[285]

Article 35

“Everyone has the right to medical care. The State shall promote public health and safety.

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mrs. Mehta (India):

“. . . with regard to the third group of rights, right to medical care is not enough. The real wording is right to health, because the individual expects not merely medical care from the State but also such preventive measures as would protect his health. Therefore, right to health is the recognized terminology and I would like you to substitute it for the right to medical care.”*

Mr. Tepliakov (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics)

“. . . I had some remarks in connection with the last remarks of the representative from India on the right to medical care. The right to medical care was written into this paper and she moved to change this wording to “the right to health”. It is quite vague to say “the right to health”. No one has denied that, but again, that is the question of how you enjoy this right and what you mean under this particular point.

In my point of view, the right to medical care might be left in here. But if it is necessary to make it more explicit, I would say “the right to maintenance in old age, sickness and loss of capacity for labour.” It means that all men and women have the right as such, to the maintenance of their health during their life, but health as a general expression is too wide and depends upon many, many circumstances from the very day of the beginning of one’s life.”**

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XVI

... the state must promote measures of public health. . .

Cuba

Article 13

The right to live in surroundings free from avoidable diseases.

Article 14

The right to adequate medical assistance.

Panama (American Law Institute)

Article 15

Everyone has the right to social security.

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 14th meeting – page E/64

[**] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 14th meeting – page E/71

[286]

The state has a duty to maintain or insure that there are maintained comprehensive arrangements for the promotion of health, for the prevention of sickness and accident, and for the provision of medical care and of compensation for loss of livelihood.

B. Proposals

India

I (c)

Every human being has. . . the right to health.

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 124

The State shall enact measures for protecting the health and life of working men, employees, and farm labourers; it shall see that these have healthy lodgings and it shall promote the construction of cheap houses; it shall also provide technical education for manual labourers. . .

. . . The authorities shall likewise control the conditions of security and public health that must be maintained in professions or trades, as well as work on farms and in mines.

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 157

14th. . . Sanitation assistance, including hospitalization and preventive medicine, to the worker and to the expectant mother.

Byelorussia, Constitution of

Article 95

See USSR Constitution Article 120.

Chile, Constitution of

Article 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:

14th. . . It is the duty of the State to care for the public health and hygienic welfare of the country. It must provide each year an amount of money sufficient to maintain a national health service.

China, Constitution of

Article 157

The State, in order to improve national health, shall extensively establish sanitation and infant health protection enterprises and a system of socialized medical service.

[287]

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 80

Social assistance shall be established under the direction of the ministry of health and social assistance; this assistance shall be organized by special legislation, which shall appropriate funds to provide for the necessary reserves.

Hospital, sanitary, medical examiners and other positions that may be necessary in organizing the corresponding official services in an adequate manner, shall be established. . . .

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 196

Safeguarding public health and hygienic welfare of the nation is a duty of the State.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 92

It is an essential function of the State to watch out for public health. The individual has the right to the protection, preservation, and restitution of his health and the obligation of preserving it.

In consequence, the State will develop principally activities that are detailed in continuation:

- 1st. To combat transmissible diseases by means of individual treatment and improvement of the environment.
- 2nd. To protect maternity and reduce infant mortality by means of medical assistance and adequate nutrition.
- 3rd. To supplement the feeding of needful students and to supply school children with the service of medical supervision.
- 4th. To establish hospitals, dental clinics, and dispensaries, in accordance with the needs of each region, in which services are given and free medicines supplied to those who lack pecuniary resources; and
- 5th. To popularize systematically the principles of scientific nutrition, personal hygiene, and home sanitation.

The National Assembly will enact a sanitary code.

[288]

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 11

Care for the health of the population, and social assistance, as well as the moral, spiritual, and physical education of youth, are fundamental duties of the State.

Peru, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 50

The State has in its charge public health, and it cares for individual health, enacting the laws for hygiene and sanitary control that may be necessary, as well as those that favour the physical, moral, and social improvement of the population.

Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Constitution of theArticle 119

See USSR Constitution Article 120.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution ofArticle 120

“Citizens of the USSR have the right to maintenance in old age and also in case of sickness or loss of capacity to work.

“This right is ensured by the extensive development of social insurance of workers and employees at state expense, free medical service for the working people and the provision of a wide network of health resorts for the use of the working people.”

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 43

The State shall legislate on all questions relating to public health and hygiene, to obtain the physical, moral, and social improvement of all inhabitants of the country.

All inhabitants have the obligation of taking care of their health, as well as that of being given assistance in case of illness. The State shall freely provide means of prevention against illness, and medical aid, to those who are indigent or who lack sufficient means.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 36

“The State promotes the improvement of public health by organizing and controlling health services, hospitals, pharmacies, sanatoria, nursery and convalescent homes and other health institutions.”

[289]

“The State extends its care to the physical education of the people, especially of young people in order to increase the health and the working capacity of the people and the power of defence of the State.”

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[290]

Article 36

“Everyone has the right to education. Each State has the duty to require that every child within its territory receive a primary education. The State shall maintain adequate and free facilities for such education. It shall also promote facilities for higher education without distinction as to the race, sex, language, religion, class or wealth of the persons entitled to benefit therefrom.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Lebeau (Belgium):

“the right to education for children”.*

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XVII

Every person has the right to education.

The right of children to education is paramount.

The State has the duty to assist the individual in the exercise of the right to education, in accordance with the resources of the State. The opportunities of education must be open to all upon equal terms in accordance with their natural capacities and their desires to take advantage of the facilities available.

Cuba

Article 8

The right to education which will enable him to improve himself in every respect and will lead to his becoming a useful member of society and sharing in all the material and spiritual benefits of civilization.

Panama (American Law Institute)

Article 11

Everyone has the right to education.

The State has a duty to require that every child within its jurisdiction receive education of the primary standard; to maintain or insure that there are maintained facilities for such education which are adequate and free; and to promote the development of facilities for further education which are adequate and effectively available to all its residents.

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 13th meeting – p. E/82

[291]

B. Proposals

India

Article I (c)

Every human being has . . . the right to education.

United States

2.

Among the categories of rights, the United States suggests should be considered are the following:

c/. . . the right to enjoy minimum standards of economic, social and cultural wellbeing.

Section III. National Constitutions

Afghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the Government

Article 20

Primary education for the children of Afghan subjects is compulsory.

Article 22

The public schools of Afghanistan are under the supervision of the Government, so that the education and culture imparted by those institutions may, without infringing the articles of the Islamic faith, provide the benefits which accrue from the study of literature, art and science. But there will be no interference with principles of education which are concerned with the faith and religion of the “Ali-i-Zimma”.

Argentine, Constitution of

Article 5

Each Province shall adopt for itself a constitution, under the republican, representative system, in accordance with the principles, declarations, and guarantees of the national Constitution, insuring its administration of justice, municipal government, and primary education. Under these conditions, the Federal Government guarantees to each one of the Provinces the enjoyment and exercise of its institutions.

Belgium, Constitution ofArticle 17

There shall be freedom of opinion in teaching; all measures preventing this are forbidden; the repression of offences shall be regulated only by law.

Public instruction given at the expense of the State shall likewise be regulated by law.
[292]

Bolivia, Constitution ofArticle 6

Every person has the following fundamental rights in conformity with the laws that regulate their exercise:

... 6th. To receive instruction.

Article 154

Education is the highest function of the State. Public instruction shall be organized according to the single school system. School attendance for children between the ages of seven and fourteen years is obligatory. Primary and secondary instruction by the State is free.

Article 155

The State shall economically aid apt students who do not have access to higher education for lack of funds, so that vocation and capacity may be the conditions that prevail over the social or economic position of individuals.

Article 162

Education is subject in all grades to the protection of the State, exercised by mediation of the Minister of Education.

Brazil, Constitution ofArticle 168

Teaching legislation shall adopt the following principles:

- 1st. Primary schooling is obligatory and may be given only in the national language.
- 2nd. Primary schooling is official and gratuitous for everyone; the official schooling subsequent to the primary shall be free for whomever proves lack or insufficiency of means.
- 3rd. Industrial, commercial and agricultural establishments, in which more than 100 persons work, are obligated to maintain gratuitous primary teaching for their employees and the children of the latter.

7th. Liberty of teaching posts is guaranteed.

[293]

Article 166

Education is the right of everyone, and shall be administered at home and in the school. It shall be inspired by the principles of liberty, and the ideals of human solidarity.

Chile, Constitution of

Article 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:
7th. . . . Primary education is obligatory. There shall be a superintendency of public education in the charge of which will be the inspection of national instruction and its direction, under the authority of the Government.

China, Constitution of

Article 21

The people shall have the right and duty of receiving citizen's education.

Article 158

Education and culture shall have as its aim the development among citizens of national spirit, a democratic spirit, national morality, sound and healthy physique, of sciences and of the knowledge and ability to earn a living.

Article 159

Citizens shall have equal opportunity to receive education.

Article 160

All children of the school age from six to twelve years shall receive primary education free and those who are poor shall be supplied with textbooks by the Government.

All citizens beyond school age who have not received primary education shall receive supplementary education free, and shall also be supplied with textbooks by the Government.

Article 164

Expenditure for educational, scientific and cultural purposes shall be, in case of the Central Government, not less than fifteen per cent of the total national budget, in case of the provinces, not less [294] than 25 per cent of the total national budget. . .

Colombia, Constitution of

Article 41

2. Primary instruction shall be free in the schools of the State and obligatory to the degree that the law prescribes.

Costa Rica, Constitution of

Article 61

The State shall watch over the technical training of workers, for the purpose of obtaining the greatest efficiency in their labour and of gaining an increase in national production.

Article 67

Primary instruction is obligatory, free, and sustained by the Nation. The direction of it belongs to the Executive.

The State will maintain the schools of primary instruction and academies of secondary education that the necessities of the country may require, and will create revenue for the support of the University.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 45

2. Childhood and youth are protected from exploitation and from moral and material neglect. The State, the Provinces, and the municipalities shall organize adequate institutions for this purpose.

Article 48

Primary instruction is obligatory for minors of school age, and its dispensation shall be the obligation of the State, without lessening the co-operative responsibility falling to municipal initiative.

Both primary and pre-primary instruction shall be gratuitous when imparted by the State, Province, or municipality. The necessary teaching materials shall likewise be gratuitous.

Secondary basic instruction, and all higher instruction imparted by the State or the municipalities, exclusive of specialized pre-university and university studies, shall be gratuitous.

In institutes created, or which may be created in the future in the pre-university category, the law may maintain or establish the payment of a moderate co-operation fee for matriculation that shall be [295] designated for the up-keep of each establishment.

As far as possible, the State shall offer fellowships for the enjoyment of non-gratuitous official instruction to students who, having determined their vocations and having exceptional aptitudes, are prevented, by insufficiency of resources, from carrying on such studies on their own account.

Article 49

The State shall maintain a system of schools for adults, especially dedicated to the elimination and prevention of illiteracy; rural schools predominantly practical, organized with a view to the interest of small communities of agricultural, maritime, or any other type; art schools, and technical institutes of agriculture, industry and commerce, oriented in a manner to respond to the necessities of the national economy. All of these kinds of instruction shall be gratuitous and the Provinces and municipalities shall collaborate in their maintenance to the extent of their means.

Article 50

The State shall maintain the normal schools necessary for the technical preparation of the teachers in charge of primary instruction in the public schools. No other educational centre may issue degrees for primary teachers, with the exception of the school of pedagogy of the universities.

The previous provisions do not exclude the right of schools created by law, to issue pedagogical degrees relating to special matters that may be the subject of their instruction.

Article 51

Public instruction shall be organized in an organic form, so that adequate articulation and continuity may obtain for all grades, including the higher. The official system shall provide vocational stimulus and the development in the light of the multiplicity of the [296] professions, and taking into account the cultural and practical necessities of the Nation.

All instruction, public or private, shall be inspired by a spirit of Cubanism and human solidarity, tending to form in the minds of those being educated a love for their Fatherland, its democratic institutions, and for those who have fought for one or the other.

Article 52

All public instruction shall be provided for in the budgets of the State, the Provinces, or the municipalities, and shall be under the technical and administrative direction of the Minister of Education, with the exception of departments of instruction that, because of their special character, are subordinate to other ministries. . .

. . . The budget of the ministry of education shall not be less than the normal budget of any other ministry except in case of emergency declared by law.

The monthly salary of a teacher of primary instruction must not be, in any case, less than a millionth part of the total budget of the Nation.

Persons holding official teaching positions have the rights and duties of public officials.

Appointments, promotions, transfers, and dismissals of public teachers and professors, inspectors, technicians, and other school officials, shall be regulated in such a manner that no considerations other than strictly technical ones may apply, but this stipulation shall not affect the vigilance over the moral conduct to which such officials must conform.

Article 59

A national council of education and culture shall be created which, presided over by the Minister of Education, shall be in charge of the encouragement, technical direction, or inspection of the educational, scientific, and artistic activities of the Nation.

The opinion of this body shall be heard by the Congress on every bill relating to matters within its competence.

[297]

Positions on the national council of education and culture shall be honorary and uncompensated.

Denmark, Constitution of

Article 83

Children whose parents are without means to provide for their education, are entitled to free education in the elementary schools. Parents or guardians who themselves make provision for the children's receiving an education comparable with general requirements in elementary schools, are not obliged to have the children educated at elementary schools.

Dominican Republic, Constitution of

Article 6

4th. Freedom of education. Primary instruction will be subject to the revision of the State and will be obligatory for the scholastic minor, in the form that the law establishes. This instruction will be gratuitous in official institutions, the same as with that which is given in schools of agriculture, manual arts, and domestic economy.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 177

. . . Education and instruction, in so far as they are compatible with morality and republican institutions, shall be free. . . Elementary education, either public or private, shall be compulsory.

In private or public free establishments, school social services shall be available, without discrimination, to pupils who require them. . .

Article 173

The State shall found and maintain special free training establishments for arts and crafts, trade, agriculture and other types of remunerative work.

Egypt, Royal Rescript No. 42 of 1923Article 19

Elementary education is compulsory for young Egyptians of both sexes. It is given free of charge in the public maktab.

Article 18

Public education shall be regulated by law.
[298]

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 33

Instruction is free; primary instruction, moreover, is obligatory. Instruction that is given in establishments supported by the State shall be gratuitous and subject to proper regulations.

France, Constitution ofArticle 14

The nation guarantees equal access of the child and the adult to instruction, to vocational training and to culture. The organization of free and nuclear public education at all stages is a duty of the State.

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 16

Education, which is under the supreme supervision of the State, is conducted at the State expense.

Elementary education is obligatory for all, and is given free by the State.

Private persons and corporations are allowed to establish private schools conducted in accordance with the Constitution and the laws of the Realm.

Guatemala, Constitution of

Article 81

There shall be a minimum (standard) of common instruction, obligatory, for all inhabitants of the country, within the limits of age and conforming to the plans and programmes affixed by the respective law. . .

Article 82

The following are declared to be of social utility; the campaign for national literacy; the free offering of the minimum of official common, agricultural, industrial, artistic, and normal instruction. . .

Article 85

The State guarantees freedom of educational judgement.

Haiti, Constitution of

Article 23

Freedom of instruction may also be exercised as provided by law under the control and supervision of the State, which is concerned with the moral and civic training of citizens.

[299]

Public education is a responsibility of the State and of the communes.

Elementary instruction is compulsory.

Public instruction shall be free of charge in all grades without prejudice to the conditions of admission.

Honduras, Constitution of

Article 60

Freedom of instruction is guaranteed. Teaching maintained by public funds shall be laical, and primary instruction, furthermore, shall be free of charge, obligatory, paid for by the municipalities and subsidized by the State.

Iceland, Constitution of

Article 71

Should parents not possess means to provide for the education of their children, or should the children be orphans or poor, their instruction and maintenance shall be provided for out of public funds.

Iran, The Supplementary Fundamental LawsArticle 18

The acquisition and study of all science, arts and crafts is free, save in the case of such as may be forbidden by the ecclesiastical law.

Article 19

The foundation of schools at the expense of the government and the nation, and compulsory instruction, must be regulated by the Ministry of Sciences and Arts, and all schools and colleges must be under the supreme control and supervision of that Ministry.

Liberia, Constitution ofArticle I

Section 15. The improvement of the Native tribes and their advancement in the arts of agriculture and husbandry being a cherished object of this Government, it should be the duty of the President to appoint in each country some discreet person whose duty it shall be to make regular and periodical tours through the country for the purpose of calling the attention of the Natives to those wholesome branches of industry, and of instructing them in the same and the Legislature, shall as soon as can conveniently be done, make provision for these purposes by the appropriation of money.

[300]

Luxembourg, Constitution ofArticle 23

The State shall ensure that every Luxembourg national receives elementary education. It shall establish institutions for intermediate instruction and courses for higher education as may be necessary.

The law shall prescribe the manner in which the cost of public instruction shall be met, and the conditions for the supervision of education by the Government and the communes; it shall lay down rules respecting all other matters relating to education. Every Luxembourg national is free to study in the Grand Duchy or abroad and to attend any University which he may choose, subject to the provisions of the law relating to the conditions for admission to employment or to the exercise of certain professions.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 3

Primary education shall be obligatory and the State shall impart it freely.

The education that the State imparts shall be socialistic and besides excluding all religious doctrine, it shall combat fanaticism and prejudices, for which purpose the school shall organize its instruction and activities in a form that may permit the creation in youth of a rational and exact concept of the universe and of social life.

Article 31

It shall be the duty of all Mexicans:

1. To see to it that their children or wards less than fifteen years of age attend public or private schools to obtain a primary, elementary, and military education during the time prescribed by the law of public instruction in each State.

Netherlands, Constitution of

Article 195

Education shall be an object of constant solicitude on the part of the Government.
[301]

The imparting of education shall be free, saving superintendence by the Government and, moreover, in so far as general education, elementary as well as secondary, is concerned, saving the examination with regard to the ability and morality of the teacher, the whole to be regulated by law.

Public education shall be regulated by law, every person's religious views being duly respected.

In each municipality the authorities shall impart sufficient public general elementary education in an adequate number of schools.

According to rules to be laid down by law, deviation from this provision may be permitted, provided that opportunity is given for such education to be received.

Nicaragua, Constitution of

Article 86

Public education is the special interest of the State.

Article 88

Primary instruction is obligatory, and, when supported by the State and public bodies, it is free and secular.

Article 89

The State promotes instruction in the secondary and superior grades.

Article 93

The profession of official education is a public career and enjoys the rights fixed by the law.

Article 92

The moral education of youth will be fostered in all schools, as well as the development of civic sentiment and personal and professional honesty.

Article 91

The State promotes technical education for workers, and schools for agricultural and industrial education.

Article 99

Agriculture or industrial enterprises that are located outside the radius of urban schools and that embrace more than thirty children of [302] school age will be obliged to maintain a school adequate for primary elemental teaching.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 77

The service of national education in its intellectual, moral, civic, and physical aspects is an essential duty of the State. National education will be inspired by democratic doctrine and ideals of national aggrandizement and human solidarity.

It is a function of the State to fix the bases of education, which will be organized in a form in which unity, articulation, and continuity exist in all its grades.

Every educational institution is of public and social utility.

Article 78

Primary education is obligatory. Public pre-school, primary, and secondary education, in all its grades and types, will be gratuitous. The gratuity of pre-school and primary instruction implies the obligation for the State of providing for the pupil all the equipment that may be necessary for his learning. The gratuity of secondary instruction does not prevent the establishment of a matriculation fee.

Article 90

The State will develop popular culture by all possible means and will maintain a system of gratuitous complementary courses for adults, intended to prevent and eliminate illiteracy and to the practical preparation of the working classes.

Article 91

The law will create a department of physical culture which will have the mission of diffusing said culture in teaching institutions and among the masses of the people.

Article 87

In order to make effective the economic autonomy of the university, the State will give it what is indispensable for its installation, functioning, and future development, as well as the patrimony that is [303] spoken of in the preceding article and the means necessary for increasing it.

Article 86

The official university of the Republic is autonomous. Juridical personality, its own patrimony, and the right of administering it are recognized. It has the power to organize its studies and to designate and separate its personnel in the form that the law determines. It will include in its activities the study of national problems and the diffusion of popular culture.

Article 89

The State will promote the establishment of special technical, industrial and professional, and stock-raising and commercial schools, adapting them to the specific needs of the Nation. The law will establish, after the primary school, services of professional orientation that allow discovering the aptitudes and capacities of the students and guiding them toward their better individual and social utilization.

Article 84

Expenditures that are required for the sustaining of the service of education will have preference over any others whatever. The organic law of the branch will determine the proportion of the revenues that must be designated for that service.

Article 83

The law will establish the necessary incentives for the publication of national didactic works and standards for their adoption as official texts.

Article 82

Only the State may grant scholarships or financial aid to students who have won in competition or public contests or who may have obtained in their studies the qualifications that, in conformity with the law, make them deserving of the assistance of the State.

[304]

Under equality of excellence, preference shall be given to those participants whose economic means do not permit them to attend to the studies for which they may be presented in the competition.

Article 74

It is the duty of industrial enterprises, in the spheres of their specialization, to create schools for apprentices intended to promote labour education among the children of their operatives or associates. The law will regulate this matter.

Paraguay, Constitution of

Article 11

Care for health of the population, and social assistance, as well as the moral, spiritual and physical education of youth, are fundamental duties of the State.

Article 10

Primary education is obligatory and free; the Government shall develop secondary, professional, and university instruction.

Article 19

All the inhabitants of the public enjoy the following rights, in conformity with the laws that may regulate their exercise: . . . to learn. . .

Peru, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 71

The technical direction of education belongs to the State.

Article 72

Primary instruction is obligatory and gratuitous.

Article 73

There shall be at least one school in each locality in which the school population is thirty pupils.

Complete primary instruction shall be apportioned in each capital of a province and of a district.

Article 52

The protection of the physical, mental, and moral health of infancy is a primary duty of the State. The State protects the right of the [305] child to home life, education, vocational orientation, and ample assistance when in a situation of neglect, illness or misfortune. The State shall commit the fulfilment of the provisions of this article to adequate technical organizations.

Article 75

The State encourages instruction in the secondary and higher grades with a tendency toward making it gratuitous.

Article 77

The State encourages the technical instruction of workers.

Article 78

The State encourages and contributes to the support of pre-school and post-school education and of schools for retarded or abnormal children.

Article 79

Moral and civic education of children is obligatory and shall necessarily be inspired by the national growth and human solidarity.

Article 74

Schools that may function in industrial, agricultural, or mining centres, shall be supported by the respective proprietors or enterprises.

Article 76

There shall be at least one school of industrial orientation in each Department.

Article 83

The minimum amount of the income intended for the support and diffusion of instruction, and the proportion by which it must annually be increased, shall be stipulated by the law.

Philippines, Constitution of the

Article 14

Section 4. The State shall promote scientific research and invention. Arts and letters shall be under its patronage. The exclusive right to writings and inventions shall be secured to authors and inventors for a limited period.

[306]

Section 5. All educational institutions shall be under the supervision of and subject to regulation by the State. The Government shall establish and maintain a complete and adequate system of public education, and shall provide at least free public primary instruction, and citizen training for adult citizens. All schools shall aim to develop moral character, personal discipline, civil conscience, and vocational efficiency, and to teach the duties of citizenship. Optional religious instruction shall be maintained in the public schools as now authorized by law. Universities established by the State shall enjoy academic freedom. The State shall create scholarships, in arts, science and letters for special gifted citizens.

Poland, Constitution of

Article 118

Within the limits of the elementary school, instruction is compulsory for all citizens of the State. A statute will define the period, limits and manner of acquiring such education.

Article 119

Teaching in State and self-government schools is gratuitous.

The State will insure to pupils who are exceptionally able, but not well-to-do, scholarships for their maintenance in secondary and academic schools.

Article 120

Instruction in religion is compulsory for all pupils in every educational institution, the curriculum of which includes instruction of youth under eighteen years of age, if the institution is maintained, wholly or in part by the State, or by self-government bodies. The direction and supervision of religious instruction in schools belong to the respective religious communities, reserving to the State educational authorities the right of supreme supervision.

Saudi Arabia, Constitution of

Article 25

A law for public education shall be decreed and shall be brought into force gradually. Elementary education shall be free of cost throughout the Kingdom of the Hojaz.

[307]

Syria, Constitution of the State of

Article 21

Primary education shall be compulsory for all Syrians of both sexes, and shall be given free of charge in the public schools.

Article 22

The curriculum for public education shall be laid down by a law and shall ensure educational uniformity.

Article 23

All schools shall be placed under Government supervision.

Turkey, Constitution of

Article 87

Primary education is compulsory for all Turks and is free in public schools.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution of

Article 121

Citizens of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have the right to education.

This right is ensured by universal, compulsory elementary education; by education, including higher education, being free of charge; by the system of State stipends for the overwhelming majority of students in the universities and colleges; by instruction in schools being conducted in the native language, and by the organization in the factories, state farms, machine and tractor stations and collective farms of free vocational, technical and agronomic training for the working people.

Uruguay, Constitution of

Article 61

Primary education is obligatory. The State shall provide what is necessary for its enforcement.

Article 62

Official free primary, intermediate, superior, industrial, and artistic instruction, and physical education is declared a social need; also the creation of scholarships for cultural, scientific, and industrial improvement and specialization, as well as the establishment of popular libraries.

All institutions of learning shall provide especially for the formation of the moral and civic character of the students.

[308]

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 38

In order to raise the general cultural standard of the peoples, the State ensures the accessibility of schools and other educational and cultural institutions to all classes of the people.

The State pays special attention to the young and protects their education.

Schools are State-owned. The founding of private schools may be permitted only by law and their work is controlled by the State.

Elementary education is compulsory and free.

The School is separate from the Church.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[309]

Article 37

“Everyone has the right and the duty to perform socially useful work.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Dukes (United Kingdom):

“...I am referring now to the top of page (c) where it reads “Prohibition of slavery and compulsory labour”... .

“I see difficulty in making any attempts to provide or to place on a country the obligation to provide for the right to work, if that right is to be implemented only on one side. What is to happen in the case of the individual who may decline, and, assuming that he is in a state of penury? Is he to have the right to throw his economic burden upon the state without his having any obligation to the State within which he claims, alternatively either the work or the right to absent himself from work?”*

Mr. Tepliakov (USSR)

“...the principle of an obligation or duty of the citizens to work for the common purpose of the community and in the country and in the United Nations, must be provided.”**

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XIV (paragraphs 1–3)

Every person has the right to work as a means of supporting himself and of contributing to the support of his family.

Every person has the duty to work as a contribution to the general welfare of the state.

Cuba

Article 7

The right to equal opportunity with others in shaping his life, raising the standard of living, and fulfilling a useful function in society.

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 14th meeting – page E/20

[**] H.R. Com. – 1st session – 14th meeting – page E/22

[310]

Panama (American Law Institute)

Article 12

Everyone has the right to work. The state has a duty to take such measures as may be necessary to insure that all its residents have an opportunity for useful work.

B. Proposals

India

I. (c)

Every human being has the right of security including the right to work. . .

United States

II. 2.

Among the categories of rights which, the United States suggests should be considered are the following:

c/ social rights such as the right to employment. . .

Section III. National Constitutions

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 145

. . . Everyone is assured work that enables a dignified existence. Work is a social obligation.

Byelorussia, Constitution ofArticles 93 and 12

See USSR Constitution Articles 118 and 12.

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:

14th. . . No kind of labour or industry may be prohibited unless it is contrary to good usage, the public security, or public health, or as the national interest may demand and law so declare. . .

China, Constitution ofArticle 15

The right of existence, the right of work and the right of property shall be guaranteed to the people.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 17

Labour is a social obligation and shall enjoy a special protection of the State.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 52

Labour is a social duty and enjoys the special protection of the law [311] with the purpose that in its fulfilment it gives the individual the right to a suitable existence and agrees with his abilities and aptitudes.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 60

Labour is an inalienable right of the individual. The State shall employ all the resources in its power to provide an occupation for everyone who lacks such, and shall assure the economic conditions necessary for a proper existence to every worker, manual or intellectual.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 170

Work shall be compulsory for all members of the Ecuadorian community, subject to consideration of age, sex, health, etc. . . and allowing freedom of choice. . .

Article 187

“The State shall guarantee to the inhabitants of Ecuador: . . . (10) freedom of work, trade and industry. . . no one shall be compelled to work without a contract and the corresponding remuneration. . .”

France, Constitution of

Paragraph 5 – Everyone has the duty to work and the right to obtain employment.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 55

Labour is a right of the individual and a social obligation. Vagrancy is punishable.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 97

The possibility of earning a living by means of productive work should be procured for all inhabitants, with preference to nationals.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 22

All inhabitants of the Republic are obliged to earn their living by legitimate work.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 102

Paragraph 1 – Labour is the main basis of the wealth of the Republic, and should remain under the special protection of the State.

[312]

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 70

Personal immunity, freedom of conscience, of thought, of speech and press, the right to travel, to make contracts, to work, to own and dispose of property, to meet and associate and to incorporate, form part the rights and liberties of Turkish citizens.

Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Constitution of theArticles 117 and 12

See USSR Constitution Articles 118 and 12.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution of theArticle 118

“Citizens of the USSR have the right to work, that is, are guaranteed the right to employment and payment for their work in accordance with its quantity and quality.

“The right to work is assured by the socialist organization of the national economy, the steady growth of the productive forces of Soviet society, the elimination of the possibility of economic crises, and the abolition of unemployment.”

Article 12

“In the USSR work is a duty and a matter of honour for every able-bodied citizen. In accordance with the principle:

“He who does not work, neither shall he eat.”

The principle applied in the USSR is that of socialism:

“From each according to his ability, to each according to his work.”

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 52

Labour is under the special protection of the law.

Every inhabitant of the Republic, without jeopardizing his liberty, has the obligation of applying his intellectual or physical energies in such form as to redound to the benefit of society, and the latter shall endeavour to offer, with preference to citizens, the possibility of earning a living by means of the development of economic activity.

Article 54

The law shall provide an impartial and equitable distribution of work.
[313]

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 32

“It is the duty of every citizen to work according to his abilities; he who does not contribute to the community cannot receive from it.”

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[314]

Article 38

“Everyone has the right to good working conditions”.

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments*A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article 14 (para. 4)

The state has the duty to assist the individual in the exercise of his right to work when his own efforts are not adequate to secure employment; it must make every effort to promote stability of employment and to insure proper conditions of labour, and it must fix minimum standards of just compensation.

Cuba

Article 9

The right to work under conditions fitting to his status as a human being and to receive, in return, a remuneration in proportion to the value of his contribution to the community.

Panama (American Law Institute)

Article 13

Everyone has the right to reasonable conditions of work. The state has a duty to take such measures as may be necessary to insure reasonable wages, hours, and other conditions of work.

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States

II 2. c/

Among the categories of rights which, the United States suggests should be considered are the following:

c/ social rights such as the right to employment and social security and the right to enjoy minimum standards of economic social and cultural well-being.<sup>158</sup>

Section III. National Constitutions

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 121

Work and capital, as factors of production, enjoy the protection of the State.

Article 125

Free professional and trade union association is guaranteed and the collective bargaining contract is recognized.

[315]

Article 126

The right to strike, according to law, is recognized as a means of defence for labourers.

Article 127

The law shall determine the system of participation of employees and workers in the profits of concerns.

Article 129

The rights and benefits recognized by law in favour of labourers and employees may not be renounced. Agreements to the contrary or which tend to contravene its effects are void.

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 157

Labour legislation and that of social welfare shall obey the following precepts, in addition to others aiming to improve the conditions of workers:

- 1st. A minimum wage capable of satisfying, in conformity with the conditions of each region, the normal needs of the worker and his family.
- 3rd. A wage for night work higher than that for day work.
- 5th. Daily work not exceeding eight hours, except in the cases and conditions provided by law.
- 8th. Sanitation and safety of labour.
- 9th. Prohibition of work for minors under fourteen years of age; of work in unhealthy industries, for women and for minors under eighteen years of age; and of night work, for minors under eighteen years of age; respecting, in every case, the conditions established by law and the exceptions granted by a competent judge.

<sup>158</sup> The emphasis is in the original.

13th. Recognition of collective labour agreements.

Article 158

The right to strike is recognized, the exercise of which the law shall regulate.

Chile, Constitution of

Article 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:

14th. Protection of labour, industry, and the works of social welfare. . .

[316]

The state, in order to improve the livelihood of labourers and farmers and to increase their productive technical skill, shall enact laws and carry out the policy of their protection.

Women and children engaged in labour, shall, according to their age and physical condition, be accorded special protection.

Costa Rica, Constitution of

Article 53

All manual or intellectual labour has the right to a minimum wage or salary that shall cover the material, moral, and cultural necessities of his home, and that shall be fixed periodically, with reference to the nature of his work and to the particular condition of each region and of each activity, intellectual, industrial, commercial, stock-raising, or agricultural.

Article 54

The regular working period shall not exceed eight hours in the daytime, six hours at night, and forty-eight hours a week. Work for additional hours shall be remunerated with fifty percent more of the stipulated wage or salary. Nevertheless, these provisions shall not be applied in exceptional cases, very limited, determined by law.

Article 56

The right of employers to the lockout and of workers to the strike is recognized, except in the public services, in accordance with the specification that the law makes regarding them and in conformity with the regulations that the law itself establishes, which must disavow all acts of coercion or violence.

Article 57

Collective labour agreements and contracts that are negotiated in accordance with the law between employers and legally organized workers' unions shall have the force of law.

Article 60

Every employer must adopt conditions necessary for hygiene and the [317] safety of the worker in his enterprise.

Article 64

There shall be a special jurisdiction of labour for the better solution of conflicts that may arise in the relations between employers and workers. All labour tribunals shall be subordinate to the judiciary and the law shall determine their number and organization; in greater part they shall be composed of a representative of the State, who shall preside over them, and of a representative of the employers, and another of the workers.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 61

Every worker, manual or intellectual, in public or private enterprise of the State, Province, or municipality shall have a guaranteed minimum salary or wage, which shall be determined in keeping with the conditions of each region and the normal necessities of the worker, from material, moral, and cultural considerations, and considering him as the head of the family.

The law shall establish the manner of periodically regulating the minimum salaries or wages by means of committees with equal representation for each branch of labour, according to the standards of living, the peculiarities of each region, and each individual, commercial, or agricultural activity.

In labour performed by the complete task, it shall be obligatory that the minimum wage for a day's work be reasonably assured.

The minimum of all salaries or wages is unattachable, except in case of responsibility [sic] for payment of allowances in support of other persons in the form that the law may establish. The tools of labour belonging to workers are also unattachable.

Article 68

No wage differential may be established between married women and single women.

The law shall regulate the protection of motherhood of working women, [318] extending this protection to women who are employed.

A pregnant woman may not be separated from her employment within three months before childbirth, or be required to do work that may require considerable physical effort.

During the six weeks immediately preceding childbirth and the six weeks following, a woman shall enjoy obligatory vacation from work on pay at the same rate, retaining her employment and all the rights pertaining to such employment and to her labour contract. During the nursing period, two extraordinary daily rest periods of a half hour each shall be allowed her to feed her child.

Article 66

The maximum working day shall not exceed eight hours. This maximum may be reduced to six hours a day for persons more than fourteen and less than eighteen years of age.

The maximum working week shall be forty-four hours, equivalent to forty-eight hours in pay, with the exception of industries which, because of their nature, must carry on uninterrupted production within a certain period of the year, until the specific regulation in these exceptional cases is determined by law.

Labour and apprenticeship is prohibited to persons less than fourteen years of age.

Article 71

The right of workers to strike and the right of employers to the lockout is recognized, in conformity with the regulations that the law may establish for the exercise of both rights.

Article 72

The law shall regulate the system of collective contracts of labour, the fulfilment of which shall be obligatory for both employers and workers.

Stipulations implying renunciation, diminution, impairment, or relinquishment of any right in favour of the worker that is recognized in this Constitution or in the law, even if expressed in a labour contract or [319] in any other pact, shall be null and shall not obligate the contracting parties.

Article 77

No enterprise may discharge a worker except for good reason and with the other formalities that the law which determines the just causes for dismissal shall establish.

Article 78

The employer shall be responsible for compliance with the social laws, even when labour is contracted by an intermediary agency.

In all industries and kinds of labour in which technical knowledge is required, apprenticeship shall be obligatory in the form that the law may establish.

Article 83

The law shall regulate the manner in which factories and shops may be transferred for the purpose of avoiding debasement of the conditions of labour.

Article 84

Problems arising from the relations between capital and labour shall be submitted to committees of conciliation, composed of equal representation of employers and workers. The law shall stipulate the judicial officials who shall preside over the said committees, and the national tribunal before which their decisions are appealable.

Article 85

In order to assure compliance with social legislation, the State shall provide for the supervision and inspection of enterprises.

Ecuador, Constitution of

Article 185

The State shall see that justice is done in relations between employers and workers, that the dignity of the worker is respected, that he is ensured a decent existence and given fair wages to meet his personal and family requirements. . .

(e) the maximum working day shall be eight hours. . .

Night work shall be paid overtime, and may not be performed by women or [320] minors under eighteen years of age. For underground work, the maximum daily time shall be six hours and the total working day shall in no case exceed seven hours.

(m) in order to safeguard the health and lives of the workers, hygiene and safety measures shall be prescribed.

France, Constitution of

Paragraph 7

The right to strike is exercised within the framework of the laws that govern it.

Paragraph 8

Every worker, through this delegates, participates in collective bargaining on working conditions as well as in the management of business.

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 19

Every worker has the right to participate through his representatives in the collective settlement of working conditions. Every worker has the right to rest and leisure.

Even man has the right to defend his interests by collective action. Each individual may join the trade union pertaining to his professional activities, or may refrain from doing so.

Annual leave with pay is compulsory.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 191

The maximum obligatory day's work for wages shall be eight hours. For each six days of work there shall be one of rest.

Article 192

Unhealthful or dangerous work is prohibited, and industrial night work for women and for minors under sixteen years of age. Said persons shall not work in commercial establishments after six o'clock in the afternoon.

Article 193

The work of minors under twelve years of age shall not be the object of contract, and that of those over that age and less than sixteen years of age [321] shall have a maximum day's work of six hours.

Article 195

Large industrial concerns are obliged to establish hospitals in the place of their activities to attend to the accidents or illness of their operatives.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 123

The Congress of the Union shall formulate labour laws which shall apply to workers, day labourers, office holders, domestics, and artisans, and in a general manner, to all labour contracts without contravening the following basic principles:

- 1st. The maximum duration of work for one day shall be eight hours.
- 2nd. The maximum length of night work shall be seven hours. Unhealthy or dangerous work is forbidden for women in general and for young persons less than sixteen years of age. Industrial night work is also forbidden for these two classes; and they may not work in commercial establishments beyond ten o'clock at night.

3rd. Young persons more than twelve and less than sixteen years of age shall have six hours as a maximum day's work. The labour of children under twelve years of age is not subject to contract.

11th. When, because of extraordinary circumstances, the regular working hours during a day are increased, one hundred percent shall be added to the amount paid for the normal hours of work as compensation for the extra time worked. Overtime work shall never exceed three hours daily, nor shall it occur three times consecutively. Youths under sixteen years of age and women of any age may not be admitted to this class of labour.

Article 123

The Congress of the Union shall formulate labour laws, which shall apply to workers, day labourers, office holders, domestics, and artisans, and, in a general manner, to all labour contracts without contravening the following basic principles: [322]

12. In all agricultural, industrial, or mining business or in any other kind of enterprise, employers shall be obliged to furnish workingmen comfortable and hygienic living quarters for which they may collect rent that shall not exceed one-half percent monthly of the assessed valuation of the property. They also must establish schools, hospitals, and any other services necessary to the community. If the enterprises are situated within towns and furnish employment for more than one hundred workers, they shall be responsible for the first of the above obligations.

17th. The laws shall recognize strikes and lockouts as rights of the workingmen and employers.

18th. Strikes shall be legal when they have as their purpose the attaining of equilibrium among the various factors of production, harmonizing the rights of labour with those of capital. It shall be obligatory in public services for the employees to give ten days' notice to the board of conciliation and arbitration of the date agreed upon for the suspension of work. Strikes shall be considered illegal only when the majority of the strikers engage in acts of violence against persons or property, or in case of war, when those acts are committed against establishments and utilities of the Government. Workers in governmental military factories of the Republic are not included in the provisions of this fraction, because they are assimilated into the national army.

Article 123

19th. Lockouts shall be legal only when an excess of production make it necessary to suspend work to maintain prices at an approximate level with costs, and with the previous approval of the board of conciliation and arbitration.

20th. The differences or conflicts between capital and labour shall be subject to the decision of a board of conciliation and arbitration, formed by an equal number of representatives or workingmen and employers, with one from the government.

[323]

21st. Should the employer refuse to submit his differences to arbitration or to accept the decision rendered by the board, the labour contract shall be considered terminated and he shall be obliged to indemnify the workers in the amount of three months' wages and shall incur the liability resulting from the conflict; should this refusal be on the part of the workers, the labour contract shall be considered terminated.

22nd. The employer who dismisses a worker without justifiable cause or because he has entered an association or union, or for having taken part in a legal strike, shall be obliged, at the choice of the worker, either to complete the contract or to indemnify him in the amount of three months' wages. He shall also be bound by this obligation when the worker retires from work because of lack of honesty on the part of the employer or because he received bad treatment from him, whether it be to his person, or that of his wife, parents, children, or brothers. The employer may not excuse himself from this responsibility when the bad treatment is due to his subordinates or servants who may work with his consent or permission.

Article 123

23rd. Credits in favour of workers for salary or wages earned in the last year, and for indemnifications, shall have preference over all other obligations in case of cession of property or bankruptcy.

24th. The worker alone shall be responsible for debts contracted by himself payable to his employer, his associates, members of his household, or dependents, and in no case and for purpose may payment be exacted from members of the worker's family, nor are said debts payable for an amount exceeding the salary of the employee for one month.

25th. The services of employment placement for workers shall be gratuitous, whether such services be performed by municipal offices, labour exchanges, or any other official or private institution.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 98

Labour in its diverse forms, industry, and works of charity and social [324] welfare are under the protection of the law.

Article 100

The law recognizes the following rights of workers and employees:

- 4th. A minimum wage based on the cost of living and the conditions and the needs of the different regions and capable of assuring the worker a state of wellbeing compatible with human dignity.
- 5th. The payment of all wages within the period fixed in the contract, in national legal money, on a working day, and at the place where the worker is engaged in that work, with the prohibition of payment of merchandise, vouchers, counters, or any other substitute for money.
- 6th. The payment of daily wages within periods no greater than a fortnight.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 100

- 11th. Prohibition of attachment of minimum wages.
- 8th. Regulation of the work of women and children.

Article 102

Tribunals of conciliation will be established for the resolution in equitable form of the differences that may arise between employment and workers.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 63

Labour is a right and a duty of the individual. The State will employ the resources that are within its ability to provide employment to all who may lack it and to assure to every worker the economic conditions necessary to a decent existence.

Article 64

A minimum salary or wage is guaranteed to every worker in the service of the State or of public or private enterprises or of private individuals.

Article 65

The law will establish the manner of periodically adjusting the minimum salary or wage for the purpose of improving the standard of living of the worker and with attention to the peculiarities of each region and of each industrial, commercial, or agricultural activity.

It is obligatory that in work by contract or lump payment the minimum [325] wage for a working day remain assured.

The minimum of every wage or salary is unattachable, except for obligations for food in the form that the law establishes. Working tools of labourers are also unattachable.

Article 66

Any equal salary or wage always belongs to equal work, under identical conditions whoever may be the persons who perform it, without distinction of sex or nationality.

Article 68

The right of strike and of lockout is recognized. The law will regulate its exercise and may subject it to special restrictions in the public services that it determines.

Article 69

The maximum working day is of eight hours and the working week up to forty-eight hours. Maximum night work will not be greater than seven hours. Extra hours will be remunerated with overtime.

The maximum working day may be reduced to six hours daily for those more than fourteen and less than eighteen years of age. Work by those less than fourteen and night work by those less than sixteen years of age is prohibited, save for the exceptions that the law establishes. The employment of minors up to twelve years of age in the status of domestic servants and work by minors and by women in unhealthful occupations is similarly prohibited.

Article 70

Stipulations that imply renunciation, diminution, corruption, or relinquishment of any right recognized in favour of the worker are null and, therefore, do not oblige the contracting parties, even though they may be expressed in a labour contract or any other pact. The law will regulate everything relative to the labour contract.

Article 75

A labour jurisdiction is established, to which shall be submitted all [326] controversies that originate in the relations between capital and labour. The law will establish the standards belonging to said jurisdiction and the entities that put it into practice.

Article 76

Relations between capital and labour are matters for the regular law, arranging them on a basis of social justice in a manner that, without injuring any of the parties, the conditions necessary for a normal life are guaranteed to the worker, and to capital a compensation equitable to its investment.

Paraguay, Constitution of

Article 14

In order to assure to every worker a standard of living compatible with human dignity, the system of contracts of labour and social insurance, and the conditions of safety and hygiene of buildings, shall be under the watchful and critical supervision of the State. The exploitation of man by man is outlawed. . .

Peru, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 43

The State shall legislate upon the collective bargaining of labour.

Article 45

The State shall favour a system of participation by employees and workers in the benefits of enterprises, and shall legislate upon other aspects of the relations between capital and labour, and upon the protection of employees and workers in general.

Articles 46

The State shall legislate upon the general organization and the safeguards of industrial labour and upon the guarantees for life, health, and hygiene as related to it. The maximum conditions of labour, the compensation for services and for accidents, as well as for minimum salaries in relation to age, sex, the nature of the work, and the conditions and necessities of the various regions of the country, shall be regulated by law.

Philippines, Constitution of the

Article XIV, Section 6

The State shall afford protection to labour, especially to working [327] women and minors, and shall regulate the relations between landowner and tenant, and between labour and capital in industry and in agriculture. The State may provide for compulsory arbitration.

Poland, Constitution of

Article 102

Labour is the main basis of the wealth of the Republic, and should remain under the special protection of the state.

Every citizen has the right to state protection for his labour. . .

Article 103

Children under fifteen years of age may not be wage earners; neither may women be employed at night, or young labourers be employed in industries detrimental to their health.

Uruguay, Constitution of

Article 53

The law shall recognize the independence of the moral and civic conscience of those who may be in a relation of labour or service as working men or employees and shall provide for their just remuneration, the limitation of their working hours, their weekly rest, and their physical and moral hygiene.

The work of women and of minors under eighteen years of age shall be especially regulated and limited.

Article 56

The law shall promote the organization of trade unions, granting them franchises and enacting standards for the recognition of their juridical personality.

It shall promote, furthermore, the creation of tribunals of conciliation and arbitration.

It is here declared that the strike is a right of trade unions. Its methods and practice shall be regulated on this basis.

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 20

By economic and other measures the State assists the people to associate and organize themselves for their protection against economic exploitation.

The State protects persons who are engaged as workers or employees [328] especially by assuring them the right of association, by limiting the working day, by ensuring the right to paid annual holidays, by controlling working conditions, by devoting attention to housing conditions and social insurance.

Minors in employment enjoy the special protection of the State.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor

Article 3

The right to organize and work for a constantly more equitable distribution of the national income and wealth and the right to strive for the enhancement of the moral and material wellbeing of the people – for better health and security against the ravages of unemployment, accidents, sickness and old age – are to be considered inalienable.

Article 4

Raise labour standards throughout the world. There is no more effective way of stimulating the revival of reproduction and the international expansion of markets than by increasing the purchasing power of the great mass of people in every country.

[329]

Article 39

“Everyone has the right to such equitable share of the national income as the need for his work and the increment it makes to the common welfare may justify.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

- None -

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article VIII (paragraph 2)

The State has the duty to co-operate in assisting the individual to attain in minimum standard of private ownership of property based upon the essential material needs of a decent life, looking to the maintenance of the dignity of the human person and the sanctity of home life.

Cuba

Article 9

The right to work under conditions fitting to his status as a human being and to receive, in return, a remuneration in proportion to the value of his contribution to the community.

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 10

The economic system must correspond essentially to the principles of social justice that tend to secure for all inhabitants a standard of living proper for a human being.

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 157

[330]

4th. Obligatory and direct participation of the worker in the profits of concerns, under the terms and in the form determined by law.

Article 145

The economic order shall be organized in conformity with principles of social justice, conciliating the liberty of initiative with the value of human labour. . .

Byelorussia, Constitution of

Article 93

See Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Constitution, Articles 118 and 12.

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:

14th. . . The State shall incline toward the suitable division of estates and the creation of family holdings. . .

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 57

. . . “The fundamental principles of the organization of labour. . . are:

. . . 15th. The conditions of safety and hygiene in which work shall be undertaken. Regulations and provisions for hygiene and health shall be strictly observed in working establishments. Employees are obliged to adopt proper measures to protect their workers against accidents in the use of machinery, instruments, and materials of labour.”

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution of theArticle 123

The Congress of the Union shall formulate labour laws which shall apply to workers, day labourers, office holders, domestics, and artisans, and, in a general manner, to all labour contracts without contravening the following basic principles:

- 4th. The minimum compensation that should be received by a working man shall be what is considered sufficient, in view of the conditions of each region, to satisfy the normal needs of his life, his education, and his honest pleasures, considering him as the head of the family. In every agricultural, commercial, manufacturing or mining enterprise, the workers shall have the right to a participation in the profits, that shall [331] be regulated as indicated in Fraction IX (i.e., 9th Clause, below). . . .
- 8th. The minimum wage shall be exempt from attachment, compensation, or discount.
- 9th. The establishment of a minimum wage and participation in profits, referred to in Fraction VI (i.e., 6th Clause, above) shall be made by special committees, that, shall be formed in each municipality, subordinate to the central board of conciliation and arbitration that shall be established in each state. In the absence of these committees, the minimum wage shall be fixed by the respective central board of conciliation and arbitration.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 15

The State shall regulate the national economic life... The State may, with indemnification, nationalize the public services, and may monopolize the production, circulation, and sale of articles of primary necessity.

Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Constitution of theArticle 117

See Union of Soviet Socialist Republic Constitution, Articles 118 and 12.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution of the Article 118

“Citizens of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have the right to work, that is, are guaranteed the right to employment and payment for their work in accordance with its quantity and quality.”

“The right to work is assured by the socialist organization of the national economy, the steady growth of the productive forces of Soviet society, the elimination of the possibility of economic crises, and the abolition of unemployment.”

Article 12

“In the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics work is a duty and a matter of honour for every able-bodied citizen, in accordance with the principle:

‘He who does not work, neither shall he eat.’

The principle applied in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is that of socialism: ‘From each according to his ability, to each according to his work.’”

[332]

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 32

“It is the duty of every citizen to work according to his ability; he who does not contribute to the community cannot receive from it.”

Section IV. Draft International Declarations by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor

Article 3

... The right to strive for the enhancement of the moral and material wellbeing of the people – for better health and security against the ravages of unemployment, accidents, sickness and old age – are to be considered inalienable.

[333]

Article 40

“Everyone has the right to such public assistance as may be necessary to make it possible for him to support his family.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Lebeau (Belgium):

“... the right to economic security and a sufficient security to insure independence and the stability of family life. Therefore, this does not overlap with the elements of social security which we have here.”

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article X (paragraph 4)

It is the duty of the state to assist parents in the maintenance of adequate standards of child welfare within the family circle, and to promote as far as possible the ownership of individual homes as a means of fostering better family relations.

Cuba

Article 10

The right to receive adequate maintenance in the event of unemployment, sickness or chronic illness, to meet his own and his family’s material and spiritual needs.

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 134

Defence of the physical, mental, and moral health of infancy is the prime duty of the State. The State defends the rights of the child to [334] a home, to education, and to ample assistance when it is abandoned, sick, or in trouble. The State shall commit the fulfilment of the provisions of this article to adequate technical organizations.

Article 131

Matrimony, the family, and maternity are under the protection of the law.

Article 133

The laws shall organize the family patrimony so that it cannot be seized.

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 164

Assistance to motherhood, to infancy, and to adolescence is obligatory in all of the national territory. The law shall provide assistance to families with numerous offspring.

Chile, Constitution of

Article 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:

14th. . . and economic conditions of living in a form to give to each inhabitant a minimum of wellbeing adequate for the satisfaction of his personal necessities and those of his family. . .

China, Constitution of

Article 156

The state, in order to secure the foundation of national existence and development, shall protect motherhood and carry out the policy of promoting the welfare of women and children.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 19

Public relief is a function of the State. Those lacking means of subsistence and without the right of demanding it from other persons, and those physically incapacitated for work, should be aided.

The law shall determine the form of administering relief and the cases in which it should be given directly by the State.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 51

The State will work for the greatest wellbeing of Costa-Ricans, protecting in a special way the family, the basis of the Nation; [335] assuring aid to mothers, children, the aged, and the destitute ill, and organizing and stimulating production and the most adequate distribution of wealth.

Cuba, Constitution ofArticle 45

Budgets, insurance, and social assistance shall be employed in accordance with standards of protection for the family, established in this Constitution.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 126

Wedlock, family and motherhood shall be under the special protection of the law.

Denmark, Constitution ofArticle 82

Any person who is unable to maintain himself or his family, and whose maintenance is not incumbent on any other person is entitled to the assistance of the public authorities, subject, however, to his observing the obligations which the law prescribes in this connection.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 185

(c) the state shall. . . establish family allowances. . .

Article 162

The State shall provide maternity assistance and protect mother and child, without regard to antecedents.

The State shall make adequate arrangements for the protection and development of children under fourteen years of age who lack family and economic protection.

Article 185

(j) working mothers shall be subject to particular care. Women in pregnancy shall not be obliged to work during the period prescribed by law, before and after birth, but shall be entitled to full remuneration. In addition, nursing mothers shall be allowed the necessary time off work for feeding their children.

(k) work shall be prohibited for minors under fourteen, except as prescribed by law, and regulations shall be established for the employment of minors under eighteen. . .

[336]

France, Constitution of

Paragraph 10

The nation assures to the individual and to the family the conditions necessary to their development.

Guatemala, Constitution of

Article 57

. . . Fundamental principles of the organization of labour. . . are:

. . . 2nd. The periodic fixation of the minimum wage that workers of all classes must receive, paying attention to. . . their obligations as heads of families. . .

Article 72

The family, maternity, and matrimony have the protection of the State. . .

Article 78

Fathers of poor families, with six or more minor children, shall receive special protection from the State. In circumstances of equal competence, they shall enjoy preference in the discharge of public positions.

Article 57

. . . The law shall regulate the protection of maternity among working women, from whom no work requiring considerable physical exertion may be demanded during the three months previous to childbirth. Working mothers shall enjoy a remunerated obligatory rest for one month before and forty-five days after childbirth; in the time of lactation they have the right to two daily periods of special rest, of one-half hour each for feeding the child.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 197

The family, as the basis of society, shall be under the protection of the State.

Consequently, the State shall provide for the organization of its patrimony, for effective aid to maternity, and protection to minors.

[337]

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution ofArticle 123

The Congress of the Union shall formulate labour laws which shall apply to workers, day labourers, office holders, domestics, and artisans, and in a general manner, to all labour contracts without contravening the following basic principles:

5th. During the three months previous to parturition, women shall not perform physical labour that requires excessive material effort. In the month following childbirth they shall necessarily enjoy the benefit of rest and shall receive their entire salary and retain their employment and the rights that they may have acquired through the labour contract. In the period of lactation, they shall have two special periods of rest each day, of one-half hour each, to nurse their infants.

Netherlands, Constitution of theArticle 196

Poor relief shall be an object of constant solicitude on the part of the Government, and shall be regulated by law.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 77

Matrimony, the family, and maternity are under the protection and defence of the State.

Article 79

The State and the municipalities will safeguard the health and social betterment of the family.

Article 81

The education of the offspring is the first duty and natural right of parents with respect to their children, in order that the latter may reach the best physical, intellectual, and social development.

Parents without economic resources to assist them have the right to apply for aid to the State for the education of their offspring.

Article 82

The State will procure the grant of special subsidies for families with numerous children.

[338]

Panama, Constitution of

Article 55

Patrimony is the legal foundation of the family, resting on the equality of rights of the spouses, and it may be dissolved in accordance with the law.

Article 54

The State protects matrimony, maternity, and the family and guarantees the rights of the child up to his adolescence. The law will determine what relates to the civil status.

Article 60

The State will watch over the social and economic development of the family and will organize the family patrimony, determining the nature and amount of the property that must constitute it, on the basis that it is inalienable and unattachable.

Article 61

The State will provide breeding and education to minors whose parents or guardians are economically incapacitated to do it or who lack relatives obliged to provide it for them.

Paraguay, Constitution of

Article 11

Care for the health of the population, and social assistance, as well as the moral, spiritual, and physical education of youth, are fundamental duties of the State.

Peru, Constitution of

Article 51

Marriage, the family, and maternity are under the protection of the law.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 103 (paragraph 3)

Special statutes determine the protection of motherhood.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 39

The State shall safeguard the social developments of the family.

Article 40

... Those who may have numerous offspring in their charge have the right to compensating assistance provided they need it for them.

[339]

... Concerning maternity, whatever may be the condition or class of a woman, she has the right to the protection of society and to assistance in case of need.

Article 48

Family, welfare, its foundation, preservation, enjoyment, and transmission, shall be the purpose of special protective legislation.

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 26 (paragraph 1)

Matrimony and the family are under the protection of the State. The State regulates by law the legal relations of marriage and the family.

Article 24 (paragraph 3)

The State especially protects the interests of mothers and children by the establishment of maternity hospitals, children's homes and day nurseries and by the right of mothers to a leave with pay before and after childbirth.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[340]

Article 41

“Everyone has the right to social security. The State shall maintain effective arrangements for the prevention of unemployment and for insurance against the risks of unemployment, accident, disability, sickness, old age and other involuntary or undeserved loss of livelihood.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XVI

Every person has the right to social security.

The state has the duty to assist all persons to attain social security. To this end the state must promote measures of public health and safety and must establish systems of social insurance and agencies of social co-operation in accordance with which all persons may be assured an adequate standard of living and may be protected against the contingencies of unemployment, accident, disability and ill-health and the eventuality of old age.

Every person has the duty to co-operate with the state according to his powers in the maintenance and administration of the measures taken to promote his own social security.

Cuba

Article 10

The right to receive adequate maintenance in the event of unemployment, sickness or chronic illness, to meet his own and his family’s material and spiritual needs.

Panama (American Law Institute)

Article 15

Everyone has the right to social security.

The state has a duty to maintain or insure that there are maintained comprehensive arrangements for the promotion of health, for the prevention of sickness and accident, and for the provision of medical care and of compensation for loss of livelihood.

B. Proposals

India

I. c/

Every human being has the right of security including the right to work, the right to education. . .

[341]

United States

2. c/

Among the categories of rights which the United States suggests should be considered are the following:

. . . c/ social rights such as the right to employment and social security. . .

Section III. National ConstitutionsBolivia, Constitution ofArticle 130*

Social aid is a function of the State. The law shall delimit the conditions of this assistance. Sanitation is of a coercive and obligatory character.

Article 122

The law shall regulate obligatory insurance for sickness, accidents, involuntary unemployment, physical disability, old age, maternity, and death, eviction from lodgings and indemnification to working men and day labourers, the work of women and minors, the maximum number of working hours, minimum wage, rest on Sundays and holidays, medical and perpetual vacations with pay, medical and hygienic care, and other social benefits for the protection of workers.

Brazil, Constitution ofArticle 157

16th. Social security, by means of contribution from the Union, from the employer, and from the employee, for the benefit of motherhood, and against the consequences of old age, invalidity, illness and death.

15th. Assistance to the unemployed.

12th. Security of employment, in concerns or in rural developments, and indemnification of the dismissed worker, in the cases and under the conditions that the law may establish.

10th. The right of an expectant mother, to rest before and after childbirth, with no prejudice to her job or wage.

China, Constitution of

Article 152

The State shall provide opportunity of employment to people who are capable of work.

[342]

Article 155

The State, in order to promote social welfare, shall enforce a social insurance system. To the aged, the infirm and crippled among the people who are unable to earn a living, and to victims of unusual calamities, the State shall extend appropriate assistance and relief.

Costa Rica, Constitution of

Article 63

Social insurance for the benefit of manual and intellectual workers is established, regulated by a system of compulsory triple contributions by the State, by the employer, and by the worker, for the purpose of protecting the latter against the hazards of illness, invalidity, maternity, old age, death, and other contingencies determined by law. . .

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 65

Social insurance benefits are established as irrenounceable and imprescriptible of workers, with the equitable co-operation of the State, the employers, and the workers themselves, for the purpose of protecting the latter in an effective manner against illness, old age, unemployment, and the other exigencies of labour, in the form that the law may determine. The rights of old-age pensions and death benefits are likewise established.

The administration and governing of the institutions to which the first paragraph of this article refers shall be the duty of organizations elected with equal representation by employers and workers, with the participation of a representative of the State, in the form determined by law, except in the case of that created by the State for the bank of social insurance.

Insurance covering accidents of work and for occupational diseases, at the exclusive expense of the employer and under the control of the State, is declared equally obligatory.

Social insurance funds or reserves may not be transferred, and may not be used for any purposes other than those that determined their creation.

[343]

Article 80

Charitable institutions of the State, Province, and municipality shall offer services of a gratuitous character only to the poor.

Dominican Republic, Constitution of

Article 6

2. Freedom of labour, prohibiting, consequently, the establishment of monopolies for the benefit of private persons. The law may, as the general interest may require, establish the maximum working day, days of rest and vacation, minimum wages and salaries and their methods of payment, social insurance, preponderant participation of nationals in all labour, and, in general, all the measures of protection and assistance of the State that are considered necessary in support of the workers.

Ecuador, Constitution of

Article 174

It shall also be the duty of the State:

- (a) to provide work for the unemployed. . .

Article 188

With respect to Ecuadorians, the following special guarantees shall be established:

(3) the right of State assistance to invalids lacking means of subsistence, if they are unable to procure them by working and there is no person legally bound and able to provide for them. . .

France, Constitution of

Paragraph 11

It guarantees to all, and notably to the child, to the mother and to the aged workers protection, for health, material security, rest and leisure.

Paragraph 12

Every human being who, by reason of his age, physical, or mental condition, or economical situation, finds himself incapable of work has the right to obtain from the community the means of decent living.

Paragraph 13

The nation proclaims the solidarity and equality of all French citizens with regard to the burden resulting from national calamity.

[344]

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 22

It is the function of the State to conserve and improve the general conditions of the Nation, to procure the wellbeing of its inhabitants and to increase wealth by means of the creation and development of institutions of credit and social welfare.

Article 57

The fundamental principles of the organization of labour are:

14th. The means of . . . social welfare necessary for workers. . .

Article 63

Obligatory social insurance is established. . .

It should include at the least, insurance against invalidity, old age, death, illness, and industrial accidents. . .

Article 57

The State will employ the resources that are within its ability to provide employment to all who may lack it.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 191

A law on accidents during work shall establish the responsibilities of the employer and the conditions under which they shall become effective.

Iceland, Constitution ofArticle 70

Anyone who is unable to support himself or his family, and whose maintenance is not the obligation of another person, is entitled to receive relief from public funds, but shall in this case be subject to such obligations as the law prescribes.

United Mexican States, Constitution of the

Article 123

The Congress of the Union shall formulate labour laws which shall apply to workers, day labourers, office holders, domestics, and artisans, and, in a general manner, to all labour contracts without contravening the following basic principles:

14. Employers shall be responsible for labour accidents and for occupational diseases of workers, contracted because of, or in the exercise of, [345] the profession of work that they perform; therefore, the employers shall pay the corresponding indemnification whether death or only temporary or permanent incapacity to work has resulted, in accordance with what the laws determine. This responsibility shall exist even in the case in which the employer contracts for the work through an intermediary.
15. The employer shall be obliged to observe, in the installation of his establishments, the legal regulations on hygiene and health, and to adopt adequate measures for the prevention of accidents in the use of machines, instruments, and the materials of labour, as well as to organize the same in such a manner as to insure the greatest possible guarantee for the health and safety of the workers compatible with the nature of the work, under the penalties established by law in this respect.
29. The passage of the law of social security shall be considered of public interest and it shall include security against disability, of life, from involuntary stoppage of work, against sickness and accidents, and others with analogous purposes.

Nicaragua, Constitution of

Article 80

Maternity has the right of assistance from the State.

Article 100

The law recognizes the following rights of workers and employees:

7. Indemnification of accidents of labour in the cases and form determined by law
9. Medical and hygienic assistance to the worker and to the pregnant woman, assuring the latter, without loss of income, a period of rest before and after childbirth.

Article 104

The State will procure the creation of a national institution of social insurance.

Article 105

The law will regulate the form of establishing an insurance fund in favour of wage earners, through reasonable agreement of the beneficiary and the [346] employer, to cover the risks of sickness, invalidity, old age, and unemployment.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 62

Abandoned physically or mentally deficient, wayward, or delinquent minors are subject to special legislation for supervision, rehabilitation and protection.

Article 71

Maternity in the working class is protected. The woman in a state of pregnancy may not be separated from her employment for this reason. During the six weeks that precede childbirth and the eight that follow it she shall enjoy an obligatory rest, remunerated in the same manner as her work, and she will retain her employment and all the rights belonging to her contract.

Article 93

Every individual has the right to the security of his economic means of subsistence in case of incapacity for working or obtaining remunerated work. Services of social insurance will be given and administered by autonomous entities and will cover cases of illness, maternity, family subsidies, old age, widowhood, orphanage, forced suspension of work, labour accidents, and occupational illnesses, and all other contingencies that may affect the capacity to work and consume. The law will provide for the establishment of such services in the measure that social necessities may require it.

The State will create institutions of social assistance and welfare. The economic and moral rehabilitation of dependent sectors, and attention to the mentally incapacitated, the chronic infirm, and invalids lacking economic resources are fundamental tasks of these.

The State will promote, furthermore, the establishment of cheap dwellings for workers.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 14

... In order to assure to every worker a standard of living compatible with human dignity, the system of contracts, of labour and social insurance, and the conditions of safety and hygiene of buildings, shall be under the watchful [347] and critical supervision of the State.

Peru, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 48

A system providing for the economic consequences of unemployment, age, illness, disability, and death shall be established by law. The law shall encourage institutions of social solidarity, establishments for savings and insurance, and co-operatives.

Poland, Constitution ofArticle 102

Paragraph 2. Every citizen has the right to State protection for his labour, and in case of lack of work, illness, accident, or disability, to the benefits of social insurance which will be determined by a special statute.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution ofArticle 118

... The right to work is ensured by the socialist organization of the national economy, the steady growth of the productive forces of Soviet society, the elimination of the possibility of economic crises and the abolition of unemployment.

Article 120

Citizens of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have the right to maintenance in old age and also in case of sickness or loss of capacity to work.

This right is ensured by the extensive development of social insurance of workers and employees at state expense, free medical service for the working people and the provision of a wide network of health resorts for the use of the working people.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 45

The State shall care for indigents or those lacking sufficient resources who, because of chronic physical or mental inferiority, are incapacitated for work.

Article 54

The law shall provide an impartial and equitable distribution of work.
[348]

Article 58

General retirement funds and social security measures shall be organized in such form as to guarantee to all workingmen, employers, employees, and day labourers adequate retirement pensions and subsidies for cases of accident, sickness, incapacity, enforced unemployment, etc.; and in case of death, a corresponding insurance payment to their families.

An old-age pension is the right of one who has reached the limit of a productive age after long residence in the country, if he lacks resources to provide for his vital needs.

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 20

Paragraph 2. The State protects persons who are engaged as workers or employees especially by assuring them the right of association, by limiting the working day, by ensuring the right to paid annual holidays, by controlling working conditions, by devoting attention to housing conditions and social insurance.

Article 35

The State ensures disabled ex-service men a decent living and free occupational training. The children of fallen soldiers and of war-victims are under the special care of the State.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor

Article 3

The conditions of work under modern large-scale industry make it especially necessary for the working people to have an effective system of social legislation which will provide minimum wages; maximum working hours; guarantee against the employment of child labour; adequate medical care; accident, unemployment and old-age insurance and other such vital measures making for effective social security of the population.

[349]

Article 42

“Everyone has the right to good food and housing and to live in surroundings that are pleasant and healthy.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee) – No provision

Cuba

Articles 11, 12, 13

The right to adequate food.

The right to hygienic living conditions and to clothing suitable for the climate in which he lives.

The right to live in surroundings free from avoidable diseases.

Panama (American Law Institute)

Article 14

Everyone has the right to adequate food and housing. The state has a duty to take such measures as may be necessary to insure that all its residents have an opportunity to obtain these essentials.

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States of America – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 124

The State shall enact measures for protecting the health and life of working men, employees, and farm labourers; it shall see that these have healthy lodgings and it shall promote the construction of cheap houses; it shall also provide technical education for manual labourers. . .

[350]

Chile, Constitution of

Article 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:
14th. Protection. . . , especially as referring to sanitary dwellings. . .

Costa Rica, Constitution of

Article 58

The State shall promote the creation of co-operatives as a means of facilitating better living conditions for workers.

Article 59

The State shall assist in the construction of cheap houses for urban workers and shall create a family patrimony for the rural worker.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 79

The State shall support the creation of low-cost dwellings for workers.

The law shall determine the enterprises that, by employing workers outside of population centres, are obliged to provide adequate housing for workers, as well as schools, infirmaries, and other services and advantages on behalf of the physical and moral wellbeing of the worker and his family.

The conditions which shops, factories, and places of work of all kinds must maintain shall likewise be regulated by law.

Guatemala, Constitution of

Article 67

“Construction of cheap housing and districts for workers shall be developed. . .”

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution of the

Article 123

The Congress of the Union shall formulate labour laws which shall apply to workers, day labourers, office holders, domestics, and artisans, and, in a general manner, to all labour contracts without contravening the following basic principles:

13th. Furthermore, in these same centres of work, when the population exceeds 200,000 inhabitants, a tract of land of not less than 5,000 square metres must be reserved for the establishment of public markets, the erection of buildings destined for municipal services and centres of recreation. Establishments for the sale of intoxicating liquors as well as houses for [351] playing games of chance are prohibited in all work centres.

30th. Furthermore, co-operative societies established for the construction of inexpensive and hygienic houses intended to be acquired on instalments as the property of workingmen, shall be considered of social utility.

Nicaragua, Constitution of

Article 103

The law will foster hygienic and economical housing for the worker. It will also favour the construction of dwellings and districts that combine those conditions.

Paraguay, Constitution of

Article 14

. . . In order to assure to every worker a standard of living compatible with human dignity, the system of contracts of labour and social insurance, and the conditions of safety and hygiene of buildings, shall be under the watchful and critical supervision of the State.

Uruguay, Constitution of

Article 44

The law shall provide for hygienic and economic lodging for working men, sponsoring the construction of living quarters and districts that possess these conditions.

Article 55

Every undertaking, the nature of which requires the residence of the personnel in the respective establishment, shall be obliged to provide adequate food and lodging under conditions established by law.

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 20 (paragraph 2)

“The State protects persons who are engaged as workers or employees especially by assuring them the right of association, by limiting the working day, by ensuring the right to be paid annual holidays, by controlling working conditions, by devoting attention to housing conditions and social insurance.”

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision [352]

Article 43

“Everyone has the right to a fair share of rest and leisure.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile – No provision

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 157

6th. Weekly rest with pay, preferably on Sundays, and within the limits of the technical requirements of the concerns, on the civil and religious holidays, in accordance with the local tradition.

7th. Annual leave with pay.

Byelorussia, Constitution ofArticle 94

See USSR, Constitution Article 119.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 54

(2) All manual or intellectual workers shall have the right to paid annual vacations, the extent and time of which shall be regulated by law but the duration of which may not be fixed in a proportion less than two weeks for each fifty weeks of continuous service.

[353]

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 67

The right of all manual and intellectual workers to one month of vacation on pay for every eleven months of work in every natural year is established. Those who, on account of the type of work or other circumstances, may not have worked the eleven months, shall have the right to vacation on pay for a period proportional to the time worked.

When workers stop work on account of a national holiday or mourning, employers must guarantee them the corresponding wages for this time.

There shall be only four days of national holiday and mourning on which the closing of industrial or commercial establishments or those of public entertainment is obligatory. The remaining official holiday or mourning days shall be celebrated without suspension of the economic activities of the Nation.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 185

“(f) every worker shall enjoy a weekly rest of forty-two continuous hours, and also annual holidays. Wages shall be paid for these vacations, as well as for weekly days of rest and legal holidays. . .”

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 57

“. . . Fundamental principles of the organization of labour. . . are:

... 2nd. ... the worker or employee has the right to one day of rest, remunerated, for each six of work. Days of vacation recognized by law also be remunerated [sic];

...5th. ... Paid annual vacations for workers after one year or more of uninterrupted service. . .”

Honduras, Constitution of

Article 191

The maximum obligatory day's work for wages shall be eight hours. For each six days of work there shall be one of rest.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution of the

Article 123

The Congress of the Union shall formulate labour laws which shall apply to workers, day labourers, office holders, domestics and artisans, and, [354] in a general manner, to all labour contracts without contravening the following basic principles:

4th. The employee shall enjoy at least one day of rest for each six days of labour.

Nicaragua, Constitution of

Article 100

The law recognizes the following rights of workers and employees:

3rd. A maximum limit to the working day determined and regulated by law, in accordance with the nature of the same.

10th. Overtime for night work except in cases it is effected periodically by shifts.

2nd. An obligatory weekly day of rest. . .

12th. A month of vacation with pay after a year of continuous work.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 69

In addition to a weekly rest, every worker will have the right to remunerated vacations.

Ukraine Soviet Socialist Republic, Constitution of the

Article 118

See USSR Constitution Article 119.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution of the

Article 119

“Citizens of the USSR have the right to rest and leisure.

The right to rest and leisure is ensured by the reduction of the working day to seven hours for the overwhelming majority of the workers, the institution of annual vacations with full pay for workers and employees and the provision of a wide network of sanatoriums, rest homes and clubs for the accommodation of the working people.”

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 20 (Paragraph 2)

“The State protects persons who are engaged as workers or employees especially by assuring them the right of association, by limiting the working day, by ensuring the right to paid annual holidays, by controlling working conditions, by devoting attention to housing conditions and social insurance.

[355]

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented
by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[356]

Article 44

“Everyone has the right to participate in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts and to share in the benefits of science.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Committee by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XV

Every person has the right to share in the benefits accruing from the discoveries and inventions of science, under conditions which permit a fair return to the industry and skill of those responsible for the discovery of invention.

The state has the duty to encourage the development of the arts and sciences, but it must see to it that the laws for the protection of trademarks, patents and copyrights are not used for the establishment of monopolies which might prevent all persons from sharing in the benefits of science. It is the duty of the state to protect the citizen against the use of scientific discoveries in a manner to create fear and unrest among the people.

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States

II. 2.

Among the categories of rights which, the United States suggests should be considered is the right “to enjoy minimum standards of economic, social and cultural wellbeing”.

[357]

Section III. National Constitutions

Bolivia, Constitution of 28 October 1938

Article 163

Artistic, historic, and archaeological wealth and that proceeding from religious membership is the cultural treasure of the Nation; it shall be under the protection of the State and may not be exported. Buildings and places declared to have historic or artistic value shall be preserved by the State.

Article 164

The State shall promote the culture of the people.

Brazil, Constitution of 18 September 1946

Article 173

The sciences, letters, and arts are free.

Article 174

Support of culture is a duty of the State.

Sole Paragraph. The law shall promote the creation of research institutes, particularly in connection with establishments of higher education.

Saudi Arabia, Constitution of 29 August 1926

Article 23

Higher education comprises the diffusion of science, education and the arts, and the opening of libraries, schools and religious institutes, great care and attention being taken to act in accordance with the foundations of religions in all the Kingdom of the Hejaz.

Article 24

The Directorate of Public Education should be attached to the office of the Agent-General.

Uruguay, Constitution of 24 March 1934 (amended 1942)

Article 62

Official free primary, intermediate, superior, industrial, and artistic instruction, and physical education is declared a social need; also the creation of scholarships for cultural, scientific, and industrial improvement and specialization, as well as the establishment of popular libraries.

[358]

All institutions of learning shall provide especially for the formation of the moral and civic character of the students.

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 37 (paragraph 2)

“The State assists science and art with a view to developing the people’s culture and prosperity.”

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision [359]

Article 45

“No one shall suffer any discrimination whatsoever because of race, sex, language, religion, or political creed. There shall be full equality before the law in the employment of the rights enunciated in this Bill of Rights.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mr. Tepliakov (USSR):

“... the equality of rights of human beings is understandable, first of all, as citizens of the respective countries of the United Nations this equality of rights must be recognized and proclaimed in the Bill...”*

Mr. Cassin (France):

He shares this opinion and asks for a brief affirmation of the principles of equality of men “not only in their respective states, but in the eyes of international law and in the eyes of the law of the United Nations.”**

Mr. del Rio (Chile):

“...I am prepared to vote in favour of including the rights of equality before the law with reference to certain points mentioned in the paper .4/W,<sup>159</sup> provided we simplify them...”***

Mr. Hodgson (Australia):

He declares that he is of the same opinion as the Chilean representative.****

Dr. Chang (China):

He mentions the international aspect of the principle of equality.*****

[*] H.R. Com. – 1st session 13th meeting – p. 42.

[**] H.R. Com. – 1st session 13th meeting – p. 51.

<sup>159</sup> The reference appears to be to E/CN.4/W.4.

[***] H.R. Com. – 1st session 13th meeting – p. 52.

[****] H.R. Com. – 1st session 13th meeting – p. 52.

[*****] H.R. Com. – 1st session 13th meeting – p. 56–60.

[360]

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XVIII (paragraph 1–4)

All persons shall be equal before the law in respect to the enjoyment of their fundamental rights. There shall be no privileged classes of any kind whatsoever.

All restrictions imposed upon fundamental rights must be such only as are required by the maintenance of public order; and they must be general in character and applicable to all persons within the same class.

Cuba

Article 5

The right to equality before the law without distinction as to race, religion, colour, class or sex.

Panama (American Law Institute)

Everyone has the right to protection against arbitrary discrimination in the provisions and application of the law because of race, religion, sex, or any other reason.

B. Proposals

India

I. (b)

Every human being has the right of equality, without distinction of race, sex, language, religion, nationality or political belief.

United States – No provision

Section III. National Constitutions

Afghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the Government

Article 1

The faith of Afghanistan is the sacred faith of Islam and the official religion and that of the population in general is the Hanafi religion. The king of Afghanistan should be a follower of this religion. Followers of other religions such as Hindus and Jews, who live in Afghanistan, provided they do not infringe the ordinary rules of conduct and propriety, also enjoy protection.

Article 9

All persons residing in the Kingdom of Afghanistan are called Afghan subjects without distinction of creed and religion. Afghan nationality is acquired or lost in accordance with the nationality laws.

[361]

Article 10

All Afghan subjects, although required to observe the injunctions and prohibitions of their Government in religious and political matters, are free to enjoy all right conferred by Shariat Law.

Article 13

All Afghan subjects have equal rights and duties under the Shariat law and the law of the State.

Argentine, Constitution of

Article 16

The Argentine Nation does not admit prerogatives of blood or of birth; in it there are no personal privileges, nor titles of nobility. All its inhabitants are equal before the law, and admissible for employment without any other requisite than fitness. Equality is the basis of taxation and of the public burdens.

Article 20

Aliens enjoy in the territory of the Nation all of the civil rights of the citizen; they may exercise their industry, commerce, and profession; own landed property, purchase it, and sell it; navigate the rivers and coasts; freely practice their religion; make their wills and marry in accordance with the laws. They are not obliged to assume citizenship, nor to pay forced extraordinary taxes. They may obtain naturalization by residing two continuous years in the Nation; but the authorities may shorten this term in favour of anyone so requesting, on adducing and proving services to the Republic.

Belgium, Constitution of

Article 5

Naturalization is granted by the Legislative power

Full naturalization alone admits foreigners to equality with Belgians in the exercise of political rights.

Article 6

There shall be no distinction of classes in the State.

Belgian citizens are equal before the law; they alone are admissible to civil and military offices, with such exceptions as may be established by law for particular cases. [362]

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 19

Aliens shall not, within fifty kilometres of the frontiers, acquire or own, directly or indirectly, soil or subsoil, by any kind of title, under penalty of forfeiting to the benefit of the State the property acquired, except in case of national necessity stated by a special law.

Article 132

The law does not recognize inequality among children; all have the same rights.

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 141

1. All are equal before the law.

Article 155

Coastwise navigation for the transport of goods is the exclusive prerogative of national ships, except in case of public necessity.

The owners, charterers, and commanders of national ships, as well as at least two-thirds of the members of their crews, shall be native Brazilian.

Article 157

Labour legislation and that of social welfare shall obey the following precepts, in addition to others aiming to improve the conditions of workers:

2. Prohibition of salary differences for the same work by reason of race, sex, nationality, or civil status. . .

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 10

The Constitution insures to all the inhabitants of the Republic:

1st. Equality before the law. In Chile there is no privileged class.

China, Constitution ofArticle 7

All citizens of the Republic of China, irrespective of sex, religion, race, class or party affiliation shall be equal before the law.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 16

The authorities of the Republic are instituted to protect the lives, [363] honour, and property of all persons residing in Colombia, and to insure fulfilment of the social duties of the State and of private persons.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 23

The Republic does not recognize hereditary titles, or venal positions, nor permit the establishment of entailed estates.

Article 25

All men are equal before the law.

Article 62

An equal wage or salary shall be paid for equal work under identical conditions, without distinction of persons or sexes. . .

The rural worker shall enjoy the same essential rights as the urban worker. . .

Under equality of condition employers and public or private enterprise have the obligations of giving preference to Costa Rican workers. In the cases occurring, the law shall fix the minimum proportion of native workers, giving consideration not only to their number but also to the total amount of salaries or wages paid them.

Cuba, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 20

All Cubans are equal before the law. The Republic does not recognize exemptions or privileges.

Any discrimination by reason of sex, race, colour or class, and any other kind of discrimination destructive of human dignity, is declared illegal and punishable.

The law shall establish the penalties that violators of this provision shall incur.

Article 43

The married woman enjoys the full advantages of equal civil capacity, with no necessity for marital permission or authorization in order to manage property, freely to engage in trade, to enter industry or a profession, to practise an art, to hold office, and to dispose of the product of her labour.

[364]

Article 44

Children born out of wedlock to a person who at the time of conception may have been able to contract marriage, have the same rights and duties as are stipulated in the preceding paragraph, except for what the law prescribed in regard to inheritance. For this purpose, children born out of wedlock, of married persons, when the latter acknowledge the children, or when the filiation is established by declaration, shall also have equal rights. The law shall regulate the investigation of paternity.

Article 62

For equal work under identical conditions, an equal salary shall always be paid regardless of persons.

Article 74

The ministry of labour shall take care, as an essential part, among others, of its permanent social policy, that discriminatory practices of no kind shall prevail in the distribution of opportunities for labour in industry and commerce. In personnel changes and in the creation of new positions, as well as in new factories, industries, or businesses that may be established, it shall be obligatory that opportunities for labour be distributed without distinctions on a basis of race or colour, provided that requirements of ability are satisfactorily met. It shall be established by law that any other practice shall be punishable and may be prosecuted officially or at the instance of the aggrieved party.

Article 90

The law shall restrictively limit acquisition and possession of land by foreign persons and companies, and shall adopt measures tending to revert the land to Cuban ownership.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution ofArticle 128

1. All citizens of the Czechoslovak Republic shall be in all respects equal before the law and shall enjoy equal civic and political rights whatever be their race, their language or their religion.

[365]

Denmark, Constitution ofArticle 90

Every prerogative attaching in law to persons of the nobility, of title and rank is abolished.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 169

In seeking legal protection, all persons shall be held equal in the eyes of the law. No one may have rights granted him or obligations imposed on him which place him at an advantage or disadvantage compared with others. . .

Egypt, Royal Rescript No. 42 of 1923Article 3

All Egyptian subjects are equal before the law. They shall equally enjoy civil and political rights and shall equally be subject to public charges and duties without distinction of race, language or religion.

El Salvador, Constitution ofArticle 5

No hereditary offices or privileges are recognized in the Republic.

Article 23

All men are equal before the law.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen 1789Article 1

Men are born and remain free and equal in respect of rights. Social distinction shall be based solely upon public utility.

Article 6

The law is an expression of the common will. All citizens have a right to concur either personally or by their representation in its formation. It should be the same for all whether it protects or punishes; and all being equal in its right are equally eligible to all honours, places and employment according to their different abilities without any other distinction than that of their virtues and talents.

France, Constitution ofParagraph 1

On the morrow of the victory of the free peoples over the regimes that attempted to enslave and degrade the human person, the French people proclaims again that every human being, without distinction of race, [366] religion or belief, possesses inalienable and sacred rights. It solemnly reaffirms the freedoms of man and of the citizen consecrated by the Declaration of Rights of 1789 and the fundamental principles recognized by the laws of the Republic.

Paragraph 3

The law guarantees to women in all domains equal rights with those of men.

Paragraph 17

France forms with the peoples overseas a union founded on the equality of rights and duties without distinction of race or religion.

Paragraph 19

Faithful to her traditional mission, France proposes to guide the peoples for whom she has assumed responsibility towards freedom to govern themselves and democratically to manage their own affairs; putting aside all systems of colonization founded on arbitrary power; she guarantees to all access to public office and the exercise of the individual or collective rights and liberties proclaimed or confirmed above.

French Republic, Constitution of the

Article 1

France is a republic, indivisible, secular, democratic and social.

Article 44

Members of families that once reigned over France shall not be eligible for the Presidency of the Republic.

Article 80

All nationals of the Overseas Territories shall have the status of citizens, in the same capacity as French nationals of Metropolitan France or the Overseas Territories. Special laws shall determine the conditions under which they may exercise their rights as citizens.

Article 81

All citizens and nationals of territories within the French Union shall have the status of citizens of the French Union, which ensures [367] them the enjoyments of the rights and liberties guaranteed by the Preamble of the present Constitution.

Article 82

Those citizens who do not have French civil status shall retain their personal status so long as they do not renounce it.

This status may in no case constitute a ground for refusing or restricting the rights and liberties pertaining to the status of French citizens.

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 3

The Greeks are equal in the eye of the law and contribute without distinction to the public burdens according to their ability; and only Greek citizens are admissible to all public employments, saving the special exceptions introduced by special laws. Citizens are those who have acquired or shall acquire the qualifications of citizenship in accordance with the laws of the State. Titles of nobility or distinction are neither conferred on Greek citizens nor recognized to them.

Guatemala, Constitution ofArticle 21

Every person enjoys the guarantees that this constitution establishes, without further restrictions than those that the latter itself stipulates. As an equal qualification, any discrimination by reason of relationship, sex, race, colour, class, religious beliefs, or political ideas is declared illegal and punishable.

Article 57

Fundamental principles of the organization of labour. . . are:

6. Equality of wages or pay corresponding to equal work and under identical conditions, given in the same enterprise, without distinction of age, race, sex, or nationality, paying attention only to capacity, efficiency and honesty.

[368]

7. Preference for Guatemala workers under equality of conditions, fixing the minimum proportion of nationals for each business or enterprise.

Article 74

. . . The organization of the family. . . shall rest upon the absolute equality of rights of both husband and wife. . .

Haiti, Constitution ofArticle 11

Haitians are equal before the law, subject to the advantages conferred on natural-born Haitians. They shall also be eligible, without any discrimination, for civil and military employment under the conditions established by law.

Article 18

The freedom of labour shall be exercised under the control and supervision of the State and subject to the conditions prescribed by law.

Nevertheless, only natural born Haitians may engage in retail trade, practice handicrafts and pursue all other commercial and professional activities as determined by law.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 30

The Constitution guarantees to all inhabitants of Honduras, whether they be natives or aliens, inviolability of human life, individual security, liberty, equality before the law, and property.

Article 69

All Hondurans are equal before the law.

The Republic does not recognize exemptions or personal privileges.

Article 71

Ministers of the various religions shall not exercise public offices.

Iceland, Constitution ofArticle 78

No privilege attached to nobility, title or rank may be established by law.
[369]

India, Constitution ofArticle 298

1. No subject of His Majesty domiciled in India shall on grounds only of religion, place of birth, descent, colour or any of them be ineligible for office under the Crown in India, or be prohibited on any such grounds from acquiring holding or disposing of property or carrying on any occupation, trade, business or profession in British India.

2. Nothing in this section shall effect the operation of any law which -
- (a) prohibits, either absolutely or subject to exceptions, the sale or mortgage of agricultural land situated in any particular area, and owned by a person belonging to some class recognized by the law as being a class of persons engaged in or connected with agriculture in that area, to any person not belonging to any such class; or
  - (b) recognizes the existence of some right, privilege or disability attaching to members of a community by virtue of some personal law or custom having the force of law.
3. Nothing in this section shall be construed as derogating from the special responsibility of the Governor-General or of a Governor for the safeguarding of the legitimate interests of minorities.

Iran, The Supplementary Fundamental Laws

Article 8

The people of the Persian Empire are to enjoy equal rights before the law.

Iraq, Constitution of

Article 6

There shall be no differentiation in the rights of Iraqis before the law, whatever differences may exist in language, race, or creed.

Article 18

Iraq nationals are equal in the enjoyment of civil and political rights and the performance of public duties and obligations. No [370] distinction shall be made between them on account of origin, language or religion.

Lebanon, Constitution of

Article 7

All Lebanese shall be equal in the eyes of the law. They shall enjoy civil and political rights and shall also be liable to public charge and obligations without any distinction whatsoever being made.

Liberia, Constitution ofArticle 1

Section 1. All are born equally free and independent, and have certain natural, inherent and inalienable rights, among which are the rights of enjoying and defending life and liberty, of acquiring, possessing and protecting property, and of pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness.

Article 13

None but negroes or persons of negro descent shall be eligible for citizenship in this Republic.

Luxembourg, Constitution ofArticle 11

There shall be no distinction of rank in the State. Luxembourg nationals are equal before the law; they alone shall be admissible to civil and military offices, save where exceptions may be established by law for specific cases.

United Mexican States, Constitution of theArticle 9

An assembly or meeting that has as its object the formulating of a petition or the presenting of a protest regarding some act of an authority shall not be considered illegal and may not be dissolved, provided insults are not voiced against said authority nor any violence or threats used to intimidation or oblige him to decide in the manner that they desired.

The right of associating or meeting peacefully for any lawful purpose shall not be infringed, but only citizens of the Republic may exercise it in taking part in the political affairs of the country. No [371] armed assembly has the right of deliberating.

Article 12

Neither titles of nobility nor hereditary privileges or honours shall be granted to the United Mexican States, nor shall those awarded by any other country be recognized.

Article 13

No person may be judged by private laws or special tribunals. No person or corporation may have special privileges, nor enjoy greater emoluments than those that may be compensation for public services and are fixed by law. The military code exists for crimes and offences against military discipline; but the military tribunals may in no case and for no cause extend their jurisdiction over persons who do not belong to the army. Should a civilian be implicated in crime or offence of a military character, the proper civil authority shall hear the case.

Article 27

... The capacity to acquire ownership of lands and waters of the Nation shall be subject to the following regulations:

1. Only Mexicans by birth or by naturalization or Mexican companies have the right to acquire ownership of lands, waters, and their appurtenances or to obtain concessions for the exploitation of mines, waters, or combustible minerals in the Mexican Republic. The State may concede the same right to aliens provided they agree before the Ministry of Foreign Relations to consider themselves as nationals with respect to said properties and not to invoke the protection of their Governments in reference to same; should they fail to respect the agreement, they shall be penalized by losing to the benefit of the Nation the properties they may have acquired.

Under no consideration may aliens acquire direct ownership over lands and waters within a zone 100 kilometres wide along the frontiers, [372] or fifty kilometres along the coast. . .

Article 32

Mexicans shall have preference over aliens, under equal circumstances, for all kinds of concessions and for all Government positions, offices, or commissions in which the status of citizenship is not indispensable. No alien may serve in the army, or in the police or public safety forces during time of peace.

To belong to the national navy or the air force and to discharge any commission or office in them, it is necessary to be a Mexican by birth. The same qualification is necessary for pilots, captains, masters, machinists, mechanics and, in a general way, for all of the crew of any vessel or airplane flying the flag of the Mexican merchant marine. Mexican citizenship by birth shall also be required in order to perform any office of captain of the port and all pilotage services, and command of airdromes, as well as the duties of custom inspector for the Republic.

Article 123

The Congress of the Union shall formulate labour laws which shall apply to workers, day labourers, office holders, domestics, and artisans, and in a general manner, to all labour contracts without contravening the following basic principles:

7. The same payment shall be made for equal work, without taking into account sex or nationality.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 34

The Constitution and the laws equally protect and obligate all the inhabitants of the Republic. Special laws may be enacted only when the nature of things so demands.

Article 54

No privileged class may exist.
[373]

Article 106

All Nicaraguans are equal before the law, except in regard to women on account of differences inherent in their nature or where the good of the family is concerned.

Article 107

There will be no privileges by reason of birth, nobility, race, or social condition, or any distinction other than those of ability or virtue.

Article 108

No other titles will be granted than those belonging to an office, profession or university degree.

Panama, Constitution of the Republic ofArticle 21

All Panamanians and aliens are equal before the law.

There will be no personal privileges or exemptions or distinctions by reason of race, birth, social class, sex, religion, or political ideas, but the law may, for reasons of health, morality, public security, and national economy, subordinate aliens in general to special conditions or refuse the exercise of determined activities. The law or the authorities may, furthermore, as the case may be, take measures that affect exclusively the nationals of determined countries in case of war or in conformity with what is established by public treaties.

Article 55

Matrimony is the legal foundation of the family, resting on the equality of rights of the spouses, and it may be dissolved in accordance with the law.

Article 66

An equal salary or wage always belongs to equal work, under identical conditions, whoever may be the persons who perform it, without distinction of sex or nationality.

[374]

Article 80

No educational institution may refuse to admit students by reason of the nature of the union of their ancestors or guardians or because of social, racial, or political differences.

The violation of this precept by private educational institutions will cause the loss of the official subvention if it had one, that of the power of having its degrees and certificates recognized by the State, if it possessed the power, and if it should be guilty of contempt, the loss of the right to continue imparting instruction.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 23

The civil rights of women shall be regulated by law, taking heed of the unity of the family, the equality of woman and man, and the diversity of their respective functions in society.

Article 33

The Paraguayan Nation does not admit prerogatives of blood or of birth; there are no personal privileges or titles of nobility. All the inhabitants of the Republic are equal before the law. . .

Article 36

Aliens enjoy the civil rights of the citizen within the territory of the Republic, in accordance with the laws regulating their exercise; they may practice their industry, trade, or profession; they may own land, bequeath property, and marry. . .

Peru, Constitution of the Republic of

Article 17

Mercantile companies, national or foreign, are subject without restriction to the laws of the Republic. In any contract between the State and aliens, or in the concessions that the former may grant in favour of aliens, the express submission of the latter to the laws and tribunals of the Republic and their renunciation of all diplomatic claims must be made clear.

[375]

Article 23

The Constitution and the laws protect and obligate all the inhabitants of the Republic equally. Special laws may be enacted because the nature of things may require it, but not because of any difference between persons.

Article 32

The same provision regarding property applies to aliens as well as Peruvians, except that in no case may said aliens make use of their exceptional position or resort to diplomatic appeals.

Philippines, Constitution of the

Article 3

Section 1.

(1) No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall any person be denied the equal protection of the laws.

(7) No law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed. No religious test shall be required for the exercise of civil or political rights.

(9) No law granting a title of nobility shall be enacted, and no person holding any office of profit or trust, shall without the consent of the National Assembly, accept any present, emolument, office or title of any kind whatever from any foreign state.

(21) Free access to the courts shall not be denied to any person by reason of poverty.

Article 5

Section 1. Suffrage may be exercised by male citizens of the Philippines not otherwise disqualified by law, who are twenty-one years of age or over and are able to read and write, and who shall have resided in the Philippines for one year and in the municipality [376] wherein they propose to vote for at least six months preceding the election. The National Assembly shall extend the right of suffrage to women, if in a plebiscite which shall be held for that purpose within two years after the adoption of this Constitution, not less than three hundred thousand women possessing the necessary qualifications shall vote affirmatively on the question.

Poland, Constitution of

Article 122

The rules as to citizens' rights apply also to persons belonging to the armed force. Special military statutes define exceptions to this principle.

Siam, Constitution of

Article 1

The Kingdom of Siam is one and indivisible. The Siamese people of whatever race or religion are all equally entitled to the protection of this Constitution.

Article 12

Subject to the provisions of this Constitution, all persons are equal before the law. Titles acquired by birth, by bestowal, or in any other way do not confer any privilege whatever.

Syria, Constitution ofArticle 6

All Syrians shall be equal in the eyes of the law. They shall enjoy equal civil and political rights; they shall be bound by the same obligations and subjected to the same charges. No distinction shall be made between them in respect of religion, faith, race or language.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 88

Paragraph 1. The people of Turkey, regardless of religion and race, are Turks as regards citizenship.

Article 69

All Turks are equal before the laws and expected conscientiously to abide by them.

[377]

Every type of group, class, family and individual privilege is abolished and prohibited.

United States of America, Constitution of14th Amendment

1. . . . nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

15th Amendment

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, colour, or previous condition of servitude.

19th Amendment

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution ofArticle 122

Women in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics are accorded equal rights with men in all spheres of economic, state, cultural and political life.

The possibility of exercising these rights is ensured to women by granting them an equal right with men to work, payment for work, rest and leisure, social insurance and education, and by state protection of the interests of mother and child, pre-maternity and maternity leave with full pay, and the provision of a wide network of maternity homes, nurseries and kindergartens.

Article 123

Equality of rights of citizens of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, irrespective of their nationality or race, in all spheres of economic, state, cultural, social and political life, is an infeasible law.

Any direct or indirect restriction of the rights of, or conversely, any establishment of direct or indirect privileges for, citizens on [378] account of their race or nationality, as well of any advocacy of racial or national exclusiveness or hatred and contempt, is punishable by law.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 8

All persons are equal before the law, no other difference being recognized among them than that of talent or virtue.

Article 41

Parents shall have the same obligations toward children born out of wedlock as toward those born in marriage. . .

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 21

All citizens of the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia are equal before the law and enjoy equal rights regardless of nationality, race and creed.

No privileges on account of birth, position, property status or degree of education are recognized.

Any act granting privileges to citizens or limiting their rights on grounds of difference of nationality, race and creed, and any propagation of national, racial and religious hatred and discord are contrary to the Constitution and punishable.

Article 24

Paragraph 1. Women have equal rights with men in all fields of State, economic and social-political life.

Paragraph 2. Women have the right to the same pay as that received by men for the same work and as workers or employees they enjoy special protection.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor

Article 1

Every human being, – irrespective of race, colour, creed, sex or national origin – has the right to pursue his or her work and spiritual [379] development in conditions of freedom and dignity.

Article 12

The key to the entire approach of human rights must be the placing of respect for human personality and welfare above all else. In this spirit, the above rights can have tangible meaning and practical application only if –

(a) All human beings have real security and are free from discrimination on account of race, colour, creed or difference of political belief from the government in control or the party in power.

(c) All economic or political discrimination and punishment for differences of political opinion or religious belief and practices are to be eliminated. The threat of being sent to concentration or labour camps as a punishment for difference of opinion with any government authority or dominant political party must be completely removed.

[380]

Article 46

“In States inhabited by a substantial number of persons of a race, language or religion other than those of the majority of the population, persons belonging to such ethnic, linguistic or religious minorities shall have the right to establish and maintain, out of an equitable proportion of any public funds available for the purpose, their schools and cultural and religious institutions, and to use their own language before the courts and other authorities and organs of the State and in the press and in public assembly.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

Mrs. Mehta (India):

Remembering the case of Indians, Chinese, Japanese and other peoples scattered in the world, Mrs. Mehta said:

“An effort must be made to define in precise, legal and practical language, as to what a minority is, as to what discrimination is. Additional to this, a definition must be made forthwith as to what specific safeguards must be incorporated in the proposed bill of human rights against the danger of assimilation of minorities where they exist.”*

Mr. Hodgson (Australia):

“... What do we see when we speak of Human Rights? We refer to, or we have in mind minorities.”**

General Romulo (Philippines):

“... the bill of rights, which we have been commissioned to draw up, should take into account... the rights of minority groups within the state...”***

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile – No provision

[*] H.R. Com. – 2nd meeting – 1st session – page 32.

[**] H.R. Com. – 2nd meeting – 1st session – page 42.

[***] H.R. Com. – 9th meeting – 1st session – page 13–20.

[381]

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. Constitutions

Belgium, Constitution of

Article 23

The use of the languages spoken in Belgium is optional. This may be regulated only by law and only for acts of public authority and for judicial proceedings.

Byelorussia, Constitution of

Article 86

Article 96

See Article 110 and 121 of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Constitution.

China, Constitution of

Article 5

All racial groups of the Republic of China shall enjoy equality.

Article 168

The state shall accord legal protection to the status of the racial groups in the border regions, and shall render special assistance to their undertakings of local self-government.

Article 169

The State shall positively undertake and foster the development of education, culture, communications, river conservancy, public health and other economic and social enterprises of the racial groups in the border region. . .

Czechoslovakia, Constitution of

Article 130

In so far as citizens of the Czechoslovak Republic are entitled by the [382] common law to establish, manage and administer at their own cost philanthropic religious, or social institutions, they are all equal, no matter what be their nationality, language, religion or race and may, in such institutions, make use of their own language and worship according to their own religious ceremonies.

Article 131

In towns and districts in which there lives a considerable fraction of Czechoslovak citizens speaking a language other than Czechoslovak, the children of such Czechoslovak citizens shall, in public instruction and within the bounds of the general regulation relating thereto, be guaranteed a due opportunity to receive instruction in their own tongue. The Czechoslovak language at the same time may be prescribed as a compulsory subject of instruction.

Article 132

In towns and districts where there is living a considerable fraction of Czechoslovak citizens belonging to some minority whether in respect of religion, or nationality, or language and where specific sums of money from public funds are set out in the state budget or in the budget of local or other public authorities to be devoted to education, religion, or philanthropy a due share in the use and enjoyment of such sums shall be secured to such minorities within the limits of the general regulations for public administration.

Article 134

Every manner whatsoever of forcible denationalization is prohibited. Non-observance of this principle may be proclaimed by law to be a punishable act.

Ecuador, Constitution ofArticle 185

It shall be the duty of the public authorities to promote, in the most suitable manner, the moral, intellectual, economic and social advancement of natives and dwellers in the coastal jungle.

Article 171

Both public and private instruction shall pay special attention to [383] the native race.

Egypt, Royal RescriptArticle 16

No restriction may be imposed on the free use of any language in private relations, commerce, religion, the press or publications of any kind or at public assemblies.

Iraq, Constitution ofArticle 16

The various communities shall have the right of establishing and maintaining schools for the instruction of their members in their own tongues, provided that such instruction is carried out in conformity with such general programmes as may be prescribed by law.

Article 17

Arabic shall be the official language, except as may be prescribed by a special law.

Lebanon, Constitution ofArticle 10

There shall be no interference with public instruction as long as it is not contrary to public order and morals and does not affect the dignity of the various creeds. The communities shall be entitled to maintain their own schools, provided that they conform to the general requirement relating to public instruction laid down by the State.

Article 11

Arabic shall be the official national language in all Government departments. French shall also be an official language; the cases in which it is to be used shall be determined by a special law.

Luxembourg, Constitution ofArticle 29

The use of the German and French languages shall be optional; their use may not be restricted.

Panama, Constitution ofArticle 94

The State will give special protection to peasant and indigenous communities for the purpose of integrating them in an effective manner in the national community with regard to their standards of living, economic, [384] political and intellectual. Action relative to indigenous communities will be effected to conserve and develop at the same time the values of the autonomous culture.

Article 96

In addition to the general ends of national culture, schools for peasants and Indians must satisfy the following:

1. To create a consciousness of the duties, rights, dignity, and possibilities of the Panamanian citizen.
2. To awaken interest in country life by means of objective instruction in the material elements indispensable for a secure, healthful, and decent rural life; and
3. To carry to peasant and indigenous homes the action of agencies of education and assistance that tend to elevate their moral, cultural, and social level.

Poland, Constitution of

Article 109

Every citizen has the right of preserving his nationalities and developing his mother tongue and national characteristics.

Special statutes of the state will guarantee to minorities in the Polish State the full and free development of their national characteristics, with the assistance of autonomous minority unions, endowed with the character of public law organizations, within the limits of unions of general self-government.

The state will have, in regard to their activity, the right of control and of supplementing their financial means in case of need.

Article 110

\ Polish citizens belonging to national, religious, or linguistic minorities have the same right as other citizens of founding, supervising and administering at their own expense, charitable, religious, and social institutions, schools and other educational institutions and of using freely therein their language, and observing the rules of their religion.

[385]

South Africa, Constitution ofArticle 147 (Part VIII)

The control and administration of native affairs and of matters specially or differentially affecting Asiatics throughout the Union shall vest in the Governor-General-in-Council, who shall exercise all special powers in regard to native administration hitherto vested in the Governors of the Colonies or exercised by them as supreme chiefs, and any lands vested in the Governor or Governor and Executive Council of any Colony for the purpose of reserves for native locations shall vest in the Governor-General-in-Council, who shall exercise all special powers in relation to such reserves as may hitherto have been exercisable by any such Governor or Governor and Executive Council, and no lands set aside for the occupation of natives which cannot at the establishment of the Union be alienated except by an Act of the Colonial Legislature shall be alienated or in any way diverted from the purposes for which they are set apart except under the authority of an Act of Parliament.

Article 137 (Part VIII)

Both the English and Dutch languages shall be official languages of the Union, and shall be treated on a footing of equality, and possess and enjoy equal freedom, rights and privileges; all records, journals and proceedings of Parliament shall be kept in both languages, and all Bills, Acts, and notices of general public importance or interest issued by the Government of the Union shall be in both languages.

Syria, Constitution ofArticle 24

Arabic shall be the official language in all the public services, except in so far as other languages may be used in addition, in virtue of a law or an international agreement.

Article 28

The rights of the different religious communities shall be guaranteed, and such bodies may found schools for the education of children in their [386] own language, provided always that they conform to the principles laid down by the law.

Ukraine, Constitution of

Article 109

Article 120

See Article 110 and 121 of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Constitution.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Constitution of

Article 110

Judicial proceedings are conducted in the language of the Union Republic, Autonomous Republic or Autonomous Region, persons not knowing this language being guaranteed to every opportunity of fully acquainting themselves with the material of the case through an interpreter and likewise the right to use their own language in court.

Article 121

Citizens of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have the right to education. This right is ensured. . . by instruction in schools being conducted in the native language. . .

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 13

National minorities in the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia enjoy the right to and protection of their own cultural development and the free use of their own language.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[387]

Article 47

“It is the duty of each member State to respect and protect the rights enunciated in this Bill of Rights. The State shall, when necessary, co-operate with other States to that end.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

- None -

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

A. Drafts of International Declarations

Chile (Inter-American Juridical Committee)

Article XVIII (paragraph 2–3)

It is the duty of the state to respect the fundamental rights of all persons within its jurisdiction and to protect them in the enjoyment of their rights against interference by other persons.

In all proceedings in relation to fundamental rights the state must act in accordance with due process of law and must assure to every person the equal protection of the law.

Cuba – No provision

Panama – No provision

B. Proposals

India – No provision

United States – No provision

Section III. Constitutions

China, Constitution of

Article 141

The foreign policy of the Republic of China shall, in a spirit of independence and initiative and on the basis of the principles of equality and reciprocity, cultivate good neighbourliness with other nations and respect treaties and the United Nations Charter in order to [338] protect the rights and interests of overseas Chinese nationals, promote international co-operation, advance international justice and ensure world peace.

Costa Rica, Constitution of

Article 65

The rights and benefits to which this section refers (i.e. Social Guarantees) are irrenounceable. Their enunciation does not exclude others derived from the Christian principle of social justice that shall be applicable equally to all elements participating in the process of production and regulated by a social and labour code, for the purpose of attaining a permanent policy of national solidarity.

El Salvador, Constitution of

Article 40

The rights and guarantees that this Constitution enumerates shall not be understood as a denial of other rights and guarantees not enumerated, but are born of the principle of the sovereignty of the people and of the republican form of government.

Article 8

El Salvador recognizes rights and duties prior and superior to the positive law, having as principles liberty, equality, and fraternity, and based on the family, labour, property, and public order.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution of

Article 1

Every person in the United Mexican States shall enjoy the guarantees that this Constitution grants, which may neither be restricted nor suspended, except in the cases and under the conditions herein established.

Article 15

The negotiation of treaties for the extradition of political offenders or those covering civil delinquents who may have been slaves in the country where they committed the offence shall not be authorized; nor shall conventions or treaties be made by virtue of which guarantees and rights established for the individual and the citizen by this Constitution are altered.

[389]

Nicaragua, Constitution of

Article 35

Authorities are instituted in order to guarantee all the inhabitants of Nicaragua in their lives and personal integrity, their good name and reputation, and in order to secure the right to property, and the fulfilment of the social duties of the State and of individuals.

Panama, Constitution of

Article 19

The authorities of the Republic are instituted in order to protect, in their life, honour, and property, nationals wherever they may be found and aliens who are under its jurisdiction; to assure the effectiveness of individual and social rights and duties, and to comply and cause compliance with the Constitution and the law.

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[390]

Article 48

“The provisions of this International Bill of Rights shall be deemed fundamental principles of international law and of the national law of each of the member States of the United Nations. Their observance is therefore a matter of international concern and it shall be within the jurisdiction of the United Nations to discuss any violation thereof.”

Section I. Observations Made by Members of the Human Rights Commission

– None –

Section II. Drafts of International Declarations or Proposals Submitted to the Commission by Governments

No provisions

Section III. National Constitutions

No provision

Section IV. Draft International Declarations Presented by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

American Federation of Labor – No provision

[391]

Other Provisions Contained in the National Constitutions not Directly Related to Any Article of the Draft

1. Emergency

Afghanistan, Fundamental Principles of the Government

Article 18

Levies of money and forced labour are prohibited, except during time of war.

Argentine, Constitution of

Article 23

In case of international commotion of foreign attack endangering the exercise of this Constitution and of the authorities created by it, the Province or territory in which the disturbance of order exists shall be declared in a state of siege, the constitutional guarantees there being suspended. But during this suspension the President of the Republic shall not condemn by himself nor apply penalties. His power shall be limited, in such a case, with respect to persons, to arresting them or conveying them from one point of the Nation to another, if they should not prefer to leave the Argentine territory.

Bolivia, Constitution ofArticle 34

In cases of grave danger by reason of internal disturbance or foreign war, the chief of the executive power may, with the affirmative action of the Council of Ministers, declare a state of siege in the part of the territory where it may be necessary. . .

3rd. The guarantees and rights sanctioned by this Constitution shall not in general be suspended with the declaration of a state of siege; but they may be so with respect to designated persons fundamentally accused of plotting against the tranquillity of the Republic, according to the provisions of the following paragraphs.

Brazil, Constitution ofArticle 208

. . . When the state of siege has been decreed, the president of the Senate shall immediately convoke the national Congress, to assemble within fifteen days, to approve or disapprove the law.

[392]

Article 212

The decree of state of siege shall always specify the regions it is to cover.

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 72

Special attributes of the President are:

17th. To declare in a state of assembly one or more provinces invaded or menaced in case of foreign war, and in a state of siege one or several points of the Republic in case of foreign attack.

In case of interior disturbances the declaration of one or more places being in a state of siege belongs to Congress, but if Congress be not in session, the President may make it for a determined period.

If on the meeting of Congress the period named be not expired, the declaration made by the President of the Republic shall be understood as a proposal of law.

Through the declaration of a state of siege, there is conceded to the President of the Republic only the authority to transfer persons from one department to another and to confine them in their own houses, or in places other than jails, or intended for the confinement or imprisonment of ordinary criminals.

Measures taken on account of the state of siege shall have no greater duration than the siege, but thereby shall not be infringed the constitutional guarantees granted to Deputies and Senators.

Costa Rica, Constitution of

Article 82

The exclusive powers of the Congress are:

7th. To suspend, by two-thirds vote of those present, the individual guarantees designated in articles 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 36, 37, 40 and 41 of the Fundamental Law itself, in case the Republic finds itself in imminent danger, whether it be because of foreign aggression, or by reason of internal uprising. This suspension shall be of all these guarantees or of only part of them, for all the territory of the Republic or for a part of it, [393] and for seventy days or less. The Executive may not, with respect to persons, do more than impose arrest in a place not assigned for common criminals, or to decree their confinement in inhabited places. In no case may they be tortured.

The Executive shall give a report to the Congress in its next meeting, of the means taken to preserve public order or to maintain the security of the State, which shall cease immediately when the guarantees are re-established.

Sole Section. The suspension to which this provision refers, shall never include the guarantees designated in article 45, Title III, Section 2, of this Constitution.

Cuba, Constitution of

Article 41

The guarantee of the rights recognized in articles 26, 27, 28, 29, 30 (first and second paragraphs), 32, 33, 36, and 37 (first paragraph) of this Constitution may be suspended in all or in part of the national territory, for a period not greater than forty-five calendar days, whenever the security of the State may require it, or in case of war or invasion of the national territory, grave disturbance of order, or other happenings profoundly disturbing the public tranquillity.

Suspension of the constitutional guarantees may be carried out only by means of a special law enacted by the Congress, or by means of a decree of the Executive; however, in the latter case, and in the same decree of suspension, the Congress shall be convened within a period of forty-eight hours and assembled as a single body to ratify or refuse the suspension, balloting by name and by a majority of votes. In case the Congress, thus assembled, should vote against the suspension, the guarantees shall automatically stand re-established.

Article 42

The territory in which the guarantees referred to in the preceding article may have been suspended, shall be governed by the law of public [394] order previously enacted; however, neither in the said law, nor in any other, may there be suspension of any guarantees other than those mentioned. Likewise, no statement of new crimes shall be made, or any penalties imposed, other than those established by law at the time of the suspension.

Those arrested for reasons that may have been stipulated in the suspension must be confined in special places designated for persons prosecuted or punished for political or social crimes.

The Executive is forbidden to hold any person in arrest for more than ten days without delivering him to judicial authority.

Czechoslovakia, Constitution of

Article 113

3. Restrictions may be imposed in cases of assembly in places which serve as public thoroughfares, in cases of establishment of associations for the purpose of profit and in cases of the participation of foreigners in political associations. The law shall also state what restrictions shall be placed on the principles of the foregoing paragraphs in time of war or in case of events taking place within the State seriously threatening the republican form of government, the Constitution or public peace and order.

Dominican Republic, Constitution of

Article 33

The powers of the Congress are:

7th. To declare a state of siege in case of disturbance of the public peace, and to suspend, where that exists, and for the time of its duration, individual rights established in article 6, clauses 5, 6, 10 and 12, Letters (b), (d), and (e).

8th. In case the national sovereignty is found exposed to serious or imminent danger, the Congress may declare that a state of national emergency exists, suspending the individual rights established in Clause 2 to Clause 12, both inclusive, of article 6 of this Constitution. If the Congress shall not have been convened, the President of the Republic may [395] order the same measure, with the obligation of summoning the Congress, by the same act, so that it shall meet within the next ten days, in order to decide upon the maintenance or revocation of the said measure. If it opposes, or if the Congress does not convene, said measure will cease automatically.

Egypt, Royal Rescript

Article 155

No provision of the present Constitution may on any pretext be suspended, except temporarily in time of war, during a state of siege, and in accordance with the procedure prescribed by law. In no case may the meeting of Parliament in the conditions laid down by the present Constitution be impeded.

Ethiopia, Constitution of

Article 29

The provisions of this chapter shall not preclude the taking of any measures by the Emperor in virtue of his supreme power in the event of war or public disaster threatening the interest of the nation.

Haiti, Constitution of

Article 142

No place and no part of the national territory may be declared in a state of emergency except in the case of civil disturbances or imminent invasion by foreign forces.

The act of the President of Haiti proclaiming a state of emergency must be signed by the Council of Secretaries of State and prescribe the immediate summoning of the Legislative Assembly which shall decide on the expediency of the measure.

The Legislative Assembly shall decree jointly with the Executive what Constitutional guarantees may be suspended in those parts of the national territory placed in a state of emergency.

Article 143

The conditions obtaining a state of emergency shall be governed by a special law.
[396]

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 83

The guarantees established in articles 32, 34, 35, 42, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 59, the first paragraph of 61, 67, 73, and 79 may be suspended temporarily, in all or part of the Republic, when the safety of the State so requires because of invasion of the territory, serious disturbance of order that threatens public peace, an epidemic, or other calamity.

During the suspension, the territory in which the afore-mentioned guarantees were suspended shall be governed by the law of state of siege; but the suspension of any other guarantees than those mentioned cannot be made by the said law or by any other.

During the suspension of the afore-mentioned guarantees, declaration of new offences shall not be made, nor shall other penalties be imposed save those established in laws existing at the time of the decree of suspension.

Article 84

The suspension of guarantees may be decreed only by the Congress, or if it is not in session, by the Executive; but the latter may not decree suspension for more than sixty days, except by a new declaration. In all cases he must give an account to the Congress of the measures taken during the suspension of guarantees.

Iraq, Constitution ofArticle 120

Should disturbances occur, or should anything happen indicating the likelihood of the occurrence of events of such a character in any part whatsoever of Iraq, or should there be a menace of hostile attack upon any part whatsoever of Iraq, the King shall have power, subject to the approval of the Council of Ministers, to proclaim martial law provisionally in these districts of Iraq exposed to the danger of disturbances or attacks. The application of the existing laws and regulations may be suspended by the proclamation declaring martial law in force, in such places and to such extent as may be prescribed in such proclamation, provided that those [397] charged with the execution of the proclamation shall be subject to any legal consequences of their acts, until a special law has been passed by Parliament exempting them therefrom. The method of administration of the places in which martial law has been declared to be in force shall be prescribed by Royal Irada.

Upon the occurrence of danger or rebellion or anything which disturbs the peace, in any part of Iraq, the King may, with the consent of the Council of Ministers, notify a state of emergency in the whole of Iraq, or in any part thereof. The districts affected by the notification shall provide for trial, by Special Courts, of those who commit specified offences, and prescribe the administrative measures to be taken by specified authorities.

Mexico (United Mexican States), Constitution of

Article 29

In case of invasion, of serious disturbances of the public peace, or any other emergency that may place the people in great danger or conflict, only the President of the Mexican Republic, in agreement with the Council of Ministers and with the approval of the Congress of the Union, and should the latter be in recess, of the permanent committee, may suspend throughout the country or in any part specified, the guarantees that might be an obstacle to a rapid and easy adjustment of the situation; but such suspension shall be enforced only for a limited time by means of general prohibitions and shall not be confined to any particular individual. If the suspension takes place while the Congress is in session the latter shall grant the powers deemed necessary so that the Executive may meet the situation. If the suspension is made in time of recess the Congress shall be convoked without delay for the granting of such powers.

Panama, Constitution of

Article 49

In case of war, grave disturbance of public order, or of urgent social interest, that demand rapid measures, the Executive may decree expropriation or occupation of private property and the indemnification [398] need not be prior.

When restitution of the object seized may be feasible, the seizure will be only for the time in which the circumstances that caused it continue.

The State is always responsible for every expropriation thus carried out by the Executive and for the damage and injuries caused by the seizure and will pay its value as quickly as the reason determining the expropriation or seizure may have ended.

Article 52

In case of foreign war or internal disturbance that threatens peace or public order, all of the Republic or part of it may be declared in a state of siege and the purposes of Articles 22, 24, 26, 27, 29, 38, 39, and 45 may be temporarily suspended, wholly or partially.

Article 53

The National Assembly, if it should be assembled, will decree the state of siege and the temporary suspension. If it should be in recess, it will be declared by means of a decree signed by the President, his Ministers, and the members of the permanent legislative committee, and in the same decree the National Assembly, will be convoked in order that within a maximum period of five days it may assemble and decide if that may be the case. The cause having ceased, the Assembly, if it should be assembled, and, if it is not assembled, the Cabinet Council, with the approval of the permanent legislative committee, will lift the state of siege or the suspension.

Peru, Constitution ofArticle 70

When the security of the State may require it, the Executive may suspend, completely or partially, in all or in a part of the national territory, the guarantees stated in Articles 56, 61, 62, 67 and 68. If the suspension of guarantees is decreed during the session of the Congress, the Executive shall give to the Congress an immediate account of it.

[399]

The terms of suspension of guarantees shall not exceed thirty days. An extension requires a new decree.

The law shall determine the powers of the Executive during the suspension of guarantees.

Turkey, Constitution ofArticle 86

In the event of a war, rebellion or in the case of convincing evidence of a positive and serious conspiracy against the country and the Republic, the Council of Ministers may proclaim partial or general martial law on condition that this does not exceed one month and that this measure is submitted without delay to the Grand National Assembly for approval. The Assembly may, if deemed necessary, extend or reduce the duration of martial law. Should the Assembly not be in session, it shall be convened immediately. The prolongation of martial law is subject to the decision of the Grand National Assembly. Martial Law implies the temporary restriction or suspension of personal and residential immunity, of inviolability of correspondence, of the freedom of the press, and of the right of assembling and associating.

The area over which Martial law may be proclaimed, the application of the provisions of this regulation over the said area, as well as the mode of restriction or suspension of immunity, and freedom in time of war is determined by law.

United States, Constitution of

Article I, Section 9, Clause 2

The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it.

Uruguay, Constitution of

Article 30

Individual security may not be suspended except with the compliance of the General Assembly or the permanent committee, in case the former has been dissolved or is in recess, and in the extraordinary case of treason or conspiracy against the Fatherland; and then it shall be instituted only [400] for apprehension of the offenders, without prejudice to the provision of clause 18 of Article 157.

Article 157

The following are the duties of the President of the Republic, acting with a Minister or with respective Ministers, or with the Council of Ministers, according to the provisions of article 174 and those relating thereto:

18th. To take immediate measures for security in the serious and unforeseen circumstances of foreign attack or internal disturbance, giving an account within twenty-four hours to the General Assembly, or in its recess, to the permanent committee, of what he has done and his reasons therefore, proceeding as the latter bodies recommend.

With regard to persons, to prompt measures of security only authorize their arrest or transfer from one point to another within the territory, provided they do not choose to leave it. This measure also, like the others, must be submitted, within twenty-four hours of its adoption, to the General Assembly or to the permanent committee, as the case may be, and its decision accepted.

2. Laws not in accordance with the Constitution are null and void

Honduras, Constitution of

Article 82

Laws that regulate the exercise of such guarantees and rights shall be null in so far as they decrease, restrict, or pervert them.

Paraguay, Constitution of

Article 6

The principles, guarantees, obligations, and rights, proclaimed by this Constitution, may not be altered by the laws that may regulate its exercise. Any law, decree, or regulation that may be in violation of the provisions of this Constitution is null and without effect.

3. Rights not enumerated in the Constitution are not excluded

Argentina, Constitution of

Article 33

The declarations, rights, and guarantees that the Constitution [401] enumerates shall not be considered as a denial of other rights and guarantees not enumerated, but which rise from the principle of the sovereignty of the people and of the republican form of government.

China, Constitution of

Article 22

All other liberties and rights of the people that are not inimical to social order or public interest shall be guaranteed under the Constitution.

Honduras, Constitution of

Article 81

The enumeration of rights and guarantees made in this Constitution does not exclude those not enumerated that may rise from the principle of sovereignty of the people and the republican form of government.

Nicaragua, Constitution ofArticle 137

The enumeration of rights, duties, and guarantees made by the Constitution does not exclude others that are inherent in the human personality or that are derived from the republican form of government.

United States, Constitution of9th Amendment

The enumeration on the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

4. Protection of democratic order

Yugoslavia, Constitution ofArticle 43

With a view to safeguarding the civic liberties and democratic organization of the Federal Peoples Republic of Yugoslavia established by this Constitution, it is declared illegal and punishable to make use of civic rights in order to change or undermine the constitutional order for anti-democratic purposes.

5. Limitation of the power of the Executive

Argentine, Constitution ofArticle 29

The Congress shall not confer on the national Executive, nor the provincial legislatures on the governors of the Province, extraordinary powers, nor the whole of the public authority, nor grant them submission or supremacy, whereby the life, honour, or fortune of Argentines will be [402] at the mercy of governments or of any person whatever. Acts of this nature are irreparably invalid, and will bring whoever performs, allows, or signs them, under the responsibility and penalties of infamous traitors to the Fatherland.

Bolivia, Constitution ofArticle 38

Neither the Congress nor any association or popular assembly may grant the Executive extraordinary powers, the total of the public power, or accord him supremacy by which the life, honour, and property of Bolivians are placed at the mercy of the Government or of any person.

Personal inviolability and the immunities established by this Constitution for the national representatives shall not be suspended during the state of siege.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the CitizenArticle 16

Every community in which the security of rights and a separation of powers is not provided for needs a constitution.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 16

The Chamber of Representatives may not grant extraordinary powers to the Executive outside of the prescriptions of this Constitution, nor may it grant powers by which the life, honour, and property of Paraguayans may be left to the mercy of the Government of any person.

6. Power of the armed forces

Chile, Constitution ofArticle 22

The public forces are essentially obedient. No armed body may deliberate.

Article 23

Every decision that the President of the Republic, the Chamber of Deputies, the Senate, or the tribunals of justice may agree to in the presence or on demand of an army, an officer at the head of an armed force, or of any assembly of people, with or without arms, and in disobedience [403] of the authorities, is null in law and cannot produce any effect.

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 22

Military force shall be subordinated to the civil power, is essentially passive, and must never deliberate.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the CitizenArticle 12

A public force being necessary to give security to the rights of man and of citizens, that force is instituted for the benefit of the community and not for the particular benefit of the person to whom it is entrusted.

Honduras, Constitution ofArticle 55

Police duty shall be confided only to civil authorities.

7. Personal responsibility of officials

China, Constitution ofArticle 9

No person may, except those in active military service, be subject to trial by a military court.

Article 18

The people shall have the right to take public examinations and to hold public offices.

Article 24

Any public functionary who, in violation of law, infringes upon the liberties or rights of any person shall, besides being subject to disciplinary measures in accordance with the law, be responsible under criminal and civil laws. The injured person may, in accordance with law, claim indemnity from the state for damage sustained.

Colombia, Constitution ofArticle 21

In case of manifest violation of a constitutional provision to the detriment of any person, the order of a superior shall not exempt from responsibility the agent who executed it.

Soldiers in active service are excepted from this provision. The responsibility with respect to them shall devolve solely upon the superior who gave the order.

[404]

Costa Rica, Constitution ofArticle 19

Public officials are not masters but trustees of authority. They are subject to the laws and never can consider themselves superior to them.

France, Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the CitizenArticle 15

The community has the right to demand of all its agents an account of their conduct.

Greece, Constitution ofArticle 19

No previous permission of the administrative authority is required to prosecute public or municipal officials for their punishable acts connected with their service, except in the case of Ministers, for which special provisions are laid down.

Iran, The Supplementary Fundamental LawsArticle 25

No special authorization is required to proceed against government officials in respect of shortcomings connected with the discharge of their public functions, save in the case of Ministers, in whose case the special laws on this subject must be observed.

8. Rights of regional and local communities

Denmark, Constitution ofArticle 89

The right of local authorities to conduct their affairs independently under the supervision of the State is laid down by law.

9. Witnesses before the Courts

Chile, Constitution of

Article 18

The accused person shall not be obliged in criminal cases to testify under oath about his own action, nor may his antecedents, descendants, spouse, or relatives, within the third degree of consanguinity or the second of affinity, inclusive, be obliged to testify.

Dominican Republic, Constitution of

Article 6

12th. (c) no one may be tried twice for the same cause or be obliged to testify against himself, or be condemned to any punishment, whatever [405] may be the nature of it, unless he has been heard in a public session or unless he has been subpoenaed in regular form. Cases for which the law creates disciplinary tribunals are excepted from being heard in a public session;

10. Vested rights and interests

Brazil, Constitution of

Article 141

No. 3. The law shall not prejudice any right acquired, any juridical act accomplished, or anything judged.

Colombia, Constitution of

Article 36

The intention of gifts made during a lifetime or testamentarily, in accordance with the law, the purposes of social interest, may not be changed or modified by the Legislature. The Government shall regulate the management and investment of such gifts.

Article 31

No law that establishes a monopoly may be applied until the persons, who, by virtue of it, would be deprived of the exercise of a lawful industry, have been fully indemnified.

No monopoly may be established except as a financial expedient and by virtue of a law.

The only privilege that may be granted are those relating to useful inventions and means of communication.

Cuba, Constitution of

Article 23

Civil obligations arising from contracts, or from other acts either of commission or omission, may not be annulled or altered by the Legislature or by the Executive, and consequently laws shall have no retroactive effect in respect to the aforesaid obligations. The exercise of actions resulting from these obligations may be suspended in case of grave national crises, for the time considered reasonably necessary, by means of the same requisites and subject to the impugnability to which the first paragraph of the preceding article refers.

[406]

11. Right to carry arms

Colombia, Constitution of

Article 48

The Government alone shall import, manufacture, and possess arms and munitions of war.

No person within a town shall be permitted to carry arms without permission from the authorities. This permission shall in no case be given in cases of attendance at political meetings, elections, or sessions of assemblies or public corporations, whether as members or spectators.

Honduras, Constitution of

Article 68

Inhabitants of the Republic have the right of possessing and carrying arms, according to the law.

United States, Constitution of

2nd Amendment

... the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.

3rd Amendment

No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house, without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

10th Amendment

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

12. Right to strikeColombia, Constitution ofArticle 18*

The right to strike, except in public services, is guaranteed. The law shall regulate its exercise.

Paraguay, Constitution ofArticle 17

Any strike of public officials or any collective abandonment of their duties is prohibited.

[407]

13. Protection of childhood and maternityPanama, Constitution ofArticle 57*

Parental jurisdiction is the aggregate of duties and rights that parents have in relation to the children.

Parents are obliged to feed, care for, educate, and instruct their children and the latter to respect and care for their parents. The law will regulate the exercise of the parental jurisdiction in accordance with the social interest and the benefit of the children.

Uruguay, Constitution ofArticle 40

The care and education of children until they reach their full physical, intellectual, and social capacity, is the duty and right of parents.

The law shall provide the necessary measures for the protection of infants and children against parents or guardians who neglect them physically, intellectually, or morally, as well as against their exploitation and abuse.

Article 42

The State shall provide that juvenile delinquency be submitted to a special system in which women shall be given participation.

Yugoslavia, Constitution of

Article 26

5. Parents have the same obligations and duties to children born out of wedlock, as to those born in wedlock. The position of children born out of wedlock is regulated by law.

14. Limitation of national sovereignty

France, Constitution of

Paragraph 16

On condition of reciprocity, France consents to the limitations of sovereignty necessary to the organization and defence of peace.

15. Prohibition of wars of conquest

France, Constitution of

Paragraph 15

The French Republic, faithful to its traditions, conforms to the rules of international law. It will undertake no war with a view to [408] conquest and will never employ its forces against the liberty of any people.

16. Aliens may not have more rights than nationals

Bolivia, Constitution of

Article 18

Foreign subjects and enterprises, are, in respect to property, in the same position as Bolivians, and can in no case plead an exceptional situation or appeal through diplomatic channels unless in case of a denial of justice.

E/CN.4/AC.1/8*11 June 1947*United States Suggestions for Redrafts of Certain Articles in the Draft Outline E/CN.4/AC.1/3Article 2*Duty of the Individual towards Other Individuals*

“The state is created by the people for the promotion of their welfare and the protection of their mutual rights. In the exercise of his rights everyone is limited by the rights of others. The state may impose only such limitations on such rights as are compatible with the freedom and welfare of all.”

Article 3*Respect of Life*

“The right to life is fundamental and may not be denied to any person except upon conviction of the gravest of crimes under general law providing for the penalty of death.”

Article 6*Need for Judgment of a Court of Law*

“No one shall be deprived of life or personal liberty, or be convicted or punished for crime in any manner, save by judgment of a competent and impartial tribunal, in conformity with law, after a fair public trial at which he has had the opportunity for a full hearing, the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him, the right of compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favour, and the right to consult with and be represented by counsel.”

[2]

Article 7*Protection against Arbitrary Arrest*

“No person shall be subjected to arbitrary or unauthorized arrest or detention. Every person who is arrested or detained shall be immediately informed of the charges on which he is held, and shall have the right to prompt judicial determination of the legality of his detention. Trial of the charges must be afforded within a reasonable time, or he shall be released from detention. Every person shall be entitled to secure his release pending trial upon furnishing reasonable security for his appearance, except where such release would defeat the administering of justice. Detention by purely executive order shall be unlawful except in time of national emergency, proclaimed in accordance with law.”

Article 8Prohibition of Slavery and Compulsory Labour*

“No one shall be held in slavery, nor be required to perform compulsory labour in any form other than public service equally incumbent by law upon all or as part of punishment pronounced by a competent judicial tribunal. No person shall be imprisoned or held in servitude in consequence of the mere breach of contractual obligations.”

Article 9Liberty of Movement within the Borders of a State*

“All persons shall equally enjoy the right to freedom of movement from one part of the territory of the state to another, and to free choice of residence in any part of the territory, subject to any general law adopted in the interest of national welfare or security.

“Every person shall, subject to equitable immigration and deportation laws, be free to enter, travel through or over, and remain temporarily in the territory of another state, provided always that he observes local laws and police regulations.”
[3]

Article 11Liberty and Respect of Private Life*

“No one shall be subjected to arbitrary or unauthorized searches and seizures of his person, home, papers and effects, or to unreasonable interference with his person, home, family, relations with others, reputation, privacy, activities or property. The secrecy of correspondence shall be respected.”

Article 12Right to Possess Legal Personality and Exercise One's Civil Rights*

“Everyone has the right to a legal personality. No person shall be restricted in the exercise of his civil rights except under general law based on reason of age or mental incompetence, or as punishment for a criminal offence, or as otherwise permitted in this bill.”

Article 15Freedom of Opinion*

“Everyone has the right to form and hold opinions and to receive them from, and impart them, within or beyond the borders of the State.”

Article 16Freedom of Access to All Sources of Information*

“Freedom of everyone to receive, read and listen to all matters of information shall not be impaired, and there shall be free and equal access to all sources of information both within and beyond the border of a State.”

Article 17Freedom of Speech and Freedom of Expression*

“There shall be freedom of speech, of the press and of expression by any means whatsoever and there shall be reasonable access to all channels of communication.”
[4]

Article 20Freedom of Association*

“There shall be freedom to form associations.”

Article 22Right to Property*

“Everyone has the right to own and transfer property, subject to regulation, under general laws, governing the acquisition and use thereof, and determining, in the interest of national welfare and security, those things not susceptible of private ownership. No one shall be deprived of property except in accordance with law, nor suffer his property to be taken other than for public use with just compensation to him.”

Article 24Freedom to Engage in Professions*

“There shall be equal opportunity to engage in any vocation or profession, not constituting public employment, subject to such reasonable qualifications as are inherent in the work to be performed.”

Article 26

*Every Penalty Must Be: A. Provided for by the Law without Retroaction
B. Inflicted by a Court of Law*

“No one shall be convicted of crime except by judgment of a competent and impartial tribunal for violation of a law in effect at the time of the commission of the act charged as an offence, nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that applicable at the time of the commission of the offence. No one acquitted or convicted of a crime shall thereafter be again put in jeopardy of life or liberty for the offence of which he was acquitted or convicted.”

[5]

Article 27

Appeal to Tribunals for Guarantee of the Rights of Individuals

“Every person has the right to have any civil claims or liabilities determined without undue delay by a competent and impartial tribunal, before which he has the opportunity for a fair hearing, and has the right to consult with and to be represented by counsel.”

Article 28

Right of Petition

“No state shall abridge the right of everyone, either individually or in association with others, to petition the government of his state or the United Nations for redress of grievance.”

Article 30

Right to Take Part in the Government of the State – Democracy

“Government derives its just power from the consent of the governed. Everyone has the right to take an effective part in the government of the state or territory of which he is a citizen. The citizens of the state or territory are accordingly entitled to exercise self-government through representatives freely and fairly chosen by them in periodic democratic elections.”

Article 31

Right of Access to All Public Functions

“Everyone shall have equal opportunity to engage in public employment in the State of which he is a citizen.”

Article 32

Rights Relating to Nationality

“Every person shall have the right to a nationality.”

[6]

Article 35

Right to Progress

“Everyone has the right to a fair and equal opportunity to advance his own physical, economic, and cultural wellbeing and to share in the benefits of civilization.”

“It is the duty of the State, in accordance with the maximum use of its resources and with due regard for the liberties of individuals, to promote this purpose by legislation or by other appropriate means. Among the social rights thus to be achieved progressively by joint effort of the individual and the State are those defined in the following Articles.”

Article 36

Right to Health

“Everyone, without distinction of economic or social condition, has a right to the highest attainable standard of health.

“The responsibility of the State for the health and safety of its people can be fulfilled only by provision of adequate health and social measures.”

Article 37

Right to Education

“Everyone has the right to education.

“Each State has the duty to require that each child within territories under its jurisdiction receive a fundamental education. The State shall maintain adequate and free facilities for such education. It shall also assure development of facilities for further, including higher, education, which are adequate and effectively available to all the people within such territories.”

Article 38

Right to Economic Security

“Everyone has a right to a decent standard of living; to a fair and equal opportunity to earn a livelihood; to wages and hours and conditions of [7] work calculated to insure a just share of the benefits of progress to all; and to protection against loss of income on account of disability, unemployment, or old age.

“It is the duty of the State to undertake measures that will promote full employment and good working conditions; provide protection for wage-earners and dependents against lack of income for reasons beyond their control; and assure adequate food, housing, and community services necessary to the wellbeing of the people.”

Article 39

Right to Participate in the Cultural, Scientific and Artistic Life

“Everyone has the right to participate in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts and to share in the benefits of science.”

Article 45No Discrimination*

“There shall be equal protection before the law in the enjoyment of the rights enumerated in this bill of rights, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.”

E/CN.4/AC.1/9

11 June 1947

Resolution Adopted by the Economic and Social Council on 24 March 1947

The following is an extract of the Resolution adopted by the Council on the item proposed by the World Federation of Trade Unions:

“Guarantees for the Exercise and Development of Trade Union Rights

“The Economic and Social Council

“Having taken note of the item regarding Trade Union Rights placed on its agenda at the request of World Federation of Trade Unions, and the memoranda submitted by the World Federation of Trade Unions and the American Federation of Labor,

“The Economic and Social Council

“Further resolves to transmit the documents to the Commission on Human Rights in order that it may consider those aspects of the subject which might appropriately form part of the Bill or Declaration on Human Rights.”

The following documents are:

1. Draft Resolution Submitted by the World Federation of Trade Unions to the Economic and Social Council on Guarantees for the Exercise and Development of Trade Union Rights;
2. Memorandum and Draft Resolution Submitted by the American Federation of Labor to the Economic and Social Council on the Guarantees for the Exercise and Development of Trade Union Rights.

[2]

Draft Resolution Submitted by the World Federation of Trade Unions to the Economic and Social Council on Guarantees for the Exercise and Development of Trade Union Rights

[For the text, see E/C.2/28.]

[7]

Memorandum and Draft Resolution Submitted by the American Federation of Labor to the Economic and Social Council on the Guarantees for the Exercise and Development of Trade Union Rights

[For the text, see E/C.2/32.]

E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.2

11 June 1947<sup>160</sup>

Summary Record of the Second Meeting [of the Drafting
Committee of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Wednesday,
11 June 1947 at 11:00 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States of America), Vice-Chairman: Dr. P.C. Chang (China), Rapporteur: Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon). Mr. Ralph L. Harry (Australia), Mr. H. Santa Cruz (Chile), Prof. René Cassin (France), Mr. Geoffrey Wilson (United Kingdom), Prof. V. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics). Specialized Agencies: Mr. J. Havet (UNESCO). Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Toni Sender (American Federation of Labor). Secretariat: Prof. J.P. Humphrey (Secretary of the Committee), Mr. Edward Lawson.

1. Discussion of Drafting Procedure

THE CHAIRMAN invited the members of the Drafting Committee to express their opinions regarding the procedure to be followed in preparing the preliminary draft of an International Bill of Human Rights. She said that [2] the United States would present in writing some alternatives to specific items in the outline of the Secretariat, but that since these written proposals were not yet ready for distribution she thought that it might be better to discuss the form and plan of the preliminary draft first. She proposed that if the Committee decided to use the Secretariat outline as the basis of its work its members might begin immediately and go through each of the items listed one by one, either accepting, eliminating, or changing them. She again stressed the preliminary nature of the Committee's work and pointed out that in its final report it might in some cases wish to submit two different conflicting ideas rather than a single wording on which all members could agree. She pointed out that it would be almost impossible to write the Preamble until a final determination had been made as to what was to appear in the draft; she therefore asked each member of the Drafting Group to note any ideas that might occur to him about the Preamble for later presentation to the Committee. She suggested that it might not be possible to get the Preamble written until a much later stage in the development of the draft.

<sup>160</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 13 June 1947.

PROF. CASSIN (France) complimented the outline of the Secretariat as a solid and interesting basis for the work of the Committee. He suggested that this outline might serve as a basis for discussion from a material point of view. If this viewpoint were accepted he proposed that two or three fundamental principles should be incorporated in the outline:

1. the unity of the human race or family;
2. the idea that every human being has a right to be treated like every other human being; and
3. the concept of solidarity and fraternity among men.

[3]

He suggested that the Committee might wish to consider first the rights defined both in the British document and the Secretariat outline, and secondly the rights mentioned in the Secretariat outline but not touched upon in the British draft, including especially civil rights and social and economic rights. He agreed that the Committee should not at the moment study the British proposals for implementation nor should it attempt to formulate a Preamble. It should, he felt, confine itself to the content and substance of the two drafts before it. He expressed the feeling that the British document grouped rights in a more rational and concise order than the Secretariat outline. The Secretariat outline, he said, has more rights and restrictions listed in it, but he wondered whether the Committee should discuss limits or restrictions or whether it should confine itself to rights and freedoms.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) stated that in his opinion the Committee must draw up a Charter of Human Rights giving it not only legal form but real human content. He expressed the belief that the International Bill of Human Rights should not be just a Bill but rather a true spiritual guide for humanity enumerating the rights of man which must be respected everywhere. He suggested that the Committee begin by discussing the rights listed in the Secretariat document. The actual drafting, he felt, could be put off until after the members agreed on the substance.

MR. HARRY (Australia) called the Secretariat outline a most useful and valuable quarry of principles and ideals which might find a place in the Bill of Human Rights. The United Kingdom draft, on the other hand, was the first complete draft outline before the Committee since it included a Preamble and provisions for entering its provisions into force. He agreed that the Preamble and the provisions for implementation should not be considered until a later date. He supported the French proposal that the [4] Committee consider first the principles appearing in the drafts of both the United Kingdom proposal and the Secretariat outline and then consider the principles appearing only in the latter. He said, however, that in the opinion of the Australian Government no finality in a draft could be reached until the question of implementation had been considered.

DR. CHANG (China) maintained that the discussion should proceed from the concrete to the abstract, that it should start with articles in the Secretariat draft on which all members of the Committee could agree and then go on to consider other articles appearing either in the United Kingdom draft or in a proposal by one of the other members. He urged that the Committee attain as wide a perspective as possible and that it be always conscious of the historical context of the formulation of this International Bill of Rights. He particularly urged that it not be allowed to become a stale duplication of previous Bills of Rights.

MRS. ROOSEVELT asked if the Secretariat was prepared to submit a document presenting the proposals of the United Kingdom Government and those of the Secretariat Draft Outline side by side. PROF. HUMPHREY replied that the Secretariat had distributed such a document (E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.3).

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) congratulated the Secretariat on its draft outline and addressed two questions to the Secretary of the Committee:

1. were the Constitutions quoted in the Secretariat outline culled extensively or only for illustrative material; and
2. were the quotations from members of the Human Rights Commission exhaustive or only samples?

If the latter, he wished to know the basis for selection. Dr. Malik went on to speak of the Preamble. He stated that in his opinion the Secretariat document did not contain a sufficient reference to the dignity of man. This, he felt, ought to be made the basic woof of the Preamble. He stated that the four points [5] enumerated in the suggestions for Preamble made by the Secretariat were excellent ones but that even when all were considered together they somehow failed to bring out what is distinctive, fundamental and human about man. If these points were not included he felt the Preamble would lose its fundamental point. Dr. Malik suggested that the United Kingdom document be used as a formal basis for discussion and that the Secretariat document be used as a material basis. The Committee, he said, ought to make extensive use of the proposals of the United Kingdom, and then turn to the Secretariat outline to fill out and complete its draft. He pointed out that the United Kingdom has no written Constitution and that therefore it would be an act of injustice not to give them a special chance to present their own ideas in writing and to utilize their proposals extensively. He said that in the course of the meeting he had been more and more struck by the importance of the question of implementation. From the Secretariat outline, he said, it is clear that most countries already have provisions in their Constitutions relating to fundamental human rights and freedoms. The question was whether or not these rights and freedoms were implemented.

PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) pointed out that he had hardly begun to study the matters under discussion and that he was working under difficulties because of the fact that he was also a member of the General Assembly Committee on the Codification of International Law. Therefore, he was unable to state his opinions immediately but wished to thank the Secretariat for its very useful preliminary work.

Prof. Koretsky put forward, however, a few personal impressions:

1. that it was most important to remember the inter-relation between internal and international law when formulating an International Bill of Rights;
2. that the International Bill of Rights must not create an international social system where international government does not exist;

[6]

3. that the members of the Committee must not forget that one cannot oppose the individual to society and to government; and
4. that the principle of equality of men must be stressed more than it appeared to be stressed in any of the drafts before the Committee.

Prof. Koretsky stated that he was opposed to the use of the word “civilized” as it appeared in one of the drafts. The artificial distinction drawn in the past between civilized and uncivilized people must be forgotten, he said, and all of the various existing civilizations must be studied. These principles, he added, would help the Committee to find a correct way to implement and enforce the rights enumerated in an International Bill of Rights.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom), after apologizing for the absence of Lord Dukeston, stated that the United Kingdom draft was prepared because the Government had found it very difficult to get its mind clear on the form and content of the Bill. The draft, he said, consisted of five main parts:

1. a proposed draft resolution of the General Assembly;
2. a proposed Preamble;
3. a proposed definition of human rights and fundamental freedoms;
4. a proposal relating to the question of implementation; and
5. a proposal as to the method of bringing the Bill of Human Rights into operation.

He agreed that the two parts which might be usefully discussed at the time were (a) the proposed General Assembly resolution, and (b) the attempt to define human rights and freedoms.

Mr. Wilson raised a basic question as to whether the Committee was drafting a Manifesto or what in England would be called an Act of Parliament. It must be very clear on its intention, he said. He explained that in his opinion only those things which are enforceable in the near future should go into an Act of Parliament or into an International Convention. He said that he hoped that the Committee would be able to suggest both a Manifesto and an International Convention.

[7]

He suggested that, since the Secretariat outline contained a large number of items that did not appear in the Constitutions of certain States, it might be better if only those items which a member of the Committee positively suggested might be included should be considered by the Committee.

PROF. HUMPHREY (Secretariat) answering Dr. Malik's earlier question, said that the document prepared by the Secretariat was meant to be complete and if there were any omissions they were not intentional. He pointed out that the Secretariat had not attempted to draft a Preamble but had only made certain indications as to what might be included there. He also pointed out that in the forthcoming Yearbook on Human Rights<sup>161</sup> there will be a chapter relating to the laws of those countries which do not have written Constitutions.

THE CHAIRMAN asked Prof. Koretsky whether it would be possible for someone to keep him informed of the proceedings of the Drafting Committee during the period when he was away attending the meetings of the General Assembly Committee on the Development and Codification of International Law.<sup>162</sup> PROF. KORETSKY promised to be present at meetings of the Drafting Committee as much as possible.

THE CHAIRMAN summarized the consensus of opinion of the Committee regarding the drafting procedure as follows:

1. The Preamble should not be written until a later stage;
2. The question of implementation should remain in the back of the minds of the members of the Committee when they are considering things to be included in the preliminary draft;

<sup>161</sup> In 1946-47, the Economic and Social Council began compiling a yearbook of the activities of the United Nations. The Yearbook of the United Nations is the principal reference work of the United Nations; it is intended to provide a comprehensive overview of the UN's activity in a given year, including the concerns, activities and resolutions of the General Assembly, the Security Council, and the Economic and Social Council. The 1948 United Nations yearbook summary contains an account of the steps leading to the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

<sup>162</sup> The General Assembly Committee on the Development and Codification of International Law was created pursuant to General Assembly Resolution 94, adopted on 11 December 1946. The task of the Committee was to recommend ways in which the General Assembly could encourage the progressive development of international law and its codification. Comprised of 17 legal experts, the Committee convened from 12 May to 17 June 1947. It was replaced by the International Law Commission.

3. The Secretariat outline should be used as a basis for discussion with the items of the United Kingdom draft being brought in for consideration wherever they resemble in substance an item in the Secretariat draft.

[8]

MRS. ROOSEVELT pointed out that as a Drafting Committee preparing only a first draft the Group was called upon<sup>163</sup> to decide the final text of the International Bill of Human Rights. She agreed with the suggestion of Mr. Wilson that only the points which were suggested positively by a member of the Committee be included in the draft. She expressed the opinion that the Committee should present to the Human Rights Commission a document on which they might be able to make a final decision. As to whether it should be a declaration of principles or a Bill that could be implemented throughout the world, she felt that should be considered by the full Commission. She suggested that the Committee take as a basis of its work the articles presented in the Secretariat outline because this outline took into account many other documents in the form of Bills which had been submitted to the Commission on Human Rights. If necessary, she said, the Committee should err on the side of including too much.

With the exception of Prof. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) who reserved his position and stated that in the future he would want to present other data which was not at that time prepared, all of the members of the Committee accepted Mrs. Roosevelt's suggestions on the method of work procedure.

Decision: It was decided to take the Secretariat outline as a basis for discussion, referring to other documents when there appeared to be a similarity between them. It was decided that the Committee was not to discuss the final wording of any item but only the principles and substance to be included.

2. Consideration of the Draft Outline of the Secretariat and of the Draft Proposed by the United Kingdom (Document E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.3)

THE CHAIRMAN proposed that the discussion of the two draft outlines before the Committee begin with Article 3 since the similarity between the two drafts did not occur until that article was reached. Speaking as a representative of the United States she stated that her Government had prepared some alternative suggestions and had asked that these be printed and placed before all of the members. They had not been circulated as yet. [9] She also stated that in the opinion of the United States Article 1 of the Secretariat draft outline should not be included in an International Bill of Rights because it dealt with the right of a State rather than with the right of a human being.

<sup>163</sup> The context suggests that the word "not" has been omitted by mistake.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) reverted to the suggestion that if there was no recommendation for the inclusion of Article 1, it should not be included in the draft to be prepared by the Committee. He suggested, however, that the substance of Article 1 might possibly find a place in the Preamble.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) maintained that Articles 1 and 2 of the Secretariat outline dealt with limitations to human rights and freedoms rather than with the rights and freedoms themselves. He expressed the opinion that it was odd that such limitations should be placed at the very beginning of a Bill and expressed the opinion that they were not of such a nature as to be included in the Committee's draft.

MRS. ROOSEVELT asked if there was any proposal that Article 1 be included in the Committee's draft. DR. MALIK stated that the principle enunciated in Article 1 should not be eliminated altogether. PROF. CASSIN (France) suggested that the discussion proceed to those articles in which there appeared to be similarity between the draft of the Secretariat and that of the United Kingdom, reserving Articles 1 and 2 for later discussion. PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) felt that the proposal of the member from France might bring about a certain organizational confusion and that it might be better to consider each of the various articles and to express an opinion on them but not to vote either for or against their adoption. He stated that he felt it would not be quite appropriate to follow the method proposed by Prof. Cassin. MRS. ROOSEVELT stated that in her opinion the Committee should first go through the common articles without making any decision thereon, and then return to discuss each article in turn, taking the Secretariat Draft Outline as its basis.

[10]

Article 3 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Article 8 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read both articles and remarked that she understood that there is a movement underway in some States to wipe out the death penalty completely. She suggested that it might be better not to use the phrase "death penalty".

PROF. CASSIN (France) made two observations. For the first time, he said, we are confronted by a question of method: should we proclaim the right to life or should we rather state that authority cannot deprive men of life. Even countries which do not have the death penalty, he went on, must take into account that some countries are in the process of abolishing it. Therefore, he preferred Article 3 of the Secretariat draft to the corresponding Article in the United Kingdom draft. Secondly, he stated that if the principle of universal abolition of the death penalty could be adopted it should not impose a strict obligation on States which wished to maintain the death penalty. DR. MALIK (Lebanon) pointed out a certain ambiguity in the word "everyone" and expressed the opinion that it might be advisable to use instead "every person."

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) pointed out that the corresponding article in the draft submitted by the delegation of Chile expresses both ideas: first it establishes the right to life and secondly it establishes the duty of a State to watch over the implementation of this right. He felt that the article as submitted by Chile was more complete as it referred to the life of any being, born or unborn, and set forth that those who are unable to support themselves have the right to be supported and protected. He suggested that it might be better to include the text of the Chilean draft on this subject. [11]

PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) reserved the right to prepare another wording to replace the drafts under consideration. He remarked that the United Nations should not in any way signify approval of the death penalty. The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, he said, has given up the death penalty. MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) supported the view that the draft should not give the impression that the United Nations approved the death penalty. PROF. CASSIN (France) stated that he preferred to use the words "every human being" instead of "every individual" or "every person." He pointed out that in the period just passed there was wholesale denial of the right to life in a very light-hearted manner which outraged the conscience of all mankind. He added that the Chilean text has a section including certain positive obligations of governments which he considered worthy of study. MR. WILSON expressed agreement with the view taken by the Soviet delegate that the United Nations should not sanction the death penalty.

Article 6 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Article 10 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the text of these two articles. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) made two formal proposals:

1. that Article 5 of the Secretariat outline be taken into account; and
2. that in the United Kingdom draft it should be noted that certain related provisions appear in the part proposed as a resolution of the General Assembly rather than in Article 10.

He also suggested that Article 7 of the Secretariat draft might be taken into consideration at the same time, along with paragraph 6 of Article 10 of the United Kingdom draft. PROF. CASSIN (France) felt that the discussion should be limited to one thing at a time. The representative of the American Federation of Labor pointed out that the present order of the articles in the Secretariat document is not logical but accidental and expressed her opinion that it might be better to use the United Kingdom draft as a basis for discussion.

[12]

Article 7 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Article 10 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the two articles and pointed out that the representative of the United Kingdom had already said that Article 10 of the United Kingdom draft was linked with the previous subject. MR. HARRY (Australia) stated that the chief difference between the drafts is that the United Kingdom proposed that in addition to judicial determination there should also be the right to compensation. He stated that his Government did agree that the idea of compensation should be included. PROF. CASSIN remarked that the question of compensation with relation to unlawful arrest was a very serious matter and that in many countries it could not function in practice. If compensation is mentioned, he thought, the responsibility of arresting officers should also be spoken of. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) stated that his Government was not wedded to the remedy proposed in its draft but felt that there should be some enforceable remedy in cases of arbitrary arrest.

Article 8 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Article 9 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the two articles and asked for comments. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) stated that his Government had found the question of drafting this article to be very difficult and complex. He felt that at a later date he might be able to put forward a more adequate form of words. He agreed that the phrase "equally incumbent upon all" might be considered as ambiguous and added that it might be better to treat the question of public service separately and on its own account. PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), although reserving his right to make further remarks later, pointed out that in his opinion the wording of the United Kingdom article seemed to be striking in its simplicity. It should, he said, be made more ample. He feared that the phrase "no form of slavery shall be permitted" suggested a consideration only for the future. He felt that this might be re-phrased to condemn slavery in general.

[13]

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) assured the representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics that the phrase "shall be" had not been meant to connote a future tense. He explained that the English construction of this article was considered to imply no reference to time.

The meeting adjourned at 1:10 p.m.

E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.3

11 June 1947<sup>164</sup>

Summary Record of the Third Meeting [of the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Wednesday,
11 June 1947 at 2:30 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States), Vice-Chairman: Dr. P. C. Chang (China), Rapporteur: Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon). Mr. Ralph L. Harry (Australia), Mr. H. Santa Cruz (Chile), Prof. René Cassin (France), Mr. V. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), Mr. Geoffrey Wilson (United Kingdom). Specialized Agencies: Mr. J. Havet (UNESCO). Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Toni Sender (American Federation of Labor), Miss Lena Spiegel (WFTU). Secretariat: Prof. J.P. Humphrey (Secretary of the Committee), Mr. Edward Lawson.

1. Consideration of Document E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.3: Textual Comparison of the Draft Submitted by the United Kingdom Delegation and the Draft Prepared by the Secretariat

THE CHAIRMAN opened the meeting by explaining that it was her intention to go through the remainder of the textual comparison as quickly as possible. She asked the Secretariat to take note of any general agreement reached in relation to any of the articles.

[2]

Article 10 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Part II
Article 11 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the text of these articles and asked for the opinion of the members. PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) stated that he wished to comment on the substance of this article, which, in his opinion, was very important. A paper touching on this subject had been given to the Secretariat for distribution. He pointed out that there are certain human rights recognized by all civilized nations which involve the co-operation of more than one State. One of these rights, relating to emigration, was stressed in the French paper. PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) reserved the right to comment on this point later.

<sup>164</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 13 June 1947.

Article 14 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Part IIArticle 13 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the text of these articles and remarked that the text proposed by the United Kingdom was considerably longer than that suggested by the Secretariat. PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) said that Article 14 of the Secretariat draft was unobjectionable substantively but that Part II Article 2 of the United Kingdom draft seemed to him to be too detailed. This was also the case with other sections of the United Kingdom draft. He felt that the inclusion of too many details in a Bill of Rights would make implementation more difficult and might interfere with the jurisdiction of national governments. The Bill of Rights, he said, should not be too detailed as that would tend to show a lack of confidence in the national legislatures of other countries. He therefore urged that any stipulations adopted by the Committee be in less detail than appeared in the United Kingdom draft.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) stated that the question of the amount of detail is of great importance. His Government found that unless they went into detail with respect to certain subjects there was a serious danger of boiling the draft down to a simple declaration of non-discrimination. If limitations were not written in, he maintained, governments would find [3] themselves in a very difficult position.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) said that what he liked about the United Kingdom draft was its mention of the right “to change belief”. There is no freedom, he said, if one is not free to change his mind. Whatever text was adopted, he stated, the right to change one’s mind on any question without any legal recriminations is most important. He added that in his opinion a Resolution of the General Assembly could not be considered an imposition on the rights of a State nor could a Convention, to be adhered to by governments, be considered such an imposition.

PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) stressed the fact that in his opinion the Committee should give serious consideration to the principle of equality of men. Discrimination between peoples on grounds of race, sex, language or religion, he pointed out, was one of the gravest things that had ever happened. He referred to Professor Cassin’s use of the phrase “civilized nations” and stated that this expression had no meaning at the present time. In the old Russia, nations like India and China had been considered uncivilized in spite of their age-old civilization. Professor Koretsky proposed that the Committee should not go into details in its draft of the Bill but should call attention to these principles which would make men feel free and equal. He said that the old laws and the Decalogue<sup>165</sup> which were short, concise, and clear, should serve as models.

<sup>165</sup> The term “Decalogue” (δεκάλογος) refers to the “Ten Commandments”. According to the Bible, this list of religious or moral principles was handed to Moses by God on Mount Sinai on stone tablets. The text of the Decalogue appears in two books of the Bible, Exodus (20:2–17) and Deuteronomy (5:6–21).

MR. HARRY (Australia) said that he had not understood the Delegate of the United Kingdom to suggest getting away from the principle of non-discrimination but that he agreed that if the Bill of Rights only made affirmations it would be achieving nothing. The test was not whether there was to be freedom in the strict legal sense but whether this freedom was to be accepted in practice. He felt that it might be necessary to spell out in some detail the question of belief and the question of freedom to teach and to instruct but that the relative length or brevity of each article of the Bill should be considered on its merits. PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) [4] stated that he had twice before called attention to the danger of attempting to make too detailed a text. The problem, he said, was to have all nations of all different civilizations accept certain common principles. In France written law relating to the subject of conscience and belief was very brief and concise. Similar brevity might be the best method for the Bill of Rights and would help to protect the United Nations from a flood of red tape. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) stated that the United Kingdom draft had been drawn up in detail because it had found that detailed legislation was necessary in his country. He called attention to the provisions made in the United Kingdom draft for certain sections of the Bill of Rights to be drafted by the Sub-Committees of the Human Rights Commission and pointed out that there was no question but that the United Kingdom placed just as much emphasis on the principles of non-discrimination as did any Member of the Human Rights Commission.

DR. CHANG (China) remarked that in his opinion China was perhaps the least bothersome nation insofar as religious discrimination was concerned. This fact, he added, had attracted the attention of the English philosophers in the eighteenth century. He added that the relative brevity or detail to be contained in each article of the draft would have to be discussed article by article.

MRS. ROOSEVELT (United States of America) stated that there appeared to be general agreement that an article on this subject should be included.

Article 16 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Part II
Article 14 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the text of these articles. PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) asked whether the Secretariat, in drafting this provision, had considered the work of the Sub-Commission on the Freedom of Information and of the Press. He naturally shared the view of the Soviet representative in that Sub-Commission. PROFESSOR HUMPHREY (Secretariat) replied that the Secretariat Draft Outline had been drawn up before the meeting of the Sub-Commission and that therefore Article 16 had [5] not been based on the work of that Sub-Commission. He further pointed out that the Sub-Commission had spent most of its time drawing up an agenda for the forthcoming conference on the Freedom of Information and had devoted only a few hours to discussion of the concept of Freedom of Information. He added that the Secretariat did distribute to the members of the Drafting Committee texts of the statements made by members of the Sub-Commission relating to this subject.

Article 17 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Part II
Article 14 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the texts of these articles. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) explained that what appeared to be a duplication was caused by the fact that there were two articles on the subject in the draft outline of the Secretariat but only one in the draft of the United Kingdom.

DR. CHANG (China) remarked that the United Kingdom draft put the affirmative ideas first and that this appeared to be a better arrangement. MR. HARRY (Australia) agreed with the statement made by Professor Koretsky that the Drafting Committee should consider the report of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press. If necessary, he proposed, the Sub-Commission might be asked to consider the text of an article for inclusion in the Bill of Rights. PROFESSOR HUMPHREY (Secretariat) drew attention to the fact that the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press would not meet again until next winter and that, therefore, the Drafting Committee might have to consider the subject independently of the Sub-Commission.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) said that he feared that in the speed of the work the Drafting Committee might have given too little attention to the outline of the Secretariat. From his point of view, he said, it is always the Secretariat draft which should be considered the basic source of the Committee's work.

[6]

Article 19 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Part II
Article 15 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the text of these articles, on which there were no comments.

Article 20 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Part II
Article 16 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the text of these articles, on which there were no comments.

Article 26 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Part II
Article 12 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the text of these articles, on which there were no comments.

Article 27 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Part II
Article 2 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the text of these articles. PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) pointed out that he wished to reserve the right generally to make observations on the articles at a later time. He drew attention to the use of the adjectives “independent” and “impartial” in the Secretariat Draft Outline and said that these might be dangerous and unnecessary to use in connection with tribunals of a sovereign State. MR. HARRY (Australia) asked for an explanation of what Professor Koretsky meant by his statement. PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) explained that in his opinion the expression “independent and impartial tribunals” might be considered as an invitation to evaluate the courts of the judiciary of independent governments. The possibility of such evaluation, he felt, should be eliminated. He said that he might be in favour of the phrase “open tribunals”, but felt that the qualifications “independent and impartial” were unnecessary and that they might be considered to indicate a criticism of certain courts. MR. HARRY (Australia) stated that in his opinion it is just as important for courts to be independent or impartial as to be open.

[7]

THE CHAIRMAN stated that she thought the misunderstanding arose from the fact that in the United States and in the United Kingdom the terms “independent and impartial” were always used in connection with courts. She did not feel that either adjective was intended as a criticism. PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) said that such a term might be found in many Constitutions but that it should not appear in the language of an International Bill of Rights. He pointed out that in a specific case the courts of certain countries might justify aggression of certain persons against others because of the colour of their skin. He wondered who would be in a position to say that such courts were or were not impartial. PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) suggested that all of the articles considered so far had been guarantees of personal liberty. He suggested that these might be placed separately and grouped together.

Article 45 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Comment
to Part II of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the text of these articles on which there were no comments.

Article 47 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Part IIArticle 2 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the text of these articles. PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) raised a question as to whether decisions were being taken by the Committee regarding whether or not certain articles should or should not be included in the preliminary draft of the Bill of Rights. MRS. ROOSEVELT replied that no decisions were being taken at this stage; the members of the Committee were simply making such comments as they felt were necessary.

Article 48 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and Part IArticle 1 of the United Kingdom Draft

THE CHAIRMAN read the text of these articles and stated that in her opinion they dealt with the question of implementation. Since the Committee had agreed to leave discussion of the question of implementation until [8] later, she suggested that these articles not be discussed immediately. PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) called attention to the fact that in the United Kingdom draft the phrase “civilized nations” was used. He asked that the Drafting Committee not follow old documents too blindly but find a new track for itself. MRS. ROOSEVELT (United States of America) agreed that the Committee, in preparing its preliminary draft, would have to look forward and move forward. However, she said, it must recognize that there are peoples of different levels of development in various parts of the world. This did not imply that any people were by nature inferior to any other people but it meant that some people had not had equal opportunities for development. It was her hope that such opportunities might be extended to all in the future. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) pointed out that the phrase “civilized nations” was used in the Charter of the International Court of Justice<sup>166</sup> to which the Soviet Union was also a party.

2. Consideration of the Draft Outline of the International Bill of Rights prepared by the Division of Human Rights (E/CN.4/AC.1/3)

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that the Committee next consider those articles appearing in the Secretariat Draft Outline, the substance of which did not appear in the <sup>166</sup> The Statute of the International Court of Justice, annexed to the Charter of the United Nations, is the primary document establishing and regulating the composition and functioning of the Court. Article 38(1)(c), lists “the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations” as one of the sources of law to be applied by the Court, which is itself derived from article 38(3) of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, adopted in 1920. The term had been in use well before that time. For example, the so-called “Martens Clause” in the preambles to the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions refers to “the principles of international law, as they result from the usages established between civilized nations”.

United Kingdom draft. She announced that the United States had prepared alternate texts for certain of the articles in the Secretariat draft and that these would be distributed. She read Article 1 of the Secretariat draft and remarked that in the opinion of the United States Government such an article was not necessary. The same subject was covered to some extent by Article 8 of the Secretariat draft. In addition it was felt that the first article of the Bill of Rights should not be one in which duty of an individual was expressed. PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) said that he did not insist upon the article being placed first, but that he felt that the substance of the article ought to be in the Bill of Rights, either in the Preamble or elsewhere.

[9]

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 8 of the Secretariat draft and remarked that it covered only a part of what had to be said about an individual's duty to his State.

At this point PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) left the meeting of the Committee.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) stated that he had no comments to make at the moment on either Article 1 or Article 8. MR HARRY (Australia) felt that attention should be drawn to the general duty of the individual comparing to each general right. He said that he would make a statement on this subject later. DR. CHANG (China) remarked that the Committee should not tend to set up the possibility of the State and the individual being so sharply contrasted.

Speaking with respect to Articles 1 and 2, DR. MALIK (Lebanon) questioned why they should be called "preliminary", and placed at the very beginning of the Secretariat Draft Outline. Both of them, he said, would limit the freedom of the individual if they were adopted in their present form. In his opinion, any social pressure placed upon the individual by a Bill of Rights should be balanced by a statement of what society owes the individual. He characterized as "astounding" the statement in the Secretariat outline: "Everyone owes a duty to his State" and pointed out that it might be questioned whether an individual owed such a duty of loyalty regardless of the characteristics of his State. In considering a Bill of Rights, he went on, it was odd that men ought to first be told that their freedom is limited. If this were done it would be a Bill not of Human Rights but of what man owes society. It was precisely because the balance had been tipped against the individual and in favour of society that human rights had been violated. He concluded by saying that Article 1 of the Secretariat draft was to him objectionable and should not be included; or if included should be reworded; and that Article 2 should not appear at the beginning of the Bill of Rights.

[10]

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) supported this point of view. He thought that the article itself should be omitted from the Bill but that the substantive idea might be included somewhere in the Preamble. In this connection he drew attention to Article 4 of the draft of the United Kingdom.

MRS. ROOSEVELT (United States of America) summarized the general consensus of opinion that:

1. Article 1 should not itself be the first article in the Bill of Rights; and
2. the substance of the article might be included somewhere else.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) insisted on some qualification of the phrase appearing in Article 1, "loyalty to his State". The conception that the State must be a just State should also be included, he said. MRS. ROOSEVELT pointed out that the Committee was not at that stage attempting to agree upon specific wording.

Article 2 of the Secretariat Draft Outline

THE CHAIRMAN read the article and the alternative text proposed by the United States Delegation (E/CN.4/AC.1/8).

PROFESSOR CASSIN stated that he accepted the proposal that the substance of Article 1 be placed elsewhere than first in the Bill. He said, however, that he did not feel that the first part of Article 2 had the same objectionable characteristics as Article 1. He felt that Article 1 might be redrafted along these lines: "Society should seek to help human beings find happiness and protection." The opening article of the Bill of Rights, he said, should stress the principles of liberty, of solidarity, and of equality; limited by the equal and equivalent rights of other men. MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) supported the idea put forward by Professor Cassin and suggested that as a first article in the Bill of Rights there should be a declaration concerning what constitutes a State and what obligations an individual owes a State. He agreed that a declaration such as that proposed by Professor Cassin should be studied.

[11]

DR. CHANG (China) pointed out that the modification proposed by the United States was clearly worded. In his opinion it contained two different ideas which might be separated. The middle sentence might logically be permitted to stand by itself. He formally suggested using the United States modification by separating it into two articles, one a statement of the relation of individuals to the State and the other a statement of the relation of one individual to another. PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) thought that there ought first to be a broad statement of principles. MR. HARRY (Australia) agreed that the suggestion of Professor Cassin of a general article at the very beginning of the Bill, setting its keynote, was an excellent one. DR. MALIK (Lebanon) said that he did not feel it proper to begin a Bill of Rights with "The State". This ought not to be at the beginning, if at all, he said. He concluded that the substance of the article should be limited to the Preamble. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN summarized the consensus of opinion as being that the substance of the article should be included somewhere in the Bill but perhaps in another place; the first article of the Bill should be a general article on the rights of humanity. She asked that the members think over this suggestion and bring in their own ideas about it.

Article 3 of the Secretariat Draft Outline and the United States Alternate Text

THE CHAIRMAN read the two alternate texts. She referred to the previous discussion relating to the abolishment of the death penalty and asked for expressions of opinion on the substance of the article. MR. HARRY (Australia) pointed out that there had been agreement with relation to the mention of capital punishment in the Bill early in the day and suggested that any further suggestion on this point might be delayed until the actual drafting started.

DR. CHANG (China) observed that it was obvious that all members of the Committee would agree that the right to life should be included in a [12] Bill of Rights. He suggested, however, that more thought should be put into a definition of the word “life” – was it intended to mean mere physical existence or did it imply something more than that?

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) made two observations, one on the method of work and one on the substance of the question. With regard to the method of work, he felt that a good road had been indicated by the Australian Delegate. With regard to the substance, he considered that the term “right to life” referred to physical life and only to physical life. He pointed out that this distinction might not appear obvious at first glance but that recently the world had known of instances where certain persons felt that they had the right to destroy life. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) agreed that the best method of work would be to read through the Secretariat outline and try to reach a general agreement on what should and what should not go into the Committee’s draft. He suggested that if anyone did not agree to the wording of the Committee’s draft he should have the privilege of presenting an alternative draft in writing. He referred to the use of the expression “gravest of crimes” in the draft of the United States and said that, in his opinion, its meaning was very vague because what might be considered the gravest of crimes in one country might not be so considered in another.

THE CHAIRMAN asked that all suggestions for alterations in the Secretariat outline be submitted as soon as possible. She summarized the general consensus of opinion as being that the substance of Article 3 of the Secretariat outline should be included in the Committee’s draft but that its wording would have to be discussed later.

Article 4 of the Secretariat Draft Outline

THE CHAIRMAN read the article and asked for comments. PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) pointed out that the question of torture was directly connected with life. He felt that the word “indignity” as used in the Secretariat draft was a shocking expression and should be altered. As for [13] the word “torture,” he felt that it might require clearer definition. The Committee ought to take into consideration, he said, such questions as: Do some humans have the right to expose others to medical experiments and do any have the right to inflict suffering upon other human beings without their consent, even for ends that may appear good? MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) said that no doubt an article referring to corporal punishment and torture should appear in the Committee’s draft. He agreed with Professor Cassin that the word “indignity” as used in the Secretariat draft was not a happy expression. He reminded the Committee that the Economic and Social Council already was engaged in studies regarding torture in connection with the formulation of a Convention on the crime of Genocide.

MR. HARRY (Australia) agreed that there should be something in the Committee’s draft of the Bill to cover the case of physical torture. He pointed out, however, that if any specific kind of torture were mentioned the Committee might also have to include other types, such as mental torture and torture resulting from involuntary experimentation.

DR. CHANG (China) felt that the article was tied up with the previous article and that both should be included in the Committee’s draft. He felt that the draft somehow should stress the goodness of life itself.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) pointed out that the substance of Article 4 would have to be included in the draft in some form. He found ambiguity in the word “torture” and said that in his opinion it should be defined more carefully. Specifically, he wondered whether forced labour, unemployment or dental pain might be considered torture. He also found the phrasing “no one” and “everyone” objectionable and suggested that either “person” or “human being” be used instead.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) agreed with all that had been said by the other members.

MRS. ROOSEVELT (United States of America) said that the consensus of opinion was that the substance of Article 4 should be included, its [14] wording and its grouping to be decided upon later.

Article 5 of the Secretariat Draft Outline

THE CHAIRMAN read the article and asked for comments. PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) felt that the text regarding personal liberty included a rather wide field. It ought, he said, to be backed up by a whole series of texts further defining it. It might even be a sort of chapter head. MRS. ROOSEVELT (United States of America) asked him if his recommendation was that this right should be placed elsewhere. PROFESSOR CASSIN replied that it was correctly placed. MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) agreed that there should be an article in the Secretariat draft relating to personal liberty. MR. HARRY (Australia) also approved of the article and said that in the idea of his Government “personal liberty” referred to the opposite of imprisonment. He wondered whether this article should not be attached to Article 6.

DR. CHANG (China) called the attention of the members of the Committee to document E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.2 and pointed out that there were seven articles numbered 5 to 11, all dealing with liberty of the person. He suggested that in the Committee’s draft all of the articles on this subject should be grouped together. MR. MALIK (Lebanon) supported his suggestion and MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) said that he also was in favour of this arrangement.

THE CHAIRMAN said that it appeared to be the consensus of opinion of the Committee that all of the articles grouped under the heading “liberty of the person” should be considered by the Drafting Committee. She proposed that the Drafting Committee plan to go ahead at its next meeting with a consideration of the articles on which there was general agreement. She asked the members of the Committee to give their rewordings of any specific articles to the Secretary of the Committee as soon as possible and she requested the Secretary to inform Professor Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), who had had to leave the meeting during the discussions, what had happened in his absence.

The meeting adjourned at 5:00 p.m.

E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.4

11 June 1947<sup>167</sup>

Summary Record of the Fourth Meeting [of the Drafting
Committee of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Wednesday,
12 June 1947, at 10:30 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States of America), Vice-Chairman: Dr. P. C. Chang (China), Rapporteur: Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon). Mr. Ralph L. Harry (Australia), Mr. H. Santa Cruz (Chile), Prof. René Cassin (France), Mr. Geoffrey Wilson (United Kingdom), Prof. V. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics). Specialized

<sup>167</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 13 June 1947.

Agencies: Mr. J. Havet (UNESCO). Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Toni Sender (American Federation of Labor). Secretariat: Prof. J. P. Humphrey (Secretary of the Committee), Mr. Edward Lawson.

1. Consideration of Secretariat Draft Outline of International Bill of Rights continued (document E/CN.4/AC.1/3)

Article 6

THE CHAIRMAN recalled that the Committee was to continue its examination of each article of the draft outline with a view to obtaining a general idea as to the substance to be included in the [2] International Bill of Rights. She reminded members that it had been decided to group Article 5 either with Article 6 or with one of the articles which followed. She read Article 6 and drew attention to the alternate proposals of the United Kingdom (E/CN.4/AC.1/4) and of the United States (E/CN.4/AC.1/8). The United States draft, she felt, was clearer in that specific mention was made of the right to obtain witnesses. The Chairman asked each member to express his views as each article was read.

PROF. CASSIN (France) felt that the ideas expressed by Article 6 were reasonable but wished to have all articles on penal procedure grouped together.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) agreed in substance with the idea set forth in the article.

MR. HARRY (Australia) felt the article should have a place in the Bill.

DR. CHANG (China) pointed out that it would be necessary to clarify the term “national emergency” used in the Secretariat draft.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) agreed that the term “national emergency”, being very elastic, would have to be carefully defined.

PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) reserved his position and said he would comment at a later date.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) called attention to Article 4 of the British draft (E/CN.4/AC.1/4) which made provision that, in case of emergency the Secretary-General of the United Nations would be fully informed of the measures taken and the reasons therefor.

THE CHAIRMAN summarized the general feeling of the Committee that the substance of Articles 5, 6, and 7, all dealing with personal liberties, should be retained. What had been said of Articles 5 and 6, she felt, was also true of Article 7.

Article 8

PROF. CASSIN (France) felt that a text prohibiting slavery and what had been called compulsory labour must be included. He suggested that mention be made of servitude and inhuman exploitation. He felt that the Bill should proclaim the right of a man to contribute to the wellbeing of society by his work. He questioned whether the “contractual obligations,” [3] spoken of in the United States draft, included family obligations.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) also agreed that the substance of the article should be included, and with the remarks of Prof. Cassin concerning the right of a man to contribute to the wellbeing of society by his work. At the same time, he said, labour had to be recompensed in a manner which would satisfy the needs of the individual.

MR. HARRY (Australia) preferred the United States draft of Article 8 to that of the Secretariat. He thought the concept of the right to a livelihood conditioned by the duty to work, should not be stressed in this article which dealt with exploitation of man by man.

DR. CHANG (China) also preferred the United States draft. He considered the phrase “prohibited by this Bill of Rights” unsuitable, and felt that reference to livelihood and work should be made at another point. “Contractual obligations”, in his opinion, would have to be qualified inasmuch as laws relating to contracts differed throughout the world.

THE CHAIRMAN explained that the United States did not consider family obligations contractual.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon), although of the opinion that the United States redraft was more satisfactory than that of the Secretariat, felt that the vague concepts of work, slavery, and compulsory labour would need clarification. He called attention to the fact that the drafts submitted by the delegation of Chile and by the American Federation of Labor contained helpful ideas on this subject.

PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) reserved his right to make a statement later.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) believed that both drafts would require more particularity, and that this was not the right place to say anything about the right to work.

THE CHAIRMAN stated that it seemed to be generally agreed that the substance of Article 8 should be included, but that perhaps certain drafting changes would be needed.

[4]

Article 9

PROF. CASSIN (France) pointed out that the right of movement might give rise to certain difficulties such as, for example, economic considerations. Factories could not be established wherever a worker wished to live. Also, there existed problems relating to this right which could be solved only on the international level. He agreed that the principle of equality of freedom of movement should be affirmed in the Bill of Rights.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) felt that it would be more logical to follow the order suggested by the Secretariat, and study separately (1) the right to move freely within a country and (2) the right of immigration into another country.

MR. HARRY (Australia) asked whether the second paragraph of the United States redraft was intended as a substitute for item 10 of the Secretariat draft. He felt that three concepts were under consideration: (1) liberty of movement within a State subject to general laws, (2) the right to leave a country, and (3) the facilitation of movement throughout the world.

THE CHAIRMAN said that it was true that the second paragraph of the redraft might be considered virtually a new article.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) expressed a preference for the Chilean draft because it was clearer and less capable of misinterpretation. He asked the meaning of "equitable" and raised a question as to what status this item would have in a country where opposing customs prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN explained that "equitable" was used in the sense of "fair".

PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) reserved the right to make a statement at a later date.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) felt that this article primarily dealt with non-discrimination and was, therefore, within the province of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. He doubted whether governments would give assent to an article which restricted their right to exclude people from their countries.

[5]

MISS SENDER (AF of L) thought the problems of emigration and immigration should be treated separately.

THE CHAIRMAN noted that the Committee apparently agreed that the substance of the first paragraph of the United States draft should be included in the Bill. The second paragraph might become a separate article.

Article 10

PROF. CASSIN (France) said that implementation of the right of freedom of movement of persons might be difficult. The right of emigration, he felt, did not carry with it the right to enter another country. The right of States to detain persons also would have to be considered in this connection.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) and MR. HARRY (Australia) approved the basic idea expressed in this article. Both felt it needed redrafting.

DR. CHANG (China) said he believed liberty of movement to be fundamental. A statement of principle might be drawn up, he felt, but its implementation would have to be the concern of the individual countries.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) expressed a preference for the United Kingdom text because of its greater clarity and its inclusion of certain exceptions.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) accepted the substance of the article, if limited as in the United Kingdom draft.

THE CHAIRMAN observed that there seemed to be general agreement that something along the lines proposed in Article 10 should be included in the Commission's draft.

Article 11

PROF. CASSIN (France) said it would be necessary to draft two alternative texts on the question of arbitrary searches and seizures, depending on the form the Bill would finally take. The wording of an article on this subject, he felt, would be extremely important.

[6]

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) pointed out that the Chilean draft separated the concepts of personal liberty and family relations, whereas, in the Secretariat and United States drafts they had been grouped as one. He favoured discussing them separately: (1) the inviolability of property and correspondence, and (2) freedom of family relations.

MR. HARRY (Australia) agreed that the substance of the article had a place in the Bill. Neither the right to life nor liberty would be helpful if pressure could be put upon an individual through his family, he pointed out.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) questioned the meaning of the terms "arbitrary" and "unreasonable". He said both were vague and needed clarification. He also asked whether the word "secrecy" was intended to mean absolute secrecy.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) agreed with Prof. Cassin that the form of the draft would determine the final wording of this article. He stated that the meaning of the words "arbitrary" and "unreasonable" would differ in accordance with prevalent customs, practices and ideas.

THE CHAIRMAN summarized the general feeling of the Committee that the substance of the article should be included in the Bill in some form, but that it would have to be worded very clearly and carefully. She proposed that in considering other articles, only the representative wishing to sponsor the inclusion of that article in the Bill should speak.

Article 12

PROF. CASSIN (France) believed this article to be indispensable because persons existed who had no legal personality. A question which came to his mind was whether it should be left by itself or grouped with the other articles relating to civil rights.

Article 13

The inclusion of the substance of Article 13 was sponsored by PROF. CASSIN (France). [7]

Article 14

The inclusion of the substance of Article 14 was sponsored by DR. MALIK (Lebanon).

Article 15

The inclusion of the substance of Article 15 was sponsored by PROF. CASSIN (France).

Article 16

The inclusion of the substance of Article 16 was sponsored by MR. HARRY (Australia) and MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile).

Article 17

THE CHAIRMAN observed that the views of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press would have to be taken into consideration when the drafting of this article was undertaken.

The inclusion of the substance of Article 17 was sponsored by MR. WILSON (United Kingdom).

Article 18

The inclusion of the substance of Article 18 was sponsored by MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile). He said it was important to have such a provision.

Article 19

The inclusion of the substance of Article 19 was sponsored by MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) and DR. MALIK (Lebanon).

Article 20

The inclusion of the substance of Article 20 was sponsored by MR. HARRY (Australia) and DR. MALIK (Lebanon).

Article 21

The inclusion of the substance of Article 21 was sponsored by DR. CHANG (China). [8]

Article 22

THE CHAIRMAN said that in her opinion there should be a provision along these lines. PROF. CASSIN (France) said he thought it should be grouped with the articles on civil rights.

Article 23

The inclusion of the substance of Article 23 was sponsored by PROF. CASSIN (France). He believed it might be joined to those articles on the subject of political guarantees.

Article 24

The inclusion of the substance of Article 24 was sponsored by PROF. CASSIN (France). He stated that in his opinion the Committee might have to draft a text defining the principle of equality.

Article 25

PROF. CASSIN (France) thought that the substance of this article should be retained and connected with the limitations of liberty already discussed.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) remarked that wording of the Secretariat draft was ambiguous. Certain things not prohibited by law are prohibited by other things. The law should not be considered the only lawgiver.

Article 26

The inclusion of the substance of Article 26 was sponsored by PROF. CASSIN (France), who proposed that it be studied in conjunction with Article 6.

Article 27

The inclusion of the substance of Article 27 was sponsored by PROF. CASSIN (France).

Article 28

The inclusion of the substance of Article 28 was sponsored by DR. CHANG (China). He pointed out, however, that what the United Nations could do about grievances would have to be made clear.

[9]

Article 29

The inclusion of the substance of Article 29 was sponsored by MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile). He stated that many great advances of humanity, politically and socially, had been based on the right to resist oppression.

Article 30

The inclusion of the substance of Article 30 was sponsored by DR. MALIK (Lebanon).

Article 31

The inclusion of the substance of Article 31 was sponsored by DR. CHANG (China). He felt, however, that a change of wording might be necessary.

Article 32

The inclusion of the substance of Article 32 was sponsored by PROF. CASSIN (France). He said, however, that he had reservations as to many points of detail.

Article 33

The inclusion of the substance of Article 33 was sponsored by PROF. CASSIN (France).

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) agreed with the principle expressed in the article and pointed out that if States were to be restricted as regards expulsion of aliens, they might be unwilling to accept them in the first instance.

Article 34

The inclusion of the substance of Article 34 was sponsored by DR. MALIK (Lebanon) and DR. CHANG (China).

Dr. Malik explained that he was not sponsoring the text as it stood, but only the principle that political asylum is something sacred and ought to be preserved in the community of nations.

[10]

Article 35

The inclusion of the substance of Article 35 was sponsored by MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile). He added that he supported all of the articles referring to the social rights of individuals, beginning with Article 35 and ending with Article 44.

Article 45

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom), while supporting this article, stated that in the opinion of his government this question should be referred to the appropriate Sub-Commission.

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that some members of the Committee might wish to suggest possible drafts of an article dealing with discrimination which could be passed on to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities with the recommendation that that Sub-Commission recommend a final wording.

PROF. CASSIN (France) agreed that this suggestion satisfied him, but raised the question of the possible necessity of alternate texts, one to be used in a Declaration, another to be included in a convention.

Article 46

The inclusion of the substance of Article 46 was sponsored by DR. MALIK (Lebanon).

Article 47

DR. CHANG (China) pointed out that Article 47 dealt with a method of implementing the Bill of Rights. For this reason he felt that it should not be discussed immediately. [11]

Article 48

THE CHAIRMAN agreed that discussion of both Articles 47 and 48, since they dealt with implementation, should be deferred. However, DR. MALIK (Lebanon) said that since the principle stated in Article 47 was already included in the Charter of the United Nations, its substance should be included somewhere in the Committee's draft, at least in the Preamble.

THE CHAIRMAN asked whether the Committee wished to begin drafting the Bill of Rights immediately. Whether it did so or not, she said, it would have to decide very soon if it was writing a Declaration or an "Act of Parliament". Her own government's attitude had always been that since the International Bill of Rights had to be considered by the General Assembly it should first be in the nature of a Declaration, followed by conventions on particular subjects which might have the binding force of treaties.

DR. CHANG (China) envisaged three distinct documents: one a Declaration, drafted in simple phrases; the second a commentary on each Article of the Declaration; the third a series of proposals for implementation.

THE CHAIRMAN proposed that further discussion of this question be postponed until the next meeting. She hoped that at that meeting, the representative of the Soviet Union might present his views on the questions under consideration.

The meeting adjourned at 1:00 p.m.

E/CN.4/AC.1/10

12 June 1947

Suggestions for Additional Articles to be Added to the International Bill of Rights Submitted by the American Federation of Labor

Every human being, irrespective of race, religion or belief, sex or national origin has the right to pursue his work and spiritual development in conditions of freedom and dignity.

Every Person shall have freedom of expression, and freedom of association in various, differing cultural, religious, economic and political organizations without compulsion by government or any other agencies. (Article 20 of Secretariat draft, E/CN.4/AC.1/3)

These rights shall be inviolate for those who disagree with the government or party in power at any given time and extends to the right of every person to change his beliefs.

E/CN.4/AC.1/11

12 June 1947

Textual Comparison of

- I. The Draft Outline of an International Bill of Rights (prepared by the Secretariat)
- II. The United Kingdom Draft Bill of Rights (document E/CN.4/AC.1/4 – 5 June 1947)

III. United States Proposals (document E/CN.4/AC.1/8 – 11 June 1947)

[2]

Preamble

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Preamble

The Preamble shall refer to the four freedoms and to the provisions of the Charter relating to human rights and shall enunciate the following principles:

1. that there can be no peace unless human rights and freedoms are respected;
2. that man does not have rights only; he owes duties to the society of which he forms part;
3. that man is a citizen both of his State and of the world;
4. that there can be no human freedom or dignity unless war and the threat of war is abolished.

II. U.K. Draft

Preamble

1. Whereas the peoples of the United Nations have reaffirmed their faith in fundamental human rights and in the dignity and worth of the human person;

2. Whereas it is one of the purposes of the United Nations to achieve international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion;

3. Whereas all men are members of communities and as such have the duty to respect the rights of their fellow men equally with their own;

4. Whereas the just claims of the state, which all men under a duty to accept, must not prejudice the respect of man's right to freedom and equality before the law and the safeguard of human rights, which are primary and abiding conditions of all just government;

5. Whereas the denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms endangers the general welfare and friendly relations among nations and the enjoyment of such rights and freedoms by all persons must be secured by international [3] law and protected by the organized community of states;

6. Whereas it is expedient to define more exactly the aforesaid human rights and fundamental freedoms and to make provision for their universal observance and protection.

Now therefore the States parties to this International Bill of Rights have accepted the following provisions:

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[4]

Article 1I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 1

Everyone owes a duty of loyalty to his State and to the (international society) United Nations. He must accept his just share of responsibility for the performance of such social duties and his share of such common sacrifices as may contribute to the common good.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[5]

Article 2I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 2

In the exercise of his rights everyone is limited by the rights of others and by the just requirements of the State and of the United Nations.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

The state is created by the people for the promotion of their welfare and the protection of their mutual rights. In the exercise of his rights everyone is limited by the rights of others. The state may impose only such limitations on such rights as are compatible with the freedom and welfare of all.

[6]

Article 3

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 3

Everyone has the right to life. This right can be denied only to persons who have been convicted under general law of some crime to which the death penalty is attached.

II. U.K. Draft

Part II – Article 8

It shall be unlawful to deprive any person of his life save in the execution of the sentence of a court following on his conviction of a crime for which this penalty is provided by law.

III. U.S. Proposals

The right to life is fundamental and may not be denied to any person except upon conviction of the gravest of crimes under general law providing for the penalty of death.
[7]

Article 4

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 4

No one shall be subjected torture, or to any unusual punishment or indignity.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[8]

Article 5

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 5

Everyone has the right to personal liberty.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[9]

Article 6I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 6

No one shall be deprived of his personal liberty save by a judgment of a court of law, in conformity with the law and after a public trial at which he has had an opportunity for a full hearing, or pending his trial which must take place within a reasonable time after his arrest. Detention by purely executive order shall be unlawful except in time of national emergency.

II. U.K. Draft*Part II – Article 10*

1. No person shall be deprived of his liberty save by an arrest which is affected for the purpose of bringing him before a court on a reasonable suspicion of having committed a crime or which is reasonably considered to be immediately necessary to prevent his committing a crime or breach of the peace.

2. Every person arrested and detained shall be brought without delay before a judge, who shall either try the case or decide, after hearing evidence, whether there is sufficient cause to justify that person's trial and if so whether his liberty shall be restored to him on bail.

3. The period of detention pending trial shall not be unreasonably prolonged.

4. The preceding provisions of this Article do not apply to

- (i) the lawful detention of a person sentenced after conviction to deprivation of liberty or
- (ii) lawful detention of persons of unsound mind or
- (iii) the lawful custody of minors or
- (iv) the lawful arrest and detention of a person to prevent his affecting an unauthorized entry into the country.

[10]

5. Every person who is deprived of his liberty shall have an effective remedy in the nature of “Habeas corpus” by which the lawfulness of his detention shall be decided speedily by a court and his release ordered if the detention is not justified.

III. U.S. Proposals

No one shall be deprived of life or personal liberty, or be convicted or punished for crime in any manner, save by judgment, of a competent and impartial tribunal, in conformity with law, after a fair public trial at which he has had the opportunity for a full hearing, the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him, the right of compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favour, and the right to consult with and be represented by counsel.

[11]

Article 7

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 7

Everyone shall be protected against arbitrary and unauthorized arrest. He shall have the right to immediate judicial determination of the legality of any detention to which he may be subject.

II. U.K. Draft

Part II – Article 10

Paragraph 6. Every person shall have an enforceable right to compensation in respect of any unlawful arrest or deprivation of liberty.

III. U.S. Proposals

No person shall be subjected to arbitrary or unauthorized arrest or detention. Every person who is arrested or detained shall be immediately informed of the charges on which he is held, and shall have the right to prompt judicial determination of the legality of his detention. Trial of the charges must be afforded within a reasonable time, or he shall be released from detention. Every person shall be entitled to secure his release pending trial upon furnishing reasonable security for his appearance, except where such release would defeat the administering of justice. Detention by purely executive order shall be unlawful except in time of national emergency, proclaimed in accordance with law.

[12]

Article 8I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 8

Slavery and compulsory labour are inconsistent with the dignity of man and therefore prohibited by this Bill of Rights. But a man may be required to perform his just share of any public service that is equally incumbent upon all, and his right to a livelihood is conditioned by his duty to work. Involuntary servitude may also be imposed as part of a punishment pronounced by a court of law.

II. U.K. Draft*Part II – Article 9*

No form of slavery shall be permitted.

(A text on the subject of compulsory labour will be inserted here later.)

III. U.S. Proposals

No one shall be held in slavery, nor be required to perform compulsory labour in any form other than public service equally incumbent by law upon all or as part of punishment pronounced by a competent judicial tribunal. No person shall be imprisoned or held in servitude in consequence of the mere breach of contractual obligations.

[13]

Article 9I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 9

Subject to any general law adopted in the interest of national welfare or security, there shall be liberty of movement and free choice of residence within the borders of each State.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

All persons shall equally enjoy the right to freedom of movement from one part of the territory of the state to another, and to free choice of residence in any part of the territory, subject to any general law adopted in the interest of national welfare or security.

Every person shall, subject to equitable immigration and deportation laws, be free to enter, travel through or over, and remain temporarily in the territory of another state, provided always that he observes local laws and police regulations.

[14]

Article 10

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 10

The right of emigration and expatriation shall not be denied.

II. U.K. Draft

Part II – Article 8

Every person who is not subject to any lawful deprivation of liberty or to any outstanding obligations with regard to national service shall be free to leave any country including his own.

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[15]

Article 11

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 11

No one shall be subjected to arbitrary searches or seizures, or to unreasonable interference with his person, home, family relations, reputation, privacy, activities, or personal property. The secrecy of correspondence shall be respected.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

No one shall be subjected to arbitrary or unauthorized searches and seizures of his person, home, papers and effects, or to unreasonable interference with his person, home, family, relations with others, reputation, privacy, activities or property. The secrecy of correspondence shall be respected.

[16]

Article 12

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 12

Everyone has the right to a legal personality. No one shall be restricted in the exercise of his civil rights except for reasons based on age or mental condition or as a punishment for a criminal offence.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

Everyone has the right to a legal personality. No person shall be restricted in the exercise of his civil rights except under general law based on reasons of age or mental incompetence, or as punishment for a criminal offence, or as otherwise permitted in this bill.

[17]

Article 13

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 13

Everyone has the right to contract marriage in accordance with the laws of the State.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -
[18]

Article 14*I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 14*

There shall be freedom of conscience and belief and of private and public religious worship.

II. U.K. DraftPart II – Article 13*

1. Every person shall be free to hold any religious or other belief dictated by his conscience and to change his belief.

2. Every person shall be free to practise, either alone or in community with other persons of like mind, any form of religious worship and observance, subject only to such restrictions, penalties or liabilities as are strictly necessary to prevent the commission of acts which offend laws passed in the interests of humanity and morals, to preserve public order and to ensure the rights and freedoms of other persons.

3. Subject only to the same restrictions, every person of full age and sound mind shall be free to give and receive any form of religious teaching and to endeavour to persuade other persons of full age and sound mind the truth of his beliefs, and in the case of a minor the parent or guardian shall be free to determine what religious teaching he shall receive.

[19]

Article 15*I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 15*

Everyone has the right to form, to hold, to receive and to impart opinion.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

Everyone has the right to form and hold opinions and to receive them from, and impart them, within or beyond the borders of the State.

[20]

Article 16

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 16

There shall be free and equal access to all sources of information both within and beyond the borders of the State.

II. UK. Draft

Part II – Article 14

Paragraph 2. Every person shall be free to receive and disseminate information of all kinds, including both facts, critical comment and ideas by books, newspapers, or oral instruction, and by the medium of all lawfully operated devices.

Paragraph 3. The freedoms of speech and information referred to in the preceding paragraphs of this Article may be subject only to necessary restrictions, penalties or liabilities with regard to: matters which must remain secret in the interests of national safety; publications intended or likely to incite persons to alter by violence the system of Government, or to promote disorder or crime; obscene publications; (publications aimed at the suppression of human rights and fundamental freedoms); publications injurious to the independence of the judiciary or the fair conduct of legal proceedings; and expressions or publications which libel or slander the reputations of other persons.

III. U.S. Proposals

Freedom of everyone to receive, read and listen to all matters of information shall not be impaired, and there shall be free and equal access to all sources of information both within and beyond the border of a State.

[21]

Article 17

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 17

Subject only to the laws governing slander and libel, there shall be freedom of speech and of expression by any means whatsoever, and there shall be reasonable access to all channels of communication. Censorship shall not be permitted.

II. U.K. Draft

Part II – Article 14

Paragraph 1. Every person shall be free to express and publish his ideas orally, in writing, in the form of art, or otherwise.

...

Paragraph 3. The freedoms of speech and information referred to in the preceding paragraphs of this Article may be subject only to necessary restrictions, penalties or liabilities with regard to: matters which must remain secret in the interests of national safety; publications intended or likely to incite persons to alter by violence the system of Government, or to promote disorder or crime; obscene publications; (publications aimed at the suppression of human rights and fundamental freedoms); publications injurious to the independence of the judiciary or the fair conduct of legal proceedings; and expressions or publications which libel or slander the reputations of other persons.

III. U.S. Proposals

There shall be freedom of speech, of the press and of expression by any means whatsoever, and there shall be reasonable access to all channels of communication.
[22]

Article 18

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 18

There exists a duty towards society to present information and news in a fair and impartial manner.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -
[23]

Article 19I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 19

There shall be freedom of peaceful assembly.

II. U.K. Draft*Part II – Article 15*

All persons shall have the right to assemble peaceably for any lawful purpose including the discussion of any matter, on which under Article 14 any person has the right to express and publish his ideas. So restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of this right other than those necessary for the protection of life and property and to prevent disorders, the obstruction of traffic and of the free movement of others.

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -
[24]

Article 20I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 20

There shall be freedom to form associations for purposes not inconsistent with this Bill of Rights.

II. U.K. Draft*Part II – Article 16*

All persons shall be free to constitute associations, in whatever form may be appropriate under the law of the state, for the promotion and protection of their legitimate interests and of any other lawful object, including the dissemination of all information of which under Article 4 the dissemination is unrestricted. The rights and freedom set forth in Articles 13 and 14 shall be enjoyed by such associations.

III. U.S. Proposals

There shall be freedom to form associations.

[25]

Article 21

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 21

Everyone has the right to establish educational institutions in conformity with conditions laid down by the law.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[26]

Article 22

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 22

Everyone has a right to own personal property.

His right to share in the ownership of industrial, commercial and other profit-making enterprises is governed by the law of the State within which such enterprises are situated.

The State may regulate the acquisition and use of private property and determine those things that are susceptible of private appropriation.

No one shall be deprived of his property without just compensation.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

Everyone has the right to own and transfer property, subject to regulation, under general laws, governing the acquisition and use thereof, and determining, in the interest of national welfare and security, those things not susceptible of private ownership. No one shall be deprived of property except in accordance with law, nor suffer his property to be taken other than for public use with just compensation to him.

[27]

Article 23

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 23

No one shall be required to pay any tax or be subjected to any public charge that has not been imposed by the law.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[28]

Article 24

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 24

There shall be equal opportunity of access to all vocations and professions not having a public character.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposal

There shall be equal opportunity to engage in any vocation or profession, not constituting public employment, subject to such reasonable qualifications as are inherent in the work to be performed.

[29]

Article 25I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 25

Everything that is not prohibited by law is permitted.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -
[30]

Article 26I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 26

No one shall be convicted of crime except by judgment of a court of law, in conformity with the law, and after a fair trial at which he has had an opportunity for a full public hearing.

Nor shall anyone be convicted of crime unless he has violated some law in effect at the time of the act charged as an offence, nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that applicable at the time of the commission of the offence.

II. U.K. Draft*Part II – Article 12*

No person shall be held guilty of any offence on account of acts or omissions which did not constitute such an offence at the time when they were committed.

III. U.S. Proposals

No one shall be convicted of crime except by judgment of a competent and impartial tribunal for violation of a law in effect at the time of the commission of the act charged as an offence, nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that applicable at the time of the commission of the offence. No one acquitted or convicted of a crime shall thereafter be again put in jeopardy of life or liberty for the offence of which he was acquitted or convicted.

[31]

Article 27

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 27

There shall be access to independent and impartial tribunals for the determination of rights and duties under the law.

Everyone has the right to consult with and to be represented by counsel.

II. U.K. Draft

Part I – Article 2

Every state is, by international law, under an obligation to ensure:

...

- (b) that any person whose rights or freedoms are violated should have an effective remedy, notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity;
- (c) that such remedies shall be enforceable by a judiciary whose independence is secured. . .

III. U.S. Proposals

Every person has the right to have any civil claims or liabilities determined without undue delay by a competent and impartial tribunal, before which he has the opportunity for a fair hearing, and has the right to consult with and to be represented by counsel.

[32]

Article 28

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 28

Everyone has the right, either individually or in association with others, to petition the government of his State or the United Nations for redress of grievances.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

No State shall abridge the right of everyone, either individually or in association with others, to petition the government of his State or the United Nations for redress of grievance.

[33]

Article 29I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 29

Everyone has the right, either individually or with others, to resist oppression and tyranny.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[34]

Article 30I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 30

Everyone has the right to take an effective part in the government of the State of which he is a citizen. The State has a duty to conform to the wishes of the people as manifested by democratic elections. Elections shall be periodic, free and fair.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

Government derives its just power from the consent of the governed. Everyone has the right to take an effective part in the government of the State or territory of which he is a citizen. The citizens of the State or territory are accordingly entitled to exercise self-government through representatives freely and fairly chosen by them in periodic democratic elections.

[35]

Article 31

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 31

Everyone shall have equal opportunity of access to all public functions in the State of which he is a citizen.

Appointments to the civil service shall be by competitive examination.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

Everyone shall have equal opportunity to engage in public employment in the State of which he is a citizen.

[36]

Article 32

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 32

Everyone has the right to a nationality.

Everyone is entitled to the nationality of the State where he is born unless and until on attaining majority he declares for the nationality open to him by virtue of descent.

No one shall be deprived of his nationality by way of punishment or be deemed to have lost his nationality in any other way unless he concurrently acquires a new nationality.

Everyone has the right to renounce the nationality of his birth, or a previously acquired nationality, upon acquiring the nationality of another State.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

Every person shall have the right to a nationality.
[37]

Article 33*I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 33*

No alien who has been legally admitted to the territory of a State may be expelled therefrom except in pursuance of a judicial decision or recommendation as a punishment for offences laid down by law as warranting expulsion.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None-
[38]

Article 34*I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 34*

Every State shall have the right to grant asylum to political refugees.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -
[39]

(Social Rights)*Preliminary Article (Article)I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

- No provision -

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

Everyone has the right to a fair and equal opportunity to advance his own physical, economic and cultural wellbeing and to share in the benefits of civilization.

It is the duty of the State, in accordance with the maximum use of its resources and with due regard for the liberties of individuals, to promote this purpose by legislation or by other appropriate means. Among the social rights thus to be achieved progressively by joint effort of the individual and the State are those defined in the following Articles.

[40]

Article 35I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 35

Everyone has the right to medical care. The State shall promote public health and safety.

II. U.K. Draft

- No provision -

III. U.S. Proposals

Everyone, without distinction of economic or social condition, has a right to the highest attainable standard of health.

The responsibility of the State for the health and safety of its people can be fulfilled only by provision of adequate health and social measures.

[41]

Article 36I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 36

Everyone has the right to education.

Each State has the duty to require that every child within its territory receive a primary education. The State shall maintain adequate and free facilities for such education. It shall also promote facilities for higher education without distinction as to the race, sex, language, religion, class or wealth of the persons entitled to benefit therefrom.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal –

III. U.S. Proposals

Everyone has the right to education.

Each State has the duty to require that each child within territories under its jurisdiction receive a fundamental education. The State shall maintain adequate and free facilities for such education. It shall also assure development of facilities for further, including higher, education, which are adequate and effectively available to all the people within such territories.

[42]

Article 37I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 37

Everyone has the right and the duty to perform socially useful work.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[43]

Article 38I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 38

Everyone has the right to good working conditions.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

Everyone has a right to a decent standard of living; to a fair and equal opportunity to earn a livelihood; to wages and hours and conditions of work calculated to insure a just share of the benefits of progress to all; and to protection against loss of income on account of disability, unemployment, or old age.

It is the duty of the State to undertake measures that will promote full employment and good working conditions; provide protection for wage-earners and dependents against lack of income for reasons beyond their control; and assure adequate food, housing, and community services necessary to the wellbeing of the people.

[44]

Article 39I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 39

Everyone has the right to such equitable share of the national income as the need for his work and the increment it makes to the common welfare may justify.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[45]

Article 40I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 40

Everyone has the right to such public help as may be necessary to make it possible for him to support his family.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -
[46]

Article 41I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 41

Everyone has the right to social security. The State shall maintain effective arrangements for the prevention of unemployment and for insurance against the risks of unemployment, accident, disability, sickness, old age and other involuntary or undeserved loss of livelihood.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -
[47]

Article 42I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 42

Everyone has the right to good food and housing and to live in surroundings that are pleasant and healthy.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[48]

Article 43I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 43

Everyone has the right to a fair share of rest and leisure.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[49]

Article 44I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 44

Everyone has the right to participate in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts and to share in the benefits of science.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[50]

Article 45

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 45

No one shall suffer any discrimination whatsoever because of race, sex, language, religion, or political creed. There shall be full equality before the law in the enjoyment of the rights enunciated in this Bill of Rights.

II. U.K. Draft

(Comment to Part II – Articles 8 to 16)

This part of this Bill will be completed by provisions prohibiting distinctions based on race, sex, language and religion. No attempt is made to draft these provisions in advance of the reports of the sub-committee on Discrimination and Minorities and also of the Commission on the Status of Women. In any case, Part II as drafted above in fact provides for absence of discrimination seeing that it uses the words “all persons”. (See also Article 2 (a) of Part I: “all persons under its jurisdiction, whether citizens, persons of foreign nationality or stateless”.)

III. U.S. Proposals

There shall be equal protection before the law in the enjoyment of the rights enumerated in this Bill of Rights, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

[51]

Article 46

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

Article 46

In States inhabited by a substantial number of persons of a race, language or religion other than those of the majority of the population, persons belonging to such ethnic, linguistic or religious minorities shall have the right to establish and maintain, out of an equitable proportion any public funds available for the purpose, their schools and cultural and religious institutions, and to use their own language before the courts and other authorities and organs of the State and in the press and in public assembly.

II. U.K. Draft

- No proposal -

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[52]

Article 47I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 47

It is the duty of each member State to respect and protect the rights enunciated in this Bill of Rights. The State shall, when necessary, co-operate with other States to that end.

II. U.K. Draft*Part I – Article 2*

Every State is, by international law, under an obligation to ensure:

(a) that its laws secure to all persons under its jurisdiction, whether citizens, persons of foreign nationality or stateless, the enjoyment of these human rights and fundamental freedoms:

...

(d) that its police and executive officers should act in support of the enjoyment of these rights and freedoms.

III. U.S. Proposals

- None –

[53]

Article 48I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)Article 48

The provisions of this International Bill of Rights shall be deemed fundamental principles of international law and of the national law of each of the member States of the United Nations. Their observance is therefore a matter of international concern and it shall be within the jurisdiction of the United Nations to discuss any violation thereof.

II. U.K. Draft

Part I – Article 1

The States parties hereto declare that they recognize the principles set forth in Part II of this Bill as human rights and fundamental freedoms founded on the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations.

Part I – Article 3

On receipt of a request to this effect from the Secretary-General of the United Nations, made under the authority of a resolution of the General Assembly, the government of any party to this Bill will supply an explanation, certified by the highest legal authorities of the State concerned, as to the manner in which the law of that State gives effect to any of the said provisions of this Bill of Rights.

Part I – Article 5

A failure by any State party hereto to fulfil the obligations under Article 2 is an injury to the community of states and a matter of concern to the United Nations as the community of states organized under the rule of law.

[54]

Part I – Article 6

1. While declaring their readiness to consider the adoption of further procedures designed to strengthen the international protection of fundamental human rights and freedoms, the states parties hereto accept the right of any of them, acting in the interests of the community of states, to bring to the attention of the General Assembly of the United Nations any violation by any of them of the provisions of this Bill of Rights as constituting a situation likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations amongst nations and as a violation of the purposes and principles of the United Nations within the meaning of Article 14 of the Charter.

2. Any party hereto which is thus alleged to have violated the provisions of this Bill of Rights shall have the right to request the General Assembly to obtain the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice thereon and to refrain from taking any further action on the matter until this opinion has been obtained, and if such a request is made the parties hereto agree that they are bound to support the request.

Part I – Article 7

The parties hereto agree that anyone of them which is found by a Resolution of the General Assembly adopted by a two-thirds majority persistently to have violated the provisions of this Bill of Rights should be deemed to have violated the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and therefore be liable to expulsion from the organization under Article 6 of the Charter.

[55]

Article
Emergency

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

- No provision -

II. U.K. Draft

Part I – Article 4

1. In time of war or other national emergency, a State may take measures derogating from its obligations under Article 2 above to the extent strictly limited by the exigencies of the situation.

2. A State party hereto availing itself of this right of derogation shall inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations fully of the measures which it has thus enacted and the reasons therefor. It shall also inform him as and when the measures cease to operate and the provisions of Article 2 are being fully executed.

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

[56]

Method of Adoption and Amendments

I. Draft Outline (Secretariat)

- No provision -

II. U.K. Draft

See Document E/CN.4/AC.1/4 (5 June 1947), pages 113–114.<sup>168</sup>

<sup>168</sup> The reference should be to pp. 13–14 of document E/CN.4/AC.1/4.

III. U.S. Proposals

- None -

E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.5*12 June 1947<sup>169</sup>Summary Record of the Fifth Meeting [of the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights]Held at Lake Success, New York, on Thursday, 12 June 1947 at 2:30 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States of America), Vice-Chairman: Dr. P.C. Chang (China), Rapporteur: Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon). Col. W.R. Hodgson (Australia), Mr. H. Santa Cruz (Chile), Prof. René Cassin (France), Prof. V. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), Mr. Geoffrey Wilson (United Kingdom). Specialized Agencies: Mr. J. Havet (UNESCO). Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Toni Sender (American Federation of Labor), Mrs. H. Fuhrman (International Cooperative Alliance). Secretariat: Prof. J. P. Humphrey (Secretary of the Committee), Mr. Edward Lawson.

1. Preparation of a Preliminary Draft of an International Bill of Human Rights on the Basis of Documentation Supplied by the Secretariat

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that the meeting be devoted to a discussion of the form which should be used in drafting the International Bill of Human Rights. She suggested that there were several alternatives: (1) to prepare a general Declaration, to be followed by a number of conventions; (2) to write [2] an "Act of Parliament", including perhaps fewer items but spelling out the provisions more completely and carefully; (3) to draft a general Declaration, then put the substance of the Declaration as nearly as possible into the form of a convention, and present both to the Commission on Human Rights at the same time. She proposed that if necessary, when the division in the Committee appeared to be fairly equal, two alternative drafts might be presented to the Commission. This would give the Commission an opportunity to weigh both methods of expressing an idea. She asked each member to express his opinion as to the form the Bill should take.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) felt that there might be two extreme positions: (1) to prepare something that would immediately strike public opinion and serve as a guide to the future policies of States; this would be a Declaration or Manifesto which might not be accompanied by a convention or by any other measure of implementation; (2) to make immediately an enumeration of the rights of man, that enumeration to be in the form of an international convention obligatory for all States, and to create immediately, under the auspices of the United Nations, and serving mankind, an organism which might watch over the respect of human rights, which would be under the supervision of the General Assembly. In his opinion, the Committee should first formulate principles – not only the principle of liberty which it already had examined and the fundamental rights it had talked about, but also the social and economic rights of man. In this respect the Declaration should be complete. The Committee, however, might compromise on the length of the document, making it as brief and concise as possible as regards the separate rights and using concise formulas which do not embark upon details.

<sup>169</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 17 June 1947.

With regard to the question of implementation, Professor Cassin stated that in his opinion the Committee would have to work in stages. The role of the Governments would be very important in this connection, and the Committee would have to be prepared to make certain compromises with regard to the obligatory character of the rights. After having set forth certain [3] brief but striking declarations, he said, the Committee should then prepare longer and more elaborate texts on each specific right mentioned.

Professor Cassin pointed out that the Committee might consider, in addition to the rights already discussed, certain so-called international rights, for instance immigration, expatriation, right to asylum, and right to a nationality. In this field, he felt, it would be a very difficult task to draft precise protocols to be adopted by the States.

As regards social and economic rights, he felt that the protocol and the undertakings could not be the same as for the fundamental rights of the human being. Most States would agree that the liberty of conscience or the right to live should be safeguarded as soon as possible, but few would be in agreement on detailed undertakings regarding social security, social insurance, full employment, and other subjects. It should also be remembered that in these latter fields, such inter-governmental organizations as the ILO and the General Assembly Committee on the Codification of International Law already were active.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) stated that he had no precise opinion as to the manner in which the Committee should proceed in drafting the International Bill of Rights. He pointed out that the draft presented by Chile contained an article establishing that its provisions shall form part of the laws of each country; that is, they would be obligatory. However, he agreed with Professor Cassin that the practical aspect had to be taken into account, and that the Committee would have to proceed by stages: first establishing the fundamental principles and reserving for later stages the working out of agreements concerning separate rights.

DR. CHANG (China) stated that at this stage the Committee could only hope to draw up a list of general principles and rights, putting them into the form of a draft Declaration for consideration by the General Assembly. A commentary might be attached to that list of principles and rights, [4] defining the terms in simple formulations. Later the Committee could consider practical methods of implementation. He emphasized that the number of articles should not be limited at this stage, and that the Committee might, at the first stage, allow itself to err on the side of too many articles rather than too few.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) stated that he agreed with Professor Cassin that both attempts ought to be made at the same time. The first attempts would be to lay down the fundamental principles to be enunciated, which would then be passed upon by the General Assembly in the form of a Resolution. These principles would constitute the Manifesto or Credo of the United Nations concerning human rights. The second step would be to distil from this general basis of principles certain positive laws which will then be entered into by the parties who wish to subscribe to them. That would be the real definitive Bill of Human Rights, which would then become positive law according to the manner in which it is enacted and adhered to by the various countries. Dr. Malik felt that the Bill should have a preamble and a body of articles. Three categories might be established: (1) a category of fundamental principle, of manifesto, of declaration; (2) a category of the preamble; and (3) a category of the articles that are to be inserted into the Bill. He stated that the small powers are most anxious to see a tangible formulation of positive law to which they could adhere and to which the great powers also could adhere.<sup>170</sup>

PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) stated that although he was not in a position to express the ideas of his Government on questions of principles and substance, he wished to speak on the general outline of the Bill, raising certain questions which he thought ought to be taken into account without promising to give the answers to those questions. First of all he pointed out that the Committee might be embarking on a voyage which would lead it in the direction where it might cross the border which divides international law from internal law. The border which divides the inter-relationships of governments from the field [5] where sovereign rights of nations must prevail. [sic] He pointed out that the United Nations must first fight the remnants of fascism. Having beaten fascism it must formulate a Bill of Rights which would prevent the rebirth of fascist systems and of fascist ideology. Such a Bill, however, must not be of such a nature as to interfere in the internal system of various governments. Secondly, Professor Koretsky said the documented outline prepared by the Secretariat appeared to go beyond the limit of international law and appeared to be leading the members of the Drafting

<sup>170</sup> The verbatim transcript of Mr. Malik's remarks is published in Chapter 6 of Habib C. Malik, ed., The Challenge of Human Rights, Charles Malik and the Universal Declaration, Oxford: Centre for Lebanese Studies, 2000, pp. 61–62.

Committee to suggest that the United Nations embark into an intervention in the affairs of individual countries. The United Kingdom draft, he pointed out, appeared to him to be an attempt to transfer certain principles of law accepted in the United Kingdom to other countries – not only principles but also the mechanism of their implementation. This system, he felt, was not quite applicable to other nations whose historical development was different.

Professor Koretsky suggested that the Drafting Committee might have to consider following a different method from the one it had adopted. This method would take into consideration the following ideas: (1) every standard of law which the Committee placed in its preliminary draft ought to be set forth in such a manner that all the governments, and each government separately, should be in a position to agree to enforce them; (2) since each sovereign government must set its own standards in relations among nations the only form which the Committee could suggest, which would be compulsory for any government, would be that of an International Convention; (3) if such a Convention is going to be formulated it must be created with the direct co-operation and participation of each separate government.

Professor Koretsky pointed out that one of the first principles to be adopted in the formulation of an International Bill of Rights must be the destruction of discrimination and inequality. The Charter, he said, teaches that we must seek equality, that we must seek the end that people in each country shall be equal not only according to law, but also according to fact [6] and substance. He did not feel that either the Secretariat outline or the draft of the United Kingdom satisfied this principle.

A second principle to be adopted in formulating a Bill, he went on, was that the Bill should rise above the egotistical interests of each country and stand on a high level. It should be a document for the present time – a historical monument.

The basic characteristics of the drafts that had been presented to the Committee was their tendency to liberate man not from persecution but from his own government, from his own people, Professor Koretsky said. This meant putting him in opposition to his own government and to his own people. With regard to procedure in formulating the draft Bill of Rights, Professor Koretsky made the following suggestions: (1) that the drafts which had been submitted to the Drafting Committee are systematized; (2) that they be sent to the governments in order that the governments might be able to make concrete suggestions; (3) that the comments of each member government be gathered and studied; and (4) that as a result of the study of the comments of the governments a simple document be drawn up which would protect the rights of a free man in a free community.

In regard to the form of the document he stated that the one which pleased him most, from the point of view of the method of its preparation although not as far as its contents was concerned, was the Cuban draft. This draft consisted of clear and concise formulas which could be easily understood. The Committee would not impress the masses of mankind if it presented as a Bill of Rights a document full of legal complications and reservations, he said. The Declaration of the Rights of Man should be as simple and as clear as the Decalogue, acceptable both to rich and poor, to the famous and those who are not famous, to Gentile and to Jew, to black and white, to everybody regardless of race or nationality.

In conclusion he proposed that the Committee proceed on the basis of a Declaration which should be adhered to by all governments. The Declaration [7] should be simple, clear, and concise. It should not seek to separate man from his community; it should rather create a man who is free in the framework of a free society.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that the Drafting Committee's terms of reference required it only to present a preliminary draft of an International Bill of Rights to the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission itself had been asked to submit this preliminary draft to all the governments for their comments. She pointed out also that it had been agreed at a previous meeting that the definition of the principle of equality or non-discrimination would be undertaken by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. She emphasized that the draft to be prepared by the Drafting Committee was not binding irrevocably with respect to any government.

PROFESSOR KORETSKY suggested that perhaps the Drafting Committee might submit its preliminary draft directly to the governments or at least might circulate to the governments its materials already available. The drafts which had been presented, he said, could not be considered as satisfactory because they were beyond the limitations of the problems which could be included in an International Convention.

With respect to the question of discrimination he stated that in his opinion this particular item was the most important one to be included in a Bill of Rights – a question which ought to be raised under the present historical, concrete and material conditions. Whatever discrimination still exists in the world must be destroyed, he felt. This must be done in such a manner that the organization of the United Nations never again would have to consider items dealing with discrimination. Discrimination, he continued, can be considered an international political act, a phenomenon which has to be fought, which has to be treated, and which will threaten peace and security unless it is ended. This was one reason why he believed that the opinions of governments should be heard at the present early stage rather than the later stage in the formulation of a Bill of Rights.

[8]

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that the Drafting Committee had no authority to initiate an entirely new procedure and that it would have to submit its preliminary draft to the Commission on Human Rights as it had been directed to do by the Economic and Social Council.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) expressed his agreement with what Professor Koretsky had said about the importance of establishing the principle of non-discrimination and also the importance of having a clear, concise, statement of the principles underlying the conception of human rights. He hoped that the representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics would be able soon to express the views of his government on the substance to be included in the Bill. He agreed that the United Kingdom draft represented the United Kingdom point of view but felt that any other document put forward by any other representative would similarly reflect the atmosphere in which the drafter of the document had lived his life. The work of the Drafting Committee, as he understood it, was to find the maximum possible degree of unanimity between these various different points of view.

COLONEL HODGSON (Australia) pointed out that all governments had had several months in which to prepare their observations concerning the substance to be included in an International Bill of Rights. The Drafting Committee, he said, had been specifically requested to prepare the preliminary draft of such a Bill. The immediate question was not the contents of the Bill but the form that it should take. Approximately two hundred suggestions had already been made as to items to be included in the International Bill of Rights, he pointed out, and the Committee should now attempt to go through these with a view to reaching agreement. The Committee, he felt, must be practical and realistic and must avoid putting into its preliminary draft a group of principles which would be unacceptable to the various governments.

[9]

With regard to the form of the Bill, the Australian Delegation did not believe in a simple Declaration, Colonel Hodgson said; the Bill should be drafted in such a way that it could become an actual Convention which should contain practical measures for carrying out stated objectives. Even this might not be enough, for many conventions or treaties had never been put into effect in practice. Therefore, he felt that provision should be made that if a government or nation does not carry into effect the terms of the Bill of Rights it should be taken to task by the aggrieved party before an International Court.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that the proposed International Court of Human Rights was a method of implementing the Bill of Rights and that therefore consideration of its establishment should be deferred until a later date.

PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) felt that any action creating a Court which would stand higher than the separate governments as regards the inter-relations between governments and their citizens would inevitably lead to the destruction of governments. It would, he felt, be an organism which would be working against governments – a new, outside, disconnected organism which would take upon itself the function of regulating the relations between the governments and their citizens. This, in his opinion, would violate the provisions of international law. Professor Koretsky felt that it would be better to follow out the proposal made in the Declaration presented by the Delegation of Panama, which was that each government should ensure conditions which would make each human being free.

COLONEL HODGSON (Australia) pointed out that it was the intention of the government of Australia to press for the establishment of an International Court of Human Rights. He cited several historical precedents, including the Court of Upper Silesia,<sup>171</sup> the International Court of Justice, and the “mixed” courts of Egypt.<sup>172</sup> Unfortunately, he said, there is no court in [10] existence at the present time where individuals or minorities can seek redress when their human rights and freedoms have been violated.

PROFESSOR KORETSKY pointed out that the Egyptian “mixed” courts were created at a time when certain countries did not have equal rights. Egypt was obliged, instead of having foreigners judged on the basis of local law, to have them judged according to foreign law. That differed naturally in principle from the situation in other countries where foreigners are always judged according to the local law.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) pointed out that if the Codification of International Law had been called for by the Charter it would have begun before the work of the Commission on Human Rights started. Because the Charter directly created the Commission on Human Rights, work in this field had started before work in the field of Codification of International Law. The Economic and Social Council had prescribed certain working procedures for the Commission on Human Rights and both the Commission and the Drafting Committee were bound by those working methods.

As far as the conception of the work was concerned, Professor Cassin reverted to his original suggestion that the Drafting Committee might have to contemplate two tasks: (1) the drafting of principles in a short, concise, eloquent Declaration which would speak directly to the masses of the people and be accepted by public opinion; and (2) the preparation of Conventions which the States might be willing to sign.

With respect to the fears which the delegate of the Soviet Union had expressed with regard to intervention or interference on the part of an international body, he agreed that it must be fully borne in mind that the United Nations is not yet a World Government which could over-ride the authority of national governments. However, in his opinion the Charter itself stated the right of interference. The Charter itself recognized that the international community has the right to deal with the respect of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the interior and within the borders of countries. [11] This was specifically put into the Charter in the hope of avoiding a repetition of what happened in 1933 when Germany began to massacre its own nationals and when other nations refused to consider this a matter of international concern.

<sup>171</sup> The Arbitration Court of Upper Silesia was established by the German Polish Convention of 15 May 1922. It gave the Council of the United Nations competence to pronounce on all individual or collective petitions relating to the protection of minorities. See: G. Kaeckenbeeck, “The Character and Work of the Arbitral Tribunal of Upper Silesia”, (1935) 21 Transactions of the Grotius Society 27.

<sup>172</sup> The Egyptian Mixed Courts were the primary judicial authority in Egypt between 1876 and 1949.

He was convinced, he said, that the right of interference must be used with moderation, that it must be used with conviction, and that many stages would have to be gone through before such interference could be effectuated equitably. He did not see how the international community of States could accept appeals with regard to electoral questions, with regard to questions of taxes or in regard to many other questions raised in the relationships between States and their citizens. He did, however, feel that certain important cases – for example, the case of the massacres which began in 1933 – could be considered by some sort of an International Court in the future.

THE CHAIRMAN said that Professor Cassin had expressed in essence the position of the United Nations:<sup>173</sup> namely, that the Bill of Rights must consist first of a Declaration of broad principles. These principles later could be elaborated in a Convention. She suggested that the preliminary draft of the Bill might be in two parts and expressed the hope that at the next meeting the representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics would be prepared to make a statement on the views of his government relating to the substantive contents of the Bill.

The meeting adjourned at 5:00 p.m.

E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.6

13 June 1947<sup>174</sup>

Summary Record of the Sixth Meeting [of the Drafting
Committee of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Friday,

13 June 1947 at 10:30 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States); Vice-Chairman: Dr. P. C. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon). Members: Mr. Ralph L. Harry (Australia); Mr. H. Santa Cruz (Chile); Prof. René Cassin (France); Mr. Geoffrey Wilson (United Kingdom); Prof. V. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics). Specialized Agencies: Mr. J. Havet (UNESCO). Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Toni Sender (American Federation of Labor). Secretariat: Prof. J. P. Humphrey (Secretary of the Committee); Mr. Edward Lawson.

<sup>173</sup> The words “position of the United Nations” were replaced by “position of the United States” by E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.5/Corr.1, issued on 26 June 1947.

<sup>174</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 16 June 1947.

1. Consideration of Procedure to be Followed in Preparing a Preliminary Draft of the International Bill of Human Rights

PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) stated that he was not in a position at the moment to present a draft Bill or to make concrete detailed comments. However, his Government wished to reserve the right to do this later. He said that texts of the Bill should be acceptable to each and every government. It was therefore necessary for his Government to have detailed information regarding the basis of a draft Bill, and to know how other governments feel about it. The material already presented [2] had been made available at rather a late stage, and his Government wished to study the documents with the care they deserved. It might later submit proposals of its own. Other representatives, he thought, might be in the same position. He suggested that the Chairman organize the work so as to give an opportunity to governments to acquaint themselves with the work of the Committee, even in unfinished form. The Committee, he said, should be able to consider the comments of all the governments. He proposed, therefore, that a small working group be created with a membership of, say, three, plus the Chairman. The task of this group would be to collate the various opinions which had been expressed. He suggested as members, Prof. Cassin (France), Dr. Malik (Lebanon), and Mr. Wilson (United Kingdom). This group could, in addition, prepare appropriate drafts for transmission to the governments for their comments. He agreed that this procedure went beyond the stages of drafting suggested by the Economic and Social Council. However, he felt that his suggestion would leave those stages untouched, and would have the effect of using the time between the end of the session of the Drafting Committee and the beginning of the second session of the Commission on Human Rights to speed the work of drafting. He further suggested that the Secretariat publish the results of the work of the working group, making it clear that its draft was still in a preliminary stage. This draft should be made widely accessible to interested individuals and organizations all over the world who would be invited to comment on it. The Secretary-General also could send it to governments for comments and suggestions. If this procedure produced satisfactory results, the Drafting Committee could be convened a few days before the beginning of the next full session of the Commission. It would then be able to prepare a draft Bill, corresponding closely to the wishes of governments, for presentation to the Commission.

Prof. Koretsky went on to say that he would like the Committee to consider the necessity of broadening certain points which had not been [3] developed sufficiently in the drafts submitted. He maintained specifically that the ideas regarding discrimination as expressed in the various drafts has not been developed sufficiently. There was wide evidence of the existence of discrimination in the world; the General Assembly itself had discussed, for example, the treatment of Indians in South Africa. In his opinion it was not sufficient simply to proclaim the principle of equality or of non-discrimination; that idea must be implemented. Women were not yet treated with equality, neither in the economic field nor in the political field; nor were women elected in sufficient numbers to public office. He felt that it was insufficient to say that equality without regard to race, sex, language or religion should be proclaimed. Certain conditions, such as terrorism and certain forms of taxation, which had the effect of transforming equality into factual inequality, would have to be eliminated.

Next, he felt that the question of essential rights and freedoms needed to be stressed more than they were in any of the present drafts, and an acceptable and effective means of implementation would have to be devised. Such implementation, in his opinion, would not come through the creation of a Tribunal, an International Court or an international police force, because any such organ would be able to implement no more nor less than could be implemented by the separate governments.

Prof. Koretsky stressed his belief that the approach of the Bill should be such as would make its acceptance possible under any and all social systems. He cited Article 122 of the Soviet Constitution, regarding the rights of women, where not only was it stated that women had equal rights in all fields, but the specific fields were enumerated, together with various ways in which the ideal was to be put into effect. The Committee, he suggested, might travel further along this road. He cited Article 120 of the Soviet Constitution, relating to the right of citizens to be supported in their old age or when they had lost the ability to support themselves. This statement of a right, he pointed out, was then insured by a broad development of social insurance for workers and support [4] of a broad network of rest homes. Whatever is put into an International Bill of Rights may be implemented, he added, and there should be no reservations.

Prof. Koretsky then referred to the new Japanese Constitution which had been drafted in consultation with General MacArthur, and which indicated, he said, that there had been no modification of the old Japanese feudal system or dissolution of monopolistic concerns despite the proclamation of formal rights and freedoms. In Japan such concerns had been the tools of those who had fomented the recent war. Any declaration, he went on, must stipulate the elimination of Fascism wherever it might exist. The Committee should not adopt a position which would not be politically significant.

Referring to the question of language and style, Prof. Koretsky maintained that conciseness and clarity were particularly important, and that the final declaration of Human Rights should be easily understandable by the masses of people. It should imitate the style and manner of the old laws, especially their conciseness and clarity. It should have emotional appeal, conviction, and provocative language. He recalled the clear, fighting spirit of the United States' Declaration of Independence and of the French Declaration of the Rights of Man, both of which reflected periods of freedom and elevation. The Declaration of Human Rights should sound a bugle call, he said, and should state principles for which any man would be ready to stake his life. The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics considered this Declaration of great importance, and in view of the need to study the documents closely, reserved the right to submit concrete proposals later.

THE CHAIRMAN drew Prof. Koretsky's attention to the opinion expressed by the Soviet delegate to the Economic and Social Council. This delegate had opposed entrusting the drafting of the Bill of Rights to a small group. There was no reason why the Committee should not ask a small group to undertake certain tasks, she felt, but this work would finally have to be [5] passed upon by the Committee itself.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) also recalled the stand taken by the Soviet representative at the Fourth Session of the Economic and Social Council regarding the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights that its three officers prepare a preliminary draft of the Bill of Rights. He said that his Government considered that the collaboration of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was of fundamental importance in view of the special contribution that might be made by States with new forms of law. There were various concepts, for instance in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, in the United States of America and in his own country, of the rights of property and of the relationship between the individual and the State. It had been hoped that a common equation could be found despite these differing concepts. Unfortunately that equation had not yet been found, but he believed that eventually it would be. He trusted that the representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics would continue to collaborate and to help the Committee in its search for agreement.

THE CHAIRMAN asked the members whether they wished to vote on the Soviet proposal that a working group of three be established, or whether they wished first to discuss in detail the duties of the proposed group.

MR. HARRY (Australia) said the Soviet proposal was very useful, but possibly should not be voted upon until a later stage had been reached, after the Committee had further considered the various drafts which had been submitted. He considered it especially important that the views of the representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics relating to the substantive contents of the Bill of Rights should be heard before any preliminary draft Bill was drawn up. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) said that he gathered the Soviet representative had been speaking only of the proposed Manifesto. The language of any document outlining proposed legislation would, of course, be different. He agreed with the representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the outline he had suggested for a Manifesto. He felt that the United Kingdom draft [6] could be used as a basis for discussing a Convention, but that the Committee needed another document to use as a basis for discussing a Manifesto. He thought that the Secretariat document fell between the two ideas; it was too detailed for a manifesto, and not detailed enough for a convention. He thought that the Manifesto should be drafted, in the first place, by an individual. He also felt that it would be important for the Soviet representative to serve on the working group, and offered to resign in his favour.

PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) said he could not make a useful contribution to the work of the small group, as he was not yet in a position to state his Government's views in detail. He proposed that as much drafting be done as was possible on the basis of suggestions already made. As regards language, he suggested that the section of the Soviet Constitution dealing with the rights and duties of citizens be taken as a model of clarity and conciseness.

Prof. Koretsky also clarified the position taken by the Soviet representative on the Economic and Social Council when the question of the procedure to be used in drafting the Bill was being discussed. He said that the impression might have been given that the Soviet representative had disagreed with the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights that a Bill of Human Rights be drafted. This was not the case at all; the Soviet delegate had only insisted that such a draft could best be drawn up by representatives of Governments of divergent social and legal outlooks, and had therefore pressed for a broadening of the Drafting Committee. His thought was that the small group now proposed could systematize the work of the Committee and make it possible to receive comments on it from Governments.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that members of the Drafting Committee had agreed that (1) a manifesto and (2) a more detailed Convention should be written. She suggested voting first of all as to whether the Committee should set up a working group of three members, with the Chairman as an [7] ex-officio member; then as to whether one representative might be asked to produce a working paper for discussion. Finally, the Committee should consider how it should function with relation to the working group from that point on.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) suggested splitting the Committee into two groups of four members, each group charged with the preparation of one document. He thought it would be too much of a burden for one representative to be called upon to produce the Manifesto.

PROF. CASSIN (France) observed that either one group could undertake the writing of the Manifesto and one group the writing of the Convention, or alternatively each group could take responsibility for certain parts of each document. He thought the suggestion of the United Kingdom was a practical one. DR. CHANG (China) remarked that the United Kingdom proposal involved every member of the Committee. He thought the suggestion was not impractical, but that it should be made clear that these were not drafting committees but small working groups, each undertaking a part of the preliminary work of the Drafting Committee. He also thought that the division of groups should not be such that the Drafting Committee would be divided permanently.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that there had been no formal vote on the agreement to write two documents, a Manifesto and a Convention, and suggested taking a vote. Members had also to consider the point raised by the representative of China that the groups should not be "frozen". She said that the Drafting Committee might meet during mornings divided into working groups and during afternoons as a whole.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) said he doubted whether the Committee should take a formal vote regarding the writing of two documents. The Committee had been asked to prepare a Bill of Human Rights. There was a volume of opinion that a Manifesto was necessary, and also a volume of opinion that a Convention or Conventions might be required. Since both views were held, he thought, it would be wiser to prepare both documents.

[8]

PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) said that even if two documents were to be drafted, there was no need for two groups. There would have to be a logical connection between the statement of general principles and the more concrete expression of the same principles.

DR. CHANG (China) suggested that the Committee instruct the working group to go over the material which had been discussed up to that point and to report back to the Committee as a whole. He thought that the group need do no more than summarize the discussions and perhaps produce some concrete suggestions. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) said it was not very difficult to understand exactly what the working group was to do. The Committee had (1) discussed the Secretariat draft; (2) agreed in substance regarding matters which should find a place in the document; and (3) expressed the opinion that two documents should be prepared. He thought the members of the Committee should now set about drafting the documents themselves, and added that confusion might result if there was a horizontal division of work between the two documents. DR. CHANG (China) said he would like to have the small group undertake (1) a logical rearrangement of the Secretariat draft, (2) a rough redrafting of the various articles on the basis of discussions which had taken place in the Committee, and (3) a division of the work indicating which articles would require international conventions and which would not.

Decision: The Committee decided to appoint a Temporary Working Group consisting of the representatives of France, the Lebanon and the United Kingdom, the functions of the Group to be

1. To suggest a logical rearrangement of the articles of the Draft Outline supplied by the Secretariat;
2. To suggest a redraft of the various articles in the light of the discussions of the Drafting Committee;
3. To recommend to the Drafting committee the division of the substance of the articles between a Manifesto and a Convention.<sup>175</sup>

The meeting adjourned at 1:00 p.m.

E/CN.4/AC.1/W.1

16 June 1947

Draft International Declaration of Rights Submitted by Working Group of Drafting Committee
(Preamble and Articles 1–6)

Preamble

We, the Peoples of the United Nations,

Considering

1. that ignorance and contempt of human rights have been among the principal causes of the sufferings of humanity and of the massacres and barbarities which outraged the conscience of mankind before and especially during the last world war; and

2. that there can be no true peace unless human rights and freedoms are respected; and only by abolishing war and the threat of war can human freedom and dignity be assured to all mankind; and

3. that it has been proclaimed as the supreme aim of the recent strife that human beings shall be free in speech and in worship and free from fear and want; and

4. that the Charter begins by reaffirming our faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women; and

5. that it is one of the purposes of the United Nations to achieve international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion; and

6. (There were two points of view: (1) that the wording as submitted by [2] Professor Cassin, “that the enjoyment of such rights and freedoms by all persons must be protected by the commonwealth of nations and secured by international as well as national laws”, be retained and modified; (2) that the previous and following paragraphs covered the substance and that it was more suited to the preamble of a Convention.)

<sup>175</sup> See E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.14, p. 1.

Now, therefore, we the Peoples of the United Nations have resolved to define in a solemn Declaration the essential rights and fundamental freedoms of man, so that this Declaration, being forever present in the minds of all men, may constantly remind them of their rights and duties and that the United Nations and the Member States may constantly be inspired by the principles so formulated to translate them into reality; and

Have therefore adopted the following Declaration;

Article 1

All men are brothers. Being endowed with reason, members of one family, they are free and possess equal dignity and rights.

Article 2

The object of society is to afford each of its members equal opportunity for the full development of his spirit, mind and body.

Article 3

Man is essentially social and has fundamental duties to society and to his fellow men. The rights of each are therefore limited by the rights of others.

(Alternative)

As human beings cannot live and develop themselves without the help and support of society, each one owes to society fundamental duties which are: obedience to law, exercise of a useful activity, willing acceptance of obligations and sacrifices demanded for the common good.

Article 4

In the exercise of his rights, everyone is limited by the rights of others.
[3]

Article 5

All are equal before the law. It applies to public authorities and judges as well as to individuals. Everything that is not prohibited by law is legally permitted.

Article 6

There shall be respect for human life. No one, even when guilty of crime, shall be subjected to torture.

E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2

16 June 1947

Suggestions Submitted by the Representative of France for Articles 7–32 of the International Declaration of Rights

Chapter III

Personal Liberties

Article 7

Art. 5 Sec. Draft            Everyone has the right to personal liberty.

Article 8

Art. 11 Sec.                The inviolability of privacy, home, correspondence and Draft                        reputation are protected by law.

Article 9

Art. 6 and 7 Sec.        No one shall be deprived of his personal liberty except in Draft                        cases prescribed by law and after due process. Every one placed under arrest or detention shall have the right to immediate judicial determination of the legality of any detention to which he may be subject.

Article 10

Art. 6 and 26              No one shall be held guilty of any offence until legally
Sec. Draft                convicted.

No one shall be convicted except by judgment of an independent and impartial court of law, rendered in conformity with law after a fair and public trial at which he has had an opportunity for a full hearing or has been legally summoned and has been given all guarantees necessary for his defence.

[2]

Article 11

Art. 22 Par. 2            No one can be convicted of crime unless he has violated
Sec. Draft                some law in effect at the time of the act charged as an offence nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that applicable at the time of the commission of the offence.

Article 12

Art. 8 Sec.
Draft                      Slavery, which is inconsistent with the dignity of man, is prohibited.
Public authority may impose a personal service or work only by application of a law and for the common interest.

Article 13

Art. 9 and 10
Sec. Draft                      Subject to any general law adopted in the interest of national welfare and security, there shall be liberty of movement and free choice of residence within the borders of each State; individuals may also freely emigrate or expatriate themselves.

Chapter IV

Legal Status

Article 14

Art. 12 Sec. Draft                      Every one has the right to a legal personality everywhere.

Article 15

No one shall be restricted in the personal exercise of his civil rights except by a general law for reasons based on age, mental condition or other situation requiring protection or as a punishment for a criminal offence.

Article 16

Art. 13 Sec.
Draft
[3]                              Every one has the right to contract marriage in accordance with the laws of the State.

Article 17

Art. 12 Sec. Draft                      Every one has the right to a legal personality everywhere.

Article 18

Art. 22 Sec.
Draft

Every one has a right to own personal property.

No one shall be deprived of his property except for public welfare and with just compensation.

The State may determine those things that are susceptible of private appropriation and regulate the acquisition and use of such property.

The right to ownership, in whole or in part, of industrial, commercial and other profit-making private or collective enterprises, is governed by the law of the State within which such enterprises are situated.

Article 19

Art. 27 Sec.
Draft

Every one shall have access to independent and impartial tribunals for the determination of his rights, liabilities and obligations under the law. He shall have the right to consult with and, eventually, be represented by counsel.

Chapter VPublic Freedoms*Article 20*

Art. 14 Sec.
Draft and United Kingdom

The individual freedom of conscience, belief and thought is an absolute and sacred right.

The practice of a private or public worship and the manifestations of opposite convictions can be subject only to such limitations as are necessary to protect public order, morals and the rights and freedoms of others.

[4]

Article 21

Art. 15–16–17–18
Sec. Draft

No one can be molested by reason of his opinions, even if he has derived them from sources beyond the borders of the State.

Every one is free to change, hold or impart his opinion, or to receive and discuss the opinions of others.

Article 22

There shall be freedom of expression either by word, in writing, in the press, in books or by visual, auditive or other means; provided however that the author, editor, publisher, printer, etc. shall be responsible for the abuse of this right if in so doing they have committed slander or libel or have failed to present information and news in a fair and impartial manner.

Article 23

There shall be freedom of peaceful assembly and of association for political, cultural, scientific, sporting, economic and social purposes compatible with this Declaration. No other restriction shall be placed on the exercise of this right except for the protection of public order.

Article 24

Art. 28 Sec.
Draft

No State shall deny to any individual the right, either individually or in association with others, to petition the government of his State or of his residence or the United Nations for redress of grievances.

Article 25

Art. 29 Sec.
Draft

When a government seriously or systematically tramples the fundamental human rights and freedoms, individuals and peoples have the right to resist oppression and tyranny, without prejudice to their right of appeal to the United Nations.

[5]

Chapter VIPolitical Rights*Article 26*

Art. 20 Sec.
Draft

Every one has the right to take an equal part, directly or through his representatives, in the formation of law, the institution of taxes for public expense and the government of the State of which he is a citizen.

Each citizen shall take his part of public expenses according to his means.

Article 27

Art. 20 Sec.
Draft

The State has a duty to conform to the wishes of the people, manifested by democratic elections. Elections shall be periodic, free and fair.

Article 28

The protection of Human Rights requires a public force. This force shall be instituted for the Service of all and not for the advantage of those to whom it is entrusted. Each citizen must take it as an honour to take part in military service in the States which recognize this institution.

Article 29

Art. 31 Sec.
Draft

Every one shall have equal opportunity of access to all public functions of the State of which he is a citizen. Such functions cannot be considered as privileges or favours but appointment shall be by competitive examination or by reason of the titles of the ablest.

Article 30

There is no protection of Human Rights where the authors of tyrannical or arbitrary acts or their accomplices are not punished and where there is no provision for the liability of public authorities or their agents.

[6]

Chapter VIINationality and Protection of Aliens*Article 31*

Art. 32 Sec.
Draft

Every one has the right to a nationality. It is the duty of the United Nations and Member States to prevent the absence of nationality, which is contrary to human rights and against the interest of the community of mankind.

Article 32

Art. 34 Sec.
Draft

Every State shall have the right to grant asylum to political refugees.

Article 33

Art. 33 Sec. No alien legally admitted to the territory of a State may be Draft expelled therefrom without having had a hearing.

If he has been a resident for less than a year his expulsion can be effected only in pursuance of a judicial decision or recommendation and in the cases permitted by law.

E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.7

17 June 1947<sup>176</sup>

Summary Record of the Seventh Meeting [of the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Tuesday, 17 June 1947
at 11:00 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States); Vice-Chairman: Dr. P. C. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon). Members: Mr. Ralph L. Harry (Australia); Mr. H. Santa Cruz (Chile); Prof. René Cassin (France); Mr. Geoffrey Wilson (United Kingdom); Prof. V. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics). Specialized Agencies: Mr. J. Havet (UNESCO). Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Toni Sender (American Federation of Labor). Secretariat: Prof. J. P. Humphrey (Secretary of the Committee); Mr. Edward Lawson.

Formulation of a Preliminary Draft of an International Bill of Human Rights on the Basis of Documentation Supplied by the Secretariat

THE CHAIRMAN recalled that a working group had been appointed at the Sixth Plenary Session of the Drafting Committee and requested:

1. to suggest a logical rearrangement of the articles of the Draft Outline supplied by the Secretariat;
- [2]
2. to suggest a redraft of the various articles in the light of the discussions of the Drafting Committee; and
3. to recommend to the Drafting Committee the division of the substance of the articles between a Manifesto or Declaration, and one or more conventions.

The working group had held two meetings, she reported, and after a general discussion had asked Prof. Cassin (France) to undertake the formulation of a rough-draft Declaration because it felt that such a document might have greater unity if drawn up by one person. Prof. Cassin had produced the Preamble and forty-four articles of such a rough-draft Declaration, (Document E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2/Rev.1) and the working group had gone over the Preamble and the first six articles. She suggested that the Drafting Committee first read the Preamble for information, since it was generally recognized that its final wording could not be determined until later; then consider in some detail the first six articles as submitted by the working group, and finally consider in like detail the draft of articles 7 to 44 as drawn up by Prof. Cassin. She further suggested that the Drafting Committee would have to choose between a long Declaration or a short one. She asked for opinions on this subject, and also on the way the Committee should continue its work.

<sup>176</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 19 June 1947.

PROF. CASSIN (France) stated that he was conscious of the imperfection of his work. He explained that he had taken the liberty of drafting a Preamble to express the general principles. He agreed with the Chairman that the declaration should not be too wordy and too detailed, and cited as models the Declarations of Cuba and of the American Association of Human Rights and the Protection of Man. He invited his colleagues to propose abbreviations and deletions wherever necessary. The chapter indications had been inserted merely as a guide for his work, he explained, but he believed they should eventually be deleted. He thought that one group should be set up to study the contents of a Convention, another [3] to examine the substance of a Declaration.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) thought it advisable to study the wording of a Declaration on the one hand, and of the proposed convention drafts on the other. He felt that a Declaration, however short it might be, should include all the points that humanity expects to be included at this period of our history. To him it appeared to be especially important that economic and social rights be assured. The recognition of these rights would make the return of Fascism impossible. He agreed that the Declaration should be short, but emphasized that it should define the principles of freedom, of equality, of non-discrimination and of the rights of man to a just life.

MR. HARRY (Australia) paid tribute to the work of Prof. Cassin (France) and shared the view that the declaration should be short, concise, and crisp. He had envisaged a declaration in the form of a General Assembly Resolution designed to be an introduction to a Bill or a Convention. In his opinion, substantial changes in form would be required. A mere declaration of principles would not offer assurance against revival of oppression. His Government held the view that the main task was to provide a Bill of Human Rights with provisions for implementation; a document declaring and creating international law, one which would be acceptable to signatory States. The Committee might also draft an inspiring Declaration in order to focus attention on this problem and to offer the peoples of the world hope that detailed provisions for implementation would be made. The form of the Declaration, however, should be determined in the light of the Bill. He strongly supported a very short Declaration and was in favour of having the Committee split into two groups, one to examine the contents of a Convention, the other to redraft the draft Declaration prepared by Prof. Cassin in the light of remarks made during the discussion.

DR. CHANG (China) said the Working Group had made a significant step towards orderliness. He felt, however, that the entire Committee [4] should go over each of the proposed articles first.

THE CHAIRMAN stated that Dr. Chang apparently agreed with the position of the United States, that there should be a Declaration, followed by one or more Conventions.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) pointed out that the Drafting Committee already had agreed that two documents should be prepared, one a general Declaration and the other a Convention, to be submitted simultaneously to the Commission on Human Rights.

Regarding the Declaration, he felt that it should be very brief but should include all the basic principles of a Bill of Human Rights. It should be a fundamental matrix of doctrine from which positive law might be elaborated, a battle cry for freedom, for liberty; a Credo embodying the basic philosophy of the United Nations regarding human rights. From this declaration, there might flow one or more conventions. The world was awaiting more than mere resolutions. It wanted maximum assurance against the infringement of human rights and actual conventions. He pointed out there was already agreement on certain things that should be made the subject of Conventions at once. The field of personal liberties – protection of the bodily integrity of man – was one such subject. He agreed with Dr. Chang (China) that the Committee might work as a whole for some time. He felt it should attempt to draft two documents:

1. a Declaration, brief and all-inclusive, and
2. a summary of the maximum agreement as to what ought to go into one or more Conventions.

PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) said it was very difficult to decide upon the form of the Bill of Rights without first deciding upon its contents. The creation of a sub-committee would be appropriate for actual drafting, he felt, but only after general [5] principles had been settled in a Plenary meeting of the Drafting Committee.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) believed it important to stress the historical situation in which the Committee met. It was one, he said, where Germany and other enemy countries during the war had completely ignored what mankind had regarded as fundamental human rights and freedoms. The Committee met as a first step toward providing the maximum possible safeguard against that sort of thing in the future. More than a Manifesto would be needed, in his opinion; there would in addition have to be a substantive body of law, not imposed upon, but adhered to, by Governments. He called attention to the fact that the draft Bill of Rights proposed by the United Kingdom contained the wording of a draft Convention on Human Rights. He agreed that certain additional items might be added, including the prevention of torture, the right of asylum, and the maintenance of civil rights.

He stated that he had been impressed by the arguments in favour of a short, pithy, pungent Declaration. However, he felt that the Convention should be fairly detailed, covering as wide a field as possible at this stage. He proposed that the United Kingdom's paper be taken as the basis for constructing a draft Convention. Finally, he expressed the opinion that the Drafting Committee should actually draft, since general principles already had been discussed in detail in the Commission on Human Rights. He felt that the Committee could prepare, simultaneously, a Manifesto and a Convention. He suggested that the Committee split into two working groups to put these two projects into shape.

PROF. CASSIN (France) said it would be hard to decide on the length of the Declaration without knowing what its contents should be. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) asked how the Committee could draft a Declaration until it had reached general agreement as to the points to [6] be covered in a Convention. The Chairman said that in her opinion all points ought to be covered by the Declaration, whether or not they were spelled out in the Convention.

PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) suggested that the Committee ought to think about what it could hope to accomplish in the immediate future. He observed:

1. that the Committee could not hope immediately to work out a final draft for submission to the Human Rights Commission;
2. that it could not immediately prepare a document for which the Governments represented on the Committee could be held answerable;
3. that it would have to consider very carefully the substantive contents of any document it submitted to the Commission;
4. that it ran the risk of trying to cover too much but of saying too little;
5. that it should carefully avoid being over-hasty; and
6. that it should always bear in mind that the object of the Bill of Rights was to protect human life and to make man free.

The problems, he felt, were of such complexity that the Drafting Committee could not hope to solve them within a week or two; and certainly there could be no immediate elaboration of a draft convention. While he agreed that all the work which had been done was extremely useful, he felt that the Committee should work towards preparing a basic working document which could be referred to the Governments for the expression of their views. After these views had been received and discussed by the Human Rights Commission, the Drafting Committee would be in a better position to do some actual drafting.

Specifically Prof. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) reserved his right to present, at a later date, the opinions held by his Government on all matters of substance.

[7]

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics had had the same length of time as other governments to make suggestions relating to the form and substance of the Bill of Rights. Its representative had participated in the meetings of the Commission on Human Rights. She also indicated that in her opinion Prof. Koretsky's suggestions were in accordance with the method the Committee already had adopted; that is, to produce first of all a working document, which would consist of two parts.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) called to the attention of the Committee that under its terms of reference it was obligated to submit a "preliminary draft" to the Commission on Human Rights. Such a preliminary draft could hardly be considered complete until the point of view of the Soviet Union and of other governments on matters of substance had been expressed. The only solution, he felt, might be to prepare as much of a draft as was possible under the circumstances, and to have a second meeting of the Drafting Committee shortly before the second session of the Commission on Human Rights.

PROF. CASSIN (France), summing up the discussion, said that he understood that the Drafting Committee had decided it would have to prepare a Declaration. It had also decided that this Declaration would have to be accompanied by one or several Conventions dealing with fundamental points in the Declaration. As for its future work, he supported the views already expressed as to the need for study by the various governments and by the public. But governments would have to study something concrete; they would have to have a text on which to base their criticism and comment. He suggested that the afternoon session be devoted to a discussion of the general part of the Declaration which he had attempted to prepare.

THE CHAIRMAN felt that Prof. Cassin's suggestion was a good one. PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) asked for an opportunity [8] to clarify his position and to correct any possible misapprehension. He agreed, he said, that this first step should be taken; but he felt strongly that the resulting texts should be considered working documents and nothing more. The Committee, in his opinion, was not in a position to present anything that it could call a draft. He referred to the draft convention on genocide, which had been worked out by experts but which, he felt, could not be put into any final form until the governments had been consulted. He thought that perhaps the Drafting Committee might somehow communicate to the Economic and Social Council the opinion that under the present circumstances its mandate could not be carried out immediately, and that only a working document could be submitted for the consideration of the Commission on Human Rights and of the governments.

THE CHAIRMAN said that the Committee was then in the process of preparing just such a working document, whose form might eventually be changed. She read the Preamble submitted by the Working Group of the Drafting Committee and pointed out that this was not by any means a final draft. She proposed that during the afternoon the Committee might consider the remainder of the draft prepared by the working group, then go through the remaining articles drafted by Prof. Cassin.

The meeting adjourned at 1:00 p.m.

E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.8

17 June 1947<sup>177</sup>

Summary Record of the Eighth Meeting [of the Drafting
Committee of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Tuesday,

17 June 1947, at 2:30 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States); Vice-Chairman: Dr. P. C. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon). Members: Mr. Ralph L. Harry (Australia); Mr. H. Santa Cruz (Chile); Prof. René Cassin (France); Prof. V. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Geoffrey Wilson (United Kingdom). Specialized Agencies: Mr. J. Havet (UNESCO). Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Toni Sender (American Federation of Labor); Mrs. H. Fuhrman (International Cooperative Alliance). Secretariat: Prof. J. P. Humphrey (Secretary of the Committee); Mr. Edward Lawson.

1. Draft International Declaration of Rights Submitted by Working Group, Preamble and Articles 1–6. (Document E/CN.4/AC.1/W.1)

THE CHAIRMAN told the press that the working papers might be used for background information, but that since the proposals contained therein were not in final form, they should not be quoted. She asked the members to agree to limit their discussion on the various items contained in the working papers to three minutes on each item. MR. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) did not object to reading the articles from the working paper, [2] but did object to the three-minute limitation. MRS. ROOSEVELT stated that she would not insist upon such a limitation, but hoped that an effort might be made by each member to restrict his comments on any one item to that length of time.

Article 1

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 1. She stated that the United States government was not satisfied with the present wording, and invited the members to suggest possible revisions. DR. CHANG (China) thought that there should be added to the idea of “reason,” the idea which in a literal translation from the Chinese would be “two-man-mindedness". The English equivalent might be "sympathy" or "consciousness of his fellow men". This new idea, he felt, might well be included as an essential human attribute. The Chairman agreed that Article 1 might be changed to read in substance: "All men, as members of one family, must be free and equal in dignity and rights. Being endowed with reason, they must have the additional sense of understanding of their fellow men about them." She felt that the wording of this would need revision.

<sup>177</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 20 June 1947.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) thought that in order to perfect the text Members might submit their own improvements on the original draft. He explained that his text alluded to the three fundamental questions of liberty, equality, and fraternity because, during the war, these great fundamental principles of mankind had been forgotten. The text was trying to convey the idea that the most humble men of the most different races have among them the particular spark that distinguishes them from animals, and at the same time obligates them to more grandeur and to more duties than any other beings on earth.

He added that there were still one or two ideas not yet mentioned, the concept of man as a reasonable being and the concept of reciprocal duties among men. These concepts, developed on the juridical plane, would concern mutual obligations or mutual rights or solidarity. However, he felt that [3] men generally would understand the expression "men are brothers" more easily than a juridical expression concerning "mutual rights and obligations".

MR. HARRY (Australia) suggested that the first four or five Articles might be combined into one, which would constitute an introduction. The Chairman called to his attention the fact that although an Article 4 appeared in the document, the working group had recommended that if the first paragraph of Article 3 were accepted, the alternative and Article 4 would be deleted. Mr. Harry suggested a formula along the following lines: "All men, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, have certain inalienable rights fundamental to their existence as free men in free societies and as members of the international community. These rights are subject only to the rights of others as individuals and to the just requirements of the society through which they are enabled to develop in wider freedom."

THE CHAIRMAN said that his suggestion would be considered.

Article 2

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 2. There were no comments.

Article 3

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 3 and the alternative form, including Article 4. There were no comments.

Article 5

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 5. She commented that the Government of the United States felt that the last sentence, “Everything that is not prohibited by law is legally permitted”, unnecessary, and should not be included.

Article 6

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 6. DR. CHANG suggested that the word “dignity” be used instead of “life” so that the first sentence would read: “There shall be respect for human dignity.” He also felt that the sentence in Article 5 which the United States considered unnecessary might be eliminated. THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that in the United States proposal there [4] appeared certain ideas that might be included in the Preamble of the Declaration. Among these were: (a) “The State is created by the people for the promotion of their welfare and the protection of their human rights. In the exercise of his rights, everyone is limited by the rights of others”; and (b) “The State may impose only such limitations on such rights as are compatible with the freedom and welfare of all.”

2. Suggestions Submitted by the Representative of France for Articles 7–44 of the International Declaration of Rights.
(Document E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2/Rev.1)

Article 7

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 7. MR. HARRY (Australia) suggested the possibility of combining Articles 6 and 7 in a single Article, stating that “Everyone has the right to life and personal liberty”, and dealing with “torture” separately. PROFESSOR CASSIN suggested that there might be a Chapter heading after Article 5, to mark the end of the general provisions and the beginning of the treatment of particular liberties. He agreed that it was possible to group together everything having to do with life, physical inviolability, and liberty and personal security as one unified subject. The representatives of China and the United Kingdom supported this view.

Article 8

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 8. She suggested that it might be improved if changed to read “There shall be inviolability of privacy, home, correspondence and reputation, protected by law.”

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) suggested that Articles 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13, which might be considered particular applications of the principle that the liberty of the individual shall be protected, should find a place in a Convention. THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that if this view were accepted, those articles could be passed over for the time being. MR. HARRY (Australia) supported the suggestion, provided that after the first article, in the subsequent articles dealing with life, physical integrity and personal liberty, [5] there should be a second short article stating that no one should be deprived of his life or liberty, except in cases prescribed by law and after due process. He also felt that Article 8 might then follow, in a general statement, on the inviolability of home, correspondence, and reputation.

DR. CHANG (China), while agreeing with Mr. Wilson's suggestion, felt that certain phrases or sentences appearing in Articles 6 to 13 might be extracted for use in the Declaration. Inclusion of the whole of these articles in the Declaration would make it too complex, he said.

Article 10

THE CHAIRMAN stated that with respect to Article 10, the United States wished to suggest the use of the phrase "impartial tribunal" instead of "court of law". She also felt that the words "legally summoned" might not be understood. She pointed out that in the United States redrafts of parts of the Secretariat's outline, Article 7 had included several ideas: the right to be confronted by witnesses, the right of compulsory process for obtaining witnesses, and the right to be represented by Counsel. She pointed out that the third of these ideas was embodied in Article 19 of Professor Cassin's draft.

PROFESSOR CASSIN said that the matter of compulsory processes for obtaining witnesses and counsel for defence should either be placed in a convention or else be considered as covered by the phrase "right to defence" used in the Declaration. He felt that the Committee should avoid including in the Declaration matters which are not principles but applications of principles.

Article 9

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 9. There were no comments.

Article 11

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 11. There were no comments.

Article 12

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 12. She said that the United States felt that this Article should begin, "No one shall be held in slavery"; and that if [6] the second sentence were retained, it might lead to all kinds of injustices. The United States suggested the following wording: "No one shall be held in slavery nor be required to perform compulsory labour in any form other than public service equally incumbent by law upon all, or as part of punishment pronounced by a competent judicial tribunal . . . No person shall be imprisoned or held in servitude in consequence of the mere breach of contractual relations.”

The representative of the American Federation of Labor expressed the opinion that compulsory labour should be mentioned in addition to slavery.

MR. CHANG (China) recalled his previous proposal that in addition to a Declaration and one or more conventions there might be a third category – a commentary. He felt that there should be not more than twenty articles in the Declaration. The commentary would follow those articles which needed to be explained, but which could not be dealt with immediately in a convention. THE CHAIRMAN agreed that his suggestion was a good one.

Article 13

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 13 and the corresponding wording of the Secretariat outline and of the United Kingdom proposal. There were no comments.

THE CHAIRMAN proposed that a small working group go over Articles 7–13, relating to personal liberties, and suggest what should go into a Convention and what into a Declaration. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) felt that this would not be possible; that no agreement could be reached on what should go into the Declaration until substantial progress had been made in drafting the convention. He therefore requested that the Committee as a whole consider what should go into the form of conventions, and later come back to the question of the contents of the Declaration.

THE CHAIRMAN asked MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) if he could draw up the preliminary draft of a convention and present it to the Committee on the following day. MR. WILSON replied that the draft of a convention already was before the Committee in the form of the United Kingdom proposals.

[7]

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that what she had meant was that he take the discussion into consideration and revise any part of the United Kingdom proposal that he felt required revision. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) replied that that would be difficult. He felt that the points should be considered as they stood, perhaps with the addition of texts on the subject of torture, the question of civil rights, and the right of asylum. He offered to prepare drafts on these three points.

DR. CHANG (China) expressed the hope that by the following day a more concise Declaration could be prepared under the supervision of Professor Cassin, and a proposed list of topics to be included on conventions by the Secretariat. PROFESSOR CASSIN, while agreeing, declared that in his opinion it was incorrect to start with the idea that the Declaration should contain a certain number of Articles [sic] it should contain a certain number of ideas and these ideas should determine the number of Articles.

MR. HARRY (Australia) felt that Dr. Chang's proposal was a practical one. THE CHAIRMAN expressed the view that the full Committee should first go through the rest of the Articles presented by Professor Cassin. There was no objection to this procedure.

Article 14

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 14. DR. CHANG felt that the phrase "legal personality" was a little too technical. PROFESSOR CASSIN attempted to explain the philosophical basis of the articles appearing in Chapter IV, headed "Legal Status". The recognition of the juridical personality of all human beings is a second means of abolishing slavery, he pointed out. Slaves were once considered as instruments, as chattels, not as beings who could have rights. Also, just before the war there were instances when the right to marry was refused to refugees under the pretext that they did not have all the necessary papers and documents, that they did not have an authorization of residence, an official permit, and so forth, although they might have [8] been living in a particular country for several years. Through such small detailed regulations the most fundamental human rights were denied. Chapter IV attempts to counteract that situation, he concluded, and in his opinion Article 14 should state that every human being has certain juridical and human rights regardless of whether or not he is a citizen, including the right to marry and the right to conclude contracts. The texts might be difficult to understand, he realized, but they touched upon the rights of millions of human beings in a most concrete and practical manner.

Articles 15, 16 and 17

MRS. ROOSEVELT asked whether it would be possible to combine Articles 14 and 15. The United States felt, she added, that "mental incompetence" might be a better word than "mental condition"; and that the phrase "or other situation requiring protection" might be eliminated. The revised wording of Article 15 would then be: "No one shall be restricted in the personal exercise of his civil rights except by a general law for reasons based on age, mental incompetency or as a punishment for a criminal offence."

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) stated that in his opinion Articles 14, 16, 19 and perhaps 17 could be combined, since they state the right of an individual to a legal personality. However, Article 15 was different as it stated that although there are rights, there are certain persons who cannot exercise those rights personally. For instance, an infant can be a proprietor but he cannot go before a notary public to conclude a contract; an insane person has certain rights but he cannot exercise them personally; a criminal has certain rights but they must be exercised, for reasons of security of society, by a custodian. He felt that the phrase “or other situation requiring protection” should be retained because he did not feel that the list of cases in which men cannot act in their own right had been exhausted.

THE CHAIRMAN said that she felt Articles 14, 16, 17, and 19 could be combined. She suggested certain changes as proposed in the United States’ redrafts of the Secretariat outline. She asked if there were any further comments on Article 15.

[9]

PROFESSOR CASSIN suggested that Article 19 might be combined with Article 14 as a development of the principle of the legal personality.

Article 18

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 18, and suggested that the fourth paragraph, which seemed to her to be included in the first, did not appear to be necessary. DR. CHANG (China) felt that the first two paragraphs might be taken to include the last two. He suggested that the first two might serve as a declaration of principle, the latter two as “commentary”. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) agreed with Dr. Chang, but felt that the Article might be limited still further, to the first paragraph, “Everyone has a right to own personal property”. Regarding the second paragraph, he asked what would happen if a person were fined, by a court, an amount of money which involved selling his automobile. He would be deprived of his property, but whether or not this could be considered for the public welfare was a difficult question. He felt that it was impossible to go beyond saying, as a statement of principle, that a person should have the things he needs in order to carry on and to enjoy his everyday life.

THE CHAIRMAN felt it would be wise to retain only the first sentence, but to alter it to read “Everyone has a right to own real and personal property”. MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) pointed out that an Article referring to the right to own property was a delicate one at a time when this right was subject to different legislation in the various countries which are Members of the United Nations. However, he thought it might be possible to arrive at a formula which would unite the different opinions, in the sense that everyone has the right to personal property in certain cases and that general property is subject to the interest of the community.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) agreed that the Committee should not try to evade difficulties, but to deal with them tactfully and with courage. He accepted the Chairman’s idea of cutting paragraphs 3 and 4 from Article 18. He suggested that the Committee might say that the State may determine the [10] rights and interests which are susceptible to private appropriation. That, he explained, would include real estate, industrial and commercial enterprises and any other objects, such as objects of higher culture or of an historical value which might be considered the patrimony of the whole nation. He warned that there were enormously different conceptions regarding the right to property, and suggested that if the declaration were to deal with the effects which can be held in private ownership it should give guarantees to the proprietor; it should state that he shall not be deprived of his property except in the public interest and with just compensation. He felt that Article 18 could be reduced to three paragraphs, but he did not consider it possible to delete either the second or the third.

THE CHAIRMAN summarized the consensus of opinion as being in favour of deletion of paragraph 4 because it is implicit in the third. Some members also wished to have paragraphs 2 and 3 deleted. She suggested that if any paragraphs were deleted, the first sentence might be changed to read, "Everyone has a right to own and transfer real and personal property".

MR. HARRY (Australia) suggested that it might be better to eliminate any reference to property, in view of the difficulties sure to arise when an attempt was made to define what should and should not be owned, the differences between real and personal property, and so on. If it were left to the State to determine those things which are susceptible of private appropriation, he felt, the right expressed in the first paragraph would be worthless. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) said that if the Article in its final form stated the right of the State rather than the right of the individual, it would be better to omit it.

DR. MALIK<sup>178</sup> (Lebanon) stated that in his opinion the right of property was a fundamental right which must have a place in the Bill, and certainly in the Declaration. He felt that it was self-evident that man cannot live without personal property; that this particular right was as essential and as fundamental as almost any other right. He did not see how reference [11] to such a right could be suppressed. He pointed out that the unlimited character of the ownership of private property could not be considered a fundamental right, but that even the most socialistic constitutions refer to the fact that a man must have something which is his own. He was in favour of retaining paragraph 1, properly modified, and the combination of paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 into a formulation which would indicate that man's right to property is not unlimited, but is limited by the will of society organized into the State.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) urged the importance of the question. It seemed impossible to him not to allude in the first paragraph to the principle of private property. Having done this, it would be necessary in a separate paragraph to stress the idea that the right of private property cannot be applied without limitation.

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that the need for the limitation of property rights or the consideration of the rights of other people ought to be considered. This could be considered already covered either by Article 3 which stated that “the rights of each are, therefore, limited by the rights of others”, or by the alternative formulation of Article 4, which states that “In the exercise of his rights, everyone is limited by the rights of others”. Property rights of an individual, she felt, would implicitly be limited by the rights of others.

<sup>178</sup> The verbatim transcript of Mr. Malik's remarks is published in Chapter 6 of Habib C. Malik, ed., The Challenge of Human Rights, Charles Malik and the Universal Declaration, Oxford: Centre for Lebanese Studies, 2000, pp. 63–68.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) called attention to the Chilean proposal on this subject, which recognized the right of property and established the right of the State to cooperate with individuals so that they might have a minimum of private property in accord with their necessities, and the necessary decorum to enable them to maintain their dignity. The Chilean government, he said, did not only want property not to be limited, but would like the social function of property to be established. It would prefer a formula which would establish the right of a man to have private [12] property, and also recognize the rights of the community with respect to all property.

MR. WILSON suggested a rough rewording, as follows: “Everyone has the right to own such property as is necessary to enable him to maintain the average standard of life in the country in which he lives”. That, he felt, was the sort of thing that could be usefully said, and beyond which it would be extremely difficult and possibly even dangerous to go.

Article 20

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 20. She brought to the attention of the Committee a communication she had received from various religious groups, stating that they did not consider that just giving people the right to any form of worship was sufficient; that the right of teaching and freely discussing religious beliefs was also necessary. These communications would be circulated. She added that the view of the United States on Article 20 was that, in the second sentence of paragraph 2, the wording “manifestations of opposite convictions” is not necessary because it is implicit in freedom of conscience and belief. The second paragraph might be eliminated altogether.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) suggested that the titles of Chapters III and IV, “Public Freedoms” and “Personal Liberties” respectively, be exchanged. He felt that the rights enumerated under Chapter III should be called “Public Freedoms” because they deal for the most part with man’s relation to the State; whereas the freedoms and rights under Chapter V dealt exclusively with man’s inner convictions and beliefs. He asked if there had been a reason for the apparent inversion of title.

PROF. CASSIN replied that freedom of worship, of conscience of opinion [sic] are such intrinsic personal liberties that they might be included under that Chapter heading. They became public, he explained, only when they received a public manifestation in the exercise of a form of worship or through the communications of opinions. This proved, he felt, that the titles given [13] to Chapters were not necessarily useful and might even be harmful. He suggested that since the Chairman found the wording “opposite convictions” shocking, the wording “various opinions” or “different opinions” might be used instead. The Chairman replied that she had not meant to say that this phraseology had shocked her; it had merely seemed a bit awkward.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) felt that the words “absolute and sacred” could be used in connection with the liberty of conscience, of worship, of thought, but not with any other liberty. He considered it important that the Committee recognize the fundamental human right for differing fundamental convictions, as in religion, to exist in the same national entity. The fact that a single nation is obligated, by international law, to recognize the diversity of fundamental points of view on ultimate matters should, he believed, be considered an essential and fundamental human right.

MR. HARRY (Australia) hoped that the bracket of freedoms outlined in Chapter V could be expanded and given precise definition in a Convention, and condensed and crystallized for inclusion in the Declaration. DR. CHANG (China) suggested as a drafting change that the word “morals” be eliminated, since it already was implied in the phrase “rights and freedoms of others”; and that the sentence might then read, in part, “. . . to protect public order and the rights and freedoms of others”.

Article 21

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 21. She pointed out that the phraseology might be a little awkward because it was a translation from the French. She suggested as a drafting change the rewording proposed by the United States: “Everyone is free to change, hold or impart, within or beyond the borders of the State, his opinion or to receive and discuss the opinions of others.”

Article 22

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 22, and expressed the view of the United States government that it would be difficult to hold publishers and [14] editors responsible in just the manner suggested in the Article, and that perhaps some of the limitations could be omitted or stated in more general terms. She recalled the wording proposed by the Sub-Commission on the Freedom of Information and of the Press: “The objectives of those who disseminate information should be accuracy, objectivity, comprehensiveness and representative character.”

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) felt that it was impossible not to indicate that the freedom of writing implies a certain responsibility. He suggested ending the Article with the words, “. . . provided that there should be an organization of responsibility for the abuse of such rights”. Clarification of this provision could be made in a Convention.

Article 23

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 23, and expressed the view of the United States that it would be sufficient to say, "There shall be freedom of peaceful assembly". DR. MALIK (Lebanon) called attention to the fact that in the enumeration of the various objectives of association, religious association had been omitted. He asked whether that was an oversight. PROFESSOR CASSIN replied that apparently it was a typographical error which he had corrected on his own text.

Article 24

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) felt that the right of petition might be included among the political rights of man. He suggested that Articles 20, 21, 22, and 23 might be grouped together in the Declaration. DR. CHANG (China) agreed, and added that Articles 24 and 25 also might be grouped, as political rights. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) felt that the substance of Articles 20, 21, 22, and 23 should be included in a convention.

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 24. DR. MALIK (Lebanon) felt that the concept might well be enlarged by elimination of the words "for redress of grievances". The right to communicate in general with the United Nations, even apart from matters of redress of grievances, ought to be protected, he felt.

[15]

Article 25

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 25, and the corresponding Article 29 of the Secretariat outline. MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) said that he preferred the latter because it was simpler and recognized the right of an individual to resist oppression and tyranny. Professor Cassin's wording, he felt, guaranteed the right to resist oppression only when a regime deprives its people systematically of their fundamental human rights and freedoms, and it might be very difficult to say when that happened. He suggested that the wording be: "Everyone has the right, either individually or with others, to resist oppression and tyranny." PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) said that the genuine duty for all citizens to obey the law could not be overlooked. He pointed out that there were two conceptions: first, that rights be obtained peacefully and normally, but secondly, that when there is a great crisis, the gravity of the violation of human rights calls upon itself the attention of all peoples. He agreed that possibly his text did not reconcile these two conceptions well enough.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that Article 25 speaks of only one aspect of the right to resist tyranny, the aspect vis à vis governments. There are other aspects, she said, including the case of oppression imposed by non-governmental officers without cover of law.

Before adjourning, MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) agreed to prepare for the next day's meeting a suggestion as to the subject matter concerning the question of torture, civil rights, and the right to asylum which might possibly be included in a convention.

The meeting adjourned at 5:16 p.m.

E/CN.4/AC.1/4/Add.1

18 June 1947

Proposals Submitted by the United Kingdom Representative on the Drafting Committee

1. No person shall be subjected to:
  - (a) torture in any form;
  - (b) any form of physical mutilation or medical or scientific experimentation against his will;
  - (c) cruel or inhuman punishments.
2. No person shall be restricted in the personal exercise of his civil rights or deprived of juridical personality, save in the case of:
  - (a) minors;
  - (b) persons of unsound mind; and
  - (c) persons convicted of crime for this penalty as provided by law.

E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2/Rev.1

18 June 1947<sup>179</sup>

Original Text: English, French

Suggestions Submitted by the Representative of France for Articles 7–32 of the International Declaration of Rights

Article 7

Art. 5 Sec. Draft                      Everyone has the right to personal liberty.

Article 8

Art. 11 Sec.                              The inviolability of privacy, home, correspondence and Draft    reputation are protected by law.

<sup>179</sup> Although the document bears the date of 18 June, it was apparently issued on 16 June and is discussed in the seventh and eighth meetings of the Drafting Committee, which took place on 17 June (see: E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.7 and E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.8). The document is reproduced in Annex D of the Report of the Drafting Committee (E/CN.4/21), which states: "The English text is an official translation of the Articles suggested by Professor Cassin. The Drafting Committee did not work from this text but from a rough translation." There are substantial differences between the two texts.

Article 9

Art. 6 and 7 Sec.
Draft

No one shall be deprived of his personal liberty except in cases prescribed by law and after due process. Every one placed under arrest or detention shall have the right to immediate judicial determination of the legality of any detention to which he may be subject.

Article 10

Art. 6 and 26
Sec. Draft

No one shall be held guilty of any offence until legally convicted.

No one shall be convicted except by judgment of an independent and impartial court of law, rendered in conformity with law after a fair and public trial at which he has had an opportunity for a full hearing or has been legally summoned and has been given all guarantees necessary for his defence.

[2]

Article 11

Art. 22 Par. 2
Sec. Draft

No one can be convicted of crime unless he has violated some law in effect at the time of the act charged as an offence nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that applicable at the time of the commission of the offence.

Article 12

Art. 8 Sec.
Draft

Slavery, which is inconsistent with the dignity of man, is prohibited.

Public authority may impose a personal service or work only by application of a law and for the common interest.

Article 13

Art. 9 and 10 Sec.
Draft

Subject to any general law adopted in the interest of national welfare and security, there shall be liberty of movement and free choice of residence within the borders of each State; individuals may also freely emigrate or expatriate themselves.

Chapter IVLegal Status*Article 14*

Art. 12 Sec.
Draft

Every one has the right to a legal personality everywhere.

Article 15

No one shall be restricted in the personal exercise of his civil rights except by a general law for reasons based on age, mental condition or other situation requiring protection or as a punishment for a criminal offence.

Article 16

Art. 13 Sec.
Draft
[3]

Every one has the right to contract marriage in accordance with the laws of the State.

Article 17

Art. 24
Sec.
Draft

There shall be equal opportunity to all vocations and professions not having a public character.

Article 18

Art. 22 Sec.
Draft

Every one has a right to own personal property.
No one shall be deprived of his property except for public welfare and with just compensation.

The State may determine those things that are susceptible of private appropriation and regulate the acquisition and use of such property.

The right to ownership, in whole or in part, of industrial, commercial and other profit-making private or collective enterprises, is governed by the law of the State within which such enterprises are situated.

Article 169

Art. 27 Sec.
Draft

Every one shall have access to independent and impartial tribunals for the determination of his rights, liabilities and obligations under the law. He shall have the right to consult with and, eventually, be represented by counsel.

Chapter V

Public Freedoms

Article 20

Art. 14 Sec. Draft and
United Kingdom

The individual freedom of conscience, belief and thought is an absolute and sacred right.

The practice of a private or public worship and the manifestations of opposite convictions can be subject only to such limitations as are necessary to protect public order, morals and the rights and freedoms of others.

[4]

Article 21

Art. 15–16–17–18
Sec. Draft

No one can be molested by reason of his opinions, even if he has derived them from sources beyond the borders of the State.

Every one is free to change, hold or impart his opinion, or to receive and discuss the opinions of others.

Article 22

There shall be freedom of expression either by word, in writing, in the press, in books or by visual, auditive or other means; provided however that the author, editor, publisher, printer etc. shall be responsible for the abuse of this right if in so doing they have committed slander or libel or have failed to present information and news in a fair and impartial manner.

Article 23

There shall be freedom of peaceful assembly and of association for political, cultural, scientific, sporting, economic and social purposes compatible with this Declaration. No other restriction shall be placed on the exercise of this right except for the protection of public order.

Article 24

Art. 28 Sec.
Draft

No State shall deny to any individual the right, either individually or in association with others, to petition the government of his State or of his residence or the United Nations for redress of grievances.

Article 25

Art. 29 Sec.
Draft

When a government seriously or systematically tramples the fundamental human rights and freedoms, individuals and peoples have the right to resist oppression and tyranny, without prejudice to their right of appeal to the United Nations.

[5]

Chapter VI

Political Rights

Article 26

Art. 20 Sec.
Draft

Every one has the right to take an equal part, directly or through his representatives, in the formation of law, the institution of taxes for public expense and the government of the State of which he is a citizen. Each citizen shall take his part of public expenses according to his means.

Article 27

Art. 20 Sec.
Draft

The State has a duty to conform to the wishes of the people, manifested by democratic elections.
Elections shall be periodic, free and fair.

Article 28

The protection of Human Rights requires a public force. This force shall be instituted for the Service of all and not for the advantage of those to whom it is entrusted. Each citizen must take it as an honour to take part in military service in the States which recognize this institution.

Article 29

Art. 31 Sec.
Draft

Every one shall have equal opportunity of access to all public functions of the State of which he is a citizen. Such functions cannot be considered as privileges or favours but appointment shall be by competitive examination or by reason of qualifications.

Article 30

There is no protection of Human Rights where the authors of tyrannical or arbitrary acts or their accomplices are not punished and where there is no provision for the liability of public authorities or their agents.

[6]

Chapter VIINationality and Protection of Aliens*Article 31*

Art. 32 Sec.
Draft

Every one has the right to a nationality.
It is the duty of the United Nations and Member States to prevent the absence of nationality, which is contrary to human rights and against the interest of the community of mankind.

Article 32

Art. 34 Sec.
Draft

Every State shall have the right to grant asylum to political refugees.

Article 33

Art. 33 Sec.
Draft

No alien legally admitted to the territory of a State may be expelled therefrom without having had a hearing. If he has been a resident for less than a year his expulsion can be effected only in pursuance of a judicial decision or recommendation and in the cases permitted by law.

Article 34

(Text to be submitted later.)

Chapter VIIISocial, Economic and Cultural Rights*Article 35*

Art. 37
Sec. D

Everyone has the right and the duty to perform socially useful work and to full development of his personality.
(Text to be submitted later.)

Article 36

Everyone may hire his services for a time but may not either alienate his person nor place himself in state of servitude to another.

Article 37

Art. 38–39–40
Sec. Draft

Human labour is not a merchandise. It shall be performed in good conditions. It shall be justly compensated according to its quality, its duration and its purpose, and shall give a decent standard of living to the worker and his family.

Article 38

Every one has the right to protect his professional interests. In particular, he may participate, either by himself or through his representatives or his trade organization, to the collective bargaining of labour conditions, the determination of general plans of production or distribution of goods and, should the case arise, to the supervision and administration of the enterprise in which he works.

Article 39

Art. 35–42 Sec.
Draft

Everyone has a right to the assistance of the community for the medical care required by his health. General laws shall promote public hygiene and the betterment of housing conditions.

Article 40

Art. 41 Sec.
Draft

Everyone has the right to social security. The State shall maintain effective arrangements for the prevention of unemployment and, with the participation of beneficiaries, shall provide for insurance against invalidity, illness, old age and all other involuntary and undeserved losses of livelihood. Mothers and children have the right to special regard, care and resources.

[8]

Article 41

Art. 36 Sec.
Draft

Everyone is entitled to learning and has the right to education. Primary education is obligatory for all children and the State shall provide adequate and free facilities for such education. Access to higher education shall be promoted by giving equal chances to all youths and adults without distinction as to race, sex, language, religion, social standing or financial means of beneficiaries. Vocational and technical training shall be generalized.

Article 42

Art. 43 Sec. Everyone has the right to a fair share of rest and leisure Draft and to the knowledge of the outside world.

Article 43

Art. 43 Sec. Everyone has the right to participate in the cultural life
Draft of the community, to enjoy the arts and to share in the benefits of science.

Article 44

The authors of all artistic, literary, scientific works and inventors shall retain, in addition to the just remuneration of their labour, a moral right over their work and/or discovery which shall not disappear, even after such work and/or discovery shall have become the common property of mankind.

E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.9

18 June 1947<sup>180</sup>

Summary Record of the Ninth Meeting [of the Drafting
Committee of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Wednesday,
18 June 1947 at 10:30 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States); Vice-Chairman: Dr. P. C. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon). Members: Mr. Ralph Harry (Australia); Mr. H. Santa Cruz (Chile); Prof. René Cassin (France); Prof. V. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Geoffrey Wilson (United Kingdom). Specialized Agencies: Mr. J. Havet (UNESCO). Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Toni Sender (American Federation of Labor). Secretariat: Prof. J. P. Humphrey (Secretary of the Committee); Mr. Edward Lawson.

<sup>180</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 3 July 1947.

1. Consideration of document E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2/Rev.1: Suggestions
Submitted by the Representative of France for Articles of the International Declaration of Rights

THE CHAIRMAN opened the meeting by giving the substance of the telegram received from Agudath Israel World Organization,<sup>181</sup> which requested the Drafting Committee to add, after the words “the practice of a private or public worship” appearing in Article 20, the words “and religiously ordained observances”.

[2]

Article 26

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 26. PROF. CASSIN (France) explained that different rules in various States as to the participation of the citizens in the formation of law were the reason for the length of Article 26, which was essentially a combination of Articles 29 and 30 of the Secretariat Outline.

THE CHAIRMAN, speaking as a Member, drew the attention of the Committee to the fact that Article 26 did not mention non-self-governing territories. She suggested that the words “effective part” be substituted for “equal part,” and that the words “and territories” be added after the word “State”. She suggested also that somewhere it should be stated that Government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) emphasized the necessity of having verbatim records made of all the Drafting Committee’s discussions, for they would be of great importance for the future debates. He was strongly supported by several Representatives. PROF. HUMPHREY (Secretariat) explained that verbatim reporters were not always available because of the number of meetings held simultaneously at Lake Success. Certain organs, such as the Security Council, were given priority in the assignment of verbatim reporters.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) suggested that a provision concerning the right to form political parties be added to Article 26.

Article 27

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 27. MISS SENDER (American Federation of Labor) stated that in her opinion this Article should conclude with the words “and by secret ballot”.

<sup>181</sup> The World Agudath Israel was a political body associated with Orthodox Ashkenazi Judaism.

PROF. CASSIN (France) pointed out that as far as the Chilean suggestion relating to Article 26 was concerned, the liberty to form political parties already had been mentioned in Article 23, on freedom of peaceful assembly and of association for political and other purposes.

MR. HARRY (Australia) felt that the Committee should consider rights of [3] men rather than duties of States. He therefore suggested that Article 27 be modified to read "Every citizen has a right to participate in democratic elections", etc.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) asked if it were possible to have the sound recordings of the proceedings transcribed, so that the verbatim records of the meetings of the Committee would be available in a couple of weeks. THE CHAIRMAN agreed to ask the Secretary-General to do so. Speaking as a Member, she said that she would present a redraft of Article 27 in written form.

Article 28

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 28. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) felt that this Article was not necessary in a Declaration. He pointed out that some portions of it might be considered as abridging the right of conscientious objectors not to take part in military service. THE CHAIRMAN, speaking as a Member, stated that in her opinion military service was neither a human right nor a freedom; therefore she felt that the Article did not belong in the Declaration. She also mentioned the fact that there was a growing feeling of sympathy towards conscientious objectors, who would be directly affected by such an Article.

MR. HARRY (Australia) shared the views of the Representative from the United Kingdom, and stated that he would support the elimination of Article 28. He added that he would like to include, under the general heading of freedom of conscience, the protection of the conscientious objectors.

PROF. CASSIN (France) pointed out that Article 28 consisted of two separate parts. The first one, he felt, obviously touched upon human rights. He considered it essential to state that the police force was for the benefit of the people, and not the contrary. The second part, he agreed, had to be formulated with great caution. He felt that it was necessary to mention military service somewhere.

[4]

Article 29

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 29. She pointed out that the English translation did not exactly correspond to the French text. She reminded the Committee that the words "public functions" were to be understood as "public employment". Speaking as a Member, MRS. ROOSEVELT (United States of America) said that she would prefer to delete the second sentence of Article 29. DR. CHANG (China) stated that he would prefer to replace the last sentence of Article 29 by the second part of Article 31 of the Secretariat draft Outline (document E/CN.4/AC.1/3), reading: "Appointments to the Civil Service shall be by competitive examination." He stressed the fact that as public functions grew more and more numerous and important, all men should have the right to participate in the public life by holding public office. He reviewed the experience of China in this matter and pointed out that competitive examination for public jobs had existed in his country for centuries. In his opinion "free competitive examinations" should be considered as one of the ways to a truly free democracy.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) stated that although he could understand the reasons advocated by Dr. Chang, he thought that since the Committee was dealing with "fundamental rights" it would be unadvisable to go into many details. In his opinion, it was sufficient to establish the principle of non-discrimination in the filling of public offices. He suggested the substitution of the text of the last paragraph of Article XIII of the Chilean draft (document E/CN.4/AC.2) reading: "No person shall be denied the right to hold public office or to be appointed to any of the public services of the State of which he is a national, upon grounds of race, religion, sex or any other arbitrary discrimination; and the administration of the public services of the State shall, in respect to appointments and terms and conditions of service, be without favour or discrimination."

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) asked whether the Article meant that all appointments to public office would have to be made through competitive [5] examination. He wondered whether it would be possible, for instance, for a State to appoint an Ambassador without such a competitive examination. In his opinion, the Chilean delegate was right in stating that the principle of non-discrimination in appointments to public office had to be preserved. He himself felt that in drafting Article 29, the Committee could be inspired by the wording of Article 101 of the Charter, paragraph 3 of which reads: "The paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity."

PROF. CASSIN (France) expressed his agreement with Dr. Malik. He emphasized that three basic ideas were to be included in the Articles: (1) that there should be equal rights to public office; (2) that the public office does not belong to the civil servant; and (3) that it is necessary to recruit civil servants on the basis of their qualifications in order to find the best persons. Prof. Cassin (France) thought that competitive examination could be mentioned in the Article, but not in its present form.

PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) asked Dr. Chang whether or not the complexity and the number of competitive examinations in China had not in part eliminated from public office the common man, who was not able to get the education necessary to be able to pass such examinations. DR. CHANG (China) explained that this, in his opinion, was not a correct interpretation of Chinese history. He thought that a competitive examination was one way, in settled community life, to give an equal chance of access to public office. MR. HARRY (Australia) thought that a real equality of opportunity should be given to people to enable them to gain access to public service. He did not feel, however, that a Declaration should specify exactly how appointments should be made. He felt that it could be enough to state the general principle of equal opportunity of access to public office in Article 29, eliminating the last part of the Article.

Article 30

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 30.

[6]

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) expressed the opinion that this Article did not deal with a human right. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) thought that the substance of the Article could be considered later for inclusion in a Convention. He was not opposed, however, to having the principle stated in the Declaration as well. He drew the attention of the Committee to Article 2 of the United Kingdom draft (document E/CN.4/AC.1/4) reading: "Every State is, by international law, under an obligation to ensure: that its laws secure to all persons under its jurisdiction, whether citizens, persons of foreign nationality or stateless, the enjoyment of these human rights and fundamental freedoms . . ."

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) stated that he had no particular opinion as to where the Article should be placed, but thought that such a provision should be embodied in the Declaration, and that it should deal not only with the "authors. . . or their accomplices", but with all degrees of criminality. PROF. CASSIN (France) stated that the Chapter under consideration dealt with the relationship between the citizen and the State. It emphasized the fact that the public office was not created for the civil servant but that the civil servant occupied that office for the benefit of the community. Human rights were protected either through responsibility of the civil servant or by the penal law. The matter dealt with in Article 30 might be considered as a method of enforcement, but he could not see how it could be treated in a Convention. He was of the opinion that it would be difficult to impose upon a State regulations concerning its political organization.

DR. CHANG (China) called the attention of the Committee to Article 27. In this Article "elections" were mentioned as a method of achieving human rights. He felt that competitive examinations were also a method of achieving human rights, and should therefore be mentioned.

THE CHAIRMAN, speaking as a Representative, expressed the opinion that although Article 30 dealt with implementation, it was within the province of the Drafting Committee. She thought, however, that the Article should [7] be considered for inclusion in a Convention rather than in the Declaration.

Article 31

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 31.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) emphasized that in dealing with the right to a nationality, the Drafting Committee was dealing with a basic human right. He felt that the first sentence should be retained, and the second expanded. He referred to Article IX of the Chilean proposal (document E/CN.4/AC.2) reading:

“Every person has the right to a nationality.

“No State may refuse to grant its nationality to persons born upon its soil of parents who are legitimately present in the country.

“No person may be deprived of his nationality of birth unless by his own free choice he acquires another nationality.

“Every person has the right to renounce the nationality of his birth or previously acquired nationality, upon acquiring the nationality of another State.”

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) felt that Article 31 should be retained. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) agreed in principle with the Chilean delegate but thought that only the first sentence had to be retained. He explained that the problem created by stateless people could not be ignored. He felt that while the principle had to be stated in the Declaration, the details had to be worked out in a Convention. PROF. CASSIN (France) pointed out that in drafting the text of Article 31 he had taken into account the observations made by the Representative of the United Kingdom. He emphasized that such a complex question as the one of nationality could not be solved in a Declaration. However, he felt that the principle could not be left out and that the right to change nationality had to be specified.

THE CHAIRMAN, speaking as a Member, thought that the phrase “Everybody shall have the right to a nationality” should be sufficient.

Article 32

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 32. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) expressed the opinion that the substance of this Article might better be dealt with in a Convention. [8]

PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) asked why only political refugees had been mentioned and pointed out that the right of asylum should be extended to refugees on religious and scientific, as well as political, grounds.

THE CHAIRMAN, speaking as a Member, felt that Article 32 could be left to Conventions. She agreed that the Declaration should state the right of asylum to refugees on religious grounds.

PROF. CASSIN (France) stated that he was in agreement with the Representatives of the United Kingdom and of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. He pointed out that he had used the present wording because he meant to exclude the common criminals. He felt that the principle should be mentioned in the Declaration.

PROF. KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) thought that Article 129 of the Soviet Constitution might be taken into account in drafting Article 32. DR. MALIK (Lebanon) thought that the principle of asylum must have a place in the Declaration. Modality and applications of the principle could however be dealt with in a Convention. He objected to the text of Article 32, and thought that it might be improved as follows: "States are at liberty to grant asylum to refugees". He pointed out that minorities that are persecuted and are refugees will not be abolished easily, and that they should be able to find refuge somewhere.

MR. HARRY (Australia) felt that the Article should be formulated from the point of view of human rights rather than the rights of the State. He favoured the Article in the Cuban proposal. MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) pointed out that the principle of asylum had always guided his country, and that he was in favour of including it in the Declaration. PROF. CASSIN (France) proposed the following text: "Everyone has the right to flee from persecution and to try to find asylum on the soil of such a country as is willing to grant it to him." DR. CHANG (China) stated that he would like to see the individual's right to asylum and the State's right to grant asylum stated in the Declaration.

[9]

Article 33

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 33. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) pointed out that if the international organization were to guarantee too many privileges to aliens in a given country, they might find great difficulty entering that country. PROF. CASSIN (France) agreed with Mr. Wilson. A distinction should be made, he felt, between residents of foreign extraction and aliens recently admitted. Two aspects had to be considered: guarantees for the aliens and the interests of the State. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) pointed out that the provisions of Article 33 were stronger than those in any Constitution he knew of. It would lead States to grant the right of entry to aliens only for a temporary stay, or to require aliens entering their territory to agree to leave upon request. THE CHAIRMAN, speaking as a Member, stated that her Government felt that the Article could be deleted. However, if it were to be retained, she felt that it might be reworded to conform to the United States draft (document E/CN.4/AC.1/11), reading: "No alien who has been legally admitted to the territory of a State may be expelled therefrom except in pursuance of a judicial decision or recommendation as a punishment for offences laid down by law as warranting expulsion."

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) stated that he would prefer to see the Article deleted. MR. HARRY (Australia) pointed out that it was very difficult to determine what human right was described in Article 33. He proposed that the Article be omitted. PROF. CASSIN (France) thought that the Article might be divided in two parts. One of these parts could be dealt with in the Declaration, where the United States text could be retained. The other one could be the subject of a Convention. He thought that the Drafting Committee had to take into account that there were people who were expelled from country to country, who needed protection.

THE CHAIRMAN thought that the Article could be considered for inclusion in the redrafting of Article 5. PROF. CASSIN (France) pointed out that the matter dealt with in Article 33 would not be in its proper place if included in Article 5.

[10]

Article 34

(The text of this Article was not ready for discussion.)

Article 35

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 35. MR. HARRY (Australia) stated that he would like to study the Article before offering any comment, but wished to make a statement on Chapter VIII as a whole. Social, Economic and Cultural Rights, he said, were given effect in Australia by a body of laws. However, he thought that it was difficult to spell out in detail different rights involved. In his opinion two or three Articles in the final draft should be sufficient to cover the broad principles. Their exposition and development could be left to a later stage. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) agreed with the Representative of Australia. He felt that two or three general principles should be stated. These principles would be worked out at a later stage by the United Nations and its Specialized Agencies. Besides, in the opinion of Mr. Wilson, the matter dealt with in Article 35 was already taken care of by Article 2.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) thought that if the Drafting Committee did not introduce economic and social rights into the Declaration, it would not appear to the world to be acting realistically. He disagreed with the Representatives of Australia and the United Kingdom. He felt that social and economic rights should be mentioned not only in the Articles of the Declaration but also in its Preamble, in order to give them adequate importance. He thought that every right mentioned in Prof. Cassin's draft should be included in the Declaration.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) thought that Articles 35 to 44, dealing with economic and social rights, could not hold true in all States. Some of them would be true in a socialistic form of society, others would not. Since the Declaration had to be universal, he felt that only fundamental principles should be stated, such as the right to education, the right to participate in cultural life, the right to property, the fact that human labour is not a merchandise, etc.

[11]

THE CHAIRMAN, speaking as a Member, reminded the Drafting Committee that the Economic and Social Council had stressed the importance of the inclusion of these rights to be considered. She agreed with the Representative of Chile that these rights could not be omitted. However, she also agreed, on certain points, with the Representative of Lebanon. For instance, the “duty to work” could be considered in certain countries as leading to forced labour. Therefore she thought that while principles had to be stated, they could not be expanded too much in a Declaration.

Article 36

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 36. Speaking as a Member, she expressed the opinion that it was too detailed. DR. MALIK (Lebanon) thought that this Article might be construed as a restriction on a man’s personal freedom. If he wanted to be a slave, it was his right. MISS SENDER (American Federation of Labor) felt that servitude to a State or to a group should be covered by the Article. PROF. CASSIN (France) emphasized that he had tried loyally to embody all suggestions made by Members of the Drafting Committee in his draft. He was, however, of the opinion that the details of this matter might better be dealt with by a Convention, while the principle could be stated in the Declaration. He pointed out that the Declaration had to protect man not only against external abuses but also against his own weaknesses. In his opinion Article 36 could be abridged, but had to appear in the Declaration.

Article 37

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 37. Speaking as a Member, she drew the attention of the Drafting Committee to the United States rewording on page 43 (document E/CN.4/AC.1/11) reading:

“Everyone has a right to a decent standard of living; to a fair and equal opportunity to earn a livelihood; to wages and hours and conditions of work calculated to insure a just share of the benefits of progress to all; and to protection against loss of income on account of disability, unemployment or old age.

[12]

“It is the duty of the State to undertake measures that will promote full employment and good working conditions; provide protection for wage earners and dependents against lack of income for reasons beyond their control; and assure adequate food, housing, and community service necessary to the well-being of the people.”

The meeting adjourned at 1.15 p.m.

E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.10

18 June 1947<sup>182</sup>

Summary Record of the Tenth Meeting [of the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Wednesday,

18 June 1947 at 3:30 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States); Vice-Chairman: Dr. P. C. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon). Mr. Ralph L. Harry (Australia); Mr. H. Santa Cruz (Chile); Prof. René Cassin (France); Prof. V. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Geoffrey Wilson (United Kingdom). Specialized Agencies: Mr. J. Havet (UNESCO). Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Toni Sender (American Federation of Labor). Secretariat: Prof. J. P. Humphrey (Secretary of the Committee); Mr. Edward Lawson.

1. Consideration of Suggestions Submitted by the Representative of France for the International Declaration of Rights (Chapter VII, Social, Economic and Cultural Rights) (Document E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2/Rev.1) (continued)

Articles 38–44

THE CHAIRMAN recalled that the Representative of France had agreed to shorten his text. She read Articles 38 to 44.

PROF. CASSIN (France) pointed out that the word “community” should be [2] substituted for “State” in the first line of Article 40.

THE CHAIRMAN remarked that Members apparently had no observations to offer regarding these Articles, and that all the Articles had been gone over in a general way. There were three Articles still to be written. She suggested that Members next proceed to discuss the proposed Convention, using the United Kingdom document as a basis.

...

<sup>182</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 3 July 1947.

E/CN.4/AC.1/8/Rev.1

19 June 1947

United States Revised Suggestions for Redrafts of Certain Articles in the Draft Outline (E/CN.4/AC.1/3)

Article 2

Delete the last sentence reading “The state may impose only such limitations on such rights as are compatible with the freedom and welfare of all”, so that the Article will read:

“The state is created by the people for the promotion of their welfare and the protection of their mutual rights. In the exercise of his rights everyone is limited by the rights of others.”

Article 7

Delete the last sentence, “Detention by purely executive order shall be unlawful except in time of national emergency, proclaimed in accordance with law”, so that the Article will read:

“No person shall be subjected to arbitrary or unauthorized arrest or detention. Every person who is arrested or detained shall be immediately informed of the charges on which he is held, and shall have the right to prompt judicial determination of the legality of his detention. Trial of the charges must be afforded within a reasonable time, or he shall be released from detention. Every person shall be entitled to secure his release pending trial upon furnishing reasonable security for his appearance, except where such release would defeat the administering of justice.”

[2]

Article 8

Delete the words “public service equally incumbent by law upon all or” so that the Article will read:

“No one shall be held in slavery, nor be required to perform compulsory labour in any form other than as part of punishment pronounced by a competent judicial tribunal. No person shall be imprisoned or held in servitude in consequence of the mere breach of contractual obligations.”

Article 9

Delete the last clause, first paragraph, reading “subject to any general law adopted in the interest of national welfare or security”, so that the Article will read:

Liberty of Movement within the Borders of a State

“All persons shall equally enjoy the right to freedom of movement from one part of the territory of the state to another, and to free choice of residence in any part of the territory.”

“Every person shall, subject to equitable immigration and deportation laws, be free to enter, travel through or over, and remain temporarily in the territory of another state, provided always he observes local laws and police regulations.”

Article 22

Insert the word “reasonable” after the word “to” in the first sentence and insert the words “due process of” before the word “law” in the second sentence so that the Article will read:

Right to Property

“Everyone has the right to own and transfer property, subject to reasonable regulation, under general laws, governing the acquisition and use thereof, and determining, in the interest of national welfare and security, those things not susceptible of private ownership. No one shall be deprived of property except in accordance with due process of law, nor suffer his property to be taken other than for public use with just compensation to him.”

[3]

Article 23

Insert the word “non-discriminatory” before the word “law” so that the Article will read:

“No one shall be required to pay any tax or be subjected to any public charge that has not been imposed by non-discriminatory law.”

Article 30

Insert at the end of the sentence the words “by secret ballot” so that the Article will read:

Right to Take Part in the Government of the State – Democracy

“Government derives its just power from the consent of the governed. Everyone has the right to take an effective part in the government of the state or territory of which he is a citizen. The citizens of the state or territory are accordingly entitled to exercise self-government through representatives freely and fairly chosen by them in periodic democratic elections by secret ballot.”

Preliminary Article for Social Rights (listed as Article 35 in E/CN.4/AC.1/8)

Insert the word “spiritual” after the word “economic” so that the Article will read:

Right to Progress

“Everyone has the right to a fair and equal opportunity to advance his own physical, economic, spiritual and cultural wellbeing and to share in the benefits of civilization.

“It is the duty of the State, in accordance with the maximum use of its resources and with due regard for the liberties of individuals, to promote this purpose by legislation or by other appropriate means. Among the social rights thus to be achieved progressively by joint efforts of the individual and the State are those defined in the following Articles.”

[4]

Article 36 (listed as Article 37 in E/CN.4/AC.1/8)

Insert after the end of the second sentence the words “which however shall not be exclusive of private educational facilities or instructions” so that the Article will read:

Right to Education

“Everyone has the right to education.

“Each State has the duty to require that each child within territories under its jurisdiction receive a fundamental education. The State shall maintain adequate and free facilities for such education which however shall not be exclusive of private educational facilities or institutions. It shall also assure development of facilities for further, including higher, education, which are adequate and effectively available to all the people within such territories.”

E/CN.4/AC.1/13
19 June 1947

United States Suggestions in Connection with a Draft Declaration of Human Rights

Portion of Preamble

“Whereas one of the purposes of the United Nations as set forth in its Charter is to achieve international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all;

“Whereas all Members of the United Nations have pledged themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization for the achievement of universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion;

“Whereas the adoption of a bill of rights will promote the fulfilment of this purpose;

“Therefore the General Assembly calls upon the member states to make effective the rights set forth in this bill by international convention and national legislation.”

Article on Implementation

1. The Articles in this Bill of Rights shall be referred to the appropriate organs or agencies of the United Nations with a view to the formulation of a series of international conventions to be submitted individually to the member states for ratification or the appropriate action in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

[2]

2. The Conventions thus concluded shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations for registration and publication in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter.

3. The Conventions shall provide for submission to the Secretary-General of copies of the laws or regulations by which the member state gives effect to the provisions of the Convention together with the name of the competent authority responsible for compliance, and of periodic reports concerning the enforcement and revisions of such laws.

4. The Secretary-General shall inform the General Assembly each year of the Conventions embodying the provisions of this Bill of Rights which have been proposed to the member states, and the number of states which have ratified or have failed to ratify them.

...

E/CN.4/AC.1/12

19 June 1947

Memorandum on Implementation Prepared by the Secretariat at the Request of the Committee [for the Drafting Committee of the International Bill of Human Rights of the Commission on Human Rights]

1. The attention of the Committee is respectfully drawn to the resolution of the Economic and Social Council of 21 June 1946. This resolution reads as follows:

“Considering that the purpose of the United Nations with regard to the promotion and observance of human rights, as defined in the Charter of the United Nations, can only be fulfilled if provisions are made for the implementation of human rights and of an international bill of rights, the Council requests the Commission on Human Rights to submit at an early date suggestions regarding the ways and means for the effective implementation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, with a view to assisting the Economic and Social Council in working out arrangements for such implementation with other appropriate organs of the United Nations.” (Journal of the Economic and Social Council, No. 29, page 521.)

2. In a memorandum prepared for the Commission on Human Rights at its first session in January 1947, the Secretariat drew attention to Professor Lauterpacht’s discussion of the problem of implementation in his book, “An International Bill of the Rights of Man”.

3. In the same memorandum, the Secretariat raised the following questions:

- (a) whether or not the Bill should contain a provision to the effect [2] that it cannot be unilaterally abrogated or modified;
- (b) whether or not the Bill should include an express statement to the effect that the matters dealt with in it are of international concern.
- (c) whether or not the provisions of the Bill should be declared to be directly applicable in the various countries without further implementation by national legislation or transformation into national law.

It would seem that provisions of the nature mentioned in (c) and (d) are necessary if the Bill is to be enforceable as part of the national law of the various countries accepting it. In so far as implementation on the international plane is concerned, it is suggested that the Commission might consider the possibility of providing in successive stages for international supervision and enforcement. The following successive stages are suggested:

- (a) the establishment of the right of the General Assembly and other organs of the United Nations, including possibly the Commission on Human Rights, to discuss and make recommendations in regard to violations of the Bill;
- (b) the establishment of the right of individuals to petition the United Nations as means of initiating procedure for enforcement of human rights;
- (c) the establishment of a special organ of the United Nations with jurisdiction and the duty to supervise and enforce human rights motu proprio;
- (d) the establishment of jurisdiction in this organ to consider cases of suspension of the Bill of Rights, either in whole or in part;
- (e) the establishment of local agencies of the United Nations in the various countries with jurisdiction to supervise and enforce human [3] rights therein. The Commission might find it useful, in this connection, to study the precedents established, for example, by the Convention between Germany and Poland on Upper Silesia of 15 May 1922.

The Commission may want also to discuss the role which the Security Council might play in the implementation of the Bill. According to Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter, the exception of domestic jurisdiction cannot be invoked in cases where enforcement measures are being taken by the Security Council under Chapter VII. The Commission may want to consider the question whether the Security Council should not be given a more extended jurisdiction in the matter. (E/CN.4/W.4, pages 13 and 14.)

4. The first session of the Commission on Human Rights devoted relatively little time to the problem. Nevertheless, Colonel Hodgson, the member for Australia, submitted a draft resolution for the establishment of an International Court of Human Rights. This draft resolution reads as follows: (E/CN.4/15)

“1. There is hereby established an International Court of Human Rights. The Court shall be constituted and shall function in accordance with the Articles contained in this Part and in the Statute of the Court.

2. The Court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all disputes concerning the rights of citizenship and enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms provided for in the Declaration of Human Rights. Subject to such conditions as shall be contained in the Statute of the Court, the jurisdiction of the Court shall be both original and appellate, and shall extend to questions of interpretation arising in such disputes as are brought before administrative tribunals or administrative authorities.

3. The Appellate jurisdiction shall extend to appeals from all decisions of the courts of the States bound by the obligations contained in the Declaration of Human Rights, in which any question arises as to the rights of citizenship or the enjoyment of human rights, or [4] fundamental freedoms.

4. The Court shall be open to any person or group of persons. It shall also be open to any of the States acceptors of the Declaration.

5. Each of the States accepting the Declaration shall comply with the judgment of the Court in any case to which the State is a party and with any order which the Court may make against it.

6. Any judgment or order made by the Court in favour of any person or group of persons within the jurisdiction of any of such States shall be fully effective according to its terms and shall be enforced in and by the State affected by the judgment or order.

7. Each of such States undertakes that the provisions contained in this declaration shall be recognized as fundamental laws and that no law, regulation or official action shall conflict or interfere with those provisions, nor shall any law, regulations or official action prevail over them.

8. The Court shall also have jurisdiction, both original and appellate, to hear and determine disputes concerning such rights of citizenship and enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms as shall be provided for in the treaties of peace which will be made by any of the Allied and Associated Powers with Romania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Finland, Austria, Germany or Japan.

9. The Court shall be composed of a body of independent judges, selected according to the standards laid down by the Charter of the United Nations for the election of judges of the International Court of Justice.

10. The Court shall consist of not less than three members appointed in the manner set out in the Statute of the Court.

11. The Court shall make an annual report to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations on the working of the Court in relation to the rights and freedoms within its jurisdiction. The Court may also [5] make other report to that Council if and when it thinks proper to do so.”

5. At the fifteenth meeting of the Commission on Human Rights, Colonel Hodgson made the following comments (E/CN.4/SR.15, page 2):

“... The Australian Government considered that the resolution of the General Assembly Committee regarding this Bill should not be a simple recommendation, but a multilateral Convention binding Member States. These States should incorporate the principles laid down in this Bill in their own legislation.

He recalled that similar principles were incorporated in the Peace Treaties following the 1914–1918 war. In view of the negative results of those different declarations, the Australian Government had proposed, at the Paris Conference, the setting up of definite machinery for the application of these principles; that is to say, an International Court of Human Rights. By this action, the Australian Government was only conforming with the terms of a letter of June 1946 from Mr. Trygve Lie to the various governments. The Members of the Paris Conference, however, rejected this proposal on the grounds that the United Nations had at its disposal a body competent to settle the question; the Security Council. The objection was, in fact, unjustifiable as the Council could only intervene if peace were in danger. In view of the great number of Stateless persons whose future could only be settled on the international plane, the question was now even more acute.

The Australian Government therefore proposed that the Commission on Human Rights should recommend to the Economic and Social Council and to the General Assembly, the creation of an International Court of Human Rights. This Court would be the Central Appeal Court to which States, groups of individuals or even single individuals could appeal when all domestic possibilities of appeal had been exhausted.”

6. At the sixteenth meeting, again commenting on the Australian draft resolution, Colonel Hodgson recalled (E/CN.4/SR.16, pages 2–3):

[6]

“... that the objection had been raised that the Commission could not consider implementing an international bill of rights before deciding on its contents. He believed, however, that the Commission had an obligation under Article 56 to implement those rights and freedoms already laid down in the Charter. It was necessary to establish effective machinery to make those human rights and fundamental freedoms a reality.

Moreover, it was not premature to consider machinery for implementation of the Bill, since the definitive rights to be enforced would be known by the time the bill was submitted to the General Assembly. The various principles enunciated therein would subsequently be incorporated in an international convention for ratification by States members. Therefore, the elaboration and implementation of the bill constituted parallel processes.

Colonel Hodgson also recalled that it had been suggested that the human rights and fundamental freedoms embodied in the bill should first be implemented by Governments through national legislation. He considered, however, that this function belonged to an international tribunal, to which there could be appeal over and beyond national courts.

In conclusion, the representative of Australia stated that the Commission should not confine itself to abstractions but was bound to consider immediately effective machinery for implementing human rights and fundamental freedoms, in accordance with its solemn obligations. He moved, therefore, that the Australian proposal for the establishment of an International Court of Human Rights should be referred to the drafting group for consideration, with a view to reporting on the implementation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, as contained in the proposed bill of human rights, to the next session of the Commission.”

7. The question of implementation is also raised in the draft resolution for the General Assembly which was presented by Mrs. Hansa Mehta, the member of the Commission for India, at the first session of the Commission [7] on Human Rights. This draft resolution reads as follows: (E/CN.4/11)

“The General Assembly,

Recognizing the fact that the United Nations has been established for the specific purpose of enthroning the natural rights of man to freedom and equality before the law, and for upholding the worth and dignity of human personality;

Having taken note of the Preamble and the relevant clauses of the United Nations Charter, the resolutions of the Economic and Social Council; the Human Rights Clauses of the Trusteeship Agreements as approved by the First Assembly of the United Nations; and the Human Rights Clauses of the European Treaties,

Resolves that the following be incorporated into a General Act of the United Nations Assembly:

1. (a) Every human being is entitled to the right of liberty, including the right to personal freedom; freedom of worship; freedom of opinion; freedom of assembly and association; and the right to access to the United Nations, without risk of reprisal, wherever there is an actual or threatened infringement of human rights.
- (b) Every human being has the right of equality, without distinction of race, sex, language, religion, nationality or political belief.

Every human being has the right of security, including the right to work, the right to education, the right to health, the right to participate in government, and the right to property, subject only to the over-riding consideration of public weal when the State or its appropriate organs acquire it after paying equitable compensation.

2. (a) This General Act is an obligation undertaken by Member States of the United Nations, and comes into force within twelve calendar months from the date on which it is passed by the United Nations Assembly.

[8]

(b) Non-self-governing areas and areas under the trusteeship of the United Nations automatically come under the regime of this Act.

Non-Member States are eligible to adhere to this Act.

Nothing mentioned in this Act shall be construed as not obligating the individual to his corresponding duties to his own State and to the international community under the United Nations.

No state Member of the United Nations, non-self-governing territory, trusteeship area or non-member of the United Nations which has adhered to this Act, shall have the right to suspend it in whole or in part once it was adhered to in due form.

The Security Council of the United Nations shall be seized of all alleged violations of human rights, investigate them and enforce redress within the framework of the United Nations.”

8. In accordance with the instructions of the Economic and Social Council, the Secretariat prepared a draft outline of an International Bill of Rights to serve as the basis of discussions in the Drafting Committee. This outline contains several articles which touch on the question of implementation, to wit: (E/CN.4/AC.1/3)

Article 28: “Everyone has the right, either individually or in association with others, to petition the government of his State or the United Nations for redress of grievances.”

Article 47: “It is the duty of each member State to respect and protect the rights enunciated in this Bill of Rights. The State shall, when necessary, co-operate with other States to that end.”

Article 48: “The provisions of this International Bill of Rights shall be deemed fundamental principles of international law and of the national law of each of the member States of the United Nations. Their observance is therefore a matter of international concern and it shall be within the jurisdiction of the United Nations to discuss any violation thereof.”

[9]

9. Immediately before the opening of the present session of the Drafting Committee, the member of the Commission for the United Kingdom, submitted a document (E/CN.4/AC.1/4) which deals with the question of implementation in some detail. This document is now before the Drafting Committee and, since it is long and must be read as a whole, no extracts are reproduced herein.

10. Reference to implementation will also be found in the proposal of the United States for modification of Article 28 of the Secretariat draft. The United States proposal reads as follows: (E/CN.4/AC.1/11, page 32)

“No State shall abridge the right of everyone, either individually or in association with others, to petition the government of his State or the United Nations for redress of grievances.”

11. Article 24 of Professor Cassin's draft deals with the same point; the Article reads as follows: (E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2/Rev.1, page 4)

"No State shall deny to any individual the right, either individually or in association with others, to petition the government of his State or of his residence or the United Nations for redress of grievances."

12. Professor Cassin also suggests that the Preamble to the Declaration should include the following words: (E/CN.4/AC.1/W.1, page 2)

"... that the enjoyment of such rights and freedoms by all persons must be protected by the commonwealth of nations and secured by international as well as national laws."

Some of the members of the Drafting Group were of the opinion, however, that if this provision were to be retained it should be modified and put in the Preamble of a Convention.

13. Finally, the question of implementation is raised in the final paragraph of the proposal submitted by the Delegation of France to the Drafting Committee. This paragraph reads as follows: (E/CN.4/AC.1/5, page 2)

"And that the General Assembly of 1947 instruct the Commission [10] on Human Rights to study the constitution of an appropriate International organ with a view to ensuring the effective observance of those rights."

This memorandum does not discuss the various suggestions for implementation that have been submitted by individuals and organizations.

E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2/Rev.2

20 June 1947

Revised Suggestions Submitted by the Representative of France for Articles of the International Declaration of Rights

Article 1

All men are brothers being endowed with reason, members of one family. They are free and possess equal dignity and rights.

Article 2

The object of society is to afford each of its members equal opportunity for the full development of his spirit, mind and body.

Article 3

Man is essentially social and has fundamental duties to society and to his fellow men. The rights of each are therefore limited by the rights of others.

(Alternative)

As human beings cannot live and develop themselves without the help and support of society, each one owes to society fundamental duties which are: obedience to law, exercise of a useful activity, willing acceptance of obligations and sacrifices demanded for the common good.

Article 4

In the exercise of his rights, everyone is limited by the rights of others.
[2]

Article 5

All are equal before the law. It applies to public authorities and judges as well as to individuals. Everything that is not prohibited by law is legally permitted.

Article 6

Everyone is entitled to the rights and freedoms hereunder declared, without distinction as to race, sex, language, religion, or political belief.

Article 7

Everyone has the right to life, to personal liberty and to personal security.

Article 8

No one shall be deprived of his personal liberty or kept in custody except in cases prescribed by law and after due process. Everyone placed under arrest or detention shall have the right to immediate judicial determination of the legality of any detention to which he may be subject.

Article 9

No one shall be held guilty of any offence until legally convicted. No one shall be convicted except by judgment of an independent and impartial court of law, rendered in conformity with law after a fair and public trial at which he has had an opportunity for a full hearing or has been legally summoned and has been given all guarantees necessary for his defence.

Article 10

No one can be convicted of crime unless he has violated some law in effect at the time of the act charged as an offence nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that applicable at the time of the commission of the offence.

No one, even if convicted for a crime, can be subject to torture.*

[*] Articles 8, 9 and 10 could be shortened in case of a convention being resorted to.

[3]

Article 11

Slavery, which is inconsistent with the dignity of man, is prohibited. Public authority may impose a personal service or work only by application of a law and for the common interest.

Article 12

The inviolability of privacy, home, correspondence and reputation are inviolable and protected by law.

Article 13

Subject to any general law adopted in the interest of national welfare and security, there shall be liberty of movement and free choice of residence within the borders of each State. Individuals may also freely emigrate or expatriate themselves.

Article 14

Everyone has the right to escape persecution by seeking refuge on the territory of the State which would consent to grant him asylum.

Article 15

Everyone has the right to a legal personality everywhere. Everyone has the right to contract marriage in accordance with the laws of the State. Everyone shall have access to independent and impartial tribunals for the determination of his rights, liabilities and obligations under the law. He shall have the right to consult with, and, eventually be represented by counsel.

Article 16

There shall be equal opportunity to all vocations and professions not having a public character.

Article 17

Everyone has a right to own personal property. No one shall be deprived of his property except for public welfare and with just compensation.

[4]

The State may determine those things, rights and enterprises that are susceptible of private appropriation and regulate the acquisition and use of such property.

Article 18

Every State shall have the right to grant asylum to political refugees.

Article 19

No alien legally admitted to the territory of a State may be expelled therefrom without having had a hearing.

Article 20

The individual freedom of conscience, belief and thought is an absolute and sacred right. The practice of a private or public worship and the manifestations of opposite convictions can be subject only to such limitations as are necessary to protect public order, morals and the rights and freedoms of others.

Article 21

No one can be molested by reason of his opinions. Everyone is free to hold or impart his opinion, or to receive the opinions of others, and to seek information from sources wherever situated.

Article 22

There shall be freedom of expression either by word, in writing, in the press, in books or by visual, auditive or other means; provided however that the user of those means shall be responsible for the abuse of this right.

Article 23

There shall be freedom of peaceful assembly and of association for political, religious, cultural, scientific, professional and other purposes compatible with this Declaration. No restriction shall be [5] placed on the exercise of this right except for the protection of public order.

Article 24

No State shall deny to any individual the right, either individually or in association with others, to petition the government of his State or of his residence or the United Nations for redress of grievances.

Article 25

When a government seriously or systematically tramples the fundamental human rights and freedoms, individuals and peoples have the right to resist oppression and tyranny, without prejudice to their right of appeal to the United Nations.

Article 26

Everyone has the right to take an equal part, directly or through his representatives, in the formation of law, the institution of taxes for public expense and the government of the State of which he is a citizen or of depending territories. Each citizen shall take his part of public expenses according to his means.

Article 27

The State can derive its authority only from the consent of the people and has a duty to conform to the wishes of the people. These wishes are manifested by democratic elections, which shall be periodic, free and fair.

Article 28

Everyone shall have equal opportunity of occupying all public functions of the State of which he is a citizen. Such functions cannot be considered as privileges or favours.

Article 29

Everyone has the right and the duty to perform socially useful work and to full development of his personality.

[6]

Article 30

Everyone may hire his services for a time but may not either alienate his person nor place himself in state of servitude to another.

Article 31

Human labour is not a merchandise. It shall be performed in good conditions, and shall secure a decent standard of living to the worker and his family.

Article 32

Everyone has the right to protect his professional interests, either by himself or through his representatives.

Article 33

Everyone has a right to the best health conditions possible and to assistance to preserve them. The community shall promote public-hygiene and the betterment of housing and food conditions.

Article 34

Everyone has the right to social security. To the utmost of its possibilities, the State shall maintain effective arrangements for the prevention of unemployment and, with the participation of beneficiaries, shall organize insurance against invalidity, illness, old age and all other involuntary and undeserved losses of livelihood. Mothers and children have the right to special regard, care and resources.

Article 35

Everyone is entitled to learning and has the right to education. Primary education is obligatory for all children and must be provided for them free. Access to technical, professional and higher education shall be promoted by giving equal chances to all youths and adults without distinction as to race, sex, language, religion, social standing or financial means of beneficiaries.

[7]

Article 36

Everyone has the right to a fair share of rest and leisure and to the knowledge of the outside world.

Article 37

Everyone has the right to participate in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts and to share in the benefits of science.

Article 38

The authors of all artistic, literary, scientific works and inventors shall retain, in addition to the just remuneration of their labour, a moral right on their work and/or discovery which shall not disappear, even after such work and/or discovery shall have become the common property of mankind.

Article 39

In States inhabited by a substantial number of persons of a race, language or religion other than these of the majority of the population, persons belonging to such ethnic, linguistic or religious minorities shall have the right as far as compatible with public order to establish and maintain their schools and cultural or religious institutions, and to use their own language in the press, in public assembly and before the courts and other authorities of the State.

Article 40

There is no protection of human rights where the authors of tyrannical or arbitrary acts or their accomplices are not punished and where there is no provision for the liability of public authorities or their agents. The provisions on nationality and the protection of aliens are transferred to the section on Freedoms and Legal Status.
[8]

Article 41

The provisions of this International Bill of Rights shall be deemed fundamental principles of international law and shall become part of the national law of each of the member States of the United Nations. Their observance is therefore a matter of international concern and it shall be within the jurisdiction of the United Nations to discuss any violation thereof.

Article 42

It is the duty of each Member State to take, within its jurisdiction, all measures and legal dispositions for the enactment and effective respect of the rights and freedoms proclaimed in this Declaration. The State shall, when necessary, co-operate with other States to that end. The United Nations and their specialized agencies shall recommend all international conventions and shall take, each within their respective spheres, all measures for the implementation of the provisions of the Charter and of this Declaration, in view of protecting these rights and freedoms all over the world.

E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.12

20 June 1947<sup>183</sup>

Summary Record of the Twelfth Meeting [of the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Friday,
20 June at 11 a.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States); Vice-Chairman: Dr. P. C. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon). Mr. Ralph L. Harry (Australia); Mr. H. Santa Cruz (Chile); Prof. René Cassin (France); Prof. V. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Geoffrey Wilson (United Kingdom). Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Toni Sender (American Federation of Labor). Secretariat: Prof. J. P. Humphrey (Secretary of the Committee); Mr. Edward Lawson.

1. Consideration of Revised Suggestions Submitted by the Representative of France for Articles of the International Declaration of Rights (document E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2/Rev.2)

THE CHAIRMAN explained that Prof. Cassin (France) had attempted to abbreviate and combine the thoughts and comments expressed during the discussions of the Drafting Committee. She asked that each representative try, as far as possible, to limit his comments on each individual point to three minutes in the interest of terminating their work. She suggested that, should the wording of an Article not be exactly as desired, [2] any required redrafting might be worked out informally.

As far as the United States was concerned, the Chairman noted that there might be some reservations which would be brought up at the session of the Commission on Human Rights. It was understood to be the right of every Representative to modify his position on any item at the session of the Commission. She suggested that the Preamble be considered at a later stage, after all the Articles had been examined.

<sup>183</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 3 July 1947.

PROF. CASSIN (France) said he recognized the imperfection of the document under consideration. He agreed to the method of procedure suggested by the Chairman.

Article 1

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 1. As a general remark, DR. MALIK (Lebanon) emphasized the fact that the document before them was strictly provisional. He, therefore, reserved the right to suggest alterations in both substance and form in the plenary session of the Human Rights Commission.

THE CHAIRMAN made it clear again that it was understood that all delegates reserved the right to modify their position.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) speaking personally, and not as his Government's Representative, said he had several specific reservations. He pointed out that in the present document items appeared which might also be included in a Convention. There was a grave danger in having two documents containing clauses covering the same subject matter in different words. He suggested that those points covered by the suggested Articles for a Convention be omitted from the suggested Articles for a Declaration. He was not opposed to the formulation of a Declaration, but said he believed a Declaration unaccompanied by a Convention would not be useful.

THE CHAIRMAN reminded the Committee that the Human Rights Commission [3] would have to decide upon the form of the International Bill of Human Rights. The Committee would only present it with one or more working papers. She thought that several Members had expressed the feeling that the Declaration should cover the subject generally, and should be a complete document in itself.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) reaffirmed the statement of the Chairman that the Drafting Committee's work was in no way definitive. The Commission on Human Rights itself would decide upon the items to be covered by a Convention and those to be covered by a Declaration.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) stated that he had always been in favour of submitting two documents to the Commission on Human Rights. He thought of the Declaration as being an all-inclusive document, embodying the basic principles from which positive law could be extracted. He had never thought of the Declaration as embodying only residual material remaining from the Convention. In his opinion the two documents should not oppose one another, but should supplement each other.

PROF. CASSIN (France) reminded the Committee that the paper was only a working document which was not binding upon the members. He thought that explanatory footnotes might be used wherever necessary.

MR. HARRY (Australia) disagreed with Mr. Wilson (United Kingdom) and said that in his view the Declaration must be a comprehensive document covering all rights; it should not, even if a Convention is to be drafted simultaneously, omit reference to matters covered by the Convention. This method would use the Convention as a preamble to the Declaration whereas the Declaration should lead into the preamble of the Convention. He strongly recommended the formulation of a complete Declaration, and agreed that explanatory footnotes might be helpful.

Articles 1 to 4

THE CHAIRMAN said that the United States had considered combining Articles 1 to 4. [4]

MR. HARRY (Australia) suggested a wording that combined the four Articles into one.

PROF. CASSIN (France) pointed out that three ideas were expressed in the four Articles: (1) the condition of man; (2) the duty of society to man; and (3) what man owes to society. He felt that these would require at least three Articles.

THE CHAIRMAN asked the Representative of Australia to draft a somewhat shortened version of Articles 1 to 4, taking her own and Prof. Cassin's views into consideration.

DR. CHANG (China) pointed out that the time at the disposal of the Committee was limited and that if redrafts were made of each Article, the work of the Committee would not progress.

PROF. CASSIN (France) stated that he himself reserved the right to make changes in the Articles he had suggested, as he recognized their imperfection.

DR. CHANG (China) agreed with the suggestion of the United States, that the first four Articles might be merged in some way. He wished, however, to retain the first four words of Article 1, "All men are brothers".

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) said that the first three Articles might be considered in the nature of a Preamble. To assure personal rights, however, it would be necessary to include in this Preamble the idea of social and economic rights.

PROF. CASSIN (France) agreed with Mr. Wilson as to the importance of making early reference to social and economic rights. He envisaged Articles 1 to 6 as embodying the general principles of the Declaration of Human Rights. He suggested as a title for the document "Revised Suggestions Submitted as Working Document for Articles of the International Declaration of Human Rights".

Article 5

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 5. She said that the United States would prefer deleting the last sentence and would suggest that the Article be [5] altered to read:

"All are equal before the law and entitled to equal protection of the law. The law applies to public authorities and judges as well as to individuals."

DR. CHANG (China) and PROF. CASSIN (France) were in favour of the United States revision. MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) supported the United States suggestion but preferred that the second sentence read “Public authorities and judges, as well as individuals, are subject to the rule of law.”

Article 6

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 6. She stated that the United States suggested that “hereunder declared” be replaced by “set forth in this Declaration”. DR. CHANG (China) was in favour of this change. He thought the general principle might be included in the Preamble rather than drafted as a separate Article. DR. MALIK (Lebanon) shared the viewpoint of Dr. Chang. THE CHAIRMAN suggested a footnote to the effect that if this thought was embodied in the Preamble, it might be deleted in the Declaration.

PROF. CASSIN (France) remarked that Article 6 concluded the General Section of his suggested Articles. He was of the opinion that it could not be absorbed, but should have a place in the body of the Declaration or should be stated very strongly in the Preamble.

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that the word “political” be deleted as the word “belief” would cover all types and not be limited to the one specified.

In reply to Prof. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), THE CHAIRMAN noted that political belief was only one of many types of beliefs and that elimination of the word “political” broadened the Article. PROF. CASSIN (France) pointed out that his original French text did not [6] contain the word “political”.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) said that politics was one of the fundamental activities of man in which discrimination existed. He felt that the Commission on Human Rights should decide whether or not discrimination was allowable on the basis of political belief. There were excesses in some of these practices, he said, and there was no harm in stating that man is free to hold political convictions without danger of discrimination and persecution.

THE CHAIRMAN felt it wiser to stick to the wording of the Charter until recommendations on this Article had been received from the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.

PROF. CASSIN (France) agreed that the Article should be referred to the Sub-Commission for consideration.

THE CHAIRMAN clarified the position of the United States by saying that her Government would agree to the words of the Charter being retained, and a footnote suggesting referral of the matter to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities being inserted.

Articles 7 and 8

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 7. She said that the United States would prefer to merge Articles 7 and 8 to read:

“Everyone has the right to life, liberty and the security of his person. He shall not be deprived of his rights without due process of law in cases prescribed by law. Everyone placed under arrest or detention shall have the right to immediate judicial determination of the legality of any detention to which he may be subject.”

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) pointed out that both the United States text and the text drafted by Prof. Cassin referred first to the rights to life, [7] liberty and security and then to personal liberty. He called attention to the need at this point to affirm the economic and social rights of the individual and suggested that an Article be added, to read:

“Every person has a right to enjoy conditions of life that enable him to support himself and his family and to develop his personality.”

He pointed out that Article 1 of the Chilean draft included the right to sustenance and support in the case of those unable to support themselves by their own efforts. The International Labour Organization had also made provision that all human beings, without distinction as to sex, race or religion, have the right to earn their own livelihood. If such important rights were not mentioned, the International Bill of Human Rights would not be in harmony with the present world.

PROF. CASSIN (France) explained that, in his opinion, Article 7 was a chapter heading which implied all economic rights. Economic rights were stated in greater detail towards the end of the Declaration. Article 7 introduced a whole order of ideas, of which the following Articles were applications.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) felt that, for purposes of a Declaration, Articles 8, 9 and 10 were adequately covered by Article 7, and suggested that the footnote read: “Articles 7, 8, 9 and 10 will have to be considered in the light of any convention that may be recommended for adoption.” He proposed that the word “Everyone” be replaced by the phrase “all men”.

DR. MALIK (Lebanon) agreed with the Representative of Chile as to the necessity of modifying Article 7. He did not feel that Articles 8, 9 and 10 needed to be tied irrevocably to Article 7. He recommended that the clause “right to life and bodily integrity, from the moment of conception, regardless of mental and physical condition” be added.

DR. CHANG (China) thought it important to take note of the cultural [8] development of man, to include “the better development of life itself”, inasmuch as mere physical existence was not sufficient.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) said that he was aware that Prof. Cassin had not overlooked the importance of economic and social rights. He felt, however, that they should be mentioned in the first Articles.

THE CHAIRMAN summarized the general feeling of the Committee, that Articles 7, 8 and 9 should stand as separate Articles. Two Representatives had expressed the view that the meaning of “right to life” should be expanded. The United States was willing to accept the Articles, together with a footnote summarizing the suggestions made by various Members.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) conceded that Article 7 stated general principles whereas Articles 8, 9 and 10 embodied methods. He withdrew his suggestion that Article 7 be grouped with 8, 9 and 10 and included in the footnote.

Article 9

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 9. She said that the United States would suggest the addition of the phrase “or punished for crime” after the word “convicted”, and the elimination of the phrase “or has been legally summoned”. Her Government also wished to add “including the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him, the right of compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favour, and the right to consult with and be represented by counsel”.

PROF. CASSIN (France) agreed that “or punished for crime” should be added. Although he had no objection to the right of obtaining witnesses and counsel, he felt that specification of one such item would necessitate citation of many others.

DR. CHANG (China) pointed out that Article 7 was a statement of general principle while Article 8 dealt with a process of law. He thought that the “due process of law” could not be spelled out. He believed that [9] Article 8 should remain but that Articles 9 and 10 might be relegated to a footnote or commentary.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) thought that his suggested wording of a footnote would cover Dr. Chang’s point inasmuch as “considered” was a broader term than “shortened”.

THE CHAIRMAN stated that the general feeling of the Committee was that Article 8 should be retained. Although Articles 9 and 10 contained important points, they should be included in a subsidiary position to Articles 7 and 8.

DR. CHANG (China) suggested that the first sentences of Articles 8, 9 and 10 might form a new Article 8, as they enunciated ideas of a general character. The remaining sentences of the Articles were qualifications and might be added as footnotes or commentaries.

THE CHAIRMAN requested Dr. Chang to redraft the Articles and footnote for consideration at the afternoon meeting.

The meeting adjourned at 1:00 p.m.

E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.13

20 June 1947<sup>184</sup>

Summary Record of the Thirteenth Meeting [of the Drafting
Committee of the Commission on Human Rights]

Held at Lake Success, New York, on Friday, 20 June 1947
at 2:30 p.m.

Present: Chairman: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (United States); Vice-Chairman: Dr. P. C. Chang (China); Rapporteur: Dr. Charles Malik (Lebanon). Members: Mr. Ralph L. Harry (Australia); Mr. H. Santa Cruz (Chile); Professor René Cassin (France); Professor V. Koretsky (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics); Mr. Geoffrey Wilson (United Kingdom). Non-Governmental Organizations: Miss Toni Sender (American Federation of Labor). Secretariat: Professor J. P. Humphrey (Secretary of the Committee); Mr. Edward Lawson.

I. Consideration of Revised Suggestions Submitted by the Representative of France for Articles of the International Declaration of Human Rights
(Document E/CN.4/AC.1/W.2/Rev.2)

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that the Committee should proceed with consideration of Article 11, pointing out that, although the discussion of Article 10 had not been completed, this Article would be included in the drafting undertaken by the Representative of China. Speaking as a Member of the Committee, Mrs. Roosevelt said she thought it desirable to add the provision on double jeopardy contained in Article 26 of the United States [2] proposal.

Article 11

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 11, and added that the United States suggested that the second sentence should be deleted.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) supported this proposal, adding that the abolition of slavery was the main purpose of the Article: the subject of compulsory labour would be included in the Convention, and would then have to be very carefully examined. DR. CHANG (China) agreed with this.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) said he thought the Article should be expanded rather than shortened, and proposed the addition: "Slavery . . . is prohibited in all its forms." There were attenuated forms of slavery which were vigorous in practice; for instance the status of persons who were deported to Germany was certainly worse than that of ancient slaves. If the Committee wished to delete the second paragraph it might be necessary to add a footnote that this subject would have to be included in some kind of a Convention.

<sup>184</sup> This is the date of the meeting. The document was issued on 8 July 1947.

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that the second sentence should be eliminated, so that the Article would read: "Slavery, which is inconsistent with the dignity of man, is prohibited under all its forms", with a footnote to the effect that the Article might be elaborated in a Convention. This was accepted.

DR. CHANG (China) said he wondered whether Members should not clarify their thinking as to what was meant by a Convention. In this case it might not be possible to have it clarified in a Convention, but it might be possible to clarify it in a comment. Certain things could be clarified in a comment and others enforced in a Convention.

THE CHAIRMAN said that in his use of the word "enforced", Dr. Chang implied what was intended as something to be included in a Convention.

Article 12

THE CHAIRMAN read Article 12.

[3]

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) said he agreed with the principle, but there were an enormous number of exceptions to be considered. He objected to the word "inviolable" and suggested the Article might state that the sanctity of the home and the privacy of correspondence, with a phrase added about reputation, "shall be respected".

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) said that the word "inviolable" should be avoided; on the other hand, privacy, home, correspondence and reputation must be respected, and if it was not stated that such respect should be protected by law, it might be supposed that there were legitimate restrictions, which would not be authorized. He proposed the wording: "The inviolability of privacy, etc. shall be respected and regulated by law."

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom.) said he preferred the phrase "shall be respected" to "protected by law".

MR. HARRY (Australia) suggested wording the Article as follows: "The privacy of the home and correspondence, and respect for reputation, should be protected by law."

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) said he would not quibble about the words but had a mental reservation as to whether or not they were apt.

THE CHAIRMAN, speaking as a Member of the Committee, said she would prefer the words "protected by law", but thought that that was the kind of wording which should be left to the Commission itself.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) observed that the word “secrecy” as a translation for “privacy” might apply to correspondence, but might not apply to the home. It was a question of right and of law as well as translation. That was why he thought that the words “inviolability of the home”, which were accepted in all legislatures and all jurisprudence, should be kept. Deletion of the phrase “inviolability of the home” was a retrogression.

MR. SANTA CRUZ (Chile) agreed with the Representative of France that this phrase should be retained.

[4]

THE CHAIRMAN asked whether the wording “The right to inviolability of privacy of the home, of correspondence and respect for reputation are protected by law” would meet the approval of Members.

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) repeated that these things were not inviolable; in his home there were all types of people who had every right to enter and see what was going on, as, for example, officials of public utilities. What the Article was aiming at was the privacy of the home, and not its inviolability. He added that he was content with the wording suggested by the Representative of Australia: “The privacy of the home, of correspondence and respect for reputation shall be protected by law.”

THE CHAIRMAN stated that there were two alternatives. It had been proposed that the word “inviolability” should be retained, to read: “The inviolability of privacy of the home, of correspondence, and respect for reputation shall be protected by law.” The wording proposed by the Representative of Australia, and this wording might therefore be offered as alternatives.

No objection to this proposal was indicated.

Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4

THE CHAIRMAN asked the Representative of Australia to read his proposals regarding Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4.

MR. HARRY (Australia) remarked that his suggestions were neither original nor new, but combined the various ideas which had been made regarding the keynote opening of the Declaration, and also contained echoes from past Declarations. If it were thought that the phrase in parenthesis in the first line were clumsy and not concise enough, a third sentence could be added to bring in the non-discrimination aspect. His proposal read as follows:

“All men (without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion) are born free and equal and have certain inalienable rights fundamental to their life as reasonable beings, brothers within the family of mankind. These rights are limited only by the equal rights of others as individuals, and by the [5] duties man owes to society through which he is enabled to develop his spirit, mind and body in wider freedom.”

MR. WILSON (United Kingdom) suggested the words “to their life as beings endowed with reason and conscience” in place of “to their life as reasonable beings”.

DR. MALIK<sup>185</sup> (Lebanon) said that even if the proposal of the Representative of Australia accomplished the purpose of combining the ideas of Articles 1, 2, and 3, he preferred short, simple sentences at the beginning of the Declaration. He thought it preferable to start with the words “All men are brothers”, followed by a short sentence as in Article 1. He supported the proposal of the Representative of the United Kingdom defining man as a being “endowed with reason and conscience”. He preferred Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4 as they stood, with certain modifications.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) pointed out the omission, in the Australian proposal, of any reference to the dignity of man. He suggested that, allowing for drafting changes, two alternative texts should be submitted to the Commission on Human Rights; the first would contain the four separate Articles, and the second the draft proposed by the Representative of Australia.

DR. CHANG (China) said he was in agreement with the Representative of the Lebanon that short, pithy sentences were needed for the first few articles, but he felt the Australian suggestions were interesting and significant. He agreed with the Representative of the United Kingdom that the word “conscience” should be added, but there should also be some word indicating, aside from “reason”, something of a moral significance. He suggested that Article 1 should read as it stands: “All men are brothers. Being endowed with reason and conscience, members of one family, they are free and possess equal dignity and rights.” Articles 2, 3, and 4 should be combined and become Article 2 (taken from the Australian proposal) as follows: “These rights are limited only by the equal rights of others. Man also owes duties [6] to society, through which he is enabled to develop his spirit, mind and body in wider freedom.”

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) said that the terms adopted for Articles 2, 3, and 4 were on the practical level, but it would be necessary for the Commission itself to settle the question of whether it should limit itself to finding such a practical text or whether it ought to affirm and proclaim ideas per se. He agreed with the Representative of China that the original draft for Article 1 should be submitted, and one of the alternatives under Article 3, deleted; only one alternative would then be presented to the Commission, that of combining Articles 2, 3, and 4 according to the Australian proposal or leaving them separate as in the document before the Committee.

PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) said there was no need to deal with a more exact wording, since all the formulas now being adopted were conditional. He pointed out, however, that the first draft had been worded “Men have the right to life as being endowed with reason”, which might have resulted in misunderstanding and have been interpreted as justification of the fascist destruction of feeble-minded people on the grounds that they were not reasonable human beings. He also pointed out that members seemed to have accepted the expression “all men”, on the understanding that all persons were included. However, he thought that this implied an historical reflection on the mastery of men over women, and that the phrase should be modified in some way to make it clear that all human beings were included. He was opposed to such historical atavisms which precluded from an understanding that men were only one half of the human species and not the whole human species.

<sup>185</sup> The verbatim transcript of Mr. Malik’s remarks is published in Chapter 6 of Habib C. Malik, ed., The Challenge of Human Rights, Charles Malik and the Universal Declaration, Oxford: Centre for Lebanese Studies, 2000, pp. 68–74.

MR. HARRY (Australia) said he believed the problem insoluble; he could find no other word to replace “men”. He added that in the Charter itself reference was made to “mankind” and not to “mankind and womankind”. There was also the difficulty of expressing the whole sentence “All men are [7] brothers” in a general way.

PROFESSOR KORETSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) added that in Russian, the term for “all human beings” included both men and women.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that it had become customary to say “mankind” and mean both men and women without differentiation. She herself had no objection to the use of the word in this manner.

PROFESSOR CASSIN (France) said that he understood that Article 21 had been accepted. This could be followed by alternatives, the whole Australian text in one column, and in another column, Article 2 of the original draft followed by the second version of Article 3 and then Article 4.

